The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. [illegible]

VOL. VI.—NO. 1.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JUNE 21, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 261.

The Sabbath Recorder.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

The following extracts from Mr. Carpenter's journal will be perused with interest. The letter was long on the voyage, and consequently dates a good way back, but it is none the less interesting on that account.

August 1, 1848.—CAUSE OF THE SUDDEN SHIFTING OF THE WIND IN A TYPHOON.—This is explained by reference to the well-known phenomena of the whirl-wind. Indeed the typhoon is said, by those who have long been residents in China, to be an immense whirlwind. As these are seldom for a long time stationary, and as one side, then the center, and afterwards the other side of the circle passes successively over any given place, it is easy to account for the shifting of the wind, as also for the intervening calm.

CHINESE SUPERSTITION.—My teacher informed me to-day how the Chinese suppose the channel of the Wampu (which runs past Shanghai) to have been dug out. They say, that formerly two men were enclosed in logs, and thrown into the river. In their dying struggles, they moved the logs about with such violence as to dig out a good channel. At the present day the sailors and boatmen suppose the ghosts of these same two men inhabit the river, and have great power. So, in the time of a typhoon, they make liberal offerings to these ghosts, in order to secure the safety of their vessels.

August 26.—The late typhoon completely destroyed the inhabitants of an island a few miles from Woo-sung, to the amount of a thousand or more, and swept off all their houses. One woman was placed in a chest with some treasure, and floated to the main land. The box was discovered by a worshiper of mammon, who opened it, threw the woman into the sea, and secured the treasure. But upon examination of some papers found in the chest, it appeared that that same woman was to have been his wife!

October 10.—Rev. Mr. Goddard, the Baptist missionary stationed at Bankok, who is here for the health of himself and wife, called on us. He was a member of Brown University at the same time that I was, and he readily recognized me. He is a sensible man, and the best Chinese scholar, probably, that the Baptists have in the field. He has been engaged in translating the Scriptures into Chinese, but has not advanced far. He had learned something about our wishes in regard to a translation, through Dr. McGowan, and on his mentioning it he gave me an opportunity to explain.

October 15, Sabbath.—At 4 o'clock, attended the funeral of Mr. Hetherington, an English merchant. He was a very large, robust man, and perhaps the best specimen of a healthy man I ever saw. But the fever took hold of him, and in one week the strong man was laid low in the ground. He was not known to be religious.

October 25.—My teacher informed me, that he had asked Mr. Milne, one of the missionaries, why there was this difference among us in regard to the Sabbath, and that Mr. Milne put him off without explaining it. He wished me to give an explanation, inquiring if we all had the same book for our guide. I told him we all had the same book, but did not all of us follow it. I then explained to him pretty fully what that book said about the Sabbath, its institution, promulgation from Sinai, its observance from the Creation to the time of Christ, its observance by Christ, and by his followers for three hundred years afterward, the gradual change of the day, and the means used to effect it, the silence of Scripture in reference to a change, the observance of the seventh day by the Jews in all lands, and by many Christians in America and other places. He said the subject was now clear to him.

November 11.—In regard to the propriety of taking Chinese children into our families, to educate and instruct in the Christian religion, we, (i. e. Mrs. C. and I,) have never written to the Board, for the simple reason that we have never been fully decided what course it would be advisable to pursue. Mrs. C. has been inclined to take two little girls, but for the above reason has refrained from intimating such desire to the Board. She thinks that if she takes one she would like to take two, as they would be company for each other. The main objection to taking girls rather than boys, is the liability of their marrying heathens, and thus their influence might be lost. But this objection would be in a great measure obviated, if we shall have connected with our mission a school of boys. The objections to our taking boys are—1st. Mrs. C. feels less inclined to do that; and, 2d, it would throw an additional care upon me; and as we are soon to open our chapel, I wish to do what I can by way of preaching the word, without entangling myself with these domestic responsibilities, at least until we have a fair trial, and see if we can have good congregations. If the people come out at first, it will be necessary, [illegible] keep up an interest, to do something [illegible] than to preach [illegible]. If they come out but little at first, then there will be the more reason to ply every means to wake up an interest.

We hope not many years—nay, not many months—will be allowed to pass before we have a school of boys. The plan of having them bound for a number of years, and of giving them food, clothing, and instruction, thus separating them from heathenism as much as is possible in a heathen land, and bringing them under the direct influence of Christian instruction, I think promises more than any other. Other plans may be cheaper, but cheap things are often dear in the end. If we should have a school of twenty, twenty-five, or thirty boys, and have a man adapted to the place, full of wisdom and of faith and of the Holy Ghost, I should hope it might be a great blessing to China. A Chinese teacher would be needed to teach the Chinese language, and a Christian teacher to teach Christianity in connection with those sciences which illustrate the great truth of which China is ignorant, viz. the existence of One who is superior to any of her idols. Eventually, such a school should be located out of the city—(fine locations can be had)—but there is room enough in this house to make a beginning, so soon as our people are ready for it. If a teacher should be sent out, he could live in this house without any increase of rent, and a year from the time of his arrival he might commence a school with ten or fifteen scholars; and if the undertaking, having made the trial, should bid fair, perhaps by the time he would be ready for a full school, the funds to erect a suitable establishment would be forthcoming. If not, possibly the school might be continued in this house. A trial would enable us to judge better than we can at present. A school connected with the establishment would secure to us a part of a congregation for the Sabbath and other occasions, and that of the most hopeful kind.

We still expect to open our chapel on the first Sabbath in 1849. We intend to beat a large gong on the house-top, to call the people together. We have procured seats for our chapel, enough to seat one hundred and twenty persons, for sixteen dollars. They should be painted to preserve them from cracking during the winter months. This will cost something over three dollars. The desk and lamps, and gong will not probably cost over twenty dollars more. And that will answer for the present. But if we have it open evenings, there will be a constant expense for lights, though but trifling.

The following is the letter from Bro. Carpenter to Dr McGowan, alluded to in the foregoing extracts. The introductory remarks of Bro. C. furnish all the explanation needed at this time.

The following is a copy of a letter which I have prepared to send to Dr. McGowan, at Ningpo. When he was here last winter, we had a little conversation upon the subject of which the letter treats; but he was in haste, and our conversation ended with a request from him that I would write and send him my views, stating at the same time, that he was in correspondence with Mr. Goddard at Bankok, and would forward to him our wishes. Dr. G. is engaged in translating the Scriptures into Chinese.

SHANGHAI, July 19, 1848.

MY DEAR SIR,—At your request, I will now communicate to you our views and wishes relative to such a version of the Holy Scriptures in the Chinese language as we should like to circulate. In general terms, I may say, that the first and the last of our wishes on this subject is, to have circulated, read, and believed among this people, the pure word of God. But as they cannot read it in the languages in which it was first written, it must be translated into their own. What is needed, then, is a faithful translation of the inspired word. This is the first great work to be done in China. For the purpose of accomplishing this work, a committee, as you are aware, is now in session in this city. They will doubtless produce what they will regard as a faithful translation. But whether we shall be able entirely to coincide with them in this opinion, remains to be seen. Whether they shall succeed in their undertaking or not, we desire that our Baptist brethren may in theirs. And we shall undoubtedly wish to assist in giving circulation to your version, provided it shall be found to accord with our views of truth.

In what part of the inspired volume there may exist the greatest liability to mistake on the part of the translator, it is impossible, with certainty, to say beforehand. But we naturally enough are inclined to look first to those important points upon which there exists a difference of opinion. The proper rendering of the Greek term baptizo is a matter upon which Baptists very naturally look with an inquiring eye into the translations of their Pedobaptist brethren. And why? Because this is the great point of difference between them.

As the greatest point of difference between us and other denominations, is in regard to the weekly Sabbath, you will expect us, of course, to have an eye upon the translation of those texts which relate to that subject. I am happy to believe, that, although there is a serious difference of opinion in regard to the day to be observed, there is not the same difference of opinion in regard to the proper rendering of the Hebrew Yom Hashabbath, and the Greek Sabbaton. So far as I know, all translators are agreed in the opinion, that the meaning of these words is exactly given by the Chinese term [illegible]. Although this term is so exactly suited to the original, another, as you are aware, is sometimes employed in the place of it. In a work published under the sanction of the American Tract Society's Publication Committee in China, which has passed through several editions, a work written expressly to elucidate and enforce the law of God, where we should expect to find language used correctly, I find that le-pai-nyi is used as a translation of yom hashabbath.

You will allow me to express my objections to le-pai-nyi in this place. In the first place, it does not give the sense of the original; and this alone, in my opinion, is a sufficient objection to it. The meaning of the original term is, the rest-day. The meaning of the Chinese term is, the ceremony worship day. The original term, as used in the Decalogue, refers definitely to the seventh day of the week. The term le-pai-nyi, as used and understood in China, refers definitely to the first day of the week. My objections to le-pai-nyi are, then, 1st. That it does not express what is expressed by the original; and, 2d. That it is adapted to convey an erroneous impression as to the day which the fourth commandment designates. It would convey the impression to a Chinaman, who knows how the word is applied by missionaries, that the law of God requires him to remember the first day of the week, to keep it holy; whereas the law speaks of the first day as a working day. It would convey the impression to a Chinaman, that the first day of the week was solemnly set apart in the beginning as a holy day, or else it would tend to bewilder his mind. If he should be taught, as in the tract referred to, that because God rested on the seventh day of the week, and sanctified it as a holy day, therefore he must remember the first day of the week, to keep it holy, it would not be wonderful if it should be found difficult to make him feel under any special obligation to keep holy any day. Consequently he would be likely to go on with his work perpetually, as he now does.

You see that it would be assuming a weighty responsibility thus to alter the title which divine wisdom has affixed to a divine institution. And I cannot say, that I have any serious apprehension that such a thing will be done by the brother who is engaged in preparing a version at Bankok. Still I would thank you to communicate to him these views. May the spirit of wisdom and of a sound mind be imparted to him, and abide with him during the prosecution of his great and responsible undertaking.

As to a title by which to designate the Supreme Being, concerning which there has been so much controversy, we prefer Shin, to any other.

Believe me, yours faithfully,

S. CARPENTER.

THE MOUNTIAN OF THE ARK.

The Great Ararat—which, for sublimity of traditional association and imposing grandeur of form, has scarcely its equal in the world—stands as a mighty pillar on the frontier of three empires—those of Russia, Persia, and Turkey. "Although," says Dr. Wagner, "not more than 16,000 feet above the surrounding country; while Chimborazo, according to Humboldt, exceeds the elevated plain of Quito by more than 10,878. What an overpowering effect a monolith of such size and isolation as 'Noah's Mountain' produces on the spectator, must be left in some measure to the imagination of the reader. Towards the North, South, and East, it stands completely alone, rearing itself like Etna and Vesuvius immediately from the plain. On the West it is connected with the Agridag chain, which stretches from the center of Turkish Armenia to the plateau of the Araxes; and its height would be still more striking than it is, were it not for the vast lateral extent of its terraces and declivities. It is rather singular, that the Agridag, which before reaching the Ararat sinks gradually lower and lower till it almost reaches the plain, should thus suddenly rise again into this enormous pile of rocks, glaciers, and peaks, covered with everlasting snow, and piercing far into the region of clouds. It is as if the great volcanic forces in which the mountain system of Armenia originated had suddenly exerted their whole energies to rear that marvelous edifice of the mountain of the deluge. At the end of the month of May the Ararat was free from snow about half way up—that is, 8,000 feet. A little farther the black color of the lava was streaked with broad white stripes; and some thousand feet higher the snow gained the victory. Snow-fields, of enormous extent, stretched along the western terraces; and on the highest the radiant dazzling white was undisturbed by a single spot, although the black rock again broke forth on the central and highest peak. . . . How often, during my stay at Erivan, when I have returned from my excursions into the surrounding country, worn out with heat, fatigue, and thirst, did the sight of this scenery strengthen and console me! How often, sitting on a block of basalt on the Sanga shore, have I feasted my eyes on the glorious spectacle it presented in the rays of the setting sun, and thought with impatience of the day when I was to tread the wondrous soil!"

[Westminster Review.

A GOOD TEST.—Quarles says: "Wouldest thou know the lawfulness of the action which thou desirest to undertake, let thy devotion recommend it to Divine blessing; if it be lawful thou shalt perceive thy heart encouraged by the prayer; if unlawful thou shalt find thy prayer discouraged by thy heart. The action is not warrantable which either blushes to ask a blessing, or, having succeeded, does not present a thanksgivng!"

CREDULITY OF INFIDELITY.—Charles the II., hearing the celebrated Vossius, a free thinker, repeating some incredible stories of the Chinese, turning to those about him, said, "This learned divine is a very strange man. He believes everything but the Bible."

From the London Athenæum.

THE SOUL'S PASSING.

It is ended!—all is over!
Lo, the weeping mourners come—
Mother, father, friend, and lover,
To the death encumbered room;
Lips are pressed to the blessed—
Lips that evermore are dumb.

Take her faded hand in thine—
Hand that no more answereth kindly;
See the eyes were wont to shine,
Uttering love, now staring blindly;
Tender-hearted, speech departed—
Speech that echoed so divinely.

Runs no more the circling river,
Warming, brightening every part;
There it slumbereth cold for ever—
No more merry leap and start,
No more flushing cheeks to blushing—
In its silent home the heart!

Hope not answer to your praying!
Cold, responseless lies she there.
Death, that ever will be slaying
Something gentle, something fair,
Came with numbers soft as slumbers—
She is with Him otherwhere!

Mother! yes, you scarce would chide her
Had you seen the form he bore,
Heard the words he spoke beside her,
Tender as the look he wore,
While he proved her how he loved her
More than mother—ten times more!

Earthly father! weep not o'er her!
To another Father's breast,
On the wings of love he bore her—
To the kingdom of the blest;
Where no weeping eyelids keeping,
Dwells she now in perfect rest.

Friend! He was a friend that found her
Amid blessings poor and scant;
With a wicked world around her
And within a heavenly want:
And supplied her, Home to guide her,
Wings for which the weary pant.

Lover! yes, she loved thee dearly!—
When she left thee loved thee best!
Love she knew alone burns clearly
In the bosoms of the blest:
Love she bore thee watches o'er thee—
Is the angel in thy breast!

Mourners all! have done with weeping!
I will tell you what He said,
When He came and found her sleeping,
On her heart His hand He laid:
"Sleep is, Maiden, sorrow-laden;
Peace dwells only with the dead.

"Wend with me across the river—
Seems so bitter—is so sweet!—
On whose other shore forever
Happy, holy spirits greet:
Grief all over, friend and lover
In a sweet communion meet!

"Is it bitter, father, mother,
Lover, friend, to leave behind?
All their blessed loves, and other,
Come with me and thou shalt find—
Where thy spirit shall inherit
Perfect love and perfect mind.

"Love that is to mortals given
Struggles with imperfect will;
Love alone that homes in heaven
Can its perfect self fulfill—
Where, possessing every blessing,
Still it grows and greatens still!

"See, I bring thee wings to bear thee
To the blessed angel home;
Dear ones dead forever near thee,
From thy side no more to roam;
Love increased, wait thou blessed
Till the living loved ones come!

"O'er the river!"—Lo she faltered
While he took her by the hand;
And her blessed face grew altered
As she heard the sweet command.
Father! lover! all was over!—
So she passed to Spirit Land!

DYING IN A HURRY.

Not hurrying to die. Of that there is no thought by the multitudes, at the same time they

"Stoop downwards as they run."

The dead and dying are around them; but their lot is to be peculiar; good fortune or a kind Providence, is to work wonders in their behalf, in the assurance of which they form new schemes in endless succession, and rush on to new enterprises, in the heated pursuit of which the grim messenger comes, and they die in the midst of hurry.

Yet who would wish thus to die? Not the Christian; for the weight of eternal things presses upon his soul with new power as he approaches them the nearer; and the consciousness of indwelling sin and a trembling hope, he has a reason both for time and dilligence to make his calling and election sure. Not the worldling; for he hath done nothing in preparation for judgement and eternity, in the known and confessed absence of which he feels at ease only with the expectation of abundant leisure near the close of life for undressing his soul and appearing before God. Yet how they fall! in buoyant hope, in feverish pleasures, in gay dissipation, in the artifices of ambition, in the schemes of wealth, in the practice of dishonesties, in the wearing drudgery of toil; anticipating a cool and undisturbed evening to die in, but cut down at an hour they thought not of, alike without time and without power, in the universal wreck and confusion, to lift a prayer to God or a thought or desire to heaven. The work of life is crowed into a moment; and that moment, phrenzied by the surprise of the summons, is either utterly unavailable, or at best transmits the soul to eternity amidst a thousand distractions and fears. "Take me not away in the midst of my days," was the prayer of the Psalmist, because in those days he might be distracted with cares, and overborne by labors, and die in the midst of hurry.

Archbishop Leighton desired he might be permitted to end his race at a public inn, where no obtrusions and impertinencies would disturb his last hours, not even the solicitudes of friendship; and what he desired he was permitted to enjoy. O for a quiet hour to die in! when the world may let me go—its labors, its schemes, its hopes, its whirl and hurry; and in some secluded spot, where there is stillness at morn, and noon, and night, and the solemn sun-light falls through the day as it falls at evening; where the soul may leisurely throw off its incumbrances, and adjust itself to its destination; and with penitential surveys of the past and humble but hopeful forelooking to the future, wait the Great Teacher's arrival; and then with unimpaired reason, with clear vision, commending the spirit to Eternal Mercy, thus fall asleep and pass away.

THE PHYSICIAN AND THE DRAYMAN.

Dr. P——, a Quaker of Philadelphia, was very kind to the poor. In times of sickness, produced by whatever cause, he was always ready and willing to assist them. His benevolence in such cases extended farther than his gratuitous services as a physician. Of course he was beloved.

The streets were frequently somewhat crowded with building materials, so much so as often to prevent two vehicles from passing each other, if the driver of either is disposed to be obstinate.

As the doctor was one day proceeding to visit a patient, his progress was impeded by a dray—the driver of which had stopped his horses in one of these narrow passages. After waiting several minutes, the doctor requested the drayman to allow him to pass. The latter, who had heard of, but did not know the former, poured forth a volley of the vilest abuse on the "straight coat," and swore he would not move till he thought proper.

"Well, friend," said the doctor, "all I have to observe is this; if thee should get sick, or if thy family should ever be in distress, send for Dr. P., and he will do all he can to assist thee." The heart of the drayman was subdued by the kindness of the man he had abused. He was ashamed of his conduct—stammered an apology, and removed the obstruction as quickly as possible.

How true it is, that "a soft tongue breaketh the bone." If the doctor had cursed the drayman till midnight, he would have received nothing but curses and blows in return. This may be thought a small matter, but it furnishes a useful lesson.

JOY OVER REPENTING SINNERS.

A pious Armenian, calling on Mr. Hamlin the missionary at Constantinople, remarked that he was astonished to see how the people are waking up to the truth; how, even among the most uncultivated, some are seeking after it as for hid treasure. "Yes," said he, "it is going forward; it will triumph; but alas! I shall not live to see it. Alas! that I am born an age too soon." "But," said Mr. Hamlin, "do you remember what our Savior said, 'There shall be great joy in the presence of the angels of God, over one sinner that repenteth?' You may not live to see the truth triumphant in this empire; but should you, through divine grace, reach the kingdom of heaven, and be with the angels, your joy over your whole nation repentant and redeemed, will be infinitely greater than it could be on earth." He seemed surprised at this thought; but, after examining the various passages to which I referred him, he yielded to the evidence with the most lively expressions of delight, and seemed to be perfectly enraptured at the thought that our interest in the church of Christ and the progress of his kingdom on earth is something which death cannot touch, and which, instead of ceasing with this life, will only be increased and perfected in another. "Oh fool, and slow of heart," said he, "to read the gospel so many times without perceiving such a glorious truth. If this be so, no matter in what age a Christian is born, nor when he dies."

THE WOLF AND THE STRAY KID.

A FABLE.

A very stupid wolf (they are not all so) found a kid who had gone astray from the fold. "Little friend," said the wolf, "I have met you very seasonably. You will make me a good supper; for I have neither breakfasted nor dined to-day, I assure you." "If I must die," replied the poor little kid, "please to give me a song first. I trust you will not refuse me this favor—it is the first I have ever asked of you. I have heard that you are a perfect musician." The wolf, like a fool, set up a terrible howling, which, of course, was the nearest to a song that he could get, and the shepherd hearing the noise, ran to the spot with his dogs, and the wolf made off with himself as fast as he could go. "Very well," said he, as he was running, "they have served me right enough; this will teach me to confine myself to the trade of butcher, and not attempt to play the musician."

CHARITY.—Dr. Johnson says that Charity is an universal duty, which it is in every man's power sometimes to practice; since every degree of assistance given to another, upon proper motives, is an act of charity; and there is scarcely any man in such a state of imbecility, as that he may not, on some occasions, benefit his neighbor. He that cannot relieve the poor, may instruct the ignorant; and he that cannot attend the sick may reclaim the vicious. He that can give little assistance himself, may yet perform the duty of charity, by inflaming the ardor of others, and recommending the petitions which he cannot grant, to those who have more to bestow. The widow that shall give her mite to the treasury, the poor man who shall bring to the thirsty a cup of cold water, shall not lose his reward.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS AND IMPULSES.—"Several of you," said Rev. R. Robinson in a sermon, "know a good old man who departed this life twenty years ago, and who often exhorted you to live by the Ten Commandments, and not by impulses. He used to tell, you know, how he got free from that delusion fifty years before. Then he was pious and poor, and, being only a lad, thought all suggestions in Scripture style came from heaven. Walking in the fields in want of firewood, by the side of a neighboring hedge, he wished some of it to burn, and the impulse came clothed in Scripture language, 'In all this Job sinned not.' Believing this suggestion to be the teaching of the Spirit, he began to make free with his neighbor's wood. Presently he discovered his mistake by trying this impulse with the eighth commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal,' and so he got rid of an error which might have led him out of the church into a jail.

A COLUMN FOR THE CHILDREN.

THE CHILD AND THE DEW-DROPS.

"Oh! father, dear father, why [illegible]
The dew-drops that sparkle at [illegible]
That glitter'd like stars in the light [illegible]
Oh! why are the dew-drops [illegible]
Does the sun in his wrath chase them [illegible]
As though nothing that's lovely [illegible]
The moonlight has faded, the flowers still [illegible]
But the dew-drops have shrunk in their [illegible]
Oh! father, dear father, why pass they away,
The dew-drops that sparkled at dawning of day?

"My child," said the father, "look up to the skies,
Behold that bright rainbow—those beautiful dyes;
There—there are the dew-drops in glory [illegible]
'Mid the jewels of heaven they are [illegible]
Then are we not taught by each beautiful ray,
To mourn not earth's fair things, though passing away;
For though youth of its beauty and brightness be riven,
All that withers on earth blooms more sweetly in heaven.
Look up," said the father, "look up to the skies,
Hope sits on the wings of those beautiful dyes."

Alas! for the father—how little knew he
That the words he had spoken prophetic would be;
That the beautiful cherub—the star of his days,
Was e'en then like the dew-drops dissolving away;
Oh, sad was the father, when low in the skies,
The rainbow again spread its beautiful dyes,
And then he remembered the maxims he'd given,
And thought of his child and the dew-drops in heaven.

THE DUTIFUL SON.

Translated from the French for the Youth's Cabinet.

There was once at a military school a sensible and excellent youth, one who discharged all his duties with the utmost exactness, but who was noted for one singularity. He sat at the table with a face as cheerful as that of any of his companions, ate his soup, and then, during the rest of the meal, contented himself with bread and water. It was in vain that they tried to persuade him to partake of the luxuries, which were provided for the pupils. He always refused. "Bread is good enough for me," he would say. The principal of the school, hearing what was going on, and charging this conduct to some excess of devotion, for which there was no necessity, gently reproved the boy for it, and told him that he ought to conform to the custom of the house. Notwithstanding the reproof the boy still continued to live as before. The principal of the school then thought that he ought to inform the commanding officer of the conduct of the youth. He did so. The officer regarded the case as a very extraordinary one. He asked the offender what motive he had for his conduct. The pupil answered, with his usual honesty, but without explaining the reason, upon which the officer insisted. The latter, taking this silence for obstinacy, told him, that as he chose to live after this fashion, he might do so and welcome; but that he should send him home to his father.

This threat frightened the child. "Alas, sir!" said he, wringing his hands, "I will tell you all. My father, though a good man, is extremely poor, and has other children besides me. In his house I only had bread to eat, and we could get but little even of that. Here I have excellent soup and white bread, just as much as I choose. I have never lived so well before. If I should indulge myself in eating all these luxuries, as the rest do, I should recall too painfully the recollection that my father and my mother are destitute almost of the necessaries of life."

The officer listened with admiration to what the child said. "But, my friend," said he, "if your father has served in the army, does he not draw a pension?"

"No, sir," said the boy, "he tried for a whole year to get one, but for want of money he was obliged to return home without it."

"Ah! if it turns out to be as you represent it, I promise you I will obtain a pension for him, worth five hundred livres. As your parents are in distress, very likely they have not lined your pockets much; so you must take, for spending money, these three louis, which I present to you in behalf of the king. As for your father, I shall send to him, in advance, the avails of the first six months of his pension, for I am sure I shall obtain one for him."

The child was overwhelmed with joy, and, turning over the three louis in his hands, said, "You will send the money to my father! How will you do it?"

"Don't let that matter give you any uneasiness. I guess we can find the means."

"Oh, sir!" said the true-hearted boy, "will you send to him, too, the three louis which you have so kindly given me? I have no use to make of them here, and they would be so useful to my parents!"

This request was complied with, and the affectionate son had afterward the happiness of seeing his parents above the reach of poverty.

ANECDOTE OF A MONKEY.

Some strolling showmen had occasion to pass an unfrequented road near Stonim, a town in Lithuania, with a monkey, who was very tame and intelligent. The travelers were attacked by a band of robbers, and were murdered. The monkey, after the murder and interment of the bodies, remained on a tree which he had climbed for safety. A gentleman not long after passed that way, and the monkey, as soon as the carriage drove up, commenced a most dismal yell. The gentleman, amazed at so unusual a noise, ordered the driver to stop. He alighted, and was still more surprised when he saw the monkey come down from the tree, and run toward him. When he reached the spot where the gentleman stood, he began to lick his feet, and by other gestures seemed to intimate that he had something important to communicate. He led the way a short distance, and the gentleman followed. As soon as they came to a particular spot, the animal rent the air with the most piteous cries. Then, taking up some of the [illegible] he began to scratch the earth, and throw it up, with all his might. The gentleman, seeing this, ordered his servant to go to work, and remove the earth. He did so, to the depth of a few inches, and soon the mystery was solved, and the dead bodies were presented to view.

No. 1

The Sabbath Recorder.

NEW YORK, JUNE 21, 1849.

THE NEW VOLUME.

With the present number commences the Sixth Volume of the Sabbath Recorder. As already announced, it is to be published under the direction of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society. So short a time has elapsed since that Society was organized, that the Board of Trustees have not been able to complete all the arrangements they have in contemplation for the benefit of the paper. They have, however, directed its enlargement, as you see; and they have placed its management, for the present, in hands accustomed to the work. Farther arrangements will be made as circumstances shall demand and opportunity offer. Meanwhile, they solicit from the friends of the enterprise a special effort on its behalf. The paper is now the property of the denomination, and the profits arising from its publication are pledged to the benevolent operations of the denomination. No pains or expense will be spared to make it all that the denomination need or can reasonably desire. But in order that it may accomplish the good for which it is designed, and which it is believed to be capable of accomplishing, it is necessary that its circulation be considerably increased. Who will undertake to promote this object? Let each Local Agent survey the field in which he is placed, and endeavor to find in it some additional supporters. Let each Pastor look over his congregation, and see if any families in which the paper ought to be read are not supplied, and act accordingly. Let each subscriber now on the list, look about him for one more, and send on his name as soon as possible. Thus would the work be speedily and economically done, and our denominational organ permitted to carry its weekly message into places where it has not been accustomed to go.

PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE.

In commencing a new volume, upon an enlarged sheet, it may not be inappropriate to offer a few thoughts suggested as above. Two of our Associations, embracing, probably, one-half of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination in America, have just held their annual meetings, and a third is now in session in the western part of this State. From the last we can, of course, obtain no information till next week; consequently we are not prepared to say what may have been the progress of the cause within its bounds during the year past. But judging from the first two, we come, very reluctantly, to the conclusion, that the piety of our churches is at a low ebb. The net increase of the Eastern Association, for the entire year, has been only ten! The statistics of the Central Association we have not before us; the report on the state of religion is our only guide. From that we learn that, while "a few of the churches have enjoyed seasons of refreshing," their spirituality in general is "far below the proper standard."

We have never been disposed to consider increase of numbers as the only evidence of a church's prosperity; or that, where this is wanting, the church must necessarily be in a declining state. The ascensional gifts of our Lord contemplated not only the conversion of sinners, but the continued progress of the saints in the divine life, till all come to "the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Eph. 4: 13. And the ministry which aims at nothing beyond the persuasion of men to believe, stops short of its proper object. Christians are to "ADD to their faith" such things as will show that they are "neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of Christ," (2 Pet. 1: 5—9;) and the ministry which compasses its whole duty, will seek to promote these additions. Could we see a church, all of whose members did diligently strive to cultivate the life of God in the soul, to maintain the worship of God in their families, to train up their children in the fear of the Lord, evincing constant delight in the ordinances of religion, "doing justly, loving mercy, and walking humbly with God," we should think that church to be in a prosperous condition, whether its numbers were greatly enlarged or not. Nevertheless, it would be rather anomalous, if such a church were not favored with enlargement. A church, in such a state, would be like a city set on a hill; it could not be hid. We see not how it would be possible for such a church to fail of exerting a powerfully healthful influence upon community. If the promises of God are pledged to bless the faithful promulgation of his truth to the conversion of souls, there is the most abundant reason to rely upon those promises in a case like this; for, under no other circumstances is divine truth more forcibly exhibited, or its reality more convincingly and demonstratively asserted. A religion attested by miracles is, by the common sense of mankind, conceded to have come from God, (John 3: 2;) and some might think that they would have no doubts about the truths of Christianity, as taught at the present day, if its teachers were empowered to confirm it in this way. But, hark ye; a church "growin[illegible]ace," and "keeping itself unspotted [illegible]orld," is a MIRACLE, wherever it is [illegible] For it is as contrary to nature for men thus to conduct themselves, as any miracle wrought by Moses, Christ, or the Apostles, was contrary to nature. Spiritually dead—totally currupt—as men are, it is contrary to nature, and therefore miraculous, for them to "walk in newness of life." They do it only by the mighty inworking of God's power in their hearts. It is God working in them, which leads them to work out their own salvation. Phil. 2: 12, 13. It is the display of a power as much above nature, as was that which He wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead. Eph. 1: 19, 20. Therefore, whenever we see a church maintaining the character we have described, we consider it to be the most powerfully convincing—the most thoroughly demonstrative, exhibition of the reality of the Christian religion, which can be set before mankind. How is it possible for such a church to fail of exerting an influence towards the conversion of sinners? How is it possible for God, in consistency with his promises, to withhold from such an influence the coöperation of his Spirit? He[illegible]we cannot but view the want of increase in our churches, the past associational year, as a dark spot on our denominational character. Both ministers and people would do well to look to this matter, and become "sorry after a godly sort." 2 Cor. 7: 11. "Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die." Rev. 3: 2. "Sanctify a fast; call a solemn assembly. Let the ministers of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar, and say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thy heritage to reproach." Joel 2: 15—17.

It may not be an uninteresting inquiry, what will be the feelings awakened in the breasts of those who oppose our distinctive tenets, in view of all this? That sincere Christians, of other sects, will rejoice in any thing which indicates want of piety in us, we do not believe. It were impossible for Christians to glory in this; such glorying is suitable only for devils. Nevertheless, so far as our want of increase indicates the unpopularity of our distinguishing doctrine, and the improbability of its making many farther inroads upon society, it is quite possible that it will excite some feelings of gratification. Those who have been particularly tormented with our arguments and appeals in behalf of the Bible Sabbath, and have secretly wished that the Apostles had made the duty of Sunday-keeping a little plainer, will be very much inclined to exult. But "let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." God sometimes brings his people very low, that he may suitably chastize them, and afterwards multiply them exceedingly. Thus He dealt with Israel frequently; but they were his chosen people notwithstanding. Once He cut them all off, except Caleb and Joshua; nevertheless, his promise to bring them into the land which he sware to their fathers, must be fulfilled. So it may be with us. We freely confess that we deserve to be set aside for our unfaithfulness. But we are sure of this, that He, whose eyes are upon the truth, and who hates the making void his commandments by the traditions of men, will find a people to witness for his holy Sabbath. This, however, is rather digressive. What we intended to say was this, that though our denomination has not made much progress, for a while past, our principles have been making constant progress. And what matters it whether our denomination, as such, is enlarged, provided the principles for which we contend are advancing? Let all men but embrace the Bible Sabbath, and the object of our organization, as a distinct sect, will have been accomplished. We can then merge our denominational existence into some other. Our opponents greatly mistake the matter, if they suppose the progress of Sabbatarianism to be measured and restricted by the growth of our churches. In proof of this we could adduce much. Our tracts are disturbing the minds of multitudes. Civil prosecutions for labor performed on the first day of the week, are doing much to awaken inquiry as to the claims of the day to sanctification; and, in a great number of cases, the inquiry is favorable to truth. What are, by palpable misnomer, called Sabbath Conventions, are doing the same work. Doctor Edwards himself is no inconsiderable promoter of our views, "howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so." And notwithstanding his noisy boast of railroads stopped, and canals closed, on the "Lord's day," these things are but the forced results of factitious excitement, and manufactured public opinion. Let him go over the ground again after the frothiness of the agitation has subsided, and he will find numbers calmly inquiring, with Bible in hand, whether the Almighty requires people to keep Sunday. Thus light is spreading. Many ministers have such misgivings, that they dare not tell the people that the first day of the week is the Sabbath. Several of them have come out within the past year, and openly embraced our views, though not all of them have yet joined our communion. Others, we know, are halting between two opinions. Some, though it is not much to their credit, stay where they are, giving the force of their example to Sunday-keeping, under the deluded notion that they can "do more good" by such a course. But their convictions are openly expressed, that the observance has no warrant in Scripture. In scores of churches, that we know of, there are many Sabbatarians in sentiment, held where they are only by the inconvenience which would attend a separation from their respective communions. We doubt not that more extensive investigation would bring to light many others. Aye, and even infidels are helping forward the matter. They too are preaching, though it be "of envy and strife," that the Bible inculcates no Sabbath but the seventh day; and their Christian opponents make but a sorry figure in the discussion of this point with them. In fact, it seems as if the providence of God were calling forth a testimony in behalf of the Sabbath, from every possible source. Balaam himself is made to confess that there is no enchantment, nor divination, against this doctrine; and if some of the professed disciples of truth set themselves against it, and try to make the people hold their peace, the Lord of the Sabbath makes "the very stones to cry out." Thus, every way, whether in pretense or in truth, it is preached, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God;" and we therein do rejoice, yea, and will rejoice, though our denominational existence should be buried in everlasting oblivion.

THE SABBATH IN HEATHEN LANDS.

The truth in regard to the Sabbath is doubtless making its way in many places to the hearts of believers in a powerful manner. Even in the strong-holds of its opponents, one witness after another comes forward to testify for God and the supremacy of his law. That the subject should attract the attention of missionaries of the cross in foreign lands, is not more surprising than it is honorable to the Word of God, and the testimony of those saints who have in all ages maintained the integrity of the fourth commandment, and the holiness of the day which it enjoins upon mankind. May all missionaries look well to the subject, and consider whether, in breaking one of these least commandments, and teaching men so, they are not incurring the displeasure of the Great Head of the Church, who himself came not to repeal or alter the law, but to honor it—who taught his disciples to pray that their flight might not be on the Sabbath day, when pagan soldiers should pursue their devoted nation, to scatter and make void the holy city, according to his prediction.

It is sometimes said, by those who do not observe the seventh day, that should the people all keep it, they also would do the same. Now it is known, that in many places where missionaries have gone, no day is observed by the people, and it would therefore be just as easy to build up the true Sabbath as a false one. If God be for it, who can be against it? Surely, not God's people, his servants, the missionaries of the cross of Christ. Yet, in teaching for doctrine the commandments of men, are they not against it? Brethren, look to it, and pray that the true Sabbath may be remembered in heathen lands.

NERI.

WHAT MISSIONARIES ARE DOING.

Few persons have any adequate idea of what the humble missionaries of the cross are doing to extend civilization and literature among the benighted children of men. Most people are so much in the habit of contemplating simply what are called the spiritual results of their labor, that they overlook other results of vast importance. Of course, the first and chief aim of the missionary is to make known the way of life and salvation through Jesus Christ. But in doing this, it is necessary to consider and endeavor to advance all the interests of the people. Their language must be so improved as to become a fit medium for conveying thought—a literature must be created, so that their minds may be developed and matured—and all the arts and conveniences of civilized life must be introduced in their place. We do not question, that a candid examination of the subject would show, that missionaries are doing more to promote geographical knowledge, to improve the various languages of men, to create a literature in those languages, and to extend the benefits of civilization throughout the world, than all the literary, scientific, and agricultural societies put together.

This thought was suggested by reading a paragraph which is going the rounds in relation to the introduction of the English language and literature among the Indians of our own country. A distinguished statesman once said, that "the only way to civilize an Indian is to exterminate him." Thank God, Christians have learned that there is another and a better way to do it, and that is by preaching to him the Gospel of Christ. The following paragraph proves that the Indian may be civilized and enlightened, and shows, also, that missionaries of the cross are the most efficient agents in bringing about this result:—

"One of the Baptist Mission to the Cherokees, in requesting a grant of books and tracts for intelligent Cherokees, says, 'Nearly if not quite one half of the Cherokees can speak the English language, and the number is so rapidly increasing, that in my opinion the time is not far distant when the native tongue will be obsolete. There are now, among this interesting tribe, about 50 schools, embracing upwards of 1,000 scholars, all of whom are instructed exclusively in the English language; and it is a very common thing to meet Cherokees, both old and young, who cannot speak their native tongue. It is one of my strongest desires to supply, as far as possible, this interesting portion of the tribe of Indians, to whose eternal well-being I have devoted my life, wlth good religious books and tracts."

THE BIBLE NO REFUGE FOR SLAVERY.

In these days, the number of persons who seriously attempt to justify slavery, on any ground, is very small, and, thank God, constantly diminishing. Occasionally, however, one falls in with such—men whose prejudice against color, or ignorance of well-established facts, incapacitates them to see and appreciate the claims of humanity and freedom. They are to be pitied, no doubt, as well as blamed—pitied for their blindness, and blamed for their neglect to use the means of becoming enlightened. We happened, recently, to run against one of these men, who, after attempting by various expedients to justify what he acknowledged to be a crying evil, took refuge in the Bible. The manner in which he did it, reminded us so forcibly of what Theodore Weld says on that point, and furnishes withal such a happy illustration of the truth of his remark, that we copy a paragraph for the benefit of our friend, and any others who may be in like circumstances:—

"The spirit of slavery," says Weld, "never seeks shelter in the Bible of its own accord. It grasps the horns of the altar only in desperation—rushing from the terror of the avenger's arm. Like other unclean spirits, it hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest its deeds should be reproved. Goaded to phrenzy in its conflicts with conscience and common sense, denied all quarter, and hunted from every covert, it vaults over the sacred enclosure, and courses up and down the Bible, 'seeking rest and finding none.' The Law of Love glowing on every page, flashes around it an omnipresent anguish and despair. It shrinks from the hated light, and howls under the consuming touch as demons quailed before the Son of God, and shrieked, 'Torment us not.' At last, it slinks away under the types of the Mosaic system, and seeks to burrow out of sight among their shadows. Vain hope! Its asylum is its sepulchre; its city of refuge, the city of destruction. It flies from the light into the sun; from heat into devouring fire; and from the voice of God into the thickest of his thunders."

NEW MOVEMENT AMONG THE QUAKERS.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune gives the procedings of a Quaker Convention recently held at Waterloo, Seneca Co., N. Y., "for the purpose of forming a new religious organization of a more liberal and reformatory character than that of the old sects." The call for the convention was issued by a Conference of members of the Genesee Yearly Meeting of Friends. It proposed, as a substitute for the old Quaker organization, whereby the Yearly Meeting is endowed with ecclesiastical power over the Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, that each local congregation should manage its own internal and disciplinary affairs on such plan as may he best adapted to its own peculiar circumstances; while the General or Yearly Meeting, being free from the necessity of intermeddling with merely local affairs, and from the difficult effort to enforce a rigid uniformity in respect to theological opinions and shibboleths, should be devoted to the culture of a wider charity, a more enlightened and earnest sympathy with the Reforms of the age, a more generous hospitality for new ideas, and a spirit of brotherly coöperation in every work of practical righteousness and benevolence. Retaining the essential principles of Quakerism, it proposed to abolish what is known as the "Select Meeting," or the meeting of Ministers and Elders, and to render the organization more democratic by placing all its members upon one level of rights and prerogatives, leaving each individual to exert the influence which character alone can confer. The practice of recommending (ordaining) ministers and seating them above their brethren, it also proposed to abolish, leaving each individual free to speak or be silent, according to his highest perceptions of duty. Proposing no theological test, it was designed to form a union of all those, of whatever sect, who desired to coöperate in works of charity and benevolence, on a basis which should allow the widest freedom of speech in respect to all subjects on which there might be an honest difference of opinion.

The Convention is said to have been well attended, mostly by the members of the Genesee Yearly Meeting, although there were several persons from abroad. Contrary to the usual practice of Friends, the sessions were not private, but open to anybody who chose to attend; and men and women, instead of meeting separately, came together in the same room on terms of equality. The meeting was organized according to the usual Quaker practice, by the appointment of no other officers than Clerks. No question was put to vote, but everything was done by general consent, the Clerks, after listening to all that was said by the members, recording what appeared to them to be the prevailing wish of the meeting. The name assumed by the meeting after considerable discussion, is that of Congregational Friends. The subject brought before the meeting were mostly of a practical nature. Intemperance, Slavery, War, Licentiousness, Land Monopoly, the Rights and Wrongs of Woman, Priestcraft, Sectarianism, Capital Punishment, &c., all received some share of attention. A general Address, setting forth the views of the meeting in relation to these subjects, and defining the position of Congregational Friends in respect to questions of Theology, was adopted. Congress was memorialized for the Abolition of Slavery in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and the inter-State Slave Trade, and against the Extension of Slavery in California and New Mexico. The Legislature of New York was memorialized in opposition to Capital Punishment.

The Beauties of Slavery.—The New Orleans Delta tells of a curious case which recently occurred in that city. It seems that a free colored man, named François Thomasin, appeared before Recorder Seuzeneau, to enter a charge of assault and battery against another negro, named Alexander Priere, who has passed as free, and has been universally considered as free born by those who knew him. The complainant, in revenge for the violence on his person, revealed facts which entirely change the social position of the accused, and reduce him and his whole family, who, like him, have been reported free, to slavery. The story runs thus:—

"Several years since, George Heno, a butcher, who had acquired a fortune in this city, left for France, where he resided until death. When leaving here, he disposed of all his slaves but one, a young girl, who, in consequence of her being blind, and without manumitting her, he told her to go and take care of herself. In the lapse of years, the blind girl became the mother of two children, a son and daughter. The son, now a full grown man, is the party accused in the above-mentioned case; and the daughter is herself the mother of several children. The family of Mr. Heno have always resided in this city, but having never seen the blind girl since he dismissed her, she had passed from their memory. His son, George Heno, being informed of the statement of Thomasin, now appears and claims the whole Priere family—mother, son, daughter, and grandchildren—as his property, and has instituted proceedings to place them in his possession."

Getting their Dues.—A Mr. Le[illegible]ey, who seceded from the Roman Catholic Church some years ago, has been lecturing in various parts of the country upon the usages of that Church. In September last, he lectured at Schenectady, N. Y., where he was beset by a few over-zealous representatives of Rome, who seem to have preferred carnal to spiritual weapons in their warfare with him. Four of these men—Edward Gleason, John McSherry, John Parmentier, and Edward Fitzgerald—were tried at Schenectady last week for assault and battery, and fined five hundred dollars. The same defendants had been previously indicted for assault and battery, with intent to kill. Fitzgerald was tried at the April Oyer and Terminer, found guilty, and sentenced to the Penitentiary for three months. At the recent court, McSherry pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and battery. Parmentier was acquitted. Gleason had his trial postponed.

Madison University.—The Rome Sentinel reports the proceedings of a special term of the Supreme Court, Oneida Circuit, then in session in that village. Among other causes, an application is pending to set aside the election of Trustees of the Baptist Education Society, made in August last. The case involves, says the Sentinel, the question of the removal of the Hamilton Literary and Theological Seminary from Hamilton to Rochester; a majority of the present Trustees being in favor of removal. An application was made by Mr. Comstock to postpone the motion on the ground that the Trustees had not sufficient time to prepare to oppose it. Mr. T. Jenkins and Mr. Kirkland opposed postponement. The hearing was postponed to some day in July.

Speaking in Time.—There is talk of bringing the Hudson River Railroad into New York through Hudson-street. But considerable opposition to the arrangement has appeared in certain quarters, and the Company fear that they will not be able to consummate it. A writer for one of the daily papers suggests, that if the Company would pledge themselves "not to run their cars on the Lord's day, they would find but little opposition from residents" on the street. This is speaking in time, but we doubt whether the plan proposed for overcoming opposition will meet with general approval.

British Connection with Idolatry.—An annual donation is still paid by the British East India Company to the temple at Pooree in India. Against this, the missionaries at Orissa have earnestly and energetically protested, imploring the Government to withdraw this iniquitous support from the shrine at Pooree, the pilgrimage to which has been the occasion of incalculable suffering and destruction of life, and the worship at which is associated with every thing abhorrent to God and degrading to man.

Religious Liberty in France.—Rev. Mr. Pilatte, an evangelical minister in Paris, was fined $20 and his lecture-room closed, because he was preaching to a mixed audience on "True Christianity." He appealed to the Minister of Public Instruction, claiming the privilege to preach. The Minister in reply said, "The right you claim is incontestible, and nothing can oppose the free exercise of your functions as a minister of the gospel." He has now only to make known his intentions to the police, and he will be protected.

The Free Church of Scotland.—A correspondent of the New York Observer learns, from an official report, that the Free Church of Scotland has two normal Seminaries, and upwards of 500 schools; and a College in which upwards of 200 students are in training for the ministry, at home and abroad. It has a Home Mission, which provides the means of grace in many of the most destitute localities in the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland; and it supports many Missionaries. For the support of missions there was raised last year $278,475.

Sabbatarian Authors.—Cowdry & Palmer, in their work on the Sabbath, published in 1652, make the following reference to one of that age, concerning whom we should be glad to learn more. Perhaps some of the readers of the Recorder may have access to the book referred to by them as follows:—

"We borrow here the words and discourse of that pious, learned and judicious divine, now deceased, Mr. JOHN WHITE, late of Dorchester, who fetches the reason of the old Sabbath from God's honoring that day by his resting thereon from all his works of creation, in this manner: 'That day which is honored by God above other days, by his most eminent work of mercy to mankind, shall be the day of Holy Rest, to be consecrated to him for his worship. But the day in which God ended and perfected the creation of the world, is the day honored and advanced above all other days by that wonderful work. Therefore, that shall be the day of your holy rest.' (The Way to the Tree of Life, p. 178.")

Schools in Connecticut.—The total number of children in attendance at the common schools of Connecticut, in 1848 was 89,007 The amount paid from the school fund of the State for their instruction, was $133,336, or one dollar and fifty cents to each child. The total capital of the school fund is $2,077,641. One school district in the State so childless, as to have but a single child to send to school.

The Liberty of the Press.—The Elizabethtown (N. J.) Journal has been denounced from the pulpit in that place, for opposing a law to prohibit traveling through the State on Sunday. This is not the first instance where the rights of opinion and the rights of publishers have been impudently and unjustifiably invaded in the same place. The entire suspension of Sunday traveling may prove advantageous to the morals of the country; but if others differ from us in such an opinion, we do not think that it is proper that they should be branded and injured in their interests, for entertaining and expressing their opinion. It does not accord with the boasted intelligence of the age to denounce men for their opinions. It looks too much like the prompting of interest, rather than a love of truth." [Philadelphia Ledger.

☞ If we are not mistaken—and we feel quite confident that we are not—the author of the denunciation above alluded to is the Rev. Dr. Murray, somewhat noted for his anti-Catholic letters to Bishop Hughes, over the signature of Kirwan. What a pity, that the man who opposes Romanism in so many forms, should practice it in other forms. One week he is writing letters to show how the Papacy has established and enforced by law its traditional festivals, and to denounce all who countenance such a course; the next week he is using his pulpit to enforce the observance of a similar festival, and to traduce and injure one who acts out the very principles he has sanctioned and applauded in his letters. The Lord save us from the domination of such men, even if, in order to do so, it be necessary to turn us over to the tender mercies of out-and-out Catholics.

Posture in Public Prayer.—This subject occupied considerable attention at the recent meeting of the Old School General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. There was an overture from the Presbytery of Philadelphia, asking the Assembly to adopt measures for arresting or abating the growing evil of sitting in public prayer. The Committee introduced, and the Assembly adopted, the following recommendation:—

"That, while the posture of standing in public prayer, and that of kneeling in private prayer, are indicated by examples in Scripture, and the general practice of the ancient Christian Church, the posture of sitting in public prayer is nowhere mentioned, and by no usage allowed; but on the contrary, was universally regarded by the early church as heathenish and irreverent; and is still, even in the customs of modern and western nations, an attitude obviously wanting in due expression of reverence; therefore this General Assembly resolve: That the practice in question be considered grievously improper, whenever the infirmities of the worshiper do not render it necessary; and that ministers be required to reprove it, with earnest and persevering admonition."

Brandy and Water for Cholera.—In an article relative to the treatment of cholera, prepared by a number of physicians and the Health Commissioner of New York, "a little brandy and water" is recommended, to be taken when the symptoms of the disease are more severe than a relaxation of the bowels. A "conscientious temperance man" raises the question what is meant by "a little brandy and water," and how much it would be safe to take? To which one of the New York editors replies as follows:—

"Drop three drops of brandy in a bucket, and fill it up with cold, sweet, pure, spring water. Dip out one spoonful of the mixture, and put it in another bucket, which fill with cold water, as before, thus raising the dilution (as Hahnemann says) 'to the second power.' Drink one glass of the mixture half an hour before each meal, and another just before going to bed. This we should consider 'a little brandy and water,' such as might be safely taken in Cholera times. N. B.—It would be better to rinse out the first bucket thoroughly after putting in the brandy and before putting in the water."

New Mode of treating the Cholera.—Dr. Rufus Belden, of Williamsburg, L. I., gives to the world, through the columns of the N. Y. Tribune, a new mode of treating the cholera, which he says has been attended with the most happy results. It is as follows:—

"Whenever a patient is afflicted with the cholera, or when he is in a more advanced stage of the disease, the following means may be resorted to, to relieve the cramps or spasms, or to produce reäction when the patient is in a state of collapse. Place the patient in a bed, covered warmly, with a blanket next the body; then wrap closely in flannel, saturated with water, a small quantity of unslacked lime, say three to six lumps, each about the size of an egg—as soon as this begins to give out heat, apply it to the feet, and make similar applications to the parts affected, the legs, the arms or body. A profuse perspiration will thus quickly be produced, the circulation restored, and reäction ensue. The vapor, arising from the use of lime in this way, has, beside, a purifying and disinfecting quality, which not only has a good effect upon the patient, but renders attendance on the part of others quite harmless."

A Family Gathering.—Yesterday, says the Utica Observer of June [illegible]th, we had the pleasure of witnessing a gathering of seventy one members of one family, at the house of Capt. Arnold Mason, of New Hartford. The Captain is one of the most respected and oldest of the inhabitants of Oneida, having resided in the county for fifty-two years. After a life of most active business, and having been engaged for the last nine or ten years in building the Croton aqueduct, and settling matters connected therewith, he has now returned to his residence in New Hartford. His return was the occasion of a general gathering of his children, his grandchildren, and great-grand-children, numbering in all some seventy-five, all of whom were present except four.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamship Cambria arrived at New York on the 16th inst., with one week's later intelligence from Europe.

At Rome, no decided movement has taken place. The Neapolitan troops have withdrawn to their own territories, and seem inclined to let the French have the quarrel all to themselves. Among the French troops, there is said to be considerable dissatisfaction, and not a little sympathy for the Roman Republic. Still, all preparations are being made to take the city, while negotiation is going on between the French and Italian authorities. Within the city, money is scarce, and food is none too plenty. From this it is evident that a crisis must soon come.

From Austria and Hungary there is little certain information, except that a vast army from Russia, acting in concert with Austria, is bearing down upon Hungary. The Hungarians, meanwhile, are preparing to give them a warm reception. Positive information has been received that the City of Buda has fallen into the hands of the Hungarians, who are said to have gained possession of the place by treachery, and put the garrison of 500 or 600 men to the sword. In the South the Magyars are said to be in possession of Fiume, the only sea-port in Hungary, which, if true, will give a vast impulse to the cause.

The war between the Danes and the Prussians continues, without the remotest prospect of a satisfactory adjustment of the paltry matter in dispute. The town of Frederica has been reduced by bombardment, and the Prussian troops are advancing to Arham. The Danish cruisers are strictly enforcing the blockade of the German ports.

Accounts from the city of Worms state that Darmstadt was attacked on the 29th of May, by the Russian and Prussian troops, who carried by assault all the barricades, the insurgents flying in all directions.

There are accounts of misery in Ireland. As an evidence of the extreme destitution and misery which exists, it is stated that a shipwrecked human body having been cast ashore, the corpse was actually consumed by the starving inhabitants of the vicinity. A statement to this effect was made in Parliament, and though contradicted in part by the Government, yet the fact is beyond dispute, that at no previous time has sickness, intense misery, and starvation, been more general than it is now. The cholera has broken out in Dublin, and still continues its ravages in many parts of the country.

THE CHOLERA.

The reports of the Board of Health show that the cholera has not increased in New York during the past week. The following is a summary of cases and deaths :—

Wednesday,	June	13,	44	cases,	14	deaths.
Thursday,	"	14,	38	"	16	"
Friday,	"	15,	27	"	14	"
Saturday,	"	16,	27	"	15	"
Sunday,	"	17,	26	"	18	"
Monday,	"	18,	42	"	17	"

The general impression seems to be, that of the 60 cases reported on Wednesday, June 6, many were not real cholera, but simple diarrhea. Most of the cases which have terminated fatally have been among ill fed and poorly clad or dissolute people. It is stated upon good authority, that during the cholera week ending June 2d, there were 56 less deaths in New York than in the week ending May 2d, when there was not a case of cholera in the city. The citizens generally do not seem to be much alarmed. They deem it wisest and safest to attend to their business, live temperately, keep cleanly, and rely upon the protection of a kind Providence.

Cases of cholera are occurring here and there throughout the country. At Boston there are two or three cases daily. At Providence, R. I., there was a fatal case on the 15th. At Stonington, Ct., three cases have occurred. At Albany, several cases and two deaths on the 14th. A hand on board a canal boat died at Rome recently, also a merchant at East Virgil, Cortland Co., N. Y. At Buffalo there were six cases on the 13th. At Chicago, ten deaths on the 8th, 9th, and 10th insts. At Elizabethtown, Ill., week before last, there were eight deaths.

Latest from California.—By the steamship Cresent City, which arrived at New Orleans on the 10th inst., news has been received that the line of communication by steam between New York and San Francisco is now complete. Three steamships are plying between Panama and California, and two on this side, between New York and Chagres. It is said that the Cresent City has on board $500,000 in gold and 126 passengers. One of the passengers, Mr. James Sinclair, of New York, returning from the mines with a fortune, died on the passage, of diarrhoea. The accounts of the abundance of precious metals are confirmed.

Duel of Cassius M. Clay and Joseph Turner.—On second-day, June 18, it was reported in New York, and generally believed, that at a public meeting in Madison Co., Ky., on the 17th, a rencontre took place between Cassius M. Clay and Joseph Turner—that both parties snapped pistols, and then attacked each other with bowie knives—that Clay was stabbed through the heart, and Turner mortally wounded in the abdomen and groin. On third-day, 19th, it was reported that Clay was shot in the duel, but was not dead, and would probably recover. Turner is dead.

Death of Mr. Polk.—James K. Polk, ex-President of the United States, died near Nashville, on sixth-day night, June 15, of a chronic diarrhea, after a very short illness. He was fifty-three years of age.

The Sources of the Nile.—The problem of the position of the sources of the Nile, which, during so many ages, has eluded all inquiry, seems at length in a fair way of being solved. Rev. Mr. Rebmann, of the Church Missionary Society, who is resident near Mombas, on the east coast of Africa, four degrees south of the equator, has recently penetrated about 100 miles inland, where he came to an elevated table-land, and saw before him a lofty mountain named Kilimandjaro, the summit of which is covered with perpetual snow. In the course of last summer, Dr. Bialloblotzky left England on an exploratory journey into Eastern Africa; and it is precisely in the above-mentioned direction that he purposes seeking the sources of the Nile, in accordance with the hypothesis of Dr. Beke, the Abyssinian traveler, at whose instance his journey has been undertaken. The discovery of Mount Kilimandjaro promises well for the success of the enterprise, as there is reason to regard it as forming a portion of the "Mountains of the Moon," the snows of which, according to Ptolemy, give rise to the Nile. The expenses of Dr. Bialloblotzky's journey are defrayed by subscription, raised among the friends of geographical discovery.

Mockery.—At Charlston, S. C., not long ago, a public dinner was given to Capt. Stewart, "in compliment to his gallant services in Mexico." The following toasts, given on the occasion, will appear sufficiently ludicrous to one who considers that more than half of the people of South Carolina—all of the laborers, indeed—are mere chattels personal of the minority :

By F. B. Hunt, Esq.—The Judiciary of South Carolina : That power of the State which regulates Liberty by the equal administration of Justice : its long history leaves its ermine unstained by a single spot.

By Capt. H. F. Tucker—Civil and Religious Freedom : Already does the sun of liberty, from his home in the Western world, throw the rainbow of promise, the harbinger of a brighter day, up upon the dark and portentous cloud that lowers above the Eastern Continent : May it soon shine upon a people as free and as happy as we are in our glorious Republic.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Great Telegraph Case.—The U. S. Circuit Court, sitting at Frankfort, Ky., has decided in favor of Henry O'Reilly and associates against Morse & Co., in the great Telegraph case for some time depending. The ground of the decision we understand to be, that Mr. Bain's machinery for Telegraphing is no plagiarism on Morse, but a substantial and distinct invention, which O'Reilly & Co. have a right to use, with the Patentee's permission, without asking any favors of Morse & Co. This, be it understood, is the court above that which last year made a decision in favor of Morse & Co.

We regard this decision as the most important that has been rendered since that which, thirty years ago, abolished the monopoly of Steamboat Navigation claimed by Livingston & Co., as assignees of Robert Fulton. Henceforth the Magnetic Telegraph, will be a public benefit, and not a blighting monopoly. Henceforth, competition in Telegraphing will be general, and it will be beyond the power of any man or set of men to monopolize information important to the whole community. The whole country will soon be threaded with magnetic wires, and cutting one or half a dozen will be a foolish, ineffectual crime ; for the information sought to be so delayed, will be instantly communicated by another route, evon though by a circuit of hundreds of miles. [Tribune.

Theatricals in Connecticut.—Connecticut, we believe, is the only State in the Union in which theatrical exhibitions are not allowed. At the present session of the Legislature in that State, an attempt has been made to get a bill through, allowing theatrical shows to be exhibited. A bill to this effect passed the Senate, but met with a most determined opposition in the House. One speaker said, that so far as the interior of theatres and shows were concerned, he was not personally opposed to them, but he should agree to break down the established policy of the State in reference to this subject with great hesitation. Though these amusements might not be bad in themselves, and might not injure a person of matured habits and principles, yet wherever they are found they are attended by a retinue scarcely proper even to name—a retinue of blacklegs, loafers, and gamblers.

Other speakers were more violent in their opposition. One gentleman said ; "If rattlesnakes and tigers were allowed to go at large it would not be so bad. You might kill whole dens of these, but you cannot control the evils that would follow the admission of these proposed theatres."

It was also intimated, that the proposed change in their State laws was at the solicitation of persons without the borders of the Commonwealth, and not from their own citizens.

The result of the debate was nearly an unanimous refusal on the part of the House to concur with the Senate and allow of theatrical exhibitions in the State.

A Wisconsin Village.—The Fond-du-Lac Republican says that a new village has been started upon Fox River, Wisconsin, six miles from the foot of Lake Winnebago, bearing the name of Martin—in honor of Morgan L. Martin, one of the earliest settlers of the County (Brown) in which it is situated. The water-power of the place is said to be cheap at $30,000 ; the fall is twenty-nine feet. Recent explorations have led to the discovery of a large ledge of waterlime upon the town plot—a scarce article in Wisconsin. A brick-yard is already in full blast in Martin, and turns out excellent work. A hotel of two and a half stories, to be the largest north of Fond-du-Lac, beside some dozen dwellings, are under contract. A saw-mill, dam, race, &c. are under way, and will soon be ready to go into operation. The race is to be sixty feet wide. A grist-mill, with four run of stones, will be erected in time for the fall grinding. The Lawrence University is situated at this place, and the College Buildings are now in progress of erection. As it is the only institution of the kind in the State, it will necessarily draw a large addition to the population and business of Martin, and benefit the whole section of country around it. The farming country around Martin is not exceeded in fertility by any portion of Wisconsin, and good water is to be found in abundance.

Schools in Connecticut.—The Report of the Commissioner of the School Fund of Connecticut has lately been published. It appears that the Fund continues to produce an increasing amount of dividends from year to year. The sums paid to the several districts in the State for the year ending in March last, amounted to $133,366 50—being an increase from the previous year of over $7,000. By the records of the Treasury it is shown that the largest amount ever paid to the schools in any year prior to 1825, was $72,203 25, or 83c. for each child—and previous to 1823, the amount had never reached $69,000, which was less than 4 1-2 per cent. on the capital, then amounting to $1,719,434 24.

The increase in the number of children in the enumeration of 1848 was 1,495—an increase in one year equal to more than half the entire increase of the preceding 28 years. This sudden increase of the past year, observes the Commissioner, is probably owing to the large number of laborers who have removed with their numerous families within our limits, for employment on the railroads now in progress, and in our manufacturing establishments. On the completion of these roads it is highly probable that the number will be diminished by change of residence for similar employment in other States.

The receipts during the year have been $189,022 91—the disbursements $176,060 33. Balance in the Treasury, March 31, $12,962 58.

Connectict Divorce Statistics.—Early in the session, the Legislature called upon the Secretary of State to furnish a statement of the number of divorces granted both by the Legislature and the Superior Court during the five years ending April 30th, 1849. In compliance with this call, the Secretary states the whole number to be 552.

They are divided up among the several Counties as follows : New London County, 83 ; Windham, 55 ; Litchfield, 75 ; Fairfield, 89 ; New-Haven, 100 ; Hartford, 103 ; Tolland, 24 ; Middlesex, 22.

The number divorced by the Legislature during the five years was as follows : In 1844, 2 ; '45, 5 ; '46, 6 ; '47, 7 ; '48, 15—32.

By the Superior Court, 1844–5, 85 ; '45–6, 90 ; '46–7, 77 ; '47–8, 102 ; '48–9, 104—466—to which add number in Windham Co. for five years, 51, makes 517. This, with the number granted by the Legislature, makes a total of 552 divorced in five years, or an average of over 110 a year !

Uncurrent and Counterfeit Money.—The bills of the Banks which have broken during the last year are selling as follows :

Bank of Norwalk, Ohio, 50 cts. ; Bank of Sandusky, Ohio, 37 cts. ; Canal Bank, Albany, 90 cts. ; Bank of Wooster, Ohio, 20 cts. ; New Hope Delaware Bridge, 20 cts. ; Atlas Bank, real estate notes, 70 cts., N. Y. stock notes, 95 cts. ; Erie Bank Pa., 85 cts. ; Hamilton, R. I., 25 cts.

We annex a list of the latest counterfeits, from Thompson's Bank Note Reporter :

Threes, on the Mechanics' Bank of New Haven—vignette, three, female ; Tens, on the Bank of Waterville, N. Y.—vignette, Declaration of Independence ; Tens, on the Tolland County Bank, Conn. ; Fives, on the Troy City Bank ; Threes, on the Camden Bank, N. Y. ; Threes, on the Bank of Westfield, N. Y. ; Tens, on the Claremont Bank, N. H. ; Threes, on the Stamford Bank, Mass. ; Threes, on the Otsego County Bank ; Fifties on the State Bank, Newark ; Twenties on the Cumberland Bank, Md. ; Fives, on the Troy City Bank ; Twenties, on the Stark Bank, East Bennington, Vt. ; Fives, on the Franklin County Bank, Malone, N. Y. —altered from Ones, by the pasting operation.

A Slaveholder Arrested in Canada for Wages by his Slave.—The Toronto Examiner notices a case tried at the Assizes there, in which Dr. Stone, a southern slaveholder, had been arrested, kept a few hours in jail, and held to bail, while on a visit to that city, at the suit of Brown, his former slave, who had escaped from bondage, on a claim on the part of said Brown of compensation for services rendered Dr. Stone while in slavery. The Court decided, that Brown could not recover, on a claim in Canada, any compensation that would not have been recognized as due to him in the Courts of the State where the parties had resided while Brown was Stone's slave. He was accordingly subjected to the full costs of the suit.

Writing on Newspapers.—A newspaper, bearing the initials of a friend, was received at the Post Office, Syracuse, directed to a young lady residing in the family of Charles F. Hicks. The Postmaster Mr. Teall, demanded letter postage on it, which Mr. Hicks refused to pay, but tendered therefor one cent, the ordinary newspaper postage, which was refused and the paper retained. The suit was instituted against the Postmaster for detaining the paper, and has been carried through all the Courts to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Star (of Syracuse) says that the Attorney General of the United States, after examining the case, decided that the State Courts had no jurisdiction in the case ; and that Teall acted legally in charging letter postage on the paper, and fully sustaining the grounds taken by Teall's counsel in the different Courts. The costs in this suit will probably amount to at least $400—the amount involved in the original dispute between the Postmaster and Mr. Hicks, was nine cents.

Duel—Both Principals Wounded.—The Louisville Democrat states that a duel was fought near Newport, Ky., between Singer, the Cincinnati schoolmaster, who was horsewhipped by a Mrs. Tuxford, and Smith, the attorney, who completed the business by knocking him down. The duel was fought with pistols at eleven paces, and at the first fire Smith was shot through the thigh, and Singer through the arm—whereat the assembled crowd gave three cheers, and the belligerents left the ground.

Land Sunk.—The Worcester Spy has a long series of particulars of the recent phenomenon at Westbrook, (Mass.) where, on the 14th inst., some forty acres of land vanished, giving place to a lake and a tract of blue plastic clay. There is missing, says the Spy, some twenty acres of woodland, and about the same quantity of pasture land. Over this whole extent, the natural soil has entirely disappeared. The woodland was covered with a heavy growth of timber, the whole of which has sunk below its original level some thirty feet, leaving perpendicular walls on three sides, and gradually sloping on the other side. The trees on a portion of the land have disappeared entirely, and on another portion they are thrown about in great disorder.

Arabian Cattle.—Lieut. Lynch, of the late Dead Sea Exploring Expedition, brought home a bull and a calf of the Khaisis breed of Arabian cattle, and presented them to the State of Virginia. By a resolution of the Legislature they were transferred to Col. Jas. Castleman of Clark Co. with a view to the propagation of the breed. They are said to be very beautiful animals, with limbs as delicate as the gazelle, yet strong and well set. When full grown they stand seven feet high, and the cows are said to yield milk abundantly. The pair were exhibited in Washington a few days and much admired.

A Slaver captured.—An arrival at New Bedford, from St. Helena, April 1, says that the Schooner Zenobia of Baltimore, arrived at the latter port on the 23d of March, a prize to an English sloop-of-war—having been captured off the coast of Africa, with 550 slaves on board—33 of whom were women. The schooner was of but 100 tons burden, and the suffering experienced by those on board was truly dreadful, 12 of whom perished. Some of the women had been branded in the breast with hot irons.

An "Omen."—The following note was appended to the close of a letter from a gentleman living in Meadville, Pa., under date May 25 : "The fish in Connecticut Lake, a body of water not far from this place, are dying. They come floating to the shore covered with a green scum, and the shore is lined with them. This singular fatality is said to be an omen of pestilence. The air around the lake is putrid."

SUMMARY.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated at Detroit, Mich., June 16, says that the steamer New Orleans, while on her way up with a large number of steerage passengers, ran hard on a reef of rock, on Thursday Evening, on Sugar Island, in Thunder Bay. The boat will prove a total wreck. No lives were lost, the passengers being brought ashore in fishermen's boats. Her cargo was mostly saved with but little injury. The hull is lying up to the deck in water. The passengers were on the Island waiting conveyance up the Lake.

We gave an account of the assassination of Col. David Ross, of Putnam, Ga. At the inquest held over his body, his own son, a youth of 20 years of age, was found guilty of the murder. He had been committed to jail to await his trial in September next. A negro girl, belonging to the deceased, has been lodged in jail charged as an accessory to his murder.

Mrs. Van Wormer, wife of Daniel Van Wormer, of Poughkeepsie, while on her way to Rochester, on board a canal boat, to join her husband there, was fatally injured in passing under the bridge at Brighton lock—being struck by one of the string-pieces of the bridge, which having been broken, hung below the level. She died before reaching Rochester.

The Boston Post says that at Gloucester, Simeon Merchant has a cat which has nursed and brought up a litter of young foxes. They are two months old, yet she watches over them with the utmost fondness, and they repay it in kind, though if any other cat is thrown into their kennel they tear it to pieces. Madam puss is so fond of her foxy bargain, that she treats her own offspring with indifference.

Capt. Robinson, of Washington city, and a party under him who left Fort Smith for California this spring, returned to that post on the 19th of May, having lost their oxen, provisions, and entire outfit, by the overflow of Sleepy Creek, in Creek Nation, which rose fifty feet during one night, compelling them to seek their personal safety by climbing into trees.

The Regents of the University of Wisconsin having unanimously elected John H. Lathrop, LL.D., now President of the University of Missouri, to be Chancellor of the Unity of Wisconsin, that gentleman has signified his readiness to enter upon the duties of the office on the 1st of October next.

A National Convention of Inventors and others interested in Patent Property and Patent Laws, will be holden in Baltimore the 21st of August next. Judge Phillips and Judge Rand, of Boston, and Geo. Gifford, Esq., of New York, have been invited to prepare a draft of Patent Laws to be presented to the proposed Convention.

A woman at Albany, who had for several days been taking laudanum as a preventive of cholera, on Friday had an extra fit of alarm, and swallowed nearly half an ounce of concrete opium. It was removed from her stomach by a physician, and her life saved.

A column, 40 feet high, from a design by Sir James Alexander, surmounted by a bronzed helmet and sword, has been erected at Quebec, on the spot where Wolfe fell 20 years since.

Capt. Gill Malroy, a Revolutionary soldier, died at Lockport, May 2, aged 94. He was at the capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point, the battle of Bennington, and the surrender of Burgoyne.

The Village Record states that the Hessian fly has made its appearance among the wheat crops of Chester County Pa., and threatens destruction to the crops in many neighborhoods.

The Wheeling (Va.) Gazette of the 1st inst. says : Through all the wheat regions east of the mountains traversed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the wheat crop is suffering from the ravages of the Hessian fly.

Gov. Mosely, of Florida, has issued a proclamation, offering a reward of two hundred dollars for the apprehension of Benjamin F. Wood, charged with the murder of Elijah B. Jordan, in Jackson Co., in that State—and a like reward for the apprehension of John Miller, charged with aiding and abetting one John Frederick in the murder of Washington Dudley, at St. Marks, in the same State.

On Saturday evening, the 2d inst., a negro entered the dwelling of Judge Alexander Walker, near New Orleans, for the purpose of robbery. The Judge, however, awaking, discovered him, and immediately seized him, when a desperate encounter ensued, in which knives and pistols were used. The negro was mortally wounded, while the Judge escaped unhurt.

The steamer Memphis recently encountered a severe gale near Medina, and the pilot's house with the roof of the cabin were blown off. The chimneys were also blown down. Three pilots with the carpenter were thrown overboard and drowned, together with some thirteen others. The Captain was blown from the hurricane deck to the forecastle and seriously hurt.

Mr. Patterson of the Philadelphia mint, gives the annexed information : The value of California gold, received there to the 9th inst. is $362,792. We also learn that the coinage of gold dollar pieces, which began on the 7th ult., has reached to the number 315,700, and that it exceeds, by more than 69,000, the demand made by depositors.

The Boston Mail says, that Richard Boylston, Esq., who has been editor and publisher of the Amherst (N. H.) "Farmer's Cabinet," for more than forty years, has been spending a few days in the city, receiving a legacy of $40,000 left him by a relative. It could not have been left to a better printer or more worthy man.

A severe storm occurred on the Ohio River on Friday, June 8. Both chimneys of the steamboat Peytona were blown overboard, and two or three canal boats, in tow of the Belle of Nashville, and as many in tow of the Superb, were sunk.

Quite a number of slaves have lately fled from Loudon Co., Va., and when some of them were arrested they produced well-executed free papers, which proved to be forged. Eight male slaves got off also from Hampshire Co., Va., and were not re-taken.

The Cleveland Plaindealer says that Hon. Joshua R. Giddings has been appointed a delegate to the great Peace Convention to be held in Paris in September next. It is said that he will take his departure soon.

On the 22d ult., at Sydenham, Owen's Sound, Upper Canada, during a dreadful thunder storm, which extended over a large district, two young men were killed by lightning, Walter Macfarlane, and Archibald Jamieson.

A little girl in Keene, N. H., was recently bitten by a dog supposed to be rabid. Two or three mad dogs have been killed in that town.

On Monday, June 4th, a hail storm passed over the village of Homer, N. Y., doing considerable damage in the way of breaking glass. One man had from 1,500 to 2,000 panes broken.

In consequence of the prevalence of the Cholera, the meeting of the Annual Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Illinois, which was to have been held some time during the present month, has been postponed until farther notice.

A riot occurred at Vergennes, Vt., on Friday last. A party of men were refused admittance into Sands & Co's circus, upon tickets which they supposed entitled them to admission to the evening performances. Two of the party were killed and several wounded.

The schr. Kokeno, from Jeremie, May 23, reports a severe drouth prevailing there for several months. The fruits were nearly all destroyed. There was great scarcity of food, and the inhabitants were suffering dreadfully.

A gentleman in Louisville recently purchased a fine looking roll of butter, weighing ten pounds ; but on cutting it in two after reaching home, all but an inch in thickness of the outside proved to be mashed potatoes !

Cassius M. Clay made an Anti-Slavery speech at Lancaster, Garrard Co., Ky., on the 28th ult., and was replied to by Geo. R. McKee and Hall Anderson, Esqs. The meeting was full, and the debate very able and interesting.

From returns made at some of the Western river and lake ports, it is estimated that the total loss by wrecks in the western rivers, in the year ending June 30th, 1848, amounted to two millions of dollars, and that the losses in the lakes amounted to a still larger sum.

There are now on the stocks at Bath, Me. ten ships, all of which will be launched within four or five months. One of them is 1,200 tons, another 1,000, three of 900, one of 800, one of 700, one of 600, one of 500, and one of 450.

It appears that the population of France amounts to 32,950,000 inhabitants. Of this number, 2,412,000 live exclusively upon public charity ; in addition to which, 7,884,600 are inscribed upon the poor lists.

The rush for Minesota, the new territory, is so great, that accommodations cannot be had at the hotels in St. Paul's at any price. Strangers have provided themselves with tents. Board is $5 per week.

Among the sales announced by the London papers is that of three churches, situated in London, which are to be sold on order of a bankrupt's assignees during the present month.

A convict named Alexander Freyts was accidentally killed at the State Prison at Sing Sing, by the bursting of a grindstone, a piece of which struck him upon the head, causing instant death.

At the last session of the Legislature of New York, a resolution was passed for the appointment of eight Commissioners to prepare a plan and estimate the expense of an Agriculture College and Experimental Farm School.

Rev. D. Smith, of Peoria Co., Ill., killed with his own hand, on the 17th ult., 290 rattle snakes.

A jury at Patterson, N. J., was out lately for fifty two hours without food, yet could not be starved into a verdict. The case was one of embezzlement.

About one hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of California gold, was received at the Philadelphia Mint on the 13th of June.

At St. Louis, on Sunday, June 10th, a prize fight came off, with the usual concomitants. One of the combatants lost an eye, and a spectator was stabbed mortally.

The Nashville Union of the 8th says that Mr. Polk, the ex-President, still lies in a precarious condition. His complaint is not cholera, but diarrhea.

The Cleveland (Ohio) Plaindealer of the 30th ult. says, "The earth is perfectly saturated, and so cold that it appears wholly useless for farmers to put in their crops."

The Muncy (Pa.) Luminary says that a mine of coal has been discovered at or near Laporte, the county seat of the new county of Sullivan.

The Melbourne Argus states that large quantities of gold have been found near that place. Melbourne is in South Australia.

The Chicago Democrat of the 7th inst. says : The schooner Merchant is reported lost on Lake Huron, and the crew, consisting of five persons, drowned.

Voltaire says,—"The more married men you have the fewer crimes there will be. Marriage renders a man more virtuous and more wise."

Tennessee, Missouri and Iowa, are the only States in the Union that are without a foot of railroad.

MARRIED.

In Brookfield, N. Y., May 30th, by Rev. Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Otis P. G. Clarke, (son of Hon. Joseph Clarke,) to Miss Harriet M Lewis, (daughter of Deacon Bell Lewis,) all of Brookfield.

In Harrisville, (Coventry,) R. I., May 4th, by Rev. F. Charlton, Mr. Calvert B. Cottrell, of Coventry, and Miss Lydia W. Perkins, of Warwick.

In Charleston, R. I., June 6th, by Eld. I. Coon, Mr. Edward R. Sheffield, of New York City, and Miss Mary Knowles, of Charleston, R. I.

In Verona, N. Y., June 11th, by Eld. Christopher Chester, Mr. Charles Boyden to Miss Augusta E. Dunham, all of Verona.

In West Greenwich, R. I., on the 3d inst., by Eld. Caleb Greene, Mr. Ira S. Brown, of Hopkinton, to Miss Hannah Tillinghast, youngest daughter of Benjamin Tillinghast, Esq., of the former place.

How sweet, how blest, the tie that binds
  Two willing hearts together,
When constant love, their happy minds
  Unite, till death shall sever.

DIED.

At Waterford Center, Mich., on the 22d of May, Delany, daughter of Farley F. and Amy Coon, aged 14 years and 10 months. Her disease was consumption, and she bore her protracted and painful illness with sweet submission. Death she did not regard as an enemy, but as a friend, that was to introduce her into a higher and happier state.

LETTERS.

Daniel Coon, Lucius Crandall, A. D. Titsworth, Wm. M. Fahnestock, R. W. Lewis, P. M. Brown, C. Chester, Wm. P. Langworthy, Benj. Vincent, F. F. Coon, James Hill (to Dec. next.)

RECEIPTS.

[We acknowledge, this week, only those sums received on old accounts, or accounts previous to to the close of vol. 5. Hereafter, all moneys received on old accounts will be kept and acknowledged separately from moneys received on vol. 6—the former by Geo. B. Utter, and the latter by B. W. Rogers, Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.]

G. A. Dunn, Plainfield, N. J.	$4 00	to vol.	5	No.	52
N. Drake,	"	2 00	"	5	"	52
G. F. Randolph, Millington, N. J.		2 00	"	5	"	52
P. Handel, Hopkinton, R. I.		1 00	"	5	"	52
B. Vincent, Vilanorea,		8 00	"	5	"	52
W. S. Burdick, L. Genesee,		2 00	"	5	"	52
David Maxson,	"	1 50	"	5	"	52
E. P. Burdick,	"	1 00	"	5	"	52
M. Rogers, Williamsburg, L. I.		2 00	"	5	"	52
A. Stillman, New York,		2 00	"	5	"	52
A. M. Stratton,	"	2 00	"	5	"	52
A. Williams,	"	1 00	"	5	"	52
R. Williams,	"	70	"	5	"	52

New York Markets—Monday, June 18.

WHOLESALE.

Ashes—Pots $5 62 ; Pearls 5 56.——Flour and Meal—Flour has declined a little, common and good straight selling for 4 44 a 4 56, straight State and Western for 4 75 a 4 81, and pure Genesee 5 06. Rye Flour 2 94 a 3 00. Meal 3 00.——Grain—Wheat, Genesee 1 30, Pennsylvania 1 15, Ohio 1 03. Corn, 61 a 62c. for Western, 65 for Northern yellow. Rye 59c. Oats 35c. for River, 36c. for Canal.——Provisions—Pork, Prime 8 75, Mess 10 25. Beef, Prime 9 00 a 9 25, Mess 11 50 a 12 00. Lard 7c. Butter 7 a 10c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for Western, 15 a 17c. for Orange County.

RETAIL HOUSEHOLD MARKETS.

There is an abundant supply of summer luxuries, such as Strawberries, Cherries, Green Peas, French Beans, new Onions, and new Potatoes. Prices of such articles are moderate, in consequence of the general carefulness about eating them. Apples by the barrel, Spitzenbergs 18s and 20s to $3 ; Newtown Pippins, 10 a 20s ; Greenings, 12 a 16s ; Seek-no-Farthers, 22s. Beef is scarce and high ; retailing, for Porter-House Steaks 16 to 18c per lb ; Ribs, 14d ; Sirloins, 15d ; Rump, 10d ; Plate-pieces 8d ; Corned 6d a 10d ; Smoked 1s. Beets—8 and 10 for a shilling. Lima Beans—Shelled, 15d per quart. Butter—Delaware 1s 6d a 1s 8d per lb ; Orange County 1s 8d a 1s 9d ; inferior new sells at 10d a 1s. Cabbages—New, about 1s. Carrots—8 and 10 for a shilling. Cranberries—Per qt. 15d ; per bbl. in water, $10. Eggs are up ; retailing 8 a 8½ for a shilling ; wholesale, 9 a 9½. Parsley—per bunch, 6 a 8 cents. Parsnips—8 and 10 for a shilling. Dried Peaches—per quart, 1s 3d. Green Peas—per bushel 20s ; per half peck, about 3s. Potatoes—New, about 4s per half peck ; Old, 1s a bushel. Poultry and Game—Spring Chickens, 6s per pair ; Spring Geese, $1 a 10s each ; Spring Ducks, 10s per pair ; Turkeys, 12s each ; Fowls, 6s per pair ; Wild Pigeons, 12s per dozen. Maple Sugar—Retail, about 1s cts per pound ; wholesaled at 6 a 9 ; Country manufacturers get, on the average, 6d per pound. French Beans—Good, but not abundant, 1s per quart New Onions—Per bunch, 9d. Green Peas—Per half peck, 18d ; 9s per bushel. Gooseberries—Per bushel, $1 ; per quart, about 6d. Cherries—From 6 to 8 cts per quart ; and higher in some places. Strawberries—Remarkably abundant, and mainly very good, at from 3 and 4 to 5 and 6 cts per basket ; wholesaleing for 2 a 3 cts.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
  James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—S. P. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—[illegible]

Miscellaneous.

REMARKABLE ESCAPE FROM PRISON.

[Two French gentlemen, Messrs. De Latude and D'Alegre, were imprisoned in the Bastile, at the instance of that implacable woman, Madame de Pompadour. An intimation having been given to them that they had no hope of release, De Latude resolved to escape or perish in the attempt. We give the story in his own words.]

"To any man who had the least notion of the situation of the Bastile—its extent, its towers, its discipline, and the incredible precaution which despotism had multiplied, more surely to chain its victims—the mere idea of escaping from it would appear the effect of insanity, and would inspire nothing but pity for a wretch so devoid of sense as to dare to conceive it. A moment's reflection would suffice to show, that it was hopeless to attempt to escape by the gates. Every physical impossibility was united to render this impracticable. We had no recourse but by the outside. There was in our chamber a fire-place, the chimney of which came out in the extreme height of the tower; it was full of gratings and bars of iron, which, in several parts of it, scarcely left a free passage for the smoke. Should we be able to get to the top of the tower, we should have below us a precipice of great height, at the bottom of which was a fosse, or broad ditch, surrounded by a very lofty wall to be got over. We were without assistance, without tools, without material, constantly watched, and guarded besides, by a great number of sentinels, who surrounded the outworks of the Bastile. So many obstacles, so many dangers did not deter me. I hinted my scheme to my comrade; he thought me a madman, and relapsed into despair. I was obliged alone to digest my plan, to anticipate the frightful host of difficulties which opposed its execution, and find the means of remedying them all. To accomplish our object, we had to climb to the top of the chimney, notwithstanding the many iron gratings which were opposed to our ascent; and then, in order to descend from the top of the tower into the fosse, we required a ladder of eighty feet at least, and another ladder, necessarily of wood, to get out of the fosse. If I could get these materials, I must hide them from every eye, must work without noise, deceive all our spies, and this for months together. Now for the details of my operations:

Our first object was to find a place of concealment for our tools and materials, in case we should be so fortunate as to procure any. By dint of reflecting on the subject, a thought struck me which appeared to me a very happy one. I had occupied several different chambers in the Bastile, and had always observed, whenever the chambers, either above or below me were inhabited, that I had heard very distinctly any noise made in either. On the present occasion I heard all the movements of the prisoner above, but not of him below; nevertheless, I felt confident there was a prisoner there. I conjectured, at least, that there might be a double floor, with a space between each. I took the following means to satisfy myself on the point. There was in the Bastile a chapel, at which, by special favor of Monsieur Berryer, we, as well as the prisoner below, No. 3, were allowed to hear mass. I resolved to take advantage, when mass should be over, of a moment before the prisoner below was locked up, to take a view of his chamber. I pointed out to D'Alegre how he was to assist me. I told him to put his toothpick case in his pocket handkerchief, and when we should be on the second floor, by pulling out his pocket handkerchief, to let his toothpick case fall all the way down stairs, and then to request the turnkey to pick it up. My little plan succeeded. While the turnkey was going after the toothpick case, I ran quickly up to No. 3. I drew back the bolt of the door, I examined the height of the chamber from the floor, found it about ten feet six inches. I shut the door, and from this room to ours I counted thirty-two steps, measured the height of one of them, and making my calculation, I came to the conclusion that there must be between the floor of our chamber and the ceiling of that below, a space of five feet six inches, which could not be filled up either by stones or wood, on account of their weight.

As soon as we were shut up and bolted in, I embraced D'Alegre with delight. "My friend," said I, "patience and courage—we are saved! We can hide our ropes and materials—that is all that is wanted! We are saved!" "What," said he, "have you not given up your dreams? Ropes and materials!—where are they, and where shall we get them?" "Ropes," said I, "why, we have more than we want; that trunk (showing him mine) contains a thousand feet of them. Looking at me steadfastly, he replied, "My good friend, endeavor to regain your senses, and to calm the frenzy which agitates you. I know the contents of your trunk; there is not a single inch of rope in it." "Aye," said I, "but have I not a large stock of linen—twelve dozen of shirts, a great number of napkins, stockings, nightcaps, and other things; will they not supply us? We will unravel them and we shall have ropes enough." "But how are we to extract the iron gratings of our chimney?" said D'Alegre; "where are we to get the materials for the wooden ladder which we shall want?—where obtain tools for all these works?—we cannot create things." "My friend," I replied, "it is genius which creates, and we have that which despair gives, that will guide our hands; once more, we are saved!" We had a flat table supported by iron legs; we gave them an edge by rubbing them on the tiled floor; of the steel of our tinder-box we made, in less than two hours, a good knife, with which we formed two handles to these iron legs; the principal use of these was to force out the gratings of our chimney. In the evening, the daily inspection being over, with these iron legs we raised some tiles off our floor, and by digging for about six hours, we discovered that our conjectures were well founded, and that there was a vacant space between the floor and ceiling of about four feet. We replaced the tiles so that they scarcely appeared to have been raised. This done, we ripped the seams and hems of two shirts, and drew out the threads of them one by one. These we tied together, and wound them on a number of small balls, each of which was composed of fifty threads, sixty feet long. We twisted these, and formed a cord of about fifty-five feet long, and with it constructed a rope ladder, which was intended to support us aloft, while we drew out of the chimney the bars and spikes with which it was armed. This was the most painful and troublesome of our labors, and cost us six months toil, the recollection of which makes one shudder.

We could only work by bending our bodies in the most painful positions; an hour at a time was all we could bear, and we never came down without hands covered with blood. The iron bars were fastened with an extremely hard mortar, which we had no means of softening but by blowing water with our mouths into the holes as we worked them. Judge what this work must have been, when we were well pleased if in a whole night we had worked away the eighth of an inch of this mortar. When we got a bar out, we replaced it in its holes, that, when we were inspected, the deficiency might not appear, and so as to enable us to take all of them out at once, should we be in a situation to escape. After six months of this obstinate cruel work, we applied ourselves to the wooden ladder which was necessary to mount from the fosse upon the parapet, and from thence into the governor's garden. This ladder required to be twenty feet long. We devoted to this part of our work nearly all our fuel; it consisted of round logs about eighteen or twenty inches long. We found we should want blocks or pulleys, and several other things, for which a saw was indispensable. I made one with an iron candlestick, by means of half of the steel of the tinder-box from which I had made the knife; with this piece of steel, the saw and the iron legs of our table, we reduced the size of our logs; we made tenons and mortices in them, to join them one into the other, with two holes through each, and two joints to prevent swagging. We made the ladder with only one upright. To every piece of which the ladder was composed, the proper round of each joint was tied with a string, to enable us to put it together readily in the dark. As we completed each piece, we concealed it between the two floors. With the tools we had made we completed the tools of our workshop. We had a pair of compasses, a square, a carpenter's rule, &c. &c. and hid them in our magazine."

De Latude goes on to detail the precautions which he and his companion in misfortune took, in case any of the jailors should be listening, to give feigned names for everything they had used in their work, and states the names used by them for each article. He then proceeds with his narrative:

"These things being complete, we set about our principal ladder, which was to be at least eighty feet long. We began by unraveling our linen, shirts, napkins, stockings, drawers, pocket handkerchiefs—every thing which could supply thread or silk. As we made a ball we concealed it in Polyphemus (the name they called the hiding-place) and when we had a sufficient quantity, we employed a whole night in twisting it into a rope; and I defy a rope-maker to have done it better. The upper part of the building of the Bastile overhangs three or four feet. This would incessantly occasion our ladder to wave and swing about as we came down it, enough to turn the strongest head. To obviate this, and to prevent our fall, we made a second rope, 160 feet long. This rope was to be reeved through a kind of double block without sheaves, in case the person descending should be suspended in the air without being able to get down lower. Besides these, we made several other ropes of shorter lengths, to fasten our ladder to a cannon, and for other unforseen occasions. When all these ropes were finished, we measured them—they amounted to 1400 feet. We then made 208 rounds for the rope and wooden ladders. To prevent the noise which the rounds would make against the wall during our descent, we gave them coverings formed of pieces of the linings of our morning-gowns, of our waistcoats, and our under waistcoats.

In all these preparations we employed eighteen months, but still they were incomplete. We had provided means to get to the top of the tower, to get into and out of the fosse; two more were wanting—one to climb upon the parapet; from the parapet into the governor's garden; from thence to get down into the fosse of the Port St. Antonie; but the parapet which we had to cross was always well furnished with sentinels. We might fix on a dark and rainy night, when the sentinels did not go their rounds, and escape by those means, but it might rain when we climbed our chimney, and might clear up at the very moment when we arrived at the parapet; we should then meet with the chief of the grounds, who constantly inspected the parapet, and he being always provided with lights it would be impossible to conceal ourselves, and we should be inevitably ruined. The other plan increased our labors, but was the less dangerous of the two. It consisted in making way through the wall which separates the fosse of the Bastile, from that of the Port St. Antoine. I considered that in the numerous floods, during which the Seine had filled this fosse, the water must have injured the mortar, and rendered it less difficult, and so we should be enabled to break a passage through the wall. For this purpose we should require an augur to make holes in the mortar, so as to insert the points of the two iron bars to be taken out of our chimney, and with them force out the stones, and so make our way through. Accordingly we made an augur with one of the feet of our bedstead, and fastened a handle to it in the form of a cross. We fixed on Wednesday, the 25th of February, 1756, for our flight; the river had overflown its banks; there were but four feet of water in the fosse of the Bastile, as well as in that of the Port St. Antoine, by which we hoped to effect our deliverance. I filled a leather portmanteau with a change of clothes for both, in case we were so fortunate as to escape.

Dinner was scarcely over when we set up our great ladder of rope, that is, we put the rounds to it, and hid it under our beds; then we arranged our wooden ladder in three places. We put our iron bars in their cases to prevent their making a noise; and we packed up our bottle of usquebaugh to warm us, and restore our strength during our work in the water, up to the neck for nine hours. These precautions taken, we waited till our supper was brought up. I first got up the chimney. I had the rheumatism in my left arm, but I thought little of the pain; I soon experienced one much more severe. I had taken none of the precautions used by chimney sweepers. I was nearly choked by the soot; and having no guards on my knees and elbows, they were so excoriated that the blood ran down on my legs and hands. As soon as I got to the top of the chimney, I let down a piece of twine to D'Alegre; to this he attached the end of the rope to which our portmanteau was fastened. I drew it up, unfastened it, and threw it on the platform of the Bastile. In the same way we hoisted up the wooden ladder, the two iron bars, and all our other articles; we finished by the ladder ropes, the end of which I allowed to hang down to aid D'Alegre in getting up, while I held the upper part by means of a large wooden peg which we had prepared on purpose. I passed it through the cord, and placed it across the funnel of the chimney. By these means my companion avoided suffering as I did.

This done, I came down from the top of the chimney, where I had been in a very painful position, and both of us were on the platform of the Bastile. We began by making a roll of our ladder of ropes, of about four feet in diameter and one thick. We rolled it to the tower called La Tour du Treson,* which appeared to us the most favorable for our descent. We fastened one end of the ladder of ropes to a piece of cannon, and then lowered it down the wall; then we fastened the block, and passed the rope of one hundred and sixty feet long through it. This I tied round my body, and D'Alegre slackened it as I went down. Notwithstanding this precaution, I swung about in the air at every step I made. Judge what my situation was, when one shudders at the recital of it.

At length I landed, without accident, in the fosse. Immediately D'Alegre lowered my portmanteau and other things. I found a little spot uncovered by water, on which I put them. Then my companion followed my example; but he had an advantage which I had not had, for I held the ladder for him with all my strength, which greatly prevented its swinging. It did not rain; and we heard the sentinel marching at about four toises'† distance, and we were, therefore forced to give up our plan of escaping by the parapet and the governor's garden. We resolved to use our iron bars. We crossed the fosse straight over to the wall which divides it from the Port St. Antoine, and went to work sturdily. Just at this point there was a small ditch, about six feet broad and one deep, which increased the depth of the water. Elsewhere it was only up to our middles; here to our armpits. It had thawed only a few days, so that the water had yet floating ice in it; we were nine hours in it, exhausted by fatigue, and benumbed with the cold. We had hardly begun our work before the chief of the watch came round with his lantern, which cast a light on the place we were in; we had no alternative but to put our heads under water as he passed, which was every half hour.

At length, after nine hours of incessant alarm and exertion, after having worked out the stones one by one, we succeeded in making, in a wall four feet six inches thick, a hole sufficiently wide, and we both crept through. We were giving way to our transports, when we fell into a danger which we had not foreseen, and which had nearly been fatal to both of us. In crossing the fosse St. Antoine, to get into the road to Bercy, we fell into the aqueduct which was in the middle. This aqueduct had ten feet of water over our heads, and two feet of mud on the side. D'Alegre fell on me, and had nearly thrown me down; had that misfortune happened, we were lost, for we had not enough strength left to get up again, and must have smothered. Finding myself laid hold of by D'Alegre, I gave him a blow with my fist, which made him let go, and at the same instant, throwing myself forward, I got out of the aqueduct. I then felt for D'Alegre, and getting hold of his hair, drew him to me; we were soon out of the fosse, and just as the clock struck five, were on the high road. Penetrated by the same feeling, we threw ourselves into each other's arms, and after a long embrace, we fell on our knees, to offer thanks to the Almighty, who had snatched us from so many dangers.

---

*In July, 1789, the walls of this celebrated prison were leveled with the ground. One of the prisoners, Count de Iorges, had been confined thirty-two years, and excited great public sympathy. The great key of the outer gate was presented by Lafayette to Gen. Washington.

† A toise is about six and a half feet.

◆

Simple Remedy for Cholera.—Dr. Bird, of Chicago, states that pills composed of four parts of sulphur to one of charcoal, have been used in the west with wonderful success as a preventive and cure of cholera, and the Northwestern Medical and Surgical Journal fully endorses the statement. Influenza is attributed, by a German Physician and chemist, to the presence in the atmosphere of a poisonous gas, called azone; and Dr. Bird, suspecting that this vapor was the cause of cholera, experimented upon the air at various times, and found it to be charged more or less with this subtil agent, in proportion to the severity of the disease. He also found that cholera had never been known to prevail near sulphur springs, or where that substance was a constituent of the soil. Hence he concluded that sulphur neutralized azone, and began to administer it with charcoal for the cure of cholera. The results, if his own testimony and that of the Northwestern Medical Journal and Buffalo Courier are to be believed, were almost miraculous. Patients in the worst state of collapse have recovered; and, in short, both as a preventive and a remedy, the preparation is alledged to have proved infallible. A dispatch from New Orleans also says that it has been administered there with the "desired effect."

◆

Profits of the First Vessel to California.—The bark John W. Cater, belonging to Fernando Wood, Esq., sailed hence for San Francisco, October 20, and arrived out March 1st, making the run in four months and ten days. The Cater was the first vessel with cargo, after the conclusion of the treaty with Mexico, that cleared for San Francisco direct from this port, and consequently was the first vessel that took out a coastwise clearance for California. Her cargo, which was large and well assorted, will net the owner over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars profit. Every article was in great demand, and rapidly sold immediately on her arrival, with the exception of dry goods, with which the market was already well supplied. Cooking stoves that cost $10 sold for $180. On many articles of tinware the per centage profit was about the same.

THE POOR MAN'S DOINGS.

BY MRS. MARY HOWITT.

Oh! what were the pride of the rich man's gold,
 Or the worth of the untilled rood,
Were it not for the rough, hard-handed poor,
 Who toil for their daily food?

Whatever of labor the rich man needs,
 From the poor man's hand must come—
From the cradle rare of the new-born heir,
 To the coffin and sculptured tomb.

The poor man swayeth the settler's axe,
 Till the forests far retire;
And the city springs on its phœnix wings
 O'er the brands of the log-house fire.

He bandeth the air with iron roads,
 And the steam-fed courser guides;
And fearlessly drives the steeds of the sea
 Wherever the rich man rides.

He tills the plain till the ripened grain
 Is safe in the garner stored;
And with rifle and snare he hunteth the fare
 That smokes on the rich man's board.

He twineth the costly robes of pride,
 And reareth the stately dome;
And cleaves from the clod the marble god
 That stands in the rich man's home.

The gauds of beauty, the works of art,
 Whatever your wealth has bought—
Nay—the very gold that your coffers hold,
 The poor man's hand hath wrought.

Then health to the rude and thrifty Poor,
 And honor them evermore;
They 'mid the turmoil, earn the wages of toil,
 As your fathers did before.

And think the reward of labor is health,
 That wealth is industry's friend,
That change is earth's law, and soon the see-saw
 May rise at the poor man's end.

◆

THRILLING ADVENTURE AND NARROW ESCAPE.

From the Philadelphia North American.

Lieut. Beall, U. S. Navy, is already well known to the country, having particularly distinguished himself, on several different occasions, as a bearer of important dispatches to and from California, both through the heart of Mexico, during the war, and across the prairies and Rocky Mountains, forcing his way, with equal spirit, through civilized and savage enemies. As a gallant naval officer and intrepid traveler, with the courage to face and the energy to overcome every difficulty and peril, we can well believe he has no superior; but we have recently heard an anecdote told of him, being the account of a circumstance which happened on the late journey to California, from which he has so lately returned, which, while it illustrates the dangers of the road, proves that there is another quality in him higher than mere resolution and bravery—a humane and generous disposition, which gives to those virtues the character of heroism.

It was, we believe, in the Gila country, that Lieut. Beall, having encamped his party, and placed it in safety, went out to hunt. He set out alone, on a favorite saddle mare, which was generally kept up or spared for such occasions. About six miles from the camp, he had the good fortune to kill a deer; and he was on the ground dressing the carcass, when, on looking up, he suddenly beheld a troop of mounted Apaches, who had discovered him, and were dashing furiously toward him. They had doubtless heard the report or seen the smoke of his rifle, and so were on him before he was aware; but he knew very well that to be overtaken by them, single white man among those naked hills which they called their own, was certain death; and accordingly, leaving the game, and mounting in hot haste, he relied upon the mettle of his mare, which he put to her full speed, to carry him back in safety to the camp. Away darted the young lieutenant, and on rushed the savages, thundering and yelling in the certain assurance of their prey. But confident as they were, the fugitive was quite as well satisfied of his ability to escape; although their horses were fresher than the mare, and it was pretty certain they were gaining slightly upon her, and would give her a severe contest before reaching the camp.

Thus assured of his safety, but not relaxing his speed, Lieutenant B. had recovered half of his distance from the camp, when, dashing over the crest of a hill, he was horrified at the sight of one of his own men, on foot, climbing the hill, and, in fact, following in his trail to assist him in the hunt. The sight of the Lieutenant flying down the hill at such a furious rate was, doubtless, enough; perhaps the poor fellow could hear the whoops of the Indians ascending the hill from the opposite side; at all events he understood his fate, and spreading his arms before the horse's head, he cried out, with the accents of despair, "Oh, Mr. Beall, save me! I am a husband and the father of six helpless children!" Never was prayer more quickly heard, or more heroically answered.

The Lieutenant, though riding for his own life, immediately stopped his mare, dismounted, and giving her to the man, said, "You shall be saved. Ride back to the camp, and send them out to give my body decent burial!" And so they parted—the footman to escape, the officer, as he supposed, to be slain, for the hill was utterly bare, without a single hiding place, and he thought of nothing but selling his life as dearly as possible. For this purpose, he drew his revolver, and, sitting down on the ground, waited for the savages, who in a moment came rushing over the brow of the hill, and then, to the unspeakable amazement of Lieut. Beall, dashed past him down the descent like madmen, not a soul of them paying the least regard to him, not a soul, in fact, seeing him. They saw, in reality, nothing but the horse and the horseman they had been pursuing for three miles; they knew nothing of a footman; and perhaps the sitting figure of the Lieutenant appeared, to eyes only bent on one attractive object, as a stone or huge cactus, such as abound on those sterile hills.

At all events, Lieut. Beall, by what seemed to himself almost a direct Providential interposition in his behalf, remained wholly undiscovered; and in a moment more the Apaches were out of sight, still pursuing the horse and his rider to the camp. The latter barely succeeded in escaping with his life, the Indians having overhauled him so closely just as he reached the camp, as to be able to inflict one or two slight wounds upon him with bullets, or perhaps with arrows. As for Lieut. Beall, he was not slow to take advantage of his good fortune; and selecting a round-about course, he succeeded in reaching the camp just about the time the poor fellow whom he had saved, and the other members of the party, were about sallying out to obey his last request and give his body decent burial.

LIFTING OF THE STEAMER EMPIRE.

We have given the particulars of the sinking of this splendid steamer in the Hudson river, opposite Newburgh. The aggregate number of lives lost by the disaster was twenty-four. The boat has been brought to New York. Last week she was raised on the sectional dry dock, when, strange to say, two large holes were found in her bottom, the second one some ten or twelve feet aft of the first. It is somewhat difficult to account for the two holes. The solution appears to be this:—The upper and more forward hole, which is also the smaller one, was made by the bowsprit of the schooner that run foul of her, which being snapped out of her quick as lightning, and the two boats going at a speed, between them, of twenty-four miles an hour, the stern of the schooner struck her farther aft, and made a breach as large as the head of a cask. Hence, as it will be recollected, one of the witnesses stated he heard a double crash, as it were. This hole accounts for the rapid manner in which the boat filled. The body of the fourth brother, Ladd, of Stonington, Connecticut, was found in the cabin, between the engines, up against the main deck, with one arm round a settee, in which it was fastened, and by means of which the boy probably endeavored to save himself. He was about twelve years of age. He had on all his clothes except his shoes, and so had the other three brothers found in the same cabin. These were the only bodies got in that part of the boat, notwithstanding the fears entertained that so many would be found there. It is quite clear that they had been awakened, and if they had not waited to dress themselves, might have been saved. A large crowd was collected around the dock, when the steamer was raised, but very few were permitted to go on board. The articles brought up, one by one, by the sailors, and placed on the deck, presented a curious melange. One brought a pair of boots, another a cloak, another an overcoat, another a parasol, another a vest, or a pair of trowsers, another a carpet bag or a portmanteau, all covered with mud and filth. These articles were washed, a hose with Croton water having been introduced into the boat, and were numbered according to the berths in which they were found. The gold watch and purse belonging to Mrs. Tuthill, were found on the deck just where she stated she dropped them. The purse contained $2 50 less than she said it did. Some of the contents of the pocket books found were amusing in the extreme. One of them contained some verses written in penciling, inspired by standing on Brooklyn Heights, and looking into the bay.

Among the articles found were the following:—Six dollars in bills, eight and English sixpences, belonging, as appeared by some papers found, to Levi Savery, who was going to Whitehall; a box of dry goods, addressed to Miss E. Lester, Whitehall; a portmanteau, with the name engraved, "Charles S. Fithian, Bridgeton, N. J.;" a gold watch, found in room No. 65; a silver watch in room No. 66; a portmanteau in No. 52; a basket, containing a black silk dress, found amidships; a cloak, found in No. 60; an overcoat, in No. 66; a specimen of cylinder paper, from the establishment of Field & Co., as appeared from writing in penciling upon it; a pocket book, containing a receipt dated Schenectady, from J. Skerrett, for $2 50 for medical attendance and medicine, signed by Jos. L. Van Cugar; also, a $5 note, and a letter from Mr. Topping to his niece; the letter was without an envelope. There was a host of other little things, too numerous to describe; but which will all, in due time, fall into the hands of the proper owners. It will take a very large sum of money to put the boat in repair.

◆

THE WAY TO MAKE BUTTER.

Let the milk set forty-eight hours, for the cream to rise; that which rises after forty-eight hours will not make butter so palatable as the first which rises, and should be churned separate.

As soon as the cream is taken from the milk, it should be put into a tin pail, and set into a kettle of scalding water, taking care to stir the cream often, otherwise it will turn oily on the top; it should remain in the kettle till the milk is scalding hot, being particular to place it in a tub of cold water immediately. Stir it often till it is nearly or quite cold; if it remains long after hot, it will be injured much. It will be necessary to change the water once or twice before the cream can be perfectly cold. It may then be kept three or four days before the churning without injury.

After churning, the buttermilk should be worked out; then add one and one-half ounce of salt to one pound of butter. It may then be covered tight and stand till the following day; then work it over again, taking great care to work out every particle of buttermilk, which will prevent the butter from growing rancid by age. It may then be formed into cakes or packed solid in a cask, which should be perfectly sweet and well dried.

The inside should be sprinkled and a little fine salt rubbed thereon. After the cask is filled, dip a cloth in melted butter, and spread it snugly over the top—cover it over with fine salt, and fasten up the cask sufficiently tight to keep out the air; it should then be set in a cool place to remain through the winter.

It will add to the flavor of butter to work in a little sugar at the last working over; say a table spoonful to four or five pounds of butter.

A cask made of red-oak staves is preferable to any other for preserving the original sweetness of butter.

◆

Industrious Lunatic.—There is confined in the Commercial Hospital, Cincinnati, Ohio, a crazy cabinet maker, who is permitted to follow his business, there having been placed in his sleeping apartment all the necessary tools pertaining to his trade. The beautiful work which he manufactures excites the admiration of all, and not one article is allowed to leave his little shop without having a secret apartment, which he ingeniously contrives. He takes great pleasure in explaining to visitors the method of manufacturing various articles, but not without first ascertaining from the steward whether or not said visitors are thieves, which information he inquiries for in a loud tone, as he does not wish to exhibit to a suspicious class of men the secret apartments. He is remarkably industrious, and never permits his door to remain open, unless the steward is in his company. After all in the insane department, in which he is an occupant, have retired for the night, he ventures out and walks several times the entire length of the hall; should he hear the least noise, he starts at full speed for his room, and will not venture out again that night, as he thinks the house is full of witches and all after him. He has been known to walk all night, when not disturbed by any sound. He appears to be about forty years of age, of very affable manners, and converses with no one unless accompanied by the steward, to whom he appears very much attached.

◆

Blacks in Brazil.—Of the seven millions constituting the entire population of Brazil, three millions are estimated to be negro slaves; two and a half millions, aboriginal Indians and free negroes; and the residue, a million and a half, whites. The social state of the population is not marked by the distinction of color, so operative elsewhere in the production of classes, but only by that of freedom and servitude. The blacks have access to all, and are in possession of many offices of honor and trust, and engage in every department of business. The white race and the black meet on terms of perfect equality in social intercourse, and intermarry without scruple, provided there exists no obstacle in the relative position in life of the respective parties. A writer in the North American Review knew 'the wife of an admiral, whose hue was of the darkest among Africa's daughters,' and mentions the 'dismay of an American diplomatic agent, at the entrance of a venerable jet black colonel into the court, where he had just undergone his presentation.' We have the same authority for the fact, that not long since the Brazilian ambassador to England was a mulatto, and that at the present time a large majority of the army, as well officers as privates, is of African descent. [Jour. Com.

◆

Attachment of a Negro to his Mistres.—A Georgia paper says that a servant of J. W. Hudson, Esq., named Julius, committed suicide by shooting himself with a pistol. He had been kindly and affectionately reared by his mistress, the late Mrs. Martha T. Hudson, from early infancy, and instructed by her in reading and writing. Having never known a mother's care, his devotion to his mistress was without bound, his honesty and intelligence gained the respect of his master and mistress, and from them for years past, (we have been informed,) he had not received an unkind word. Upon the death of his mistress, grief for her loss drove him to this act of despair.

◆

SMALL PICKINGS.

The London Patent Journal contains an engraving of a Guarded Razor, warranted not to cut the skin in the process of shaving. Mr. Wakely, in the London Lancet, calls it a splendid invention, and affirms that it "can be used by the operator with perfect security in almost any situation. It can be used in bed, on a railway, or even in a carriage on the common roads. The operation of shaving is effected in an inconceivable short space of time, even by the most timid or nervous."

The Island of Margarita, belonging to the Columbian government, is 38 miles long and 11 wide, and is said to be a pretty place. A traveler represents living to be very cheap; fine chickens, two dollars per dozen; fat sheep, eighty cents per head. The people are Spanish, and are very poor and very indolent. The only dear article in this place, says our traveler, is monkeys, which sold as high as four dollars; but parrots, with beautiful plumage, are exceedingly cheap.

A sailor called at a pawnbroker's shop and asked what might be the value of an ingot of gold as big as his arm. Mine Uncle beckoned him to a back room, and primed him with grog. He then asked to see the ingot. "Oh," said Jack, "I have n't got it yet, but I am going to California, and would like to know the value of such a lump before I start." Jack was shown the door instanter.

At Vienna recently, (says a German paper,) a troop of boys were playing soldiers, when one of the Imperialists deserted to the enemy. The sentence of death was passed upon the offender, and the culprit was duly hanged by the juvenile Royalists, who, seeing the contortions of their playmate, and alarmed at what they had done, ran away. The poor boy was strangled to death.

George Fox, in his "Journal," relates, that after a long discourse which he made "to priests and people," at Drayton, in 1654, his father, "though a hearer and follower of the priest," was so well satisfied, that he struck his cane upon the ground and said, "Truly, I see he that will but stand to the truth it will bear him out."

A domestic, newly engaged, presented to his master, one morning, a pair of boots, the leg of one of which was much longer than the other. "How comes it, Patrick, that these boots are not of the same length?" "I really don't know, sir," was the reply, "but what bothers me the most is, that the pair down stairs are in the same fix."

If you wish to know how to wash gloves, first wash your hands, then put on your kids, and wash them as though you were washing your hands, in a basin of spirits of turpentine, until quite clean. Hang them up in a warm place, or where there is a current of air, which will carry off the smell.

"In Moscow," says a modern traveler, "I asked for the residence of an acquaintance, and was answered, 'He lives in this very street;' but I drove three miles before I reached his house."

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed more than six months, at which time all subscriptions for the year will be considered due.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

2145

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

WHOLE NO. 262.

VOL. VI.—NO. 2.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JUNE 28, 1849.

The Sabbath Recorder.

FOREIGN MISSION.

In the extracts from Bro. Carpenter's journal, published last week, allusion was made to the project of taking heathen children to instruct. As we wish our people to be thoroughly informed in regard to all the wants of the mission, we think we cannot do better than to lay before them, quite fully, such communications as we have upon this subject. The following, from Bro. Wardner, will state his own views, and the subjoined from sister Carpenter will lay open still farther their ideas and plans. Both letters were written about the same time, Nov. 1st, 1848.

Extract from Bro. Wardner's Letter.

In regard to taking children to instruct, as has been mentioned, I would say, that so far as I am concerned, my views in regard to the instruction of the youth have not varied. But as to taking them into our family, I fear Mrs. Wardner's health will not warrant the undertaking at present, though she feels particularly anxious to do so. The cares and duties necessarily devolving upon her, connected with the debilitating effects of the climate, are in my judgment quite sufficient for her slender constitution while undergoing the influences of acclimation. Should the climate prove to be adapted to her constitution, and her health become permanently improved to a sufficient extent, I would heartily acquiesce in the measure. It was in view of these contingencies that I made those suggestions last spring. There are other spheres in which a female can labor with good effect, without taking upon her cares which could not be dispensed with if circumstances required.

Letter from Mrs. Carpenter.

DEAR BRETHREN,—Mr. C. thinks I ought also to give my opinion on the subject of taking children into our families. I have hitherto withheld, for fear of saying or doing what I might upon second thought regret. While at Hong-Kong, I saw how pleasant and beautiful appeared the little female school of Mrs. Marshall, and my heart yearned for the privilege it had always craved of gathering a little flock around me in this heathen land. I saw the lovely army of youths in the school on Morrison Hill, and I longed to see such future teachers of their brethren instructed in the unadulterated truths of the blessed gospel. But when I learned how these promising youths were entangled, by the god of this world, seeking places of emolument among the wicked foreigners; and when I found that the great temptation placed before the girls to marry heathen, left more of fear than of hope for them; I shrunk back, lest I might take a wrong step in the matter. When I learned that the American missionaries of the Episcopal Board here had adopted both boys and girls, and that they seemed to be doing good in this way, the hope was again enkindled that we might do likewise; but when, on the other hand, I found that the English were decidedly opposed to such measures, I shrunk from it. I did not dare to take a step in the matter, although I still wished that it could be for the best to enter into the plan; but I felt that a wise Providence would order all things right. When the news came to us, that we might venture to adopt two, I felt that it would be better they should be together, and that, as Mrs. Wardner had the first claim to them, so I preferred that both should be placed under her care. Her own health rendering this unadvisable, it is decided that I should take the first two, and that, if hereafter her health shall warrant, and the means be forwarded, she shall in like manner have two. Mrs. W., reluctantly it is true, but submissively, gives up her anticipated charge to me. And here let me say, and beg you will be assured of it, that whatever course we may adopt, will be, and is, by mutual agreement. We indulge no jarring wishes; and hold no conflicting interests; we contend for no clashing views. We are, in all these things, as the members of one body.

With respect to taking girls, instead of boys; for myself I do not feel competent to take charge of boys. If we had boys, Mr. C. must devote much of his time to them, and this I cannot consent to. I know, without deliberating upon it, that the preaching of the Word is commanded. I do not yet know that God has absolutely commanded us to adopt the other mode of instruction. So I feel that the path of safety lies in the present course. Moreover, if it should please my Heavenly Father to continue me longest in the field, I might still labor for the females. Should he outlive me, he could not so well take the charge of boys, in the family. Preaching would then be his most appropriate sphere, as I think it is now. We shall make early arrangements to obtain the children.

Dear brethren, I think you will excuse my freedom, in consideration of my former withholding. I shall hesitate no longer. I believe it is the will of God that I should take upon myself these children. My health is very firm; it was never better than at present. God has given me the ability to labor; he has given me the heart to labor, and I now think he is giving me the opportunity, which I have long desired, but hesitated to claim, until he should open the door for me.

Perhaps I ought to state, that in adopting children, we do not make Americans of them. We shall not intend to teach them our language, but to speak to them in their own; thus avoiding some of the principal temptations and evils to which they might be exposed.

L. M. CARPENTER.

Touching the same subject, we present the following from Bro. Carpenter, dated Dec. 26, 1848, which is the latest the Board has received:—

In regard to taking two Chinese children, we wrote some time ago, that as Mrs. W.'s health will not warrant their taking them, we have concluded to take them. I think there will be no difficulty in obtaining them. But as our expenses of late have been more than usual, we are waiting on that account. At present I feel more inclined to take boys than I formerly did. Notwithstanding the extra care they would require, it seems to be the most likely means of raising up a native ministry. The teachers are so powerfully swayed by public opinion, that there is, humanly speaking, less probability of their becoming converted than perhaps any other class besides the mandarins. And the common people are too illiterate. On whom, then, does the eye rest with hope; on what class must we depend for the future native preaching? Upon those who are now in childhood, and who can learn the truth so much easier than those who have so much error to unlearn. These considerations, together with some others, have rather inclined us to take boys, and we are only waiting for the means to do so. We do not like to run ahead of our means. We have a little more expense to put upon our chapel, and then it will be ready for day or evening meetings. Brethren, pray for us.

NOTES OF TRAVEL IN WESTERN NEW YORK.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I am now traveling through the western part of the State of New York—a region with which many of your readers may not be acquainted—and I propose to give them a brief description of some of the principal cities and villages that come in my way.

ROCHESTER is situated on both sides of the Genesee River, and has a population of about 35,000. It is one of the handsomest cities in the State. Here are the Falls of the Genesee—the scene of Sam Patch's "last leap"—well worthy of a visit from the traveler. The Acqueduct across the river at this place is really a splendid piece of workmanship. Just south of the city is the celebrated Cemetery, Mount Hope. It is a very beautiful resting place for the dead, and is much visited by travelers and citizens. An omnibus runs to it from the city hourly throughout the day. There are thirty-one churches in Rochester—8 Presbyterian, 5 Methodist, 4 Baptist, 4 Catholic, 3 Episcopalian, 2 Friends, 1 Free-Will Baptist, 1 Unitarian, 1 Universalist, 1 German, and 1 Second Advent. There are also seven banks, ten large and convenient public houses, three or four large halls, one museum, court-house, jail, &c., and no theater. The city is divided into nine wards. It has some private residences of a high order, and many residences and stores are being erected this season.

BROCKPORT is situated on the Erie Canal, 18 miles west of Rochester. It is surrounded by a very fine farming country, and is a place of considerable business. The Ridge Road, two miles north, is one of the best in the State; it was, no doubt, formerly the shore of the lake, but how long ago we have no record.

ALBION, the county-seat of Orleans, is admired by all travelers. The settlement of this place was commenced in 1811, by Wm. McAllister, who brought with him a hired man and his wife, the first white woman in the county. She died soon after arriving here, and there was no one of her sex to attend her funeral, and no one to conduct religious services. A board could not be obtained to make her coffin, and plank had to be hewn out for the purpose. In 1823, a paper was started in this place, called the Newport Patriot. A Presbyterian church was organized here in 1822, a Baptist church in 1830, a Methodist and an Episcopalian church in 1844. Albion Academy was founded in 1837, and Phipps Union Seminary in 1840. There are now two banks, two printing offices, and a large number of stores in the village.

MEDINA, the place from which I now write, was an unbroken wilderness when the canal was located. The village was laid out in 1823, and named by E. Mix. There is a valuable water-power here, on the Oak Orchard Creek, with a fall of twenty-five or thirty feet. Two large flourishing mills are in operation, with five and eight run of stone. The place has four churches, two public houses, 15 or 18 stores, one Academy, three select schools, and one large common school.

The Wheat in this section of country looks promising, but the season is backward.

E. A. C.

SCENE AT TAHITI.

While seeking retirement for devotion, about the dawn of day, Mr. Scott heard a voice at no great distance from his retreat. He distinctly recognized the voice of prayer. It was the first time that he knew that a native on Tahiti's shores had prayed to any but his idols!

It was a still and solemn hour,
In an isle of the southern seas,
And slowly the shades of night were swept Away by the morning breeze.
When a lonely son of Britain stood,
With cheek and brow of care,
Seeking amid the solitude
A place for secret prayer.

No ear to hear in that silent glen,
No eye but the eye of God!
Yet the giant fern gave back a voice
As forth the wanderer trod.
They were broken words that met his ear,
And a name was murmur'd there;
It was the name of Christ he heard,
And the voice of secret prayer.

A native of that savage isle,
From the depths of his full heart cried
For mercy, for help in the hour of need,
For faith in the Crucified.
And peace and hope were in those tones,
So solemnly sweet they were,
For He who answers while yet we call,
Had blessed that secret prayer.

The morning dawn'd on that lonely spot;
But a far more glorious day
Came with the accents of prayer and praise,
On the Indian's lip that day.
The first! the first who had call'd on God
In those regions of Satan's care!
The first who had breathed in his native tongue
The language of secret prayer!

[Juvenile Missionary Magazine.

Copied by request from the Harbinger and Advocate.

THE INHERITANCE OF THE SAINTS.

BY BENJAMIN CLARK.

While so much is said in these last days concerning the riches of California, I would call the attention of my brethren and sisters to the inheritance of the saints in light.

1. They shall have part in the first resurrection; or,

2. They shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.

3. They shall have a body fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body. As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him: for we shall see him as he is.

4. We shall inherit everlasting life. For Christ saith, I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish. Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away.

5. We shall be clothed with the garments of salvation—with white raiment—fine linen, clean and white (for clean linen is the righteousness of saints)—clothed with white robes. Those who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father—shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

6. Shall see God. They shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads: shall see as they are seen, and know as they are known.

7. Shall hear joy and gladness. Shall hear every creature praise God and the Lamb.

8. Shall have a new name, even Christ's new name.

9. Shall walk with Christ in white. Shall walk in the light of the holy city—the New Jerusalem that cometh down from God out of heaven—prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

10. Shall eat and drink with Christ at his table in his kingdom. For he will give them to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God. Yea, the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

11. Shall sing a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.

12. Shall speak with a loud voice, saying, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing.

13. Shall be made unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth. The saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even for ever and ever. The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions (margin, rulers) shall serve and obey him.

14. Shall inherit the earth (the new earth). For the promise that he should be heir of the world was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith. Now they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. And if children, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.

15. Shall inherit a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. They desire a better country, that is, an heavenly. Therefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared for them a city: the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem. The walls of it were of Jaspar, and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

16. We shall inherit a house not made with hands. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

17. The Lord is our inheritance: he shall choose our inheritance for us. He hath promised that he that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

18. Those therefore which have believed were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased posssession, unto the praise of his glory.

Dear brethren and sisters in the faith, let us look at the things which are not seen. I have named a few of the items of the inheritance promised to the saints: but what pen can describe, what tongue can speak, the riches of his grace through Christ Jesus? Well might the apostle say (1 Pet. 3: 5), "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last day.

ALDEN, Erie Co., N. Y.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES BY MACAULEY.

CRANMER.—He was at once a divine and a statesman. In his character of divine he was perfectly ready to go as far in the way of change as any Swiss or Scottish Reformer. In his character of statesman, he was desirous to preserve that organization which had, during many ages, admirably served the purpose of the bishops of Rome, and might be expected now to serve equally well the purpose of the English kings and of their ministers. His temper and his understanding eminently fitted him to act as mediator. Saintly in his professions, unscrupulous in his dealings, zealous for nothing, bold in speculation, a coward and a time-server in action, a placable enemy and a lukewarm friend, he was in every way qualified to arrange the terms of the coalition between the religious and the worldly enemies of Popery.

LAUD.—His passion for ceremonies, his reverence for holidays, vigils, and sacred places, his ill-concealed dislike of the marriage of ecclesiastics, the ardent and not altogether disinterested zeal with which he asserted the claims of the clergy to the reverence of the laity, would have made him an object of aversion to the Puritans, even if he had used only legal and genteel means for the attainment of his ends. But his understanding was narrow, and his commerce with the world had been small. He was by nature rash, irritable, quick to feel for his own dignity, slow to sympathize with the sufferings of others, and prone to the error, common in superstitious men, of mistaking his own peevish and malignant moods for emotions of pious zeal.

PASCAL.—His intellectual powers were such as have rarely been bestowed on any of the children of men, and the vehemence of the zeal which animated him was but too well proved by the cruel penances and vigils under which his macerated frame sank into an early grave. His spirit was the spirit of Saint Bernard; but the delicacy of his wit, the purity, the energy, the simplicity of his rhetoric, had never been equaled, except by the great masters of Attic eloquence.

BUNYAN.—Bunyan is indeed as decidedly the first of allegorists, as Demosthenes is the first of orators, or Shakspeare the first of dramatists. Other allegorists have shown equal ingenuity; but no other allegorist has ever been able to touch the heart, and to make abstractions objects of terror, of pity, and of love.

THE BIBLE.

From the Edinburgh Review.

The Bible, supposing it other than it pretends to be, presents us with a singular phenomenon in the space which it occupies throughout the continued history of literature. We see nothing like it; and it may well perplex the infidel to account for it. Nor need his sagacity disdain to enter a little more deeply into its possible causes than he is usually inclined to do. It has not been given to any other book of religion thus to triumph over national prejudices, and lodge itself securely in the heart of great communities,—varying by every conceivable diversity of language, race, manners, customs, and indeed agreeing in nothing but a veneration for itself. It adapts itself with facility to the revolutions of thought and feeling which shake to pieces all things else; and flexibly accommodates itself to the progress of society and the changes of civilization. Even conquests—the disorganization of old nations—the formation of new—do not affect the continuity of its empire. It lays hold of the new and the old, and transmigrates with the spirit of humanity; attracting to itself, by its own moral power, in all the communities it enters, a ceaseless intensity of effort for its propagation, illustration and defense. Other symptoms of religion are usually delicate exotics, and will not bear transplanting. The gods of the nations are local deities, and reluctantly quit their native soil; at all events they patronize only their favorite races, and perish at once when the tribe or nation of their worshipers becomes extinct, often long before. Nothing, indeed, is more difficult than to make foreigners feel anything but the utmost indifference (except as an object of philosophic curiosity) about the religion of other nations; and no portion of their national literature is regarded as more tedious or unattractive than that which treats of their theology. The elegant mythologies of Greece and Rome made no proselytes among other nations, and fell hopelessly the moment they fell. The Koran of Mahomet has, it is true, been propagated by the sword; but it has been propagated by nothing else; and its dominion has been limited to those nations who could not reply to that logic. If the Bible be false, the facility with which it overleaps the otherwise impassable boundaries of race and clime, and domiciliates among so many different nations, is assuredly a far more striking and wonderful proof of human ignorance, perverseness and stupidity, than is afforded in the limited prevalence of even the most abject superstitions; or, if it realy has merits which, though a fable, have enabled it to impose so comprehensively and variously on mankind, wonderful indeed must have been the skill in its composition; so wonderful that even the infidel himself ought never to regard it but with the profoundest reverence, as far too successful and sublime a fabrication to admit a thought of scoff or ridicule. In his last illness, a few days before his death, Sir W. Scott asked Mr. Lockhart to read to him. Mr. Lockhart inquired what book he would like. "Can you ask?" said Sir Walter,—"there is but ONE;" and requested him to read a chapter of the gospel of John. When will an equal genius, to whom all the realms of fiction are as familiar as to him, say the like of some professed revelation, originating among a race and associated with a history and a clime as foreign as those connected with the birthplace of the Bible from those of the ancestry of Sir Walter Scott? Can we, by any stretch of imagination, suppose some Walter Scott of a new race in Australia or South Africa, saying the same of the Vedas or the Koran?

I WANT TO GO HOME.

BY RICHARD COE, JR.

"I want to go home!" saith a weary child,
That hath lost its way in straying;
Ye may try in vain to calm its fears,
Or wipe from its eyes the blinding tears,
It looks in your face, still saying,
"I want to go home!"

"I want to go home!" saith a fair young bride,
In anguish of spirit praying;
Her chosen hath broken the silver chord—
Hath spoken a harsh, a cruel word—
And she, now, alas! is saying,
"I want to go home!"

"I want to go home!" saith the weary soul,
Ever earnest thus 'tis praying;
It weepeth a tear—heaveth a sigh—
And upward glanceth with streaming eye,
To its promised rest, still saying,
"I want to go home!"

A STEAMBOAT INCIDENT.

It was a pleasant evening, when a few Christian friends were making their passage from New York to Boston. The steamboat was gliding swiftly over the smooth surface. These friends were sitting together behind the ladies' cabin, retired from the rest of the passengers. Here they commenced singing familiar hymns. And the music of Coronation, and other popular airs, eventually attracted no small company both of performers and spectators. It so happened, that there was among the passengers, unknown to the Christian singers, a famous comic actor. He, it seems, conceived the purpose of amusing himself by acting a part somewhat unusual for him. So, with all the gravity of a staid Christian, he addressed the persons that had been singing, as his Christian friends, and informed them that there was a missionary on board, and proposed that a contribution should be taken up for him. The others remarked, that they should first have an opportunity to see and hear him, that they might judge of his claims upon their patronage. The actor assented; and though more accustomed to acting Jim Crow, than to arranging the preliminaries for a sermon, he went direct to the Captain and got permission to occupy the cabin with an address by the missionary. He then went to the cabin, and with all gravity required the card-players to lay aside their occupations and make way for the missionary. Their obedience was instantaneous and universal. The missionary was introduced, a young, modest preacher connected with some Baptist mission—a stranger alike to the actor, and the company. Being thus called upon by he knew not whom, and having an audience thus extemporized for him, he could do no less than to give them a discourse appropriate to his vocation. He did it, and his hearers were deeply interested in the facts which he related and the appeals which he made.

At the close of his discourse, the commedian arose, as grave as before, and remarked, that he had previously determined to commence the contribution, by giving five dollars, but he had been so much interested in what he had heard, that he should double the sum, and commence with ten dollars. He then carried round the hat, and gathered a contribution of more than thirty dollars, and paid it over to the missionary. The scene passed away; the passengers retired to rest, and none but those who knew the man, had any suspicion, that he was acting a comedy for his own amusement. Indeed, in the morning he was seen introducing his wife to the missionary, all appearing as grave as before.

But the special point of the incident is that which reveals the providence of God. The missionary informed some of the contributors afterwards, how opportunely the contribution came. He was on a journey, and his money was exhausted, and he was in great straits, and previous to this unlooked for occurrence, he was casting in his mind, with great perplexity, what he should do? So it seems, while his thoughts were thus laboring, God's providence was moving the mind of a commedian—one far enough from all sympathy with missionaries, to find his sport in bringing a supply.

There seems in this to be a parallel with Elijah's being fed by ravens. As ravens might be supposed to be the last birds to bring meat to men, such a Jim Crow would seem to be the last to supply the wants of a penniless servant of God. [Puritan Rec.

PORCELAIN.

China-ware has become so common an article in this country, that few think of the minute processes by which it is made to assume its forms of beauty. From a recent work on China and the Chinese, by Henry Charles Sirr, the London literary correspondent of the Atlas takes the annexed extract:

"The number of workmen employed to finish one article of china-ware is almost incredible; a single cup is said, from the kneading of the paste, to pass through seventy hands, before it is ready for sale; each individual in its progress performing as little as he possibly can for the remuneration he receives. The Chinese decorate the exterior of their dwellings, and their pleasure-grounds, with enormous pieces of porcelain, both in the shape of vases and figures; these are formed each in several pieces, and each piece or portion in a mould; the paste is first well pressed into the moulds; the various portions are then united and cemented together, the joints are carefully smoothed off by the chisel, and are varnished and painted over, after which they are imperceptible.

"The designs traced upon their porcelain or china are very inferior, but the colors used by the artists who paint these designs are far superior to any European coloring. The division of labor in embellishing and painting the china-ware is equal to that employed in the formation of it; one traces figures, another flowers, a third paints the figures, and a fourth the flowers; in fact there is an artist for delineating, and another for painting each particular object; each goes on in one beaten track, without the least conception or attempt at improvement, or introducing new ideas in their designs; and thus the same designs and figures are accurately copied by the artists of the present day which were in use in the days of Confucius.

"The most remarkable ware, however, is the Kiasing, or azure-pressed; the secret of its manufacture has been lost, but those specimens which are preserved are of inestimable value. The art was that of tracing figures on the china, which are invisible until the vessel is filled with liquid. The porcelain is of the very thinnest description, almost as thin as an egg-shell; it is said that the application in tracing these figures was eternal and not by external painting, as in ordinary manufacture, and that after such tracing was made, and when it became perfectly dry, a thin coating was laid over it of the same paste of which the vessel had been formed, and thus the painting lay between two coatings of china-ware. When the internal coating became sufficiently dry, they oiled it over, and shortly after placed it in a mould, and scraped the exterior of the vessel as thin as possible without penetrating the painting, and then baked it in the oven. It is evident that if such be the mode which was adopted, it would require the most nice dexterity and patient care, for which the Chinese are remarkable; but, although they constantly endeavor to recover the exact method, their trials have been hitherto unavailing."

NEW WAY TO SELECT AN HEIR.—The French newspapers publish the following, for the authenticity of which some of them vouch: A poor shepherd of the environs of Yvetot, father of a large family, for whose wants he provided with very great difficulty, purchased last summer from a dealer in old clothes, furniture, &c., an old Bible, with a view to occupy his leisure evenings during the present winter. Sunday evening, as he was turning over the leaves, he noticed that several of them were pasted together. He immediately set himself to work to separate those leaves, with great care; but one can scarcely form a conception of the surprise of the man, when he found thus carefully inclosed a bank bill of five hundred francs, ($100.) On the margin of one of the pages were written these words:

"I gathered together this money with very great difficulty; but having none as natural heirs but those who have absolutely need of nothing, I make thee, whosoever shall read this Bible, my heir."

THEMES FOR THE PULPIT.—In the department of Christian morality, I think many of those who are distinguished as evangelic preachers greatly and culpably deficient. They rarely, if ever, take some one topic of moral duty, as honesty, veracity, impartiality, Christian temper, forgiveness of injuries, temperance—in any of its branches—and investigate specifically its principles, rules, discriminations, adaptations. There is none of the casuistry found in many of the old divines. Such discussions would have cost far more labor of thought than dwelling and expatiating on the general evangelical doctrines, but would have been eminently useful; and is very necessary, in order to set the people's judgments and consciences to rights. It is partly in consequence of this neglect, (very generally, I believe,) that many religious kind of people have unfixed and ill-fated apprehensions of moral discriminations. Hall told Anderson that in former years he had oftener insisted on subjects of this order. [John Foster.

HINT TO YOUNG LADIES.—"Why did you not take the arm of my brother last night?" said a young lady to her friend, a very intelligent girl, about nineteen, in a large town near Lake Ontario. She replied, "Because I know him to be a licentious young man." "Nonsense," was the reply of the sister, "if you refuse the attentions of all licentious young men, you will have none, I can assure you." "Very well," said her friend, "then I can dispense with them altogether. For my resolution on this point is unalterably fixed." How long would it take to revolutionize society, were all young ladies to adopt this resolution?

Sin will not long seem great or heavy to you, to whom temptation seems [illegible] small.

The Sabbath Recorder.

NEW YORK, JUNE 28, 1849.

Notice.—Seventh-day Baptist Chapel, New York; East Eleventh Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues; Thomas B. Brown, Pastor. Preaching every Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, A. M. The public invited to attend. Seats free.

Persons from abroad, who may be stopping in the lower part of the city, or Brooklyn, are informed, that by taking the cars at the City-Hall, or the Manhattanville stages, they will be left at the head of Eleventh Street, in Fourth Avenue; or, they can stop in Third Avenue, next corner from the Chapel, by taking stages of either of the following lines: Bowery and Third Avenue, Pearl Street and Fulton Ferry, Astoria and Yorkville, or the Harlem stages.

THE NEW VOLUME.

With the last number commenced the Sixth Volume of the Sabbath Recorder. As already announced, it is to be published under the direction of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society. So short a time has elapsed since that Society was organized, that the Board of Trustees have not been able to complete all the arrangements they have in contemplation for the benefit of the paper. They have, however, directed its enlargement, as you see; and they have placed its management, for the present, in hands accustomed to the work. Farther arrangements will be made as circumstances shall demand and opportunity offer. Meanwhile, they solicit from the friends of the enterprise a special effort on its behalf. The paper is now the property of the denomination, and the profits arising from its publication are pledged to the benevolent operations of the denomination. No pains or expense will be spared to make it all that the denomination need or can reasonably desire. But in order that it may accomplish the good for which it is designed, and which it is believed to be capable of accomplishing, it is necessary that its circulation be considerably increased. Who will undertake to promote this object? Let each Local Agent survey the field in which he is placed, and endeavor to find in it some additional supporters. Let each Pastor look over his congregation, and see if any families in which the paper ought to be read are not supplied, and act accordingly. Let each subscriber now on the list, look about him for one more, and send on his name as soon as possible. Thus would the work be speedily and economically done, and our denominational organ permitted to carry its weekly message into places where it has not been accustomed to go.

EDUCATION—No. 4.

The question concerning the cost of founding and endowing an institution such as is now contemplated, and the ability to meet that cost, is entirely proper. It is in vain to organize an institution, involve it heavily in debt, let it drag out a few years of sickly existence, and then fail for lack of funds to support it. Property must be invested in such an enterprise, also, not as one invests money in railroad stock, bank stock, or other speculations, in which the prime object is to gain a large percentage, but for the purpose of doing good, blessing the world, and honoring God. It was necessary to make this last observation, because some have felt themselves aggrieved, that their money, paid in for academical institutions, has not yielded them a revenue. As well might it be expected, that school-houses and their appurtenances, for primary schools, should yield a revenue, as to expect academies and colleges to do so. It ought to be sufficient, that each tree "yield fruit after its own kind." And it ought to be known, that it is the province of the school to yield, not the gold of Ophir, nor of California, but the glorious product of immortal minds—a revenue, indeed, richer far than all the wealth of the Indies; and with this product, the fairest and noblest that Heaven ever blessed, we ought to be content; and for securing it, we would say, in the language of an honored and distinguished educator, "the rich ought to pour out their gold like water."

As to the amount of funds requisite for securing the permanency and prosperity of such an institution, there would doubtless be some variety of opinion. But no one, probably, would put the amount at less than $150,000. It would require $50,000 for the erection of suitable buildings, and providing an appropriate library and apparatus, and $100,000 for an endowment, the income of which should be expended in paying the salaries of Professors. The first question now is, can that sum be raised? We ask not, whether it can all be raised in a single year, but whether it can be done in a reasonable time, say eight or ten years? Let this sum be divided into shares of $150 each, $50 of which should be made payable in two or three equal installments, and the balance of $100 might remain in the hands of the donor as long as he might prefer, by his paying the annual interest on it. Now, are there not one thousand members of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, who could, in the course of eight or ten years, pay the sum of $150 each, for an object so essential to the prosperity of the denomination, and to the advancement of those sacred truths that we are pledged to maintain? And could not this be done, too, without infringing, in the least, on our other objects of benevolence, or interfering in any way with our individual prosperity? No one, in his sober senses, can doubt it. But, again, are there not others who are not only able, but also willing, to give five or ten times the amount of $150 each? This is undoubtedly true. We therefore consider the question of ability settled beyond a doubt.

This being settled, the next question pertains to the will. Men, in matters of benevolence, are not likely to act in the dark. They must know something about an enterprise, before they can be expected to engage in it; and the zeal that they will manifest towards it, will depend very much on their appreciation of its importance. Now, it is quite probable, that while very many of our brethren fully appreciate the necessity and advantages of higher seminaries of learning, others are not particularly impressed with a sense of their utility, and may need to have the subject brought to their immediate notice, and pressed upon their consideration. Let this be done, faithfully and thoroughly, and it must bring out a hearty response. This work must not be done hastily, nor carelessly. It will take time. The whole denomination should be aroused to a just apprehension of the great work of educating the rising generation, before an attempt is made to raise a single dollar for a denominational school. When this is done, the disposition to do will equal the ability, and the ability will equal the demands of any enterprise, founded in propriety and justice.

Here it may not be amiss briefly to notice some things that others are doing in relation to education. There was raised the past year, in Massachusetts, for the benefit of Williams College, $50,000; for Amherst, $100,000; and for Harvard University, $200,000. There was raised the past year for the purpose of endowing a Baptist College in Western New York, more than $100,000; for the purpose of founding the Free Mission College (Baptist) in Central New York, more than $50,000; and the Methodists are now raising $100,000 for endowing a University at Lima, Western New York. The Baptists of Pennsylvania have just raised $100,000 to found a College in that State; and the Methodists have just endowed their College at Meadville, Western Pennsylvania, by donations to the amount of $100,000. These are only a few instances of generous munificence in the cause of education, even in the States where the contributions were made; and these examples have been adduced particularly to call attention to the fact, that it takes but a small part of the members of the larger denominations, to found and endow an institution in any one place. We need not, therefore, fear, that our numbers are insufficient for so considerable an enterprise.

It may be well to ask, if we do not need to make some efforts upon a grander scale than any that we have ever yet made, to arouse and bring out the entire energies of the denomination? In viewing the disadvantages under which we have been laboring, in consequence of the comparative smallness of our numbers, and the disposition shown, by those more powerful than ourselves, to deny to us civil and religious privileges, and to crush our influence if possible, we have sometimes felt discouraged, and have not taken as much pains to place our peculiar sentiments in a prominent position, as the cause of truth might seem to demand of us, and we have not as yet enlisted the sympathies of all our brethren in any schemes of benevolence in which we have been engaged.

It should be added, in conclusion, that an effort of such vast consideration to the denomination as the organization of a Theological School, should be managed with the greatest prudence. There should be no selfish purpose to subserve in the selection of a location, in the erection of buildings, or in the appointment of professors. The management of the whole matter should be placed in the hands of men, whose age, experience, and wisdom, shall entitle them to the fullest confidence of all their brethren.

These mere hints on the subject of education, have been thrown out, at this time, not because they are peculiar, or new, but because it is believed that the time has come for action. Let a full and free interchange of sentiments upon this subject take place among our brethren, and the period may not be distant, when the cherished hope, that our people may have a College and Theological Seminary of their own, shall be realized. That Heaven may prosper the undertaking, is the earnest prayer of OBSERVER.

STATISTICS OF BRITISH BENEVOLENCE.

From "Notes of the May Meetings," by the English correspondent of the Independent, we obtain the following additional statistics of benevolent societies in Great Britain:—

THE SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS—one of the oldest, if not the oldest, of societies—held its 148th Anniversary in London, on the 21st of May. There were present one archbishop, eight bishops, and 100 clergymen "in canonicals." The Bishop of Lichfield preached from the words of the apostolic commission. From the first this Society has had special reference to the Colonies; and the great increase of emigration is advanced by it as a motive to increased action. The Report set forth that in 1847 the emigrants from the United Kingdom were 258,270; that of these 142,154 went to the United States; and to the British Colonies, 116,000; and that, assuming the half of these to be (nominally) members of the Established Church of England, then to follow them fifteen missionaries annually should be sent out. The income of the Society is stated for a period of three years, 1845-6-7. It amounted to £184,096, including £50,000 raised by collections made in all the parish churches under the authority of a "Queen's Letter." The expenditure for the same period had been £190,812—the difference being made up from the stock of the Society. The expenditure for the next three years is estimated at £62,000 per annum. There are 413 missionaries, chaplains, and agents "directly or indirectly" connected with the Society. In Canada there are 46 missionaries supported from the "Clergy Reserve Fund;" in Nova Scotia 17, supported by Parliamentary grants for the lifetime of the present recipients. Three hundred missionary students are supported by the Society.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN SCHOOL SOCIETY is doing a great and good work by checking the tendency of the times to limit educational efforts to churches, and by compelling, so far as its influence goes, the extension of education to all classes. At its Anniversary the Earl of Carlisle (Lord Morpeth) presided, and delivered a very eloquent and democratic speech, in the course of which he is represented as having said:—

"Amidst all our admiration and all our gratitude, let us not forget, that beneath this beauteous surface of wealth and order, there are still hid many a cankered spot and many a festering sore—there is the most pinching poverty—there is the most squalid destitution—there is the most besotting sensuality—there is the most debasing ignorance; and the fear can never be absent from our minds, that the continuance of our prosperity, the peace of our streets, the happiness of our homes, the pride of our polity, are staked upon the continuance of a contest which is being carried on between the elements of good and of evil, which are about us and within us; and that if we falter, if we move backwards, if we even stay where we are, we risk the loss of all that we have gained, and all that we enjoy."

The Report of the Society shows the establishment of 103 new schools, providing for the accommodation of 10,000 scholars, during the year. The agents of the Society have visited many schools, and delivered public lectures; 120 schools have been aided by grants; the model schools have been efficiently maintained, and upwards of 1,400 pupils received into them, making a total of 50,000 received since their commencement; the receipts for the year, under £12,000, the expenditures something more.

—

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY held its Anniversary on the 21st of May, at which G. W. Alexander, Esq., presided, and speeches were made, among others, by Henry Clapp of Mass., and Alexander Crummell, a colored clergyman from New York.

The Report gave returns of the slave population in various parts of the world, allowing for the manumissions which had taken place in the South American republics:—United States, 3,095,000; Brazil, 3,250,000; Spanish colonies, 900,000; Dutch colonies, 85,000; South American republics, 140,000; African settlements, 30,000—showing a total of 7,500,000. With respect to the African slave trade, the Report gave the following facts: From 1807 to 1819, exported 2,290,000 negroes; the mortality in the middle passage amounting to 433,000. Since 1819, the mortality had swelled to the enormous number of 1,121,299. In this period 117,380 negroes had been captured and liberated by British cruisers.

One of the resolutions threw the blame of the atrocities of the system upon the bad faith of the governments of Spain and Brazil, and urged upon the British Government to insist upon the liberation from slavery of all Africans constituted slaves contrary to the faith of treaties. The resolution deprecated the attempt to put down the trade in men by means of armed cruisers, and called upon the government to exclude the productions of these faithless States from the British markets.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON SLAVERY.

While the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (new school) was in session, we gave some account of the discussion which arose on the subject of slavery, and copied one of the memorials presented on that occasion. After considerable talk, the whole matter was referred to a special committee. That committee made a report upon memorials from four synods, thirteen presbyteries, one church, and one individual, all asking the freeing of the church from all participation in the sin of slavery, one presbytery even threatening secession, unless something was done for that purpose. The report was quite an able one, recommending that the action of all former Presbyterian Assemblies be reiterated; and from the extracts they made from the Minutes on the subject, they educed the following propositions, which they recommended to the adoption of the Assembly:—

1st. The right of man to civil liberty.

2d. Slavery is unrighteous, and opposed to the interests of all concerned in it.

3d. The duty of Christians to use all righteous endeavors to effect the extirpation of the evil.

4th. Enjoining upon Christians to abstain from buying and selling slaves, undue severity to them, or the separation of members of families by any act of theirs.

5th. The Assembly knows of no members of the church participating in the evils alluded to, but if there are any, the attention of the proper church judicatories is called to the same.

This report was received with general favor, but while a motion for its adoption was under consideration, one of the members proposed a substitute, to the effect that "slavery is a great sin before God and man, and should be treated by the church in the same way as other gross immoralities." The substitute was debated for a long time, but it was finally lost, and the original report was adopted by a large majority.

TRUTH vs. FALSEHOOD.

God said to Adam, "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." But the serpent said, "Ye shall not surely die." See Gen. 2:17, and 3:4.

God declares the seventh day to be the Sabbath; the creeds declare that it is not the Sabbath. God says, "Upon it thou shalt not work;" the creeds say that we may work upon it. God allows work to be done on the first day; the creeds forbid work to be done on the first day.

When creeds take sides with the serpent, in giving God the lie, are they not Anti-Christ? Can God be worshiped by those who thus falsify His Word, and contradict Him, face to face? Reader, think of it! Let God be true, and every man a liar.

NERI.

RECEIPTS FOR BENEVOLENCE.—The London Religious Tract Society, at its late anniversary, reported its receipts at £59,495. The London Missionary Society reported its receipts for the last year at £64,508.

SCENE IN A SLAVE STATE.

The Jacksonville (Florida) News, of May 19th, tells of the following brutal transaction which may be set down as a result of slavery. The story about the dogs tearing a woman in pieces, might have been doubted if it had appeared in an abolition paper. But the Jacksonville News is very good authority in such matters. Hear it:—

"Our readers will learn with regret the intelligence of the brutal attack upon Mr. Madison of Marion County. We understand the cause to have been this. Mr. Madison and Dr. B. M. Byrne were riding together past the plantation of Burleson, and witnessed some inhuman treatment of the field hands by himself and his overseer, Meadows. The brutes had actually caused a woman to be torn in pieces by dogs. Burleson and Meadows were afterward indicted for this cruelty by the Grand Jury of that county, and seem to have resolved upon revenge. They accordingly way-laid Mr. Madison near Orange Springs, as he was riding home, attended by a servant, felled him to the ground with a club, stabbed him in several places, and left him for dead. The servant escaped and procured assistance. Mr. Madison afterwards revived sufficiently to make a deposition before a magistrate, but relapsed into insensibility, and is not expected to live. His skull was fractured in three places, from one of which the brain protruded. By yesterday's mail, we learn that Burleson has been seen in a hammock in that neighborhood, which has since been carefully guarded."

AN EDITOR'S EXPERIENCE AND ADVICE.

Rev. H. A. Graves, formerly editor of the Christian Reflector—a station which he filled with great honor to himself and profit to the Baptist denomination—is now residing in one of the West India Islands, to which he resorted on account of impaired health. In a recent letter to his successor in the editorial chair, he makes the following judicious remarks upon his own labors and the labors of editors generally. If newspaper readers had just notions of the amount of labor required to condense and re-write as well as to originate articles, they would be slower to complain and more ready to commend:—

"I cannot think of you without thinking of the past; or of those scenes in the past, 'quorum magna pars fui.' And I must say, there is some pleasure in the retrospect, though the labor was severe, and too much, indeed, for my weak body. It is Marryatt, I think, who says of the editor: 'His task is most enormous. It is not the writing of the leading article itself, but the obligation to write that article every week, whether inclined or not, in sickness or health, in affliction, disease of mind, winter and summer, year after year, tied down to the task, remaining in one spot. It is something like walking a thousand hours.' This is a good description, and yet it is hardly complete. Editing is something more than a regular exercise of the mind's best energies; there is a vast deal of drudgery connected with it, which requires scarcely less concentration of mind than the leading articles. Only two weeks previous to my first departure to the West Indies, when I was actually unable to walk to the office from long increased debility, one number of the Christian Reflector contained from seven to eight columns from my single pen. Now scarcely more than one-half of this was properly editorial, but the CONDENSING and RE-WRITING of intelligence, from both correspondence and the daily press, required as close attention, and as fatiguing mental effort, as the more original and spirited articles. But I did too much of this. By such exertions, so continually repeated, (indeed I had no rest,) and in reduced health too, I periled my life. Do not, my friends, under any pressure, follow my ruinous example. You can not avoid, at best, a severe taxation of your energies; but you can remember your health as well as your paper. I trust your thousands of readers appreciate the assiduity they encourage, as I doubt not they are largely benefited by its fruits."

THE WISCONSIN LICENSE LAW.—Our readers are already familiar with the leading features of that very stringent law adopted in Wisconsin against selling intoxicating liquors. We learn from a Wisconsin paper, that the subject is considerably agitated throughout that State. Meetings have been held to sustain the law, and others to condemn it. Some of the press are out in its favor and others in opposition to it. While some regard the law as just the thing required to stay the tide of intemperance deluging the land, others consider it as not only wrong in principle, but as altogether too vague in its provisions. The editor of the Watertown (Wisconsin) Chronicle says:—

"For ourselves, we think the principle of the law well enough, but our fears are that it is too far in advance of public opinion. The most thorough temperance State in the Union could not have asked a stronger law in principle than this, and to enforce it would require the whole moral influence of any community. The people of Wisconsin are particularly noted for their love of temperance, and our convictions are that the law cannot be sustained by our people."

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—At Boston, on the 18th inst., religious services were held on board the bark Ionia, on the occasion of the departure of Rev. G. W. Coan and wife for Smyrna, their destination being the Nestorian mission station. Mr. Edward Breth (printer) and lady were also on board the same vessel, and destined for the same station.

RETURNING TO THE OLD PATH.—Fifty-nine Presbyteries of the New School Presbyterian Church, have voted in favor of annual meetings of their General Assembly, and twenty-five against. So the meetings of that body will hereafter be annual, as they formerly were, instead of triennial, as they have recently been.

RE-ESTABLISHING A MISSION.—The Baptists contemplate re-establishing their mission at Ava, in India. For this object they are about to send out Rev. E. Kincaid, and his brother-in-law, Dr. Dawson. Dr. Dawson lived in India from childhood, is perfectly familiar with the Burmese and other eastern languages, was for many years connected with the British East India Company as assistant Surgeon, and has a complete medical education. He was also, with his wife, converted and baptized on heathen ground. No two men in the country, says the N. Y. Recorder, could engage in the missionary work in Burmah with greater prospects of efficiency and success.

TEACHERS FOR THE WEST.—The Watchman of the Prairies, published at Chicago, says that "Gov. Slade has just brought to the West twenty more young ladies as teachers of common schools. Ten only of the number came as far as Chicago; the others stopped in Michigan and Indiana. They were composed mostly of Baptists, Congregationalists and Methodists, one of whom was a converted Papist, who had been driven from her paternal roof for embracing the Gospel. This company makes the number one hundred and thirty who have come out under the direction of the National Education Society. One only out of the whole number has died, and eight only have married."

RELIGION IN CONNECTICUT.—A correspondent of the Puritan Recorder says, that the churches, Congregational, of that State were never in a better condition as a general thing, more sound in the faith, more harmonious, more prosperous, than at the present period. Last year revivals of religion were officially reported to the General Association, as having existed in more than thirty parishes; and the number added to the churches, on profession of their faith, was between eight and nine hundred. This year there have been numerous revivals in different parts of the State.

PROSPECTS AMONG THE JEWS.—At its recent Anniversary, the London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews reported a prosperous and useful condition of its affairs. Receipts £57,343. At this meeting, the Rev. Hugh Stowell remarked, that in Rome, so great was the desire to read the Scriptures, that the Jews were purchasing large numbers of Bibles, and conveying them to Rome as articles of merchandise.

A JEWISH MISSION STATION ABANDONED.—The Free Church of Scotland has been quite actively engaged in efforts for the conversion of the Jews. Last year the Committee spoke hopefully of the large and open fields for labor among them on the continent of Europe. But the terrible convulsions and reactionary movements of the past year have compelled the abandonment of their stations at Pesth and Jassy.

DEATH OF A POET.—Rev. W. B. Tappan, the Christian poet whose name is associated with some of our most familiar hymns, has been called to that "peaceful rest" which was so often the theme of his song. He died at Needham, Mass., on the 18th of June, of cholera, after an illness of eleven hours. At the time of his death, he was a General Agent of the American Sunday School Union.

"FATHER MATHEW."—The arrival of Father Mathew, the Irish Apostle of Temperance, is daily expected. He sailed from Liverpool, in the ship Ashburton, about the 22d of May, and, with a prosperous voyage, ought soon to reach New York. Great preparations are being made to receive him, and he will doubtless create a deep sensation throughout the country. May his coming do much to advance the cause of temperance.

TRACTS BURNT.—The Depository of the American Tract Society was destroyed by the great fire at Louis, and books and tracts valued at $3000 were consumed. $1600 insured.

SLAVERY CHARACTERIZED BY ONE WHO KNOWS IT.—In the recent Kentucky State Emancipation Convention, the "peculiar institution" seems to have received some pretty hard hits. The Editor of the Louisville Examiner refers to the remarks of one of the speakers as follows:—

"Never have we listened to addresses of more thrilling eloquence, of more transcendant power, than the two pronounced by Rev. Robert J. Breckinridge. At times, while he spoke, the silence of the house was like the stillness of the grave. At other times, his words roused and agitated his hearers almost beyond their power of self-control. Some of the pictures drawn by him in illustration of slavery were appalling. He characterized it as 'the most atrocious of all human institutions,' as a system which denies to a whole class of human beings the sacredness of marriage and of home, compelling them to live in a state of concubinage, for, in the eye of the law, no colored slave man is the husband of any wife in particular, nor any slave woman the wife of any husband in particular, and no slave child is the child of any parent, in particular.' While alluding to the argument of pro-slavery men, that the people have no right to interfere with the relation between master and slave, because the master has a vested right, a right of property in his slave, Mr. Breckinridge asked, with a solemnity of tone and an earnestness of spirit which thrilled and awed every listener, 'Does it ever occur to these gentlemen, that the highest, the holiest of all rights, is a man's right to himself?'"

RECEIPTS OF BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.—The receipts of the various benevolent institutions, whose anniversaries have lately been celebrated, are shown by their annual reports to be as follows:—

	Receipts.	Exp.
Am. Tract Society,	$258,440	$258,483
" Bible "	251,870
" & Foreign do.,	39,840	38,321
" Home Mission Soc.,	145,925	143,771
" Baptist " "	29,105	25,180
Presb. Board For. Missions,	110,081	110,209
Meth. Epis. Miss. Soc.,	84,045	102,940
Am. Seamen's Friend Soc.,	18,582	18,497
" Anti-Slavery "	6,992	6,975
" Colonization "	36,000	37,000
N. Y. State do.,	12,358	12,358
Am. & For. Evang. Soc.,	24,296	24,484
" Protestant "	18,411	18,212
" Temp. Union,	1,360	3,208
Soc. for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews,	2,221	3,208
	$1,040,518

A sum considerably surpassing the aggregate contributions to the same societies in any previous year.

LIQUOR AND CHOLERA.—All writers on the subject agree, that the use of intoxicating drinks is a powerful predisposing cause of Cholera. A physician of extensive practice in this city, informed us the other day, that he had scarcely seen a case, the present season, which could not be traced to intemperance. Dr. Bachelder, of New York, in a treatise on the causes, symptoms, and treatment of cholera, discourses as follows:

"The habitual use of liquors furnished one of the strongest predisposing causes of cholera. An occasional fit of intoxication, in such as is indulged in this most pernicious habit, was of all others the most certain exciting cause of an attack. I cannot call to mind a single instance in which an habitual drinker, after getting drunk, escaped an attack, or one who recovered from it. Although it may not produce any palpable derangement of the health, the habitual use of intoxicating drinks, even if moderate, as in the case of temperate drinkers, so called, induces an irritable state of the capillaries, which inclines them to take on morbid action from trivial causes, and that condition prevents their resuming healthy action when the disturbing cause is removed. In other words, slighter causes bring on disease in such persons, which is not only more difficult to remove by medical skill and remedies, but also more likely to destroy life. For the reason assigned, it will be easily understood why habitual drinkers are so much more certain to be attacked and destroyed by the disease, than the tee-totaler, who so uniformly goes unscathed. He that takes a drop of anything that can intoxicate, except as a medicine, has in the opinion of the author 'taken a drop too much.'"

THE KENTUCKY TRAGEDY.—Full and authentic particulars of the tragedy in Kentucky have not yet been received. It is known however, that Mr. Turner is dead, and that Cassius M. Clay is severely wounded, although there are hopes that he will recover. The Maysville Eagle, of the 19th inst., gives the following version of the matter, which differs in some minor prints, from that given by other papers:—

A terrible and fatal recontre occurred at Foxtown, Madison County, Ky., on Friday evening last, between Capt. Cassius M. Clay, and Cyrus Turner, a member of the Legislature last winter from that County.

The particulars, as we learn them by passengers in the stage, are these: Mr. Clay, while making an Emancipation speech, was called "a d——d liar" by some one in the crowd. He rushed from the stand in the direction of the voice, and was met by Turner, who snapped his pistol three times at Clay. Clay's pistol also snapped twice, when he threw it down, drew his bowie knife, and at the first blow ripped open Turner's abdomen. As Turner was falling, Clay raised his knife to strike again, when his arm was caught and held, and a dirk-knife plunged in his breast by some one in the crowd. Turner sent word to Clay afterwards, that he would tell him who stabbed him, in case both recovered—otherwise he would not tell him. Other accounts say that it was Turner, and not a third person that stabbed Clay.

LIFE INSURANCE.

The attention of our readers is solicited to the advertisement of the Eagle Life and Health Insurance Company, which will be found in another column. As a means of support in sickness, we consider such an institution vastly superior to any of the secret societies which abound in this country. As a means of providing for the widow and the fatherless, it has many advantages, which commend it to the farmer, the mechanic, and the professional man.

The subject is deemed of so much importance by the Legislature of this State, that a law has been passed allowing any married woman to make a contract with a Life Insurance Company to insure the life of her husband; and if he should die insolvent, policies of this kind are not affected by his insolvency. The widow is entitled to receive the amount insured, and hold it as her own, free from the claims of the creditors of her husband.

Considering the uncertainty of the business affairs of men, there is really a strong inducement held out to those having families to provide for them in this way. Of course, health is necessary on the part of the applicant, to secure an interest in a Company. A healthy man, thirty years of age, by the payment of forty-five cents a week, may secure to his family the sum of one thousand dollars at his death, whether that event take place soon or late.

The Eagle Life and Health Insurance Company has a high standing among institutions of this kind. It has an actual cash capital (unimpared) of one hundred thousand dollars, besides a surplus of thirty thousand dollars, all paid in and safely invested, affording good security to those who may do business with it. The affairs of the Company are conducted by a Board of Directors who rank among our first men, who are more or less interested as stockholders, and who are held personally responsible if the capital is impaired. The business is carefully arranged by a very competent mathematician, and the rates are as low as is compatible with the stability of the Company and the safety of the insured.

THE CHOLERA.

In New York, the cholera has increased a little during the past week. The following is a summary of cases and deaths as reported by the Board of Health:

Tuesday,	June 19,	41 cases,	10 deaths,
Wednesday,	" 20,	30 "	14 "
Thursday,	" 21,	26 "	14 "
Friday,	" 22,	38 "	16 "
Saturday,	" 23,	40 "	21 "
Sunday,	" 24,	38 "	21 "
Monday,	" 25,	47 "	25 "
Total		260 "	122 "

The number of cases reported for the week ending on Sunday, June 18th, was 212, and of deaths 100.

From nearly every section of the country we hear reports of cholera, so that there is very little chance to run away from it. At New Orleans there is less of the cholera now, than there has been for some time past. At St. Louis, and all along the river, it continues to rage. A telegraphic dispatch, dated at Cincinnati, June 22, says: The cholera is rapidly on the increase in our city, and 54 interments of deaths by that disease have been made to-day. From other diseases, the interments were 16. One cemetery made no report. Although the deaths from cholera have lately been confined to the lower classes, it has now assumed a more general form, and several of our most respectable citizens have fallen victims.

THE CALIFORNIA NEWS.

The steamship Cresent City, which left Chagres on the 4th inst., arrived at New York on the 23d. She brought the mails, passengers, and gold dust, which came from San Francisco by the steamers California and Oregon. Of the latter article, she had on board as freight nearly five hundred thousand dollars' worth, and a large amount belonging to passengers.

All accounts agree, that there is abundance of gold in California, and that it is hard work to collect it—as hard work, says one writer, as that of "the Irishman who carries the hod, or the paver who paves the street." Those who are willing to work that way, and "have good luck," can heap up the shining dust pretty fast. But living of any kind is very dear; and as to what would be called comfortable living, it can scarcely be obtained at any price.

The N. Y. Tribune publishes a letter from the artist, S. S. Osgood, which gives, probably, a pretty true picture of the state of affairs at the diggings, on the South Fork of Rio Americano. He says that there one can board and lodge in a room where every inch is covered with human flesh, at seven dollars a day; salt pork and beef is $1 50 per pound; flour 50 cents per pound. At a place 15 miles from him, prices are twice as high. He washes his own clothes, and thus saves $24 a dozen. Old newspapers, before the first of February, are worth 50 cents each; later than that $1; red flannel shirts $16. Champaigne $10 per bottle. Cheese $3 per pound. Gambling and drinking abound, and a large part of the miners dig gold a while, and then loaf and gamble till it is all gone, after which they go to work, to get the means of gambling and drinking more.

THE NEWS FROM EUROPE.

Since our last, the steamship America has arrived, bringing seven days later news from Europe.

In England, the crops are reported as being most promising. The same is said of crops throughout France. But from Ireland there are reports of disease in the growing potato, especially in the vicinity of Dublin.

The whole of the Western Provinces of Ireland are represented as in the most deplorable condition. Society is utterly disorganized.

Lord Clarendon has officially announcedt that the sentence of death passed on the State prisoners in Ireland, has been commuted to transportation for life.

Accounts are received from Rome to the 2d of June, up to which time hostilities had not commenced. The Romans have announced their firm resolution to defend to the death the expected assault of the French, and it is stated that they have an efficient force of 80,000. The Pope still persists in demanding the unqualified renewal of his powers as a temporal ruler, and this the triumvir, backed by the people, declare they will never concede. There is at the bottom of every heart, says Mazinni, "a determination the most profound to accomplish the destruction of the temporal power of the Popes. All bear the same hatred to the government of priests, under whatever form it may be presented. We shall fight to the last against all projects of a restoration."

The war in Hungary presents no new feature; and since the fall of Buda into the hands of the Hungarians, no event has occurred calculated to have a permanent influence on the result of the struggle, though the Hungarians have achieved farther, and in some respects important victories. There is evidence that the combattants are concentrating their forces, and accounts of a tremendous battle are every day looked for.

The report, so constantly repeated, that the war between the Danes and Prussians is speedily to end, is renewed, but we can see no reliable evidence of the fact. Hostilities still continue in the neighborhood of Aarhus, and the Danish blockade is rigidly enforced.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Singular and Fatal Accident.—On the 13th of June, as a train on the Northern Railroad was about to cross a road in Andover, N. H., Capt. Emery, a highly respectable citizen of that town, was in the act of crossing in a wagon. He drew up his horse to wait till the train had passed, and was not seen by the engineer, owing to a bank on the roadside that intercepted the view. The moment the engine whistled, the horse started and leaped across the track, just clearing it himself, and placing the wagon in the direct course of the engine. In the twinkling of an eye all was over; the wagon was dashed by the cowcatcher into a thousand fragments, and the man at first could not be found. When he was discovered, he was found seated perfectly erect in the seat of the wagon, which was lodged upon the box on which the cylinder of the engine rests, in a perfectly natural position, just as if he had placed himself there for a ride. The cylinder head of the engine was stove in spherically, a diameter of some six inches. The man opened his eyes, but he was stunned, and the breath knocked out of his body by the blow; without doubt, too, the fright of the accident took away his senses. Not a limb was broken, nor a drop of his blood spilt. His house was on a height some eighth of a mile distant, and his appalled wife and daughter were witnesses of the accident. The latter, with heart-rending screams, ran to the spot. The passengers bore the man back, helpless but not lifeless to that home he had just left, so full of strength and life. Some spirits were applied, chafing was ordered, the man placed in a current of air, and the physician sent for. The groans of the sufferer became louder and louder, in proportion as he recovered his breath, and he died shortly afterwards. The horse was uninjured.

New Kind of Fever.—A strange disease has recently appeared in Baltimore. The Physicians of the Alms-house, where most of the cases have occurred, say that it is a highly malignant Typhus fever, modified by climate, infectious in its character, but accompanied, in a large majority of cases, by intense jaundice, in this respect resembling Typhus Icterodes of systematic writers. It has has come to us only in the past week, during which time forty-six cases have been admitted, and of these the very largest portion of twenty have proved fatal; the remainder are still under treatment. It has been brought alike from every portion of the city, and as yet has only occurred among the free blacks. Thus far it has been much more grave among males than females, owing probably to differences of habits and occupation. The large majority of cases have been fatal between the third and seventh day, and in some instances they have died a few minutes after admission, and three days from the date of seizure. This disease is by no means confined to the worthless and abandoned, as stated in several of the daily papers, but has, on the contrary, frequently happened in individuals of temparate and industrious habits, whose means are adequate to provide them with wholesome food and sufficient clothing. Two strong and healthy women, residents of the house, and employed as nurses, have taken the infection and died.

The Rush to Minnesota.—The Keokuk (Iowa) Register, says: We learn from a gentleman, just down from St. Paul, that this place is the theater of almost as much excitement as San Francisco, California. The emigration to that place and the surrounding country is immense. Hundreds are pouring in from all parts daily. Every thing in the shape of a house is filled to overflowing, and large numbers are encamped in tents for want of house room. He says that money is very plenty, and prices of lots and other property high. A large amount of English emigration has come in this Spring, bringing with them plenty of funds. Minnesota bids fair for a speedy settlement and most rapid improvement. Our friend was highly delighted with the beautiful appearance of the country.

Hot Weather.—During three or four days of last week the weather was hot enough to suit any body. In New York the thermometer ranged from 90 to 100 degrees in the shade. Of course a good many deaths resulted, directly or indirectly—some from being sun-struck, and others from using cold water too freely when over-heated. From almost all parts of the country come similar reports. At Worcester, Mass., the mercury stood at 90° in a cool exposure. At Hartford, Conn., the mercury went up to 97° in the shade. At New Haven the weather was such that the editor of the Register had not courage to look at the thermometer. At Boston the thermometer indicated 94 1-2°. At Jersey City it went up to 95°. At Utica, on the 20th, 95°. At Lowell, Mass., 91°. At Troy, N. Y., 96. At Rochester, 94°. At Springfield, 97°. At Syracuse, 93.

California Emigrants Returning.—A telegraphic dispatch to the Courier, dated St. Louis, June 18, says: "We learn, from Fort Childs, that 2,000 California emigrants are returning. There is a great deal of distress among the emigrants upon the Plains. By an arrival from Fort Kearney, we have received intelligence to the 27th May. There is much sickness among the California emigrants. There continues to be a great deal of quarreling in the companies, many of whom are breaking up, and their members returning. Major Sanderson had left Fort Kearney for Bear River, where a new fort is to be established. Two thousand six hundred wagons had passed Fort Kearney up to the 27th May, besides mule companies. One company had lost 90 oxen by a stampede."

California Emigrants Murdered.—Col. Upshaw, United States Indian agent for the Chickasaws, writes to the Arkansas Intelligencer, on the 15th of May, that he has just heard of the murder of a party of twenty-six persons, who left Texas some two weeks previous for California. Two others of the party made their escape. They were killed by the Indians. They were at Preston, in Texas, on the South bank of Red River, opposite the mouth of Falls of Washita, and when there, they said that all they wanted was an Indian fight. It appears they got one. This report is generally believed.

From Oregon City.—The editor of the N. Y. Tribune has been favored by Theophilus Bates, Esq., with the perusal of an interesting letter from his sister, now resident in Oregon City, dated Feb. 20. She says that the discovery of the gold mines in California has entirely changed the aspect of things in Oregon. The rich lands are now almost deserted and valueless, or are sold for almost nothing, or in exchange for pack-mules to carry the inhabitants to California—"some to dig their fortunes, others to dig their graves." Some return with fortunes, gamble till all is lost, then return to dig for more! She says the condition of the people of Oregon is to suffer much from the emigration to California, as whole families were departing for the mines. There is a prospect of the country being deserted and depopulated in the spring, (last,) and there are fearful apprehensions of Indian depredations. When the Indians get rum, they frequently threaten to exterminate the whites, and the absence of the men embolden them in these threats. Provisions are very high in California—vessels press to and from California without stopping. Many fear a famine unless the soil is cultivated. Even in the Sandwich Islands, whence the Oregon sugar market is supplied, the sugar plantations are deserted for gold digging. The climate, she says, is delightful. They have had a little snow, and some sleigh-riding, which is unusual for that country. Most of the people of California are from the Western States.

The Slave Trade.—A correspondent of Jerrold's News makes the following statement: "People of all nations participate in the profits of slavery; a great part of the brokering is conducted by respectable English houses; and indeed English people, after sojourning long in Brazil, feel as little repugnance to the business as Spaniards or Portuguese. English engineers build steamers for the trade, and then go in them as first drivers. One of those vessels in May last year succeeded in landing, a little to the north of Rio, 1,100 negroes—a cargo worth from £25,000 to £30,000. This would have bought the ship and all she carried out for barter five times over. An acquaintance of mine, an Anglo-American, had a little before this brought safely into port, in a little brig, 650. He, as commander, earned between £600 and £700, and his crew in proportion. The sufferings of the negroes and the crews during the now necessarily protracted voyages, are well known; and it is also a fact, known to those conversant with the subject, that while the horrors of the passage are infinitely enhanced by the influence of French and English cruisers, the trade is still supplied at the rate of 65,000 annually; and so long as there remains a market it will be so supplied, unless, instead of employing a few brigs and schooners, we could in reality wall in all Africa."

Narrow Escape.—A hack-driver at Lowell, with two ladies and three children in his carriage, got upon the Stony Brook Railroad just as the train was coming out of the city. The alarm was given, and the hack-driver attempted to back off from the track. He had almost succeeded—having got the carriage off, and one of the horses nearly so, when the locomotive struck the nigh horse and cleft him to pieces almost instantly. It cut him completely away from the vehicle—not injuring the other horse in the least. The escape of the ladies and children from death was almost miraculous. The cars were running something like fifty miles an hour.

Important Decision.—Much interest was created some time ago by the arrest of Mr. Kauffman, a wealthy farmer of Cumberland County, Penn., for giving food and assistance to a family of fugitive slaves, which were brought from Maryland or Virginia and left on his premises. The owner of the slaves brought suit, and gained, in one of the inferior courts, a verdict against Mr. Kauffman of $2,000. An appeal was taken to Supreme Court, and on Monday, the 18th inst., after a full argument, Judge Coulter delivered an opinion reversing the decision of the lower court, on the ground that it was a matter which did not belong to State jurisdiction, but should have been brought in one of the Federal Courts under the act of Congress. [Phila. North American.

Melancholy.—A German immigrant was arrested at Maysville, Ky., some two months ago, and confined in jail on a charge of stealing three dollars' worth of carpenters' tools. He was taken with the cholera on the 8th, and died in 24 hours, protesting his innocence of the accusation to a German friend who called to see him just before he died. As soon as Judge Reid heard of his illness, he called a Court, and no evidence appearing against him, his release was ordered, but he had already been relieved by death. He leaves a wife and six children in Germany.

Maine Forest Fires.—A dispatch dated at Calais, Maine, June 22d, says:—

The weather has been exceedingly warm, the thermometer in the coolest place being up to 96°. We have had no rain since the first week in April. The fires in the woods are still raging in every direction, and more than six millions acres of timber land have already fallen a prey to the devouring element in this part of Maine and the Province of New Brunswick. There is no water for driving logs. Nearly all the present stock is saved. The lumber business must be suspended for the summer, and the best fields of grain, it is likely, will not be worth cutting. The prospects of the country were never more gloomy than at present.

Emigrants and Indians.—An arrival at St Louis brings news of a fight at one of the Pawnee villages, between a number of the Indians and a party of California Emigrants from Wheeling, Va., in which five Pawnees were killed. No Californians were killed in the fight, and only one was wounded. The quarrel grew out of the savages having stolen some of the horses and mules of the emigrants. The fight took place on the 3d of June.

Accident among the Alps.—On the 31st March, as several conveyances, in which were sixty-four persons, thirty of whom were Swiss soldiers returning from service in the army of the Pope, were crossing Mount St. Bernard, they were precipitated into a deep ravine. Twenty-four men and thirty horses were killed.

SUMMARY.

From Port-au-Prince, Hayti, news to the 29th of May has beeen received. A portion of the President's army was still in the barracks at Port-au-Prince, but there was no probability of a renewal of the war. It has been ascertained that the Haytiens had 1,000 killed in the late battle with the Dominicians.

Halifax papers of June 18 say that great fires are prevailing in the adjacent woods. The city is so full of smoke, that the sun is invisible; the heat is most intense; vessels cannot move out of the harbor of Fredericktown, N. B. The courts adjourned in consequence of the great darkness prevailing.

By the English papers we learn that another explosion took place in the mines near Newcastle on the Tyne on the 5th inst., by which thirty three persons lost their lives. There were over one hundred persons in the mines at the time.

The Poughkeepsie Journal publishes a call for a State Convention of Editors, to be held at Syracuse on the 19th of September. The principal object stated in the call, is the restoration of the law of 1845, granting free circulation to newspapers for thirty miles from the place of publication.

On the 23d of May the steamer Cetro arrived at Havana, in three days from Sisal, Yucatan, bringing two hundred and seventy-one Indians, taken at the capture of Baccalar, to be sold as slaves in Cuba. This is infamous—disgraceful to a nation claiming to be civilized; and we are sorry that any Americans should be found fighting for a people who countenance such atrocities.

The Court of Appeals of South Carolina, have affirmed the judgment of the Inferior Court against James Brown, convicted of "negro stealing," and he has received sentence of death, to be executed on the 2d of July.

The Queen of England has constituted Rupert's-land, in North America, to be a Bishop's see and diocese, to be called the Bishopric of Rupert's-land, and appointed the Rev. David Anderson, Doctor in Divinity, to be ordained and consecrated Bishop of the said See.

The Bangor (Me.) Courier of June 20th, says that three men belonging to the driving crew of E. & J. Marsh, were drowned on Saturday last, by the accidental swamping of a boat at the head of Grand Falls on the West Branch. Their names were Cyrus Hutchinson, of Dover, Joseph King, of Stillwater, and Josiah Choate, of Calais.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated at Buffalo, June 22d, says: We regret to state that Miss De Forrest, a daughter of one of our most respectable citizens, fell into the stream at the "Hog's Back" last evening, and was drowned, together with Charles C. Addington, a young merchant, who had plunged in to save her. They were both carried over the Falls.

About four thousand letters from California reached New York on the 19th inst., many of them containing specimens of gold dust. One-third of them were for persons in this city.

Bark Ann Perry, of Salem, is to sail from that port for San Francisco, with a crew of about twenty, all of whom have been masters or mates of vessels. They ship for twenty cents per month!

Three young men, named John Kearney, George Kearney, and a French boy, known by the name of Jack, are supposed to have been lost by the upsetting of a sail-boat near Thomaston, Maine.

A dispatch dated at St. Louis, June 19, says: "The cholera interments yesterday numbered 60, and other diseases 15. The interments for the week ending Sunday night, were of cholera 439, and of other diseases 76."

A couple were recently married in Lockland, and two hours after the ceremony the bridegroom entered on a two years' trip for California.

A dispatch dated at Cincinnati, June 19, says: "There were 59 cholera interments in this city yesterday, and 23 from other diseases."

In Philadelphia, on the 18th of June, a mass of earth fell upon and crushed four workmen who were digging near it.

Great Britain purchased, last year, over $70,000,000 worth of the agricultural products of this country.

The Northern State Journal, which was consumed by the conflagration at Watertown, has just re-appeared, enlarged, improved, and beautified.

A vessel lately arrived at Boston from Rio Janeiro, having as part of her cargo 50,000 wooden toothpicks.

Advices from Vera Cruz to the 17th inst. state that large bodies of Mexicans were still pushing their way to California.

A bill has passed the Connecticut Senate, providing that money may be loaned at a higher rate of interest than 6 per cent, but authorizing the recovery of only 6 per cent in the courts, when more than that rate is agreed upon.

A bill to commute the punishment of Letitia S. Blaisdell to imprisonment for life, has passed the New-Hampshire House of Representatives.

The negro, Shorter, convicted of the murder of Mr. Marsh, at Buffalo, is to be hung on the 10th of August next, between the hours of 10 A. M. and 4 P. M.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican announces that a coal mine has been found on the premises of Edward Palmer, Esq., of that place. The coal is said to be of fine quality.

There were 69 deaths by Cholera in St. Louis on the 14th inst., and for the week ending on that day the number of deaths by the same disease was 191.

Minnesota was duly organized as a Territory by proclamation of Gov. Ramsey, dated June 1.

Three hundred and thirty deaths by Cholera were reported in St. Louis for the week ending on the evening of the 17th inst.

Two thousand five hundred wagons, and 15,000 emigrants for California, had passed Grand Island on the 1st inst.

The Trustees of the Southern portion of the M. E. Church at Alexandria, and those of the Northern portion, have been quarreling about the ownership of a church in that city. After smashing in some of the windows, and creating much disturbance, the keys were (by common consent) handed over to the Sheriff, until the point at issue shall have been decided by the legal tribunals.

The Managers of the American Institute, N. Y., have appropriated $500 to be awarded at the Fair of 1849, (commencing Oct. 2d,) to apprentices and minors, in premiums for works of art and industry. Satisfactory evidence must be produced, showing that the work is entirely the result of their own skill and industry.

The emigrants arriving here daily are of a very superior class. The large number of respectable and educated young men from England, Ireland, and Scotland, to be found at the boarding-houses is really surprising. Most of them are preparing to go West.

Several Government steamers were lately sold in New Orleans; the Alabama for $23,000, the New Orleans for $31,000, and the propeller Thompson for $23,000. The original cost of the New Orleans was $130,000.

In New Orleans, on the 1st inst., a son of Mr. Stone, aged four years, fell out of the back door of his residence and was drowned. This is the fourth death from drowning which has occurred in that city since the water came up in the streets.

The London Patent Journal of the 26th ult. estimates the depreciation in the value or market prices of Railway Stocks in Great Britain within the last three months, taking the aggregate of Railways, at $48,000,000 to $58,000,000. This is caused by the alarm which recent disclosures of gross mismanagement gave rise to.

The Courier and Inquirer has a telegraphic dispatch from London, which states that accounts from Gaeta announce that it is the intention of the Pope to return to Florence with the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and to recede to Bologna, where he will establish his government until Rome shall be in a state to permit his return to it.

Hon. James Buchanan has given to the city of Lancaster, in trust, the sum of $4,000, to remain as a perpetual fund, the interest whereof to be annually expended in the purchase of fuel for the use of poor and indigent females of that city, during the inclement winter seasons.

The Committee on Education in the Maine House, have presented a long report on the subject of Normal Schools, wherein it is thought expedient to establish a State Normal School whenever the friends of education will furnish a suitable building for the use of said school.

A young man named Swift was 'brought up' in Boston the other day, for assaulting a man who had defamed his mother's character; and in consideration of the circumstances, the Judge gave Swift considerable license, letting him off with a fine of one cent, without costs!

We learn (says the Boston Journal,) that Rev. W. B. Tappan, whose sudden death was announced a day or two since, had an insurance of $3,000 on his life, the policy of which ran out, two or three days previous to his decease. He leaves a wife and four children.

A telegraphic dispatch dated at St. Louis, June 22d, says that late accounts have been received of a renewal of disturbances between the California emigrants and the Indians, in which a number of each party were killed. The cholera was still making sad havoc among the emigrants. Numerous parties were daily returning.

We learn from the Oxford (Chenango Co.) Times, that about two weeks ago, a Mr. Sweatland, of Lisle, in that county, while riding on horseback, was stopped about a mile south of McDonough village, by an individual, who demanded his money. Mr. S. being unarmed, handed him his wallet and its contents; consisting of eighty-one cents, and, with this valuable booty, the robber walked off.

Bills of the Putnam County Bank, N. Y., altered from a smaller denomination to $20, are in circulation in Boston. The words "Twenty Dollars" in the body of the bill are printed with type, which may aid in detecting the fraud.

The Rochester Advertiser tells us that a young lady was sent 20 days to jail for stealing her fellow-traveler's purse and buying fineries with it.

Strawberries 4 1-2 inches in circumference have been sent to the Rochester American people.

The Mexican Congres has passed a bill authorizing the construction of a Railroad from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico.

The Datton (Ga.) Eagle, of the 12th inst., acknowledges the receipt of some ears of full-grown green corn.

The income of the British "Wesleyan Missionary Society" last year was about $500,000!

New York Markets—Monday, June 25.

WHOLESALE.

Ashes—Pearls $5 50; Pots 5 56 a 5 62.——Flour and Meal—Flour, common and ordinary State 4 39 a 4 50; good and straight Western 4 50 a 4 62; pure Genesee 4 87 a 5 00. Corn Meal is scarce, and Jersey brings 3 00. Rye Flour 3 00 a 3 06.——Grain—Wheat of the lower grades is heavy, common Wisconsin selling at 80c.; Genesee is scarce, and held at 1 30. Corn is abundant and low, prices ranging from 55c. to 62c. Barley 52 a 53c. Oats 35 a 36c.——Provisions—Pork is heavy, Prime bringing 8 85 a 8 87, and Mess 10 31 a 10 37. Beef, country Mess, 11 50; Prime 9 50. Butter is lower, Western tub selling at 10 a 13c., Ohio at 7 a 10c. Orange County at 15 a 17c. Cheese 3 a 7c.

RETAIL HOUSEHOLD MARKETS.

Apples—Spitzenbergs, 18d per half peck; per bbl. 18s and 20s to $3; Newtown Pippins, 10 a 20s; Greenings, 12 a 16s; Seek-no-Farthers, 22s per bbl. Lima Beans—Shelled, 15d per quart. Cranberries—Per qt. 15d; per bbl. in water, $10. Hams—1s per lb; wholesale, 10½ a 11d. per lb. Lard—Retail, 9 a 10 cts. per lb; wholesale, 7 a 8½. Lettuce—2 cts. per head. Mint—Per bunch, 2 cts. Leeks—Per bunch, 6d. Mushrooms—Per quart, 4d. Parsley—Per bunch, 6 a 9 cts. Dried Peaches—Per quart, 1s 3d. Green Peas—Good and plenty, from Long Island. Per half peck, from 15d to 18d; per bushel, 8s a 10s. Maple Sugar—Retail, about 10 cts. per lb; wholesaled at 6 a 9; Country manufacturers [illegible] on an average, 6d per lb. New Onions—Per bunch, 6d. Green Gooseberries—Per basket, 10s; per quart, about 5d. Cherries—Per lb. small, about [illegible]. New Beets—6 to 10, for a shilling. New Pumpkins—Scarce, at some 3s each.

The wife of Mr. Richard Whittaker, of the First Ward Police, was recently taken to the Lunatic Asylum, her derangement having been caused by the departure of her son, about two months since, for California.

LETTERS.

W. B. Gillett, S. S. Griswold, Maxson Green, B. G. Stillman, Geo. Greenman, T. M. Wilcox, R. Lewis, Christian King, J. O. Curtis.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Enoch Barnes,	$5 00	Ezra Coon,	$5 00
Benjamin Maxson,	5 00	Alonzo W. Crandall,	5 00
Ephraim Maxson,	5 00	Isaac Brown,	5 00
Samuel B. Crandall,	5 00	Asa West,	5 00
Benj. Burdick,	5 00	Benedict W. Rogers,	5 00
Ichabod Burdick,	5 00

The Treasurer would also acknowledge the receipt of the following sums from subscribers for the Sabbath Recorder:—

David Dunn, New Market, N. J.	$2 00	to vol.	6	No. 52
Eliza M. Stelle, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
H. F. Randolph, Millington, N. J.	2 00	"	6	" 52
D. W. Dennison, Mystic Bridge, Ct.	2 00	"	6	" 52
A. A. Avery, Mystic, Ct.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Nathan Chapman, Portersville, Ct.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Matthew Potter, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	"	6	" 52
John Green, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Pierce Handel, "	1 00	"	6	" 52
C. B. Cottrell, Lippitt, R. I.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Christian King, Pattonsville, Pa.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Joel Babcock, Fairfield, O.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Benj. Vincent, Vilanovia,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Amos Green, Little Genesee,	2 00	"	6	" 52
David Maxson, "	50	"	6	" 13
Daniel Truman, Newport,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Ezra Stillman, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Abel Stillman, Poland,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Asa West, Leonardsville,	2 00	"	6	" 52
" " for Jos. Button,	2 00	"	6	" 52
R. Lewis, Brookfield,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Josiah Taylor, Unadilla Forks,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Maxson Stillman, Alfred,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Thomas Burdick, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Abram Utter, New York,	1 00	"	6	" 26
Aug. Williams, "	1 00	"	6	" 26

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Receipts for the Tract Society.

The Treasurer of the American Sabbath Tract Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums since his last report through the Recorder:—

Levi H. Bond, Lost Creek, Va.	$7 00
J. B. Wells, DeRuyter,	1 00
David Rogers, 2d, Waterford, Ct.	2 00
Col. at Eastern Association, Westerly, R. I.	13 86
W. Edmeston Tract Society, by E. Maxson,	8 00
From Church at Westerly, R. I.	92
David Rogers, Waterford, Ct.	1 00
Mary Rogers, "	1 00
David Dunn, New Market, N. J.	1 00
E. D. Barker, Westerly, R. I.	4 00
A. M. Babcock, "	1 00
J. W. Langworthy, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00
Thos S. Greenman, Mystic, Ct.	4 00
E. W. Denison, "	1 00
Chas. Saunders, Providence, R. I.	1 00

THOMAS B. STILLMAN, Treasurer.

Bruce's New York Type-Foundry.

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C.
Pica,	per lb. 30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb. Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

Our Specimen Book is freely given to all Printing Offices.

Printers of Newspapers who choose to publish this advertisement, including this note, three times before the 1st of October, 1849, and send us one of the papers, will be paid for it in Type when they purchase from us, of our own manufactures, selected from our specimens, five times the amount of their bill.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.

GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

[Copy.]

CAMBRIDGE, Washington Co., N. Y.,
June 18, 1849.

Geo. W. Savage, Esq.,
Pres't Eagle Life and Health Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to express to your Company my thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which you paid the claim for insurance on the life of my brother, Doctor F. R. Robertson, which was insured for the benefit of his mother. The manner in which the claim was met and paid, is creditable to your institution. No deduction was asked, nor was there any objection raised, but the whole amount insured paid as soon as presented and without waiting until it became due.

A policy of this kind is indeed valuable. I trust you will have the kindness to express our deep acknowledgment to your Board of Directors, and oblige

Your obedient servant,
R. K. ROBERTSON.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium, nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make further contributions in case of mortality beyond the [illegible]. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on [illegible]. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at death. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons [illegible] policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any [illegible] Company in this country or in England, and [illegible] as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of [illegible] equity of principles upon which [illegible] based, this institution will [illegible] in existence. To the confidence [illegible] dence which has governed its [illegible] to the public advantages found in [illegible] insurance, the Directors look [illegible] patronage which has so far [illegible]

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, [illegible]
RICHARD H. BULL, [illegible]

Any information will be [illegible] abroad, who may [illegible] free, by addressing (postpaid) [illegible] Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. York.

JAMES A. [illegible] General Agent [illegible]

Pamphlets [illegible] to be had gratis at the office [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

NO NIGHT BUT HATH ITS MORN.

There are times of deepest sorrow,
When the heart feels lone and sad;
Times when memory's spells of magic
Have in gloom the spirit clad.
Wouldst thou have a wand all potent
To illume life's darkest night?
'T is the thought that e'er in nature
Darkest hours precede the light.

When the world, cold, dark, and selfish,
Frowns upon the feeble flame,
Lighted from the torch of genius,
Worth has kindled round thy name;
When thy fondest hopes are blighted,
And thy dearest prospects fade,
Think, oh, lone one, scorned and slighted,
Sunshine ever follows shade.

ON THE CHOICE OF A WIFE.

Enough of beauty to secure affection,
Enough of sprightliness to secure dejection,
Of modest diffidence to claim protection,
A docile mind subservient to correction,
Yet stored with sense, with reason and affection,
And every passion held in due subjection,
Just faults enough to keep her from perfection.
When such I find, I'll make her my election.

ON THE CHOICE OF A HUSBAND.

Of beauty just enough to bear inspection,
Of candor, sense, and wit, a good collection,
Enough of love for one who needs protection,
To scorn the words, "I'll keep her in subjection,"
Wisdom to keep him right in each direction,
Nor claim a weaker vessel's imperfection.
Should I e'er meet with such in my connection,
Let him propose—I'll offer no objection.

THE ADVENTUROUS BOY.

While the fleet lay at anchor, one of the most heart-thrilling scenes occurred on board the Commodore's vessel, that my eyes ever witnessed. In addition to the usual appendages of a ship of war, there was a large and mischievous monkey on board named Jacko, retained for the amusement and diversion of the ship's company. It was my watch on deck; and having retired to the side of the vessel, I was musing on the beautiful appearance of the fleet, when a loud and merry laugh burst upon my ear.

On turning to ascertain the cause of such an unusual sound on the frigate's deck, I perceived the Commodore's little son, whom the crew nicknamed "little Bob Stay," standing half way up the main-hatch ladder, clapping his hands, and looking aloft at some object that seemed to inspire him with a deal of glee. A single glance explained the cause of the merriment. As Bob was coming up from the guns deck, Jacko the monkey, perceiving him on the ladder, and dropping suddenly from the rigging, leaped upon his shoulder, seized his cap, and running up the main top-sail-sheet, seated himself on the main-yard.

Here he sat picking the tassel of his prize to pieces, occasionally scratching his sides, and chattering, as if in exultation at the success of his mischief. Bob being a sprightly active fellow, did not like to lose his cap without an effort to regain it. Perhaps he was the more strongly inclined to make chase after Jacko, from observing me smile at his plight, and hearing the loud laugh of Cato, a black man, who seemed inexpressively delighted with the occurrence.

"Ha, you rascal, Jacko," said the black man, "hab you no more respec' for de young officer, den to steal his cap? We bring you to the gang-way, you black nigger, and gib you a dozen on de bare back for a tief." The monkey looked down from his perch as if he understood the threat of the negro, and chattered a sort of defiance in answer. "Ha, ha, Massa Bob, he say you mus' ketch him 'fore you flog him: and 'tis no easy matter for a midshipman in boots to ketch a monkey barefoot."

The cheeks of little Bob looked red, as he cast a look of offended pride at Cato; and springing across the deck, in a moment he was half way up the rigging. The monkey quietly watched his motions; and when nearly up, suddenly put up his own head, and ascended to the top cross-trees, and quietly seating himself, resumed his work of picking the tassel.

In this manner, the mischevious animal succeeded in enticing Bob as high as the royal-mast-head, when, suddenly springing on the rigging, he again descended to the fore-top, and running out on the fore-yard, hung the cap on the end of the studding-sail boom, where, taking his seat, he raised a loud and exulting chattering. By this time, Bob was completely exhausted, and not liking to return to the deck to be laughed at, he sat down on the cross-trees.

The spectators, presuming that the boy would not follow the monkey, and descend to the deck, paid no further attention to them. I also had turned away, and had been engaged some minutes, when I was suddenly startled by a cry from Cato, exclaiming that "Massa Bob was on the main-truck!" A cold shudder ran through my veins as the words struck on my ears. I cast my eyes up—it was too true.

The adventurous boy, after resting a little, had climbed the "sky-sail-pole," and at the moment of my looking up, was actually standing on the circular piece of wood, on the very summit of the loftiest mast; at a height so great that my brain turned dizzy as I looked up at him. There was nothing above him or around him but empty space: and beneath him nothing but a small unstable wheel.

Dreadful temerity! If he attempted to stoop, what could he take hold of to steady his motion? His feet covered up the small and fearful platform on which he stood; and beneath that, a long smooth pole that seemed to bend beneath his weight, was all that upheld him from destruction. In endeavoring to get down he would inevitably lose his balance, and be precipitated to the deck, a crushed and shapeless mass.

In this terrible exigency what was to be done? To hail him and inform him of his danger, it was thought, would ensure his ruin. Every moment I expected to see the dreadful catastrophe. I could not bear to look at him, and yet could not withdraw my gaze. A film came over my eyes, and a faintness over my heart. By this time the deck was covered with officers and crew, to witness this appalling, this heart-rending spectacle. All seemed mute. Every feeling, every faculty seemed absorbed in one intense emotion of agony.

At this moment, a stir was made among the crew about the gang-way, when the Commodore, the boy's father, made his appearance. He had come on board without being noticed by a single eye. The Commodore asked not a question, uttered not a syllable. He was an austere man, and it was though by some that he did not entertain a very strong affection for his son. All eyes were now fixed on him, endeavoring to read his emotions in his countenance.

The scrutiny, however, was in vain; his eye retained its severe expression; his brow the slight frown it usually wore; and his lip its haughty curl. In short, no outward sign indicated what was passing within. Immediately on reaching the deck, he ordered a marine to hand a musket, when, stepping aft, he took a deliberate aim at his son, at the same time hailing him with his trumpet, in a voice of thunder.

'Robert,' cried he, 'jump over board, or I'll fire at you.' The boy seemed to hesitate, and it was plain that he was tottering, for his arms were thrown about like one endeavoring to balance himself. The Commodore raised his voice again, and in a quicker and more energetic tone, cried, 'Jump! tis your only chance for life.' The words were scarcely out of his mouth, before he left the truck, and sprung out into the air. A sound between a shriek and a groan burst from many lips.

The father spoke not—sighed not; indeed, he seemed not to breathe. For a moment of intense agony, a pin might have been heard to drop on deck. With a rush like that of a cannon ball, the body descended to the water, and before the waves closed over it, twenty stout fellows, among them several officers, had dived from the bulwark. Another short period of suspense ensued. The boy rose! he was alive! his arm was seen to move—he struck out towards the ship.

In spite of the discipline of a man-of-war, three loud huzzas, the outburst of unfeigned joy from the hearts of five hundred men; pealed through the air, and made the welkin ring. Till this moment the old Commodore stood unmoved. His face now was ashy pale. He attempted to descend from the block, but his knees bent under him; he seemed to gasp for breath, and attempted to tear open his vest; but in the attempt he staggered, and would have fallen, had he not been caught by the by-standers.

He was borne to his cabin, where the surgeon attended him, whose utmost skill was required to restore his mind to its usual equilibrity and self-command, in which he at last happily succeeded. As soon as he recovered from the dreadful shock, he sent for Bob, and had a long confidential conference with him; and it was noticed, when the little fellow left the cabin, he was in tears.

VALPARAISO, CALLAO, LIMA.

The following sketch of these places is given through the N. Y. Tribune, by a passenger to California in the steamship Panama:—

Arrived at Valparaiso on the 17th of April. Valparaiso is an old Spanish town, of some 20,000 inhabitants, and is only remarkable for the immense quantities of fruit found there—apples, pears, peaches, figs, grapes, &c. I think the grapes are the largest and finest I ever saw. I purchased half a bushel of large white grapes for fifty cents! We left Valparaiso on the 19th of April, and arrived at Calloa on the 25th.

Calloa is the sea-port town of the Republic of Peru. Lima, the capital of Peru, is about nine miles from Calloa. We spent five days at Lima while our steamer was receiving coal. Lima is a city of great antiquity, and possesses many objects of interest to the traveler. A remarkable fact respecting this region of country is, that it never rains. Vegetation is sustained by the heavy dews. An American gentleman, who has lived in Lima for twenty-one years, told me he had never known it to rain there. The houses in Lima are nearly all but one story high—a few of a story and a half. The walls are of great thickness and strength. The houses of each block are all connected by a continuous wall in front. One reason why they adopt this form of building is the danger from earthquakes. One hundred and four years ago, the whole of Callao and a part of Lima was destroyed by an earthquake. They usually experience several shocks during the year, of greater or less severity. One of these shocks occurred during our visit, and it was said to be the most severe one they had experienced for the past eight years. It occurred about 4 o'clock in the morning. The bells tolled and the people ran to the middle of the street. We were all a little frightened, but no one harmed. If such a shock had occurred in New York thousands of buildings must have been thrown down.

Lima contains at present about 80,000 inhabitants—formerly 200,000. The form of government is Republican, though such only in name. It is purely a Dictatorship. The laws are trampled upon with perfect impunity by the President. The present President was driven from the country some four years since, but in a few months gathered an army of four hundred and returned, subdued his opposers, and was recognized as President. The national spirit and pride are broken. There is no hearty good-will for the Government. Public improvements are all neglected, and each one follows his own fortune and pleasure. We visited the great Cathedral, which covers about two acres of ground. It was built about two hundred years ago, and on the most magnificent scale. I shall not attempt a description of it; but you may form some idea of its splendors when I state, that there are in the inside forty columns of solid silver, twelve feet long by twelve inches in diameter! In this Cathedral I was pointed to the tomb of Pizarro, and the place where he was assassinated.

Strange as it may seem, I visited in Lima a Cotton Factory! The entire building and machinery were brought from the United States. The building is 200 feet long by 60 broad—employs 100 looms, 4,000 spindles, and about 100 operatives. The operatives are mostly Spanish girls from Lima, although a few are from the interior, and are of Indian extraction. The factory is owned by Dr. Casanava, a Spanish gentleman. Cotton cloth of a very good quality is manufactured. The girls all speak the Spanish language.

Artificial Stone.—The Year Book, for 1848, says that a new process has been discovered by Mr. Frederick Ransome, of England, for making artificial stone, by subjecting broken pieces of silica (common flint) for a time to the action of caustic alkali boiling under pressure in a close vessel, forming a transparent silicated solution, which is evaporated to a specific gravity of 1,600, and is then intimately mixed with given proportions of well-washed sand, broken granite, or other materials of different degrees of hardness. The paste thus constituted, after being pressed into moulds, from which the most delicate impressions are readily received, is subjected to a red heat in a stove or kiln, by which operation the free or uncombined silica of the raw materials unites with the excess of alkali existing in the solution, thus forming a semi-vitreous compound, and rendering the artificial stone perfectly insoluble. This production must evidently be adapted to a comprehensive range of objects for decorative art and architectural purposes—busts, vases, flooring tiles, steps, balustrades, mouldings, capitals, shafts, and bases of columns, &c. Even grindstones, and whetstones for scythes, have been made.

HINTS FOR FARMERS.

Carrots, Parsnips and Beet-roots.—All grounds are not suitable for these crops; for they require fifteen inches of good, rich, light soil, free from gravel and stones. The soil should be trenched and well broken. When the plants are up, they should be hoed to leave them eight or nine inches apart, nor should a single weed get leave to grow. For storing they ought not to be taken up until the foliage turns yellow.

Onions.—The principal art in their culture is to well dress the ground; well decomposed nght soil, a good two inch thickness all over the soil, forked into and well mixed with the top six inches of mould, will be found an excellent dressing; but it must be well decomposed, or it will be too strong. The surface should be well leveled, the lumps well bruised, and the seeds sown thinly and equally over the bed. This should be rolled in or trodden in solid, and raked smooth and even. Where they come up close together, they should be drawn by hand, so as to leave only one in a place at a distance of 6 inches apart, and they must be kept clear of weeds all through their growth. When the foliage begins to turn yellow, the bulbs are ripe, and may be lifted and left on the surface of the ground to dry out some of their moisture; they should be preserved in a cool, dry, airy place.

Cabbages.—Of all green crops, this is the most valuable. It stands almost any frost. It is eatable from the time it is large enough to handle, until it has acquired a hard, close heart. It is a crop to put on every bit of otherwise idle ground; it can be planted between rows of anything and everything, either to be eaten as greens when large enough, or left to cabbage on the coming off of other crops. Nor is the use of this excellent vegetable over when the full grown cabbage is cut, for the sprouts which follow are equally good. Planted out to cabbage, they should be eighteen inches apart in the rows, and the rows two feet asunder. When the best part of the cabbage is cut, other plants may be planted between the rows, the ground being first dug, and the stumps may be all taken up and planted close together in some otherwise useless spot, and yield a mass of greens when scarcely anything else is to be had. The seed is but little object; sowing, therefore, to provide at all time plants to put out, is a necessary precaution.

Caterpillars.—An English agricultural paper gives the following method of destroying caterpillars, which was accidentally discovered, and is practiced by a gardener, near Glasgow. A piece of woolen rag had been blown by the wind into a currant bush, and when taken out it was found to be covered by the leaf-devouring insects. Taking the hint, he immediately placed pieces of woolen cloth in every bush in the garden, and found the next day that the caterpillars had universally taken to them for shelter. In this way he destroyed many thousands every morning.

CHEESE FACTORIES.

C. C. Wick Esq., of Wayne, Ohio, one of the most enterprising and business men, has recently erected his buildings, and put in operation his "dairy," for the manufacture of cheese. He commands the product of 1,100 cows, owned in that and adjacent townships, and employs men and teams who every morning take prescribed routes, varying from five to ten miles each, and gather the "curds," which are neatly sacked by the dairymen, and then brought to the factory, where the process of "cheese making" is completed.

This furnishes employ for a large number of men and women, and by the aid of recent improvements and machinery much of the labor requisite is rendered light, more convenient and simple than the usual mode. He had last week about 3,000 cheeses on hand, made within about thirty days, and for beauty and fine flavor they are not to be excelled. The weight of "curds," daily received, amount in the agregate to some 3,500 lbs., and the number of cheeses made daily about 75, varying somewhat as regards size. They are put up in sacks and intended for the English, West India, and California trades, and vary from 16 to 35 pounds—the former, we believe, are intended exclusively for the California market. Wayne has long held a reputation for producing cheese equal to any other township, and friend Wick intends that the product of his diary shall bear impress of being equal, if not superior, to any that have been sent from this country. In addition to this, there are many large and fine dairies among the farmers.

At Richmond, Meriman Barber, Esq., has another "Factory," and situated so as to command the dairies of that town, Dorset, Andover, and a portion of Cherry Valley. He receives the products of about the same number of cows, and makes about the same weight of cheese daily, and carried on in the same manner as Wicks's, but his cheese are uniform in size, averaging about 26 or 27 lbs. each—are put up in the best possible manner, and will command the highest rates in the home or foreign market.

By the adoption of this system, it is made advantageous to the farmers, as they contract in the spring for their "curds," which continues for the season, and are thus enabled to estimate very nearly their amount of resources, without reference to a fluctuating market. The price paid for curds the present season is 3 1-2 cents per pound, deducting therefrom the expense of teams for gathering, who receive a stipulated sum.
[Conneaut Reporter.

REMARKABLE COLLECTION OF AUTOGRAPHS.

Mr. J. K. Tefft, of Savannah, a gentleman of remarkable and persevering industry, and originally a Boston boy, favored me with a sight of his enormous collection of autographs of distinguished characters. During the last 25 years, he has obtained thirty-five thousand autographs. The more distinguished individuals have each their portraits attached. He has one volume—a large folio—containing letters from all the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and another with letters from all those who framed and signed our Constitution, accompanied with an engraving of each person. The former book would sell for $1,500, under the hammer, in London. I was much pleased with the perusal of a letter from John Adams to his intende dwife, under date of July 5th, 1776, in which he alludes to the signature of a document on the preceding day, which, with much confidence, he declares will eventually raise our nation to the rank of one of the first powers upon the earth. He closes his communication by an allusion to the continual changes of locality of the British army, and their present station on Stratan Island, and adds, "Like Noah's dove, but without its innocence, they can find no rest."

Mr. Tefft has documents signed by all the English Kings, from Henry VII, to date, with many by that monarch's predecessors, the English counsellors and statesmen for century after century. One old paper I noticed was signed by Charles II. and eighteen English noblemen. He has documents from the crowned heads, statesmen, and literati of every country in Europe, particularly in France. Shakspeare, Milton, Montesquieu, Robespierre, Mozart, Goethe, and thousands of others, have each contributed to swell his collection. An interesting letter from Kosciusko to the lady of an officer in Charleston, closed with an affectionate inquiry as to the state of her husband's health; "for," continued he, "if he is dead I wish to marry you, as I have always been one of your particular admirers; but if he is alive and well, pray give my compliments to him." The entire collection of Mr. Tefft, could probably be disposed of for $200,000. It is the largest and best in America, if not in the world.

Mr. Wm. Humphreys, Jr., of Savannah, has collected a large number of valuable shells and reptiles, of which latter he has about two hundred varieties, principally snakes. He asserts that though there may be many poisonous, yet there are but two fatal snakes in the United States—the rattle-snake, and that species of moccasin called water-rattle. From one of the former he has taken twenty-eight fangs, and he has now an enormous specimen, with eight fangs clearly visible, measuring during life sixteen inches in circumference. His shells will be exhibited at the American Fair in New York, in October next. [Cor. Boston Trav.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

The following remarks of Col. Benton occur in a letter addressed to several citizens of St. Louis, who had invited the Colonel to a public dinner intended as a tribute to his foresight and zeal in the promotion of that gigantic enterprise, the connection of the Atlantic with the Pacific by a railway route:

The sealed book of remote western geography has been laid open. From the Mississippi to the Pacific its leaves are unfolded, and its pages written upon with the pencil of light. What the adventurous hunter, following the trail of the buffalo, and vexing the home of the beaver, had unknowingly discovered, science has digested into knowledge, reduced to exactitude, and made known to the world. Before the light of science, errors and illusions have vanished. The impassable mountain has become passable—the uninhabited desert has become inhabitable—the Siberia of America has become a promised land! and the exalted facts stand revealed that, from the Father of Floods, to the Mother of Oceans, the rolling tide of American population may go on spreading its wide and lofty wave; and from San Francisco to St. Louis, in a straight line with Canton and London, the rich stream of oriental commerce, after wandering for forty centuries upon unstable and devious routes, is to find its last, its greatest, its everlasting channel.

SINGULAR AFFECTION IN A DOG.

The Licking Valley Register, published at Covington, Kentucky, gives the following instance of canine attachment to an animal not of its own species:—

There is a dog which has become so attached to a cow, that he follows her day after day, and rests with her night after night, never leaving, but constantly and bravely protecting her from all molestation. He will permit nothing to approach her in any but a friendly manner. On one occasion several dogs attacked this object of his affection, and it was really amusing to see with what resolution and boldness he defended her against the aggression of his fellows. After he had vanquished his foes, he raised himself on his posterior legs, and placing his fore legs around her neck, caressed her most fondly.

Oil of Turpentine.—A most important chemical discovery, says an English paper, has been recently made, by means of which oil of turpentine can be freed from its peculiar smell so completely that not only is it inodorous, but can be impregnated with any desired perfume, without at all deteriorating from its useful properties. The eminent chemist, Dr. Serny, who has analysed the sweet oil of turpentine, states that while all the useful properties of the oil are preserved, in fact all its deleterious qualities are completely obliterated. The Doctor also states that paint, when mixed with sweet oil of turpentine, is free from smell, and does not emit those noxious vapors which are so prejudicial to health; and that, in short, the use of sweet oil of turpentine is a certain preventative of painter's cholic, and by its use house-painting becomes a perfectly inodorous process.

The steamboat Embassy, collapsed both flues of her starboard boiler below Green River, on Saturday morning, June 9, and a number of the crew and deck passengers were killed and blown overboard by the violence of the concussion. Twenty-eight others were severely scalded, some of them, it is feared, so seriously that they will not recover.

The Copper Mines of Bristol, Conn.—The copper mines of Bristol, Conn., are exciting a good deal of interest among capitalists and scientific men at this time. Their product, and the number of men employed, has greatly increased within a brief period. Not less than three hundred are now at work in them. They are regarded by many as the most profitable mines now worked in the United States, not excepting the copper mines of Lake Superior, or the gold diggings of Georgia and North Carolina. The most distinguished scientific man in the State, Prof. Silliman, has expressed the confident opinion, that they extend from Bristol in a southerly direction toward Hampden for a distance of more than thirty miles, and if thoroughly worked would be sufficient to give profitable employment to 30,000 miners.

Longevity of the Damask Rose.—There is a rose-bush flourishing at the residence of A. Murray McIlvaine, near Bristol, Pa., known to be more than a hundred years old. In the year 1742 there was a kitchen built, which encroached on the corner of the garden, and the mason laid the corner-stone with great care, saying, "It is a pity to destroy so pretty a bush." Since then it has ever produced a profusion of roses, shedding around the most delicious of all perfumes. Some times it has climbed for years over the second story windows, and then declined by degrees to the ordinary height. The fifth generation is now regaled with its sweets. Not far from this venerable bush is a tree of the same age, now measuring thirty-five feet in circumference—a buttonwood.

Important Discovery.—A Mr. Hubbell, of Bristol, Ct., has discovered that the lightning from the clouds can be taken off from the wires, so that the telegraphic lines can work during a thunder storm, without any change in the adjustment, as is usual. His plan, as proved by experience, is to place a sharp-pointed straight magnet, with the south pole pointing at the wire, and distant the sixteenth of an inch from it—the other end to be fastened to the ground wire, and connected with the ground at each point. The magnet will discharge the electricity of the clouds, but the galvanic current will pass on without interruption. In long lines that cross high promontories, he suggests that on the top of mountains there should be placed several magnets, connected with the ground by posts and wires, to conduct off the electricity.

VARIETY.

The Edinburgh News states that the body of a member of Parliament, for an English borough, who died a short time ago, is about to be disinterred, in consequence of a well-grounded suspicion that the M. P. was a woman! The individual referred to was kown as William Henry Miller, Esq., a respectable landed proprietor, who represented Newcastle-under-Lyne in the House of Commons. This exhumation has been ordered in consequence of legal disputes among the heirs-at-law, in relation to the title to estates owned by the defunct man or woman.

A singular case of deformity in a young woman, living in Ashville, North Carolina, is reported in the Surgical Journal. She was born completely destitute both of arms and legs, the situation of which is merely indicated by small round projections, thus being, in fact, a mere human trunk, surmounted by a head. She possesses, however, a remarkable power of locomotion, and can transport herself over the floor with ease, by submitting her body to a kind of rotary motion, alternately from the right to left, and the contrary.

A practical farmer informs the Hartford Times, that in taking up a fence that had been set fourteen years, he noticed that some of the posts remained nearly sound, while others were rotted off at the bottom. On looking for the cause, he found that those posts that were set limb part down, or inverted from the way they grew, were sound. Those that were set as they grew, were rotted off. This fact is worthy the attention of farmers.

Bunyan says that some men's hearts are narrow upwards and wide downwards; narrow as for God, but wide as for the world. They gape for the one, but shut themselves up against the other. The heart of a wicked man is the widest downward. But the desires of the righteous, like the temple in Ezekiel's vision, are widest upward, and spread towards heaven.

Brackett, the sculptor, is exhibiting in Boston a composition entitled "The drowned Mother and her Babe." It is cast in plaster, but it is to be put into marble as soon as the necesary means can be obtained. It represents a mother and her child clasped together, and thrown upon the beach from a recent wreck.

From Lyon's Register, we learn that there are about 300 lawyers, 520 physicians, and 600 ministers, in New Hampshire. So it appears that there is one lawyer to every thousand, one physician to every six hundred, and one clergyman to every five hundred inhabitants.

"My dear, the fowls have nearly destroyed the garden. Did you not see them there while I was absent?" "Yes, love; but I could not bear the thought of driving them away, they seemed to take so much pleasure in scratching!"

A professional beggar-lad in Glasgow, aged ten or eleven years, exhibited himself several days in succession with a board before him imploring alms on the ground that he had been "left with a family!" Unable to read, he had bought the wrong ticket.

At Cheshire, Mass., there is an apple tree measuring thirteen feet in circumference, which has borne from ninety to one hundred and ten bushels of apples in a season.

If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life, he will soon find himself alone. A man should keep his friendships in constant repair.

The age of birds is greater than many imagine. A swan may live 200 years—goose 80—peacock 26—the thievish crow 100—but the sweet nightingale only 18.

Lord Byron said that of all his follies, he never was guilty of stopping his paper because the editor happened to displease him.

Nineveh and its Remains.

With an account of a visit to the Chaldean Christians of Kurdistan and the Yezidis, or Devil Worshipers, and an inquiry into the Manners and Arts of the ancient Assyrians.

BY AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, ESQ., D. C. L.

WITH an Introductory Letter, by Rev. Edward Robinson, D. D., author of "Biblical Researches in Palestine," &c. In 2 vols., with about 100 illustrations. $4 50.

* * Every word of the text and a FAC-SIMILE of ALL the ILLUSTRATIONS and MAPS of the English edition will be given in this.

"Taking this only as a book of travels, we have read none for a long time more interesting and instructive. In his dissertations he is full and copious without being tedious; his style is plain, vigorous, and particularly unaffected; it is the natural language of a strong mind fully master of its subject, and warmed and enlivened, without being inflated or kindled into rhapsody by the enthusiastic, without which he would never have conceived or achieved his wonderful task."—Quarterly Review

"We repeat, that there has been no such picture in any modern book of travels. Park is not braver or more adventurous, Burkhardt is not more truthful, Eothen not more gay or picturesque than the hero of the book before us."—London Examiner.

"This is, we think, the most extraordinary work of the present age, whether with reference to the wonderful discoveries it describes, its remarkable verification of our early biblical history, or of the talent, courage, and perseverance of its author. It is impossible to read his work without finding our minds absorbed in wonder at the development of that period, and of its work of art, where one of the early descendants of Noah 'built Nineveh, and the city of Rehoboth, and Calah, and Rossen, between Nineveh and Calah, the same being a great city.'—(Genesis 10th, 11th, and 12th verses.)

"We will only add, in conclusion, that in these days, when the fulfillment of the prophecy is engaging so much attention, we cannot but consider that the work of Mr. Layard will be found to afford many extraordinary proofs of biblical history, and of the extreme accuracy of the denunciations of the Prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, against the kings of Assyria, and of the destruction of Nineveh in particular. Even the colors and decorations, as found in the palace of Nimroud, agree exactly with those described by the Prophet Ezekiel. The circumference of Nineveh, as mentioned by the Prophet Isaiah, was found by Mr. Layard to be extremely accurate, and the connection of the Assyrians with the Jews was clearly ascertained. The history also of the Kings of Assyria, as shown on the various sculptures, is highly interesting, and throws great light on the manners of that ancient people."—The Times, (London,) Feb 9, 1849.

"Of the historical value of his discoveries, too high an estimate can hardly be formed."—N. Y. Recorder.

"We cannot doubt it will find its way into the hands of scholars and thinkers at once, and we shall be surprised if it does not prove to be one of the most popular, as it certainly is one of the most useful issues of the season."—Evangelist.

"As a record of discoveries, it is equally wonderful and important; confirming in many particulars the incidental histories of Sacred Writ,—disentombing temple-palaces from the sepulcher of ages, and recovering the metropolis of a wonderful nation from the long night of oblivion."—Com. Advertiser.

"It has been truly said, that the narrative is like a romance. In its incidents and descriptions it does indeed remind one continually of an Arabian tale of wonders and genii."—Dr. Robinson, in Introductory Note.

"The work of Mr. Layard has two prominent and distinct characters. Its narration of wonderful discoveries is of high and absorbing interest; but as a book of modern travels, abounding in lively and piquant descriptions of the manners and habits of a people always regarded with intense interest, it is second to none."—Democratic Review.

"We can recommend it as a valuable work."—Observer.

Orders received by all Booksellers.

G. P. PUTNAM, Publisher,
155 Broadway, New York.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Instructor in Natural Sciences.
AURELLA F. ROGERS, Preceptress.
MARY M. CLARK, Teacher of Music and Painting.

Other experienced Teachers are employed as Assistants.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First,	commencing Wed., Aug. 23,	ending	Nov. 29.
Second,	" " Dec. 13,	"	March 21.
Third,	" " April 4,	"	July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write composions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, according to studies,	$3, $4, or $5 00
Extras—Drawing,	1 00
Painting,	1 00
Tuition on Piano,	$2 00 or 4 00
Use of Piano,	8 00
Chemical Lectures, and Experiments,	2 00
Writing, including Stationery,	1 00
Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, bedstead,	1 50
Board in private families, per week,	$1 00 to 1 50

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

IRA SPENCER, M. D.,
President of the Board of Trustees.
DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., June 12, 1848.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—S. P. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST, NEW YORK.

Terms.

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to
GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 3. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JULY 5, 1849. WHOLE NO. 263.

The Sabbath Recorder.

FOREIGN MISSION.

The following communication from Bro. Wardner gives the latest intelligence from our missionaries in China.

SHANGHAI, Dec. 26th, 1848.

To the Board of the A. S. D. B. Mssionary Ass'n:—

The kind hand of Providence has protected us nearly to the close of another year. We are enabled to address you at this time under circumstances rather more flattering than when we last wrote. Mrs. W. has recovered from her illness, and as a company I think we have never been in better health and spirits since leaving America.

I received a letter a few days since from Rev. Mr. Gutzlaff, of Hong-Kong, stating that the essay on the question concerning which I had previously written him, had been mislaid and was lost, but that if it should hereafter be found, it should be immediately forwarded.

Mr. Dean left here about two weeks since, with improved health, after a stay of about three months. Mr. Goddard is spending the winter here with his family, and expects to go to Ningpo in the spring. Mr. Piercy and family arrived here on the 6th of Nov., and expect to remain.

The London Congregational, London Episcopal, and Southern Baptist Societies, have all obtained preaching places within the city walls, and the Catholics are about erecting one. The American Episcopalians have two candidates for baptism at present, as I am informed, one a member of their school, and the other a man engaged in teaching a school under their supervision. Thus it seems that the seed has not been sown in vain.

The diversity of opinion and practice among missionaries is likely to be a mighty obstacle to the progress of the gospel here. It is already becoming a subject of remark and wonder among the Chinese, that those who profess to be guided by the same rule, should differ so widely. There is one difference which is truly lamentable. The term used by the largest missionary body in Shanghai, to represent the Supreme Being, is the name of the chief god among the Chinese. A colporteur not long since having presented a tract to a Chinaman, called a few days after to see the effect it was producing, when he was informed by the Chinaman, that he had long been in the habit of worshiping "Shangtee," as his tract directed; that he daily resorted to a temple for that purpose, which had been dedicated especially to his worship. In a book published in this city, a few months ago, foreigners are represented as worshiping the same god they do. When they are told that the Scriptures hold forth that being as the chief object of worship, they must naturally conclude, that the Christian religion is essentially the same with their own, differing only in form. And when they see one party of missionaries worshiping "Shangtee," and another worshiping "Shin," both pretending the worship of their gods to be authorized by Scripture, how can we expect them to be very forward in renouncing their polytheism? Such are the weapons the god of this world is using to thwart the designs of the Almighty. We can only hope in Him who can turn the hearts of men as the rivers of water are turned—who can bring light out of darkness, and good out of evil.

The restriction put upon foreign residents, to prevent their making excursions into the country, has virtually become a dead letter. Excursions of several days' length are now frequently made. One merchant, with his wife, lately made a trip of fourteen days' length, and was kindly treated by the natives. In all probability the barriers that now confine missionaries to this port, will ere long give way. The "taou-tai" has already given bonds of protection to a Catholic establishment situated about four miles in the country, which is an indication of what Protestants may hope for. Could such liberties be allowed, an extensive field would be thrown open for missionary labor in these parts. There are reported to be ten large and respectable cities within one hundred and fifty miles of this, all accessible by water communication. May God hasten the time, and raise up laborers for the work, that they may become so many points from which the pure light of the gospel shall emanate.

The unhealthiness of the season has not yet passed away, and deaths are frequent. Among the recent deaths is that of the wife of Mr. Walter Medhurst, son of the Rev. Dr. Medhurst, who is Vice-Consul at Amoy, and came here on a visit, partly for the improvement of her health. She died on the 16th ult., leaving an infant about two weeks old. Some have been obliged to leave the place, as their only hope of recovery, and others are still sick, among whom is Mrs. Yates, of the Southern Baptist Mission. Mr. Shuck has been an invalid for some time. The most alarming disease prevailing among the Chinese at this time, that I am aware of, is opium inebriation. This vice seems to be making rapid strides. We seldom walk the streets without beholding the haggard countenances of some of its votaries. Occasionally we meet with an unfortunate wretch by the way side, who, having squandered his last mite, and being bereft of friends and sympathy, has lain himself down to die, a victim to his uncontrollable appetite. Though the practice is so common among them, but little sympathy is manifested towards those who have become ruined by it. Two millions of dollars in silver annually goes out of this port for that drug. By this means the country is rapidly becoming drained of that currency, which has increased the value of dollars more than two hundred cash within the last three years. And this sum is only refunded by the seeds of death and moral pollution; and that, too, by those who have been reared amid the effulgence of gospel light.

There are several charitable institutions in this city, as follows: An Asylum for Old Men who are friendless; a Foundling Hospital for Orphans; a Clothing Establishment, for supplying the destitute during the cold season, enjoining a return of the articles at the approach of warm weather—(beggars are not included in this provision, as they consider them too dishonest to be trusted.) They have also medical establishments, for the benefit of the poor. These are all sustained by voluntary contributions among the inhabitants of the city.

In one of my morning walks, about a month since, my attention was called to a house near the road, by a peculiar kind of singing, when I saw a Taouist priest, clad in a red and highly ornamented robe, following a man through the house who carried a lighted torch in his hand. They passed to one end, where the priest remained several minutes. In the mean time, I observed a quantity of ghost money burning before the door. Presently one of the inmates came out, holding a cock in one hand, and a piece of paper in the other, which he lighted and held up before him. While this was burning, the priest appeared, having a small box in his right hand, which they call "ling-pa," and a cup of some fluid in the other. He continued singing, with occasionally a loud shout, and at the same time making circles of the cock with his box. When the paper was consumed, he took some of the fluid in his mouth, and blowing it over him, retired. I related the circumstance to my teacher, who gave me the following explanation:—The practice originated several hundred years ago, at which time a dreadful pestilence prevailed, by which men died in a very strange and sudden manner. Many, retiring well in the evening, were found dead in the morning. Not being able to attribute it to any other cause, they concluded it must be the influence of evil spirits. By diligent watching, they finally discovered one approach in the form of a cock. This was a sufficient explanation of the mystery, and the priesthood immediately devised the above method for frightening it away. In these ceremonies, the sudden and piercing shouts of the priest, in his song, with occasional blows upon the floor, tables, or walls of the house, with his box, they imagine to be unendurable by the evil spirit. This ceremony is performed whenever a death occurs in a family, lest other members should soon follow. He says it is generally believed and practiced in Shanghai and vicinity, but not by the Chinese generally. I had the curiosity, or rather the impudence, to ask if he believed it. He blushed, and hesitated a while, and finally evaded the question by saying, that he supposed it was necessary to keep up the practice in order to furnish the priests with the means of gaining a livelihood. There are several diseases which they attribute to the influence of evil spirits, such as insanity, fever and ague, and such like.

The following is a list of some of the established feasts of the Chinese:—

1. "Ching-ming," feast of the tombs, held in the 2d of 3d month.

2. "Tau-ng," feast of the dragon boat, held on the 5th of their 5th month.

3. "Hau-tsz," held on the day the sun reaches the summer solstice.

4. "Chi-ngn-pa," on the 15th of the 7th month, connected with a grand procession, in which the chief gods of the city are paraded through the streets in sedans.

5. "Chong-cheu," held on the 15th of their 8th month.

6. "Chong-yang," held on the 9th of their 8th month, at which time they seek the highest spot of ground available, and eat a particular sort of cake, by which means they expect to avoid misfortunes.

7. "Leh-ugu-chau," 1st of the 10th month, a feast of the tombs.

8. "Tong-tsz," held at the time the sun arrives at the winter solstice.

There is another held on the 7th of the 7th month, called "ce-ce," which originated from the notion that two stars appear at that time, one influencing the growth of rice, and the other that of cotton. On this occasion, each family is expected to distribute among the neighbors a quantity of fried cakes, of various sizes, shapes, and composition, which they imagine have the effect to improve their ingenuity and skill, if eaten on that day. It also tends to strengthen the eyesight of females, so that one accustomed to eating them could see to thread the finest needle with a hair, or work the nicest embroidery by moonlight. It also makes their nails grow rapidly, and of a beautiful color, which they much admire. This feast is said to have existed ever since the days of Confucius.

The birth and future eminence of this celebrated man, whom they claim to be to the Chinese what Jesus Christ is to foreigners, my teacher says, was predicted by the appearance of a certain animal called "che-leng-tsz," which entered his father's house a short time before. This animal is said to be twelve feet high, with an antelope's body, cow's tail, wolf's forehead, horse's feet, and of a variegated color. It is said to be the chief and most benevolent of all animals; having horns tipped with flesh, showing that though it has power it is unwilling to use it. It eats nothing, and will not so much as tread on grass for fear of injuring it. It lives on the mountains, and is never seen except when sent by the god to predict some great event. Representations of it are frequently painted on walls built for that purpose in front of temples and dwellings of distinguished individuals, as an ensign of benevolence.

The Chinese have many customs which seem to accord with the ancient oriental nations, as described in history and scripture, of which the following are a few:—1. The Emperor is never seen but by a privileged few. 2. He is always approached with presents, otherwise he cannot be seen. 3. Those who approach into his presence are obliged to make humble prostrations, at the peril of their lives. 4. All visitors are expected to greet him with the salutation "live forever." 5. On leaving his palace, he is always attended by a retinue of nobles or guards. 6. His approach to any place is always announced by a blast from the trumpet. 7. He keeps a large harem. 8. Heavy taxes are imposed on all subjugated nations. 9. Each company of relatives forms a clan or tribe by itself. 10. Their days and nights are divided off into periods of two hours each. 11. They countenance soothsayers or diviners. Besides a multitude of other customs which are to be seen in their every-day life, all of which go to show their attachment to old customs. Who can say but that they have descended from the scattered remnants of God's covenant people? At least, may we not hope that in His great mercy He may gather from among them a people to His praise?

Bro. Carpenter and myself commenced daily worship in the Chinese language in November. A portion of Scripture is read and explained on each occasion, and our men manifest some interest. We have our chapel nearly ready, and intend to commence public worship on the first Sabbath of the new year. We were hoping that in our new year's report, we might cheer you with the news that we had commenced. But as a ship is reported to leave to-day for New York, which is probably the last chance we shall have of the kind this winter, we thought best to improve it.

WILL IS A RICH OLD FELLOW.

Some years ago, as we were traveling in the interior of Massachusetts, we came to a village in which were two substantial meeting houses. A short time previous, there was but one meeting house, and that one out of repair, and no minister; the people regarding themselves as too poor to support one, or to repair their house of worship. But now the old meeting house had been thoroughly repaired, a new and neat edifice erected, two pastors were settled, and both of them were adequately supported. When we inquired the reason, a resident of the place remarked: "While the Unitarians and Orthodox formed one congregation, they felt too poor to repair a church or support a minister; but since they have separated, they find that they can either of them do easily what both could not do together; for WILL, you know, is a rich old fellow!" We have been reminded of this anecdote, in reading the following statement, submitted to the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, at their recent session, showing the progress of collections for benevolent purposes, before and since their separation from the Established Church.

THE WHOLE CHURCH—Before the disruption.

1834,	2 Schemes,	£3,551	1839,	5 Schemes,	£14,353
1835,	5 Schemes,	4,128	1840,	" "	16,156
1836,	" "	7,941	1841,	" "	17,588
1837,	" "	10,070	1842,	" "	20,191
1838,	" "	13,800
Total for nine years before disruption					£108,778

THE FREE CHURCH ALONE—Since the disruption.

1843-4,	5 schemes,	£23,374	1846-7,	5 schemes,	£43,327
1844-5,	" "	35,526	1847-8,	" "	47,563
1845-6,	" "	43,310	1848-9,	" "	49-314
Total for six years since disruption					£242,819

If the collections of the Free Church continue to advance at this rate, for three years more, that Branch of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland will be raising annually about four times as much as the whole church raised annually for the same objects before the disruption! [N. Y. Observer.

HEARTS AND HOMES.

Hearts and homes, sweet words of pleasure,
Music breathing as they fall,
Making each the other's treasure,
Once divided, losing all;
Homes, ye may be high or lowly,
Hearts alone can make you holy;
Be the dwelling e'er so small,
Having love, it boasteth all.
Hearts and homes, sweet words of pleasure,
Music breathing as ye fall,
Making each the other's treasure,
Once divided, losing all.
Hearts and homes, hearts and homes.

Hearts and homes, sweet words revealing,
All most good and fair to see;
Fitting shrines for purest feeling,
Temples meet to bend the knee;
Infant hands bright garlands wreathing,
Happy voices incense breathing,
Emblems fair of realms above,
For 'love is heaven, and heaven is love.'
Hearts and homes, sweet words of pleasure,
Music breathing as ye fall,
Making each the other's treasure,
Once divided, losing all.
Hearts and homes, hearts and homes.

From the New York Daily Tribune.

NARRATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES EXPEDITION TO THE RIVER JORDAN AND THE DEAD SEA. By W. F. LYNCH, U. S. N., Commander of the Expedition. Philadelphia: Lea & Blanchard. (New York: Sold by A. S. Barnes & Co., 51 John-st.)

In this volume, Lieut. Lynch presents a graphic and lively description of his adventures, as chief of the expedition appointed by the United States Government to explore the Dead Sea, and trace the River Jordan to its source. This was a commission involving great difficulties and danger; perhaps more than were warranted by its anticipated results for the benefit of science; and hitherto the curiosity and zeal which have prompted a few bold spirits to similar researches have been exercised at a sacrifice out of proportion to their value. Lieut. Lynch engaged in the enterprise with a distinct perception of its perils and cost; but, inspired by a genuine enthusiasm for its objects, he devoted himself to its accomplishment with an energy and perseverance that have overcome every obstacle, and enabled him to attain a degree of success of which no previous traveler in the same regions can boast.

He sailed from New York in November, 1847, arrived at Constantinople in the ensuing February, and after obtaining the protection of the Sultan for his journey through the Turkish dominions in Syria, came to the Sea of Galilee in April. The passage down the Jordan was attended with the greatest peril, and a less determined spirit would have shrunk back in dismay. The progress of the light metalic boats, which had been constructed expressly for the expedition, was frequently retarded by rapids, cataracts and whirpools in the river; at the most dangerous falls, the channel had to be opened by removing large stones; and it was only by dint of incredible [illegible] the whole party, that the difficult voyage was at last accomplished.

"Our course down the stream was with varid rapidity. At times we were going at the rate of from three to four knots an hour, and again we would be swept and hurried away, dashing and whirling onward with the furious speed of a torrent. At such moments there was excitement, for we knew not but that the next turn of the stream would plunge us down some fearful cataract, or dash us on the sharp rocks that might lurk beneath the surface. For the reasons I have before stated, the Fanny Mason always took the lead, and warned the Fanny Skinner when danger was to be shunned or encountered. When the sound of a rapid was distinct and near, the compass and the note-book were abandoned, and motioning to the Fanny Skinner to check her speed, our oars began to move like the antennae of some giant insect, to sweep us into the swiftest which is ever the deepest part of the current; when it caught us, the boat's crew and our Arab friend Jumach leaped into the angry stream, accoutred as they were, and clinging to her sides, assisted in guiding the graceful Fanny down the perilous descent. In this manner she was whirled on, driving between rocks and shallows with a force that made her bend and quiver like a rush in a running stream; then shooting her through the foam and the turmoil of the bason below, where in the seething and effervescing water, she spun and twirled, the men leaped in, and with oars and rudder, she was brought to an eddying cove, whence, by word and gesture, she directed her sister Fanny through the channel."

The great depression between the Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea, is caused by the singularly tortuous course of the River Jordan. In a space of 60 miles of latitude, and 4 or 5 of longitude, it traverses the distance of at least 200 miles. Not less than 27 dangerous rapids were encountered by Lieut. Lynch and his party, besides a great number of less consequence. The sinuous course of the Jordan is not exceeded even by that of the Mississippi.

On approaching the Dead Sea, they perceived nauseous smells, which proceeded from small streams on each side of the Jordan; birds were seen on the wing—pigeons, a heron, bulbut, snipe, and many wild ducks; the river was 70 yards wide; the left bank very low, covered with tamarisk, willow and cane; the right bank 15 to 18 feet high, red clay, with weeds and shrubs, the mal a insana, spina Christi, and some of the agnus castus, a few tamarisk at the water's edge. When it enters the sea, the Jordan is 180 yards wide, and three feet deep, and inclined toward the eastern shore. It is represented with great exactness on the map of Messrs. Robinson & Smith, which, according to Lieut. Lynch, is superior to any others.

The party found great difficulty in making the entrance. A fresh north-west wind was blowing as they rounded the extreme western point; they endeavored to make a true west course; but the wind rose so rapidly that the boats could not keep head to the wind. The sea rose with the breeze, which increased to a gale, and presented a rough surface of foaming brine; the spray evaporated as it fell, and incrusted the clothes, hands and faces with salt, producing a prickly sensation wherever it touched the skin, and causing a severe pain to the eyes. The boats struggled sluggishly at first, but as the wind grew fiercer, it seemed, says Lieut. Lynch, "as if their bows were encountering the sledge-hammers of the Titans, instead of the opposing waves of an angry sea."

"At length, finding that we were losing every moment, and that with the lapse of each succeeding one, the danger increased, we kept away for the northern shore, in the hope of being able yet to reach it; our arms, our clothes and skins coated with greasy salt; and our eyes, lips and nostrils smarting excessively. How different was the scene before the submerging of the plain, which was 'even as the garden of the Lord.' At times, it seemed as if the Dread Almighty frowned upon our efforts to navigate a sea, [illegible] There is a tradition among the Arabs [illegible] ture upon this sea and live. Repeatedly the fates of Costigan and Molyneaux had been cited to deter us. The first one spent a few days, the last about twenty hours, and returned to the place whence he had embarked, without landing upon the shore. One was found dying upon the shore; the other expired in November last, immediately after his return, of fever contracted upon its waters. But although the sea had assumed a threatening aspect, and the fretted mountains, sharp and incinerated, loomed terrific on either side, and salt and ashes mingled with its sands, and fetid, sulphurous streams, trickled down its ravines, we did not dispair; awe-struck, but not terrified—fearing the worst, yet hoping for the best—we prepared to spend a dreary night upon the dreariest waste we had ever seen."

In less than half an hour, however, the wind abated instantaneously; the sea fell as rapidly as it had risen; and instead of bearing away from a sea which threatened to engulf them, the party were gliding at a rapid rate over a placid sheet of water, that scarcely rippled beneath them; and a rain cloud, which had enveloped the sterile mountains of the Arabian shore, lifted up and left their ragged outlines basking in the light of the setting sun.

The next day they made an excursion along the base of the mountain, where they gathered specimens of conglomerate and some fresh-water shells in the bed of the stream. The shore was covered with small angular fragments of flint, but there were no round stones or pebbles on it. Two patridges of a beautiful stone color were started up, so much like the rocks that they could only be distinguished when in motion. They heard the notes of a solitary bird in a cane-brake, which they could not identify. This [illegible] can live on the shores of the Dead Sea. For though, as Lieut. Lynch observes, "the home and the usual haunt of the patridge may be among the cliffs above, the smaller bird they heard must have his nest in the thicket."

The scene was one of unmingled desolation. The air, tainted with the vapors of the stream, gave a tawny hue even to the foliage of the cane, which is elsewhere of so light a green. Except the cane-brakes, there was no vegetation; barren mountains, fragments of rocks, blackened by sulphur, and an unnatural sea, with low, dead trees on its margin, bore a sad and somber aspect.

As they approached the southern extremity of the sea, they came in sight of the salt mountain of Usdum; the beach was bordered with innumerable dead locusts; there was also bitumen in occasional lumps, and incrustations of salt and lime. The bitumen presented a bright smooth surface when fractured, and looked like a consolidated fluid. Near a ravine, on an eminence, they discovered the ruins of a building, with square cut stones—the foundation walls alone remaining, and a line of low walls running down to the ravine; near it was a rude canal. Here Costigan thought that he had found the ruins of Gomorrah. Sounding cautiously along the coast, they passed the extreme point of Usdum, which is a broad, flat, marshy delta, coated with salt and bitumen, and soon after discovered on its eastern side a lofty, round pillar, apparently detached from the general mass, at the head of a deep, narrow and abrupt chasm. Proceeding to the shore to examine this new phenomenon, they found the beach a soft, slimy mud, encrusted with salt, and at a short distance from the water, covered with saline fragments and bleaks of bitumen. The pillar was of solid salt, capped with carbonate of lime, cylindrical in front and pyramidal behind. The upper part was about 40 feet high, resting on an oval pedestal from 40 to 60 feet above the level of the sea. A similar pillar is mentioned by Josephus, by Clement of Rome, and Irenaeus, who does not hesitate to express the belief of its being the identical one into which Lot's wife was transformed. Lieut. Lynch, with a more modest reserve, contents himself with describing what he saw, but offers no opinion on the subject.

* * * *

The party spent twenty-two days on the Dead Sea, during which time they had carefully sounded it through its whole extent, determined its geographical position, taken the exact typography of its shores, ascertained the temperature, width, depth and velocity of its tributaries, collected specimens of every kind, and noted the winds, currents, changes of the weather, and all atmospheric phenomena.

After an extensive tour in Palestine and Syria, which is described in a forcible and interesting manner, the Expedition returned to this country in December last, a little more than a year from the time of its departure.

Corals, agates and chrystals are found on a stormy shore; thus the soul finds God's most precious gifts in the rugged path of sorrow.

DEVOTING A FIXED PORTION OF INCOME TO CHARITABLE PURPOSES.

In reading the biography of the most eminently pious and useful in different ages, we have often been struck with the fact, that almost all of them devoted a regular portion of their income to pious and charitable uses. We will mention a few whose names are familiar, whose writings are venerated, and whose memory is precious. Among those who made a tenth the fixed proportion of their almsgiving, was Lord Chief Justice Hale, the Rev. Dr. Hammond, and the Rev. Dr. Annesley. Baxter informs us, that he long adhered to this, until, for himself, he found it too little, and observes, "I think, however, that it is as likely a proportion as can be prescribed; and that devoting a tenth part ordinarily to God is a matter that we have more than human direction for." Doddridge was another instance of this kind, "I make a solemn dedication of one-tenth of my estate, salary, and income, to charitable uses; and I also devote to such uses an gift or present [illegible] by way of proportion of Archbishop Tillotson and Dr. Watts. A fourth part was the proportion constantly given by Mrs. Bury, the wife of the eminently pious and useful Rev. Mr. Bury. Her husband, in his account of her life, says: "She thought it was reasonable that such as had no children should appropriate a fourth part of their net profits to charitable purposes." Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe gave even more than this. "I consecrate," says that excellent female, "half of my yearly income to charitable uses; yea, all that I have beyond the bare conveniences and necessities of life shall surely be the Lord's." Such too was the constant practice of the Hon. Robert Boyle, of the Rev. Mr. Brand, and of the Rev. Thomas Gouge. Of the latter, Archbishop Tillotson says, in his funeral sermon, "All things considered, there have not been, since the primitive times of Christianity, many among the sons of men, to whom that glorious character of the Son of God might be better applied, that 'he went about doing good.'"

The last might be extended to those who have lived since, to many of our own age, and in our country, but these examples are sufficient. If Christians generally were to act thus, to fix some due proportion, and keep a separate fund for charitable puposes, with how much more wisdom, prudence, and cheerfulness, would they perform this Christian duty. How often would they lift up their hearts to God, in devout thanksgiving for affording them opportunities of enjoying this privilege, and of showing to themselves and others, that "it is more blessed to give than to receive!" [London Watchman.

"I DON'T THINK THE WHOLE WORLD WORTH

These were the words of a profane little boy about ten years of age, when suffering severely from sea-sickness, and, as he thought, very near death. As his berth was very near mine, I could hear him piteously moaning and sobbing, "Oh, I shall die; I wish I could see my mother once more;" when he fell back exhausted on his pillow. After lying still a little while, I heard him say, "I would n't swear for a dollar." After another fit of vomiting, at which he was evidently very much alarmed, he exclaimed, "I would n't swear for two dollars; no, nor for five dollars, either," when he again fell back in his berth tired out. A third time, when forced to rouse as his nausea increased, he exclaimed, "I don't think the whole world worth swearing for." After this he fell asleep, and did not awake until the sea was calm.

This little boy was the son of a profane and intemperate man, who taught him to swear as soon as he could speak. But he had a good mother, who had taught him the third commandment. This was the sin into which he had most frequently fallen, and this was the sin which troubled him, when he thought he was going before the God "who will not hold him guiltless who taketh his name in vain." [Am. Messenger.

THE GIRLS' PRAYER MEETING.

This year (1800), Wesleyan Methodism was introduced into Arnold. Two young females, concerned about their souls, conversed with each other upon the subject, and prayed earnestly for pardon. Their serious deportment soon caused the name Methodist to be applied to them. They are no Methodists, said one in their presence, for Methodists can pray before other people. "And so can we," said one of the girls; for their hearts then burned with desire for the glory of God and the salvation of souls. Until that hour they had not made the attempt, but at once they knelt down and prayed with such simplicity and earnestness before the few individuals present, that a house was opened for a regular prayer-meeting. Numbers attended the girls' prayer meeting, which came to the ears of the devoted William Bramwell, who expressed a determination to go over and see what they were doing. He went, "saw the grace of God, and was glad." He at once procured a house for preaching, obtained a license for the purpose, placing Arnold upon the circuit plan, and William Dewey appointed leader of the little class, who regularly went over on Sunday afternoon to meet the members. One of the two girls still survives, a "mother in Israel," an example of Christian simplicity in humble life, residing at Arnold, and rejoicing in what God has wrought in that populous village.

"The devil," said Latimer, "has more work done for him in one holiday than in many workingdays." They that are [illegible] are in the way to do worse than nothing. He that spends his life in idleness [illegible] is like one who wears [illegible] and eats nothing but spices.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 5, 1849.

A WORD TO MINISTERS.

Much has been said—and some of it very well said—in regard to the duty of churches to support the ministry. It is as certainly a divine ordinance, "that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel," as it was, under the law, "that they who ministered in holy things should live of the things of the temple, and that the priests who waited at the altar should share in the sacrifices of the altar." 1 Cor. 9: 13, 14. We have no misgivings at all on this subject; and we wonder that any one else should have. Indeed, we more than half suspect, that the conscientious scruples which some profess about it, originate in a worldly, covetous spirit. It is the duty of the pastor to give himself wholly to the ministry. 1 Tim. 4: 15; Acts 6: 4. But how a Christian can receive this as a doctrine of Scripture, and yet doubt whether it is his duty to contribute, according to his ability, for the maintenance of his pastor, is more than we can comprehend. We advise such Christians (?) to take heed how they wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. [illegible], however, is to say a word to ministers themselves. We believe that one great reason why churches do not come up more readily to their duty, is that ministers do not manifest a disposition to commit themselves to the work. There is no class of Christians, to whom the divine promise—"Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you"—is more applicable, than to those who have professedly consecrated themselves to the work of preaching the gospel. We suspect that ministers themselves do not put implicit confidence in this promise. The course which many of them pursue, betrays a lurking suspicion that God will not be true to fulfill it. They profess to think that the Lord has called them to make the work of the ministry their entire work. Yet, afraid to trust him to this extent, they combine with their ministerial duties some secular pursuit, so that, if the Lord should happen to prove false to his promise, they shall have something else to fall back upon! Is not this the language of their practice?

Let it be understood, that we are not now speaking of those cases where ministers, for the sake of helping feeble churches, or for the sake of raising up a new interest in some distant field, betake themselves to secular business in connection with their ministry. The conduct of such ministers is not only lawful, but highly commendable. Paul himself did so, and showed "that so laboring [illegible] ought to support the weak." Acts 20: 34, 35. And we say, distinctly, that those ministers of our own denomination, or of any other, who have thus labored for the advancement of God's cause, deserve to be had in everlasting honor. But we allude to ministers of another spirit, from whom, we fear, our denomination is not free. Perhaps one of them receives, and accepts, an invitation to become the pastor of one of our churches. Perhaps the providential circumstances connected with his settlement, are such as to produce the strong conviction in his mind, that that is the particular field, above all others, where God has work for him to do. The church, considering its numbers, wealth, and prospects, is able to afford him a comfortable living. No matter whether the church itself thinks so, or not; their own selfishness may make them feel very poor, but other disinterested persons know very well that nothing is wanting but the disposition. But the minister, instead of throwing himself wholly into the work, "seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," in the full persuasion that He, who has called him to it, will take care that his temporal wants are supplied, hesitates—shows a want of faith—betrays his lurking suspicion that God will not be able to supply his temporal wants, unless he should himself lend a helping hand by running into some business to which God has not called him. What is the necessary effect of this course upon the church he has undertaken to serve? Can it do otherwise than strengthen them in that worldliness, which it was his business to reprove and destroy? With such an example before them, can it be expected that they will ever become liberal enough to support the ministry? He shows his fear that, if he commit himself wholly to the work to which he is called, he shall not have enough for his wants; and they show their fear that, if they give liberally for the support of the gospel—the work to which they are called—they shall not have enough for their wants. They mutually strengthen one another in their worldly mindedness, and in their distrust of God's power to fulfill his promises.

But perhaps, when the minister settles with a church, the people do not at once come up to the mark, and promise him a salary which will be amply sufficient. Therefore he is discouraged, and fancies that he is compelled to resort to a secular pursuit to make up the deficiency. We admit this is discouraging, and a church is awfully wicked, and guilty, that throws such a discouragement in the way. But, on the other hand, it ought to be carefully considered, to what this backwardness of the church may be owing. It may be owing to their long having been left without pastoral care; in consequence of which the world has obtained a lamentable hold upon their affections. Or, it may be owing to erroneous views having been formerly taught them. Or, it may be owing to some other cause. But no matter what may be the origin of it. It is reasonable to suppose that sound instruction from the pulpit, and faithful pastoral culture, will effect wonders in removing the evil. And the minister's duty is to set about giving this instruction, and bestowing this culture, in the firm persuasion that his labor will not be in vain. Christ's promise to be "with his ministers alway, even to the end of the world," is a promise to sustain them in the performance of this duty. And we question whether this duty has ever been faithfully and perseveringly discharged, without the church being brought to see it their duty, and feel it their privilege, to contribute their "carnal things" to those who were engaged in "sowing to them spiritual things." 1 Cor. 9: 11. If the husbandman plant the vineyard, dress it, and keep it with care, he will receive of the fruit of it. If the shepherd look well to the flock, he will partake of the milk of the flock. It is possible, there may be some churches so obstinately worldly, that they would not be reclaimed. Such instances are extremely rare.

We very much fear that those ministers who incline to mingle worldly business with their calling, are secretly averse to giving themselves wholly to the ministry. To give one's self wholly to the work implies, not merely having no other business on hand to take up his time, but a life of anxiety and prayer. It supposes him to spend a great deal of time in his closet, cultivating communion with God, and wrestling in deep agony of soul for the salvation of those committed to his charge. It supposes him to be very diligent in the study of the Scriptures, that he may continually be able to bring forth "things new and old" for the edification of his hearers. It supposes him to be vigilant in guarding the behavior of those to whom he ministers; to go from house to house declaring the counsel of God; to exhort, and comfort, and charge every one, as a father doth his children, (1 Thess. 2: 11;) to visit, and counsel the sick, and the dying; in short, to yield himself up constantly to the inworking of God's power, and to strive mightily according thereto to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. Col. 1: 28, 29. But a life like this is so perfectly contrary to the natural disposition, such a constant warfare against the desires of the flesh and of the mind, that not one in a hundred of those who enter upon the pastor's calling, is willing to lead it. They prefer an easier life; one that does not involve such constant anxiety and sorrow. They like well enough "to go forth bearing precious seed," but they do not like to do it "weeping." The joy of reaping would delight their heart, but they are not willing to "sow in tears." Ps. 126: 5, 6. What wonder is it, then, if their churches are blighted with the spirit of this world? What wonder is it, if they find the people too covetous to sustain the ministry? It would be a marvel if it were otherwise.

As we have been penning these remarks, we have cast our eyes over our own beloved denomination; and we find that we cannot fix our mind upon a dozen ministers, who are so far committed to the work as to pursue no other business in connection with it; and whether these are given wholly to the work, in a higher and holier sense, is at least questionable. The greater proportion of our ministers are pursuing secular business, some of them, we fear, with much more eagerness than they are the salvation of souls. A few of them are engaged in business upon lawful grounds; that is, for the sake of helping feeble churches. Such we hold in honor, and bid them God speed. But the rest, we fear, continue the pursuit of secular business, because of a secret unwillingness to give themselves heartily and wholly to the work, to which God has called them. O God, breathe the spirit of life into our ministry!

THE WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

For the following sketch of the proceedings of the Seventh-day Baptist Western Association, we are indebted to the attention of Eld. Nathan V. Hull.

The Association convened, agreeable to notice, with the First Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred. The delegation was full, and the congregation respectably large. After a sermon from Bro. James Bailey, the Association organized by choosing N. V. HULL, Moderator, and ERASTUS A. GREEN and DAVID R. STILLMAN, Clerks. The business of the Association was conducted with harmony and dispatch. The meeting on Sabbath day was held in the grove, there being present a very large congregation. As my limits will not allow me to give a detailed account of the meeting, I will transcribe the Corresponding Letter for publication in the Recorder, and for a full account refer you to our Minutes, a copy of which I will transmit as soon as they are issued from the press.

The Seventh-day Baptist Western Association, convened in Alfred, N. Y., June 22d, 1849, to sister Associations:—

Notwithstanding we have given our attention to a number of items of important business beyond the ordinary routine, the present session has been characterized by great harmony. A Committee previously appointed presented an elaborate report, urging the importance of education to young men proposing to enter the gospel ministry, accompanied by a series of resolutions, recommending a course of study, all of which was adopted, and ordered published in the Sabbath Recorder.

Among the resolutions discussed and adopted, was one against the practice of Novel Reading, one in favor of Sabbath Schools, and one on the subject of a Mission to Hayti.

We were happy to receive brethren Eli S. Bailey and Varnum Hull, as delegates from the Central Association, and the Corresponding Letter of the Eastern Association. We appointed a committee of five to confer with committees appointed by the other Associations, relative to the establishment of a Collegiate and Theological Institution.

It seems to us, that the providence of God is opening fields on every side, inviting us to active operation; and we feel determined to coöperate with our brethren in taking and holding a useful post in the vineyard of the Lord. Our prayer is, that our whole strength, as a denomination, may not only be exerted, but concentrated upon the work that lies before us.

T. E. BABCOCK, Cor. Sec.

"A MODEL MAYOR."

An article with this heading is going the rounds of the papers, the substance of which is, that the Rev. Dr. Cheever, of New York, in a recent lecture on the Sunday Liquor Traffick, and the duties of Magistrates rela- [illegible] Ezra, led the Jews back to Jerusalem from the captivity of Babylon, was the last Mayor that Jerusalem ever had, and a model for Mayors of all other cities; for he ordered all the grog-shops to be closed on the Sabbath, and all who hung about their gates (doors) to be indicted."

No doubt Nehemiah deserves all the praise which Dr. Cheever bestows upon him; for it is evident, from the whole narrative of his proceedings, that he was actuated by a fervent and enlightened zeal for God, and that his efforts were designed to promote the better observance of the Sabbath which God had enjoined, at the time and in the manner prescribed by God. But suppose that Nehemiah had undertaken to compel the people to observe a different Sabbath from that which God had appointed—a Sabbath in commemoration of a different event, and upon a different day; would his efforts in such a cause, however zealous, have entitled him to be held up as a model for magistrates in all subsequent ages? We think not; indeed, we are inclined to believe, that in this case he would have been treated by God, and would have deserved to be regarded by men, very much as Jeroboam was, when he ordained a feast unto the children of Israel, different from that which God had ordained, "even in the month which he had devised in his own heart."

The position of the Mayor of New York,—and, we may add, of the clergy who are urging him on—seems to us very like that which Jeroboam occupied, and which Nehemiah would have occupied in the case supposed. The Lord says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath, in it thou shalt not do any work;" and He gives as a reason, "because that on it he had rested from all his work which he created and made." But the magistrates and the clergy say, "The first day is the Sabbath, in it thou shalt not do any work;" and they give as a reason, "because that on it Christ rose from the dead." Here, then, both the day of the Sabbath, and the reason for its observance, are changed. Pray what is left of the institution? Again, God says, "From evening to evening shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths;" and Nehemiah—the "Model Mayor"—was very particular on that point, for he required the gates of Jerusalem to be closed as soon as it "began to be dark before the Sabbath." But the magistrates and the clergy say, "From midnight to midnight, or from daylight to to daylight, shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths," thus changing the time to begin and end the Sabbath, and leaving the whole matter to be determined by the convenience of individuals. Now by what authority are these changes made in the day of the Sabbath, the reason for its observance, and the time of beginning and ending it. Not by God's authority, surely, for even those who countenance the changes acknowledge that they are not commanded in the Word of God. Whence, then, do they come? From the same source that the feast ordained by Jeroboam came—from the devices of hearts not satisfied with God's appointments.

What would the magistrates and clergy of New York say, if (Roman Catholic) Bishop Hughes should preach a sermon setting forth that the civil authorities ought to put a stop to trading on Good-Friday or Christmas day, and should conclude his remarks by holding up to the view of his hearers the example of Nehemiah, and representing him as a model for our Mayor to copy? They would say, undoubtedly, that the example of Nehemiah had nothing to do with the case—that Nehemiah was enforcing the observance of a Heaven-appointed institution, whereas the institutions which the Bishop would have enforced are of human origin. And their answer would be a correct and consistent one. But the Bishop might turn upon them, and show conclusively, that there is as much Scripture authority, and as early traditional authority, for the observance of Christmas-day in commemoration of our Lord's birth, or of Good-Friday in commemoration of his death, as of the first day of the week in commemoration of his resurrection.

Most happy should we be to see such a Mayor as Nehemiah exercising authority in New York. We think he would not content himself with endeavoring to suppress the liquor traffick on one day of the week, and thus indirectly sanctioning it on the other six days. We should expect him to teach people that what is wrong and injurious on one day, is wrong and injurious on all days, and ought to be abandoned entirely. We should also expect, that if he did undertake to enforce the observance of one particular day out of the seven, it would be the day of God's appointment, on which He rested after completing his creative work—not a day of man's appointing, on which God began his work.

"AN IMPIOUS THING, AND A LIE."

In the History of American Missions, page 117, may be found the following extract from Mr. King's Journal, giving his discussion with the Maronites on Mount Lebanon:—

August 10.—Spent the day in reading the Holy Scriptures, and in meditation. Also read in the Psalms in Arabic, as divided into lessons for each day in the week, and intermixed with prayers to God and Christ and the virgin Mary, and followed by the canons of the Church, and what are called the ten commandments given by God to Moses. These ten commandments are prefaced nearly in the following manner: "The ten commandments, according as God wrote them upon two tables of stone, and handed [illegible] expect, of course, to find them as given to Moses; but the second commandment is entirely left out, and the tenth is divided into two, so as to make out the number ten. The fourth also says, Observe the first day, and the feast days.

Soon after I had read this, the Superior of the convent came in, and I remarked to him what I had read, and observed, that these were not the ten commandments delivered to Moses—that there was another. He seemed angry, and tried to make me believe that I was under a mistake. I told him it was in vain for him to do this, for I had read the ten commandments in Hebrew; and every body knew that there was another commandment, which is, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, in the earth beneath," &c. I really felt so indignant, that any man should dare take away one of the commands of God, that I told the priest plainly, that it was an impious thing, and a lie, to say, these are the ten commandments of God, written on two tables of stone, while the second was entirely left out, the fourth changed, and the tenth divided. My instructor replied, "If these are the commands of the Church, they are the commands of God." This I denied; and told him how one Pope had said one thing, and the succeeding Pope another, in direct contradiction to it, and asked him if he thought both were from God? "No," said I, "God never acts in this manner. It is man—erring man."

Reflections.

Several things are presented in the foregoing extract from Mr. King's Journal; which it may be profitable for all to consider. The one that I shall notice is, the evidence of the fact that the Catholic Church has altered the law of God, according to the [illegible] assumed by it over such matters, and that among those alterations is one of the fourth commandment, which, though condemned by the devoted Protestant Missionary as an "impious thing and a lie," is nevertheless in exact accordance with his practice and precept. Why is it more derogatory to the authority of God for Catholics to write, "Observe the first day, and the feast days," in the body of the law, than for Protestants to insist from the pulpit and elsewhere, that the law is changed, and that now it requires the first day instead of the seventh? How much better is the Protestant practice, than that of the Catholic? Why not write the law as it means? If it requires the first day for rest, why translate it seventh, and afterward insist that it means the first? Should not this also be called an "impious thing and a lie?" Yet who will express such holy indignation at this practice, so near akin to the other? It is calculated to remind one of the fable of the farmer and the lawyer. If the Catholic bull gores the Protestant ox, it is an "impious thing!"

NERI.

PAINFUL INTELLIGENCE FROM BURMAH.—The N. Y. Recorder of June 27th says that a letter from Dr. Judson, dated March 18, and received by the overland mail and the last steamer, brings the painful intelligence of Mrs. Judson's failing health and critical condition. "Mrs. J." he says "has been very ill, and still continues so; and, what is worse, I have serious and dreadful apprehensions that she willl never be any better. She appears to me to be in a settled and rapid decline; but the doctor is making every effort, and holding out strong encouragement that she will recover. I write with a heavy heart. A dark cloud is gathering over me; and how dark it will become I know not. But God knows; and he will, I trust, bring light out of darkness. His will be done."

In a postscript added March 23, he says: "Mrs. J. is rather better;" but he indicates no abatement of his fears.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—A New York State Temperance Convention was held at Syracuse last week, Gen. Joseph S. Smith, of Ulster County, presiding. During the first day of the session, several resolutions were introduced and discussed by Messrs. Gerrit Smith, Delavan, Howe, Myers, Warren, Raymond, &c. Among them was the following:—

Resolved, That we recommend to the Executive Committee of this Society to establish, forthwith, a small semi-monthly newspaper under the name of The Law Power,—the price of which shall be 25 cents per year, for a single copy; $4 for twenty copies; $6 for forty; and $10 for eighty; and the single aim of which shall be to obtain and enforce wise and effectual laws against the traffic in intoxicating drinks.

PROSPECTS OF THE WESTERN MISSION.—A letter from Bro. Samuel Davison, bearing date June 18, says:—"My congregation on the Sabbath now usually amounts to between seventy and one hundred. We have taken the preparatory steps for the organization of a regular Seventh-day Baptist Church, and appointed a meeting to be held on first-day, July 1, to complete the organization. I have recently had an interesting visit from a Baptist minister, who is also a missionary. He professes to be an anxious inquirer after the truth, and said his object in visiting me was to learn all he could respecting our views. I furnished him with tracts for himself and some no-Sabbath men he has in one of his congregations."

REVIVALS IN CONNECTICUT AND RHODE ISLAND.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Recorder says that a very pleasant revival has been in progress at New Haven, Ct., for several months past. The pastor of the First Baptist Church has baptized thirteen, and the pastor of the Second Church nineteen. "A general interest has pervaded all the evangelical churches of the city. Indeed, the State of Connecticut has shared more largely in the revivings of the Spirit during the last winter than for many years previous." The same paper contains a notice of a revival at Providence, R. I., and the baptism of twenty-five persons at one of the churches.

PRINCETON (N. J.) COLLEGE.—The Commencement Exercises of this institution were held on fourth-day of last week, when the degree of A.B. was conferred upon seventy-seven young men who had just completed their Collegiate studies. There were four graduates from the Law School. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon Rev. J. G. Lorimer, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Rev. E. D. Smith, of New York. The number of students in the College is 254, of whom 8 are Law Students, and three Resident Graduates.

THE SULTAN A REFORMER.—The Sultan of Turkey is engaged in carrying out a scheme of improvement which entitles him to great praise. He has planned a system of railroads, undertaken a system of primary instruction, and is encouraging also the cultivation of the Turkish language and literature by every means, and especially by offering prizes for the best translations of the standard works in ancient and modern literature.

CAUTIOUS.—Mr. Calhoun, in his letter to the citizens of Memphis says, that as regards the construction of a railroad to our possessions on the Pacific, he is not sure but the inhabitants of those territories are going to prohibit slavery there, and, if they do, he thinks it not worth while for the South to spend money on a road which will only make a new place accessible for slaves to run away to.

A LAW OF THE CHURCH SUSPENDED.—On Sunday last, the Roman Catholic Bishop of New York made some remarks from his pulpit on the importance of cleanliness and freedom from excitement as a protection against the cholera. In conclusion, he said, that as the use of fish had been pronounced by the medical faculty conducive to the cholera, he had, by virtue of the prerogative invested in him, suspended that law of the Church which prohibits the use of meat on Friday, from the present time to the 18th of August, should the cholera continue.

ARRIVAL OF FATHER MATHEW.—Rev. Theobold Mathew, the Irish Apostle of Temperance, has at length reached New York. On second-day last, there was a great parade connected with his reception—the Common Council was called out, a procession was formed, and he was escorted to the City Hall, where the crowd had a chance to gaze at him. How long he is to be the prey of the lionizers, is not stated. It is to be hoped, however, that they will not monopolize him so long as to prevent his accomplishing, to some extent at least, the object of his visit to this country, which we take to be, making converts to the doctrine of total abstinence, and sealing their faith with his solemn pledge.

PETER-PENCE.—On Sunday last, agreeable to an appointment of the Provincial Council at Baltimore, collections were taken up in all the Catholic Churches of the United States, for the temporary relief of the Pope of Rome. From the manner in which appeals are urged through the Catholic papers, we conclude that there is much feeling upon the subject, and that a large collection is expected.

Since writing the above, we learn that the collection at St. Peter's Church, in New York, amounted to $750, and that in St James' Church to over $500. From this one may form some estimate of the amount collected throughout the United States.

FOR SHANGHAI.—The barque Candace is advertised to sail from New York direct to Shanghai, China, in a few days. Persons having parcels designed for our missionaries at that place, should not lose this opportunity to forward them. They should reach New York as early as the 12th of July.

FAST DAYS.—In view of the prevalence of cholera, fasts have been held in various places within a few weeks past. Thursday last was observed at Savannah; Monday last at New Haven.

WAR AND THE GOSPEL.—The Christian nations of Europe and America expend every year in preparations for war £200,000,000. This amount, when compared with "the most comprehensive form of Christian charity," stands thus: For preparations for war, per day, £548,000; for preaching the Gospel of peace to the heathens, £1,640; or, to make the comp preparation distinct, one pound sterling for arison more for war between Christian nations, against one half-penny for evangelizing the Pagan world and bringing myriads of benighted idolaters to bow to the scepter of the Prince of Peace! Or, millions for Mars and mites for Messiah!

MAN-WORSHIP.—A pretty specimen of man-worship is complacently recorded by the Roman Catholic Observer. It seems that a letter from the Pope to the Archbishop of Baltimore was received too late to be published during the Council. "On the Sunday after the Council," continues the editor, "it was handed to the Very Rev. Dr. Pise, who is one of the best scholars in the country, a short time before he ascended the pulpit, with the request that he would read an English translation of it to the people. After a hasty perusal of the document, the Rev. Doctor read it in English, in his own happy, elegant diction, and concluded by one of those refined acts of delicacy, which betoken the good Priest, the pious Christian, and the accomplished gentleman. He kissed the letter with respect and veneration, saying, 'The letter which I have just read to you bears the autograph signature of Our Most Holy Father, Pius the Ninth, which, in the name of the Most Reverend Archbishop and of the congregation, I reverently and affectionately kiss.'"

MOBBING ANTI-SLAVERY LECTURERS.—The Jamaica (L. I.) Farmer contains a communication from S. S. Foster, the celebrated Anti-Slavery Lecturer, detailing some of the facts connected with a recent disgraceful mob at Hempstead. It seems that Mr. Foster and his wife, Abby Kelly Foster, made arrangements with Mr. Hewlett, the keeper of a public house in Hempstead, for the use of his Hall, to hold a series of meetings, for the purpose of a free inquiry into the nature and character of our slave system, and the proper and necessary steps to be taken for its abolition. On the opening of the first meeting, a general invitation was given to all present, whatever might be their views, to participate in the discussion of the various topics which should be presented for their consideration. The first two meetings passed off quietly, but at an early hour on the third evening, there were indications of hostile feelings and intentions, both in and around the Hall, such as cracking nuts, running up and down the stairs, yelling, hooting, drumming on tin pans, &c., the usual characteristics of oppositien in an ignorant and uncultivated community. Things grew worse and worse, until Mr. and Mrs. Foster judged it advisable to leave the hall and the village.

A VICTIM OF CHOLERA.—We announced last week the sudden death of Rev. W. B. Tappan. He died at Granville, near Needham, Mass, the place of his residence, on Tuesday, June 19th. The Boston Traveler of that day, gives the particulars as follows:—

He preached last Sunday at Mattapoisett, returned to the city yesterday morning, and spent the forenoon at his office, and returned home in the cars at 2 P. M. At 4 o'clock, he complained of slight indisposition, and took some medicine. Soon after he was seized with spasms, accompanied with clammy sweat, cold extremities, and feeble pulse, which continued with increasing violence, baffling all remedies, till, at 3 in the morning, his frame, constitutionally feeble, sunk under it. He was sensible of his situation from the first, and expressed quiet resignation. During the spasms, his sufferings were very great; but when a groan escaped him, he would say, "Understand, I don't complain, it's all right." His sight and hearing were effected, and he complained of burning thirst, and when his attendants touched his flesh, as cold as marble, he would say, "O you burn me!" His end was peace, and "the memory of the just shall be blessed." The attending physicians pronounced the case one of spasmodic cholera.

GOV. BRIGGS AND FREDERICK DOUGLASS.—Frederick Douglass, in the last number of the North Star, gives honor to Gov. Briggs of Massachussetts for rising superior to the vulgar prejudice against color which actuates so many of the people, of all classes, in this country. He says:

"About a year ago, we met the Governor on the Railway from Boston to Pittsfield, when the cars were densely crowded with white passengers; and being recognized by him, he immediately offered us a seat by his side, and entered into a familiar conversation with us, on the anti-slavery question in general. It is not so much the mere act of politeness that struck us favorably, but the manner of showing it. With no air of condescension—with no fear of giving offence to those around him by his disregard of American taste, manners, predilections, he seemed to be as easy with a negro, by his side, as a white man. We made no mention of this circumstance at the time, because of the possibility of its being charged to our political prejudices; but a like circumstance having occurred within the last few days, the Governor displaying the same urbanity and freedom from caste, has overcome our objections on that score; and we mention the fact with feelings of sincere pleasure, that the Governor of Massachusetts (whatever may be said of him on political grounds,) has shown himself infinitely superior to the great mass of praters on American Democracy, equality, and independence."

BIBLES IN ITALY.—A Boston paper quotes a letter from Pisa, dated March 14, stating that "all custom-house duties are taken off foreign books at Rome, and all restrictions on the press are removed. Achilli is printing the Epistles to the Romans, with notes, at Rome. Also, an edition of Diodati's Bible is being printed there. An edition of Martini's Bible is printed in Florence, and one of Diodati's will shortly be printed at Pisa."

THE CHOLERA.

In New York, the Reports of the Board of Health for the week ending on Monday last, were as follows:

Tuesday,	June 26,	cases,	73,	deaths,	28.
Wednesday,	" 27	"	43,	"	29.
Thursday,	" 28	"	60,	"	29.
Friday,	" 29	"	39,	"	18.
Sabbath,	" 30	"	88,	"	26.
Sunday,	July 1	"	38,	"	19.
Monday	" 2	"	108,	"	39.

In Philadelphia, for a week past, the number of new cases has been from 40 to 50 daily, the proportion of deaths being about as in New York.

In Cincinnati, the epidemic continues to prevail. On the 25th, there were 94 deaths by cholera. On the 29th there were 96.

In St. Louis, the deaths by Cholera have averaged about 100 per day for a week past. During the week which ended on the 24th of June, there were 689 deaths by Cholera.

A Nashville letter, dated June 16, says: "Our little city is now being scourged with Cholera. This disease, at the present time, has a larger number of victims daily than it ever had during its greatest fatality in 1833 and 1835. I may say that it is far worse than it has been in any city in the Union, since its late advent to this continent. We have had as many as thirty-three interments during one day this week, which, in proportion to the population of the two cities, is equivalent to five hundred deaths per diem in New York city."

A letter from St. Louis, dated June 25th, says that the Cholera prevails to an alarming extent on the Upper Mississippi—22 passengers on board the steamer Uncle Toby died with Cholera between that place and Oquaka. The Cholera is making fearful strides among the Shawnee and Delaware tribes of Indians. They are deserting and burning their villages. On a recent trip of the steamer Ocean Wave, from Peru, on the Illinois River, to St. Louis, a passage of thirty hours, 38 persons died of Cholera. They were principally emigrants and deck hands.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamer Hibernia arrived at New York on the 29th ult., with one week later intelligence from all parts of Europe.

From ENGLAND, we learn that the bill for the abrogation of the Navigation Laws passed the House of Lords without material amendment, on the 12th of June, and has received the Royal sanction; it will go into effect in January. The Jews' disabilities bill passed the House of Commons by a majority of 65; its success in the House of Lords is considered very doubtful. The British Government repudiates all cognizance or sanction of the proceedings of the French in their treatment of the Romans. The weather is represented as continuing very favorable, and the crops of England and Ireland are said to look unusually promising.

From FRANCE, we have the startling intelligence that on Wednesday an incipient insurrection was attempted in Paris, by about 25,000 of the mountain party, headed by M. Elienne Arago. It was dispersed by the troops, whose numbers amounted to 70,000. Several attempts were made to erect barricades. In the evening, the Assembly declared itself en permanence, and passed a decree declaring Paris and the first military division in a state of siege. On Thursday, the alarm had considerably subsided, and business, which was entirely suspended the day previous, was generally resumed. At one time the peril was imminent. Numerous arrests have taken place, including several members of the Assembly, M. Arago and Ledru Rollin. The last accounts report a state of tranquillity, but there was an uneasy feeling afloat that a renewed attempt would be made to upset the government, and that when it comes to the point the troops will not prove steady. All the Socialist or Red Republican journals of Paris, except the National, have been suppressed since the disturbance. The City of Rheims is reported to be in full insurrection, and to have established a Government of Red Republicans.

From ROME, we learn that the French army commenced the attack upon the city on the 30th of May, and after a sanguinary engagement, in which the Romans lost 800 men, succeeded in carrying several important posts. A series of attacks had since taken place, in which the victory is variously stated, but in which the invading army has suffered most. The French papers publish conflicting reports of the operations of the army, but from accounts of the 5th of June it is clear that Oudinot, the French commander, had not then gained access to the city, though he had gained a position at the north of Rome, which would enable him to command the city. The latest dispatch from Gen. Oudinot is to the 6th June, at which time he opened his trenches, and had regularly besieged the city. There is no appearance of yielding on the part of the Romans, but on the contrary every thing goes to confirm the belief that they would make a most determined resistance and fight to the last.

From HUNGARY, the news is, that Kossuth has arrived in Pesth, and has been received as President in the Capital of the Hungarian Republic. It would seem that hostilities are still carried on in the South, between the Hungarians and the shattered remains of the Austrian army, supported by the Russians; but the reports concerning the matter are very vague and contradictory. The Russian General has issued a proclamation to the Hungarians, the pith of which is, that if they do not lay down their arms and submit to their fate with a good grace, they would be made to feel the consequences of their presumption. Every effort is being made to rouse the people, and the Magyar Government have ordered clergymen to march against the Russians.

THE CHOLERA has again appeared in England, and several cases have occurred in Manchester and other parts of the country. At Paris, the disease is making most frightful havoc, even more so than in 1837. Upward of 11,000 deaths have already occurred, and in one day there were about 900 cases and 600 deaths reported. Marshal Bugeaud and many other persons of eminence have fallen before this scourge, which has also broken out anew in Silicia, Vienna and Presburg, and is raging most fearfully at Alexandria and Cairo in Egypt.

* * *

THE PANAMA RAILROAD.—The Company of Engineers sent out a few months ago to survey a route for a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, have completed their task, and made a favorable report. The books of subscription for the stock were opened last week, and the one million of dollars required was promptly subscribed. The basis of the Company is a grant from the Republic of New Granada, containing the following provisions:

An exclusive right to construct a railroad across the Isthmus, with the right to use, gratuitously, all the public lands lying on the route of the road.

Eight years, if required, for completing it.

Twelve hours for transportation over it.

Transit for merchandise and specie free of duty.

A gift of about 300,000 acres of land, to be selected by the grantees from the public lands on the Isthmus.

Iron, and all implements and materials for the road, provisions and other articles for the persons employed thereon, admitted free of duty.

Two ports, one on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific, which are to be the termini of the road, and to be free ports.

Power to levy transit and warehouse duties, and to establish such tolls as the grantees may think proper.

Privilege to endure forty-nine years, subject to the right to redeem it, at the expiration of twenty years after the completion of the road, on paying $5,000,000; at the expiration of thirty years, on paying $4,000,000; and at the expiration of forty years, on paying $2,000,000.

A deposit of 600,000 francs (about $120,000) as a security for the fulfillment of the obligations assumed, to be refunded with interest on the completion of the road.

Two and a half per cent. to be paid to the Government of New Granada upon all dividends declared.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE CHOLERA AT ST. LOUIS.—A letter dated St. Louis, June 15, says:—

To show you how terrific Cholera is among us, I will give one or two instances. Next door to me, on the south, a little girl, eleven or twelve years of age, who was playful and lively last evening, is at this moment breathing her last. This child is the last of four within this week, and was sent here from the Virginia Hotel. The father of the family was taken sick this morning; the result is not yet known. The mother, when sent for, could not visit her child, but requested our neighbors to take the best care they could of her offspring. Next door north but one, a man died last night, after a few hours' illness. One of my hands spoke to me on Saturday last about 5 o'clock, P. M., and at ten o'clock next day was a corpse. Dr. Johnson, when I called upon him about 5 1-2 o'clock on Saturday, had a call at the Planter's House, to Capt. Rogers. The Doctor said to me that he was afraid he could not save him; he died during the night. My head sawyer, my engineer, teamster, and many others, are down with the Cholera; result not yet known.

Since the date of the above, the Cholera has greatly increased in virulence in St. Louis.

* * *

THE ACCIDENT AT THE FALLS.—The particulars of the recent accident at Niagara Falls, are thus given by the Buffalo Express of June 23:—

Last evening, at a quarter before 8 o'clock, while a party of ladies and gentlemen were visiting the Luna Island, among whom were the lady and little daughter of Mr. DeForest, and young Charles C. Addington, and several others, and while the little girl was standing on the very brink of the river, and only some 20 feet from the Falls, and holding by the hand of a young gentleman whose name I have not learned, young Addington came up and said playfully, "I am going to throw you in," touching her lightly on the shoulder—when she sprang forward with sufficient force to slip from the hand of the young gentleman who held her. She was instantly followed by Addington, who caught her, and in the effort was prostrated by the force of the water, throwing the little girl at the same time so near the shore that the young gentleman who had her by the hand nearly caught her, but lost his balance, only saving himself by catching hold of some brush on shore. In an instant young Addington and the little girl were swept over the Falls. No human effort could avail them. A single moment threw them beyond the reach of all mortal aid. Young Addington was a young man of excellent character, of high and generous impulses. He was the only son of a bereaved family residing in Buffalo. The body of the little girl has been recovered.

* * *

THE PRESIDENTIAL TOUR.—The Philadelphia Sun says that the President of the United States will leave Washington on his tour to the North, about the middle of August. He will proceed from Baltimore to York, and from thence visit Lancaster, Harrisburg, Chambersburg, and the Bedford Springs, Hollidaysburg and Pittsburgh. He will then pass through Ohio to Cleveland, where he will embark for Buffalo, and will be at the New York State Agricultural Fair at Syracuse on the 10th. From Albany he will proceed east to Boston, and after visiting the capitals of New Hampshire and Maine, will return south, via. Providence, New York and Philadelphia, his purpose being to reach Washington about the close of September.

* * *

MISSIONARY ORDINATION.—On the evening of the anniversary of Auburn Theological Seminary, June 20, Mr. Justus Doolittle, a graduate of the Institution, under appointment as a Missionary to China by the A. B. C. F. M., was ordained to the work of the Ministry by the Presbytery of Cayuga.

GENERAL NEWSPAPER COLLECTION.—M. Vattemare, the indefatigible promoter of the national interchange of literature and knowledge, is forming an "American Library" at Paris, and is desirous of placing in it a full and complete sample of all the newspapers published in the United States. The editor of the Boston Bee, B. P. Poore, Esq., a literary gentleman of note, has engaged to assist him. The collection, when made, will be placed in the City Hall of Paris, and entitled—

A COLLECTION OF AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS,
Presented to the City of Paris,
BY THE JOURNALISTS OF THE UNITED STATES,
July 4th, 1849.

M. Vattemere has therefore requested all editors or publishers of papers to send one copy of their paper, published on or near the 4th of July, addressed to the Daily Bee, Boston.

* * *

TEXAS COLONIZATION SOCIETY.—There is a Society now forming in London with the above title. Some forty, says the Caddo (La.) Gazette, have just arrived in Shreveport on their way to Dallas, in Texas. They are encamped at Mr. Davis's springs; and all have a very respectable appearance. They are mostly mechanics and tradesmen. The leader of their party, Mr. John Richards, has gone on ahead to make the necessary arrangements to receive them in their new homes in Texas. These are the first of the society that have arrived in the United States. About 4,000 will arrive from England during the fall and winter.

* * *

AFRICAN AND TEXAS SLAVE TRADE.—The Caddo (La.) Gazette of the 9th of June, has the following remarkable paragraph:—

"We have been credibly informed, that there is a constant trade in the kidnapping of negroes going on between Africa and Texas. Year before last, there were several vessels, well loaded with negroes, brought from Africa, and landed near the mouth of the San Barnard, and the negroes there sold. This black scheme should be looked into by the Government, and those engaged in it punished according to law."

* * *

A FORTUNE.—We have read a letter, this morning, says the editor of the Commercial Advertiser, from a gentleman of this city, a passenger in the steamer Panama, in which he says:—"I have now a fellow passenger who has been one of the fortunate ones without the trouble of digging gold. In the course of six months he has realized a fortune of four hundred and fifty thousand dollars by regular mercantile speculation, chiefly in flour. He was at Valparaiso when food commanded almost any price at San Francisco. He shipped largely, and in some instances received sixty-three dollars per barrel."

* * *

DROUTH IN THE WEST INDIES.—The drouth which has been experienced on the Island of St. Thomas this season is, in point of duration, almost without a parallel. For the last five months, with the exception of a single shower lately, there had not been a particle of rain. The vegetation was all dried up, and the earth was covered with a coating of dust. A similar state of things had existed on many of the neighboring islands. In the Island of Mayaguez, P. R., the crop will fall short fully one-third of an verage.

* * *

RUM'S DOINGS.—An affray occurred on Sunday between two brothers, named Flagg, at Coyleston, Mass., wherein one was killed by a wound from a knife inflicted by the other. Cause: the murderer had a jug of rum, or some other kind of ardent spirits, and was using the knife to get the cork out. His brother, who was a temperance man, endeavored to prevent him from getting at the contents, and tried to take the jug from him, in doing which the fatal wound was inflicted.

* * *

GOLD FISH IN THE HUDSON.—The gold fish, originally from China, and hitherto chiefly known to ornamental ponds or glass globes in this country, has become quite naturalized in the Hudson River, near Newburgh. Fishermen have caught specimens from eight to ten inches long, both in the Hudson itself and in the mouth of Mattewan Creek, which empties into the Hudson near Newburgh. A few were thrown into the Creek about ten years ago, and they have so multiplied as to fairly stock the Creek and River in that vicinity.

* * *

A FREAK OF LIGHTNING.—The Boston Atlas says that during a recent thunder shower, the dwelling house of John Gardner, Esq., of Dedham, was struck by lightning. The electric fluid entered through the roof, and scattered the furniture in all directions. In one of its freaks, it took all the gilding off the frame of a splendid mirror, without breaking it. Singular as it may seem, although nine persons were in the house at the time, no one was injured. Nearly every room in the house was more or less shattered.

* * *

STEAMER FOR CHINA.—A small steamboat, so contructed with bolts and screws as to be easily taken apart, and as easily put together, has just been stowed away in one of our merchant vessels, to be taken to China, where she will ply between the ports of Whampoa and Canton. She was built by Messrs. Lawrence & Sneedon, for Capt. Forbes, of Boston. She is 100 feet in length, 18 in width, and about 8 deep.

* * *

MARRYING PENSIONS.—A curious bit of scandal recently came out in the British Parliament. A Mrs. Uriack had petitioned for the usual pension granted to widows of Colonels, but as Colonel Uriack was upwards of seventy years of age when she was married to him, her claim was refused. The Secretary-at-War alleged that if this was not done they would have ladies constantly marrying aged officers for the purpose of obtaining pensions! [Chronotype.

* * *

SHARP.—A negro in Cincinnati being taken before the Mayor, for some small offense, was seized with the cholera and was in great distress. Some medicine was procured him and he was released. As soon as he got outside of the door, he put his thumb to his nose, twirled his digits, and ran as fast as his legs could move, which was about the quickest.

Miss Eliza Cook, the English poetess, has undertaken to establish a weekly journal in London.

SUMMARY.

The House of Representatives of Rhode Island last week passed a bill for the removal of all political and legal disabilities growing out of the judgment of the Supreme Court of that State, rendered against Thomas W. Dorr for any political offense, and for the restoration of said Thomas W. Dorr to all his civil and political rights. It is doubtful whether the bill will pass the Senate.

The annual meeting of the Rhode Island Peace Society was held on Wednesday last, week at Providence, about twenty men being present, according to the Transcript. Something was done towards sending a delegation to the Paris Convention in August next.

An Irish woman, named Catherine Cummings, was run over and killed by the Express Railroad train from Auburn to Syracuse, on the 27th. She was walking on the track with her back to the train. The engineer rung the bell, whistled, shouted, reversed the engine, and put on the break, but in vain.

The crevasse at New Orleans has been stopped. The Delta has published a map of the district which was inundated, and gives the number of squares under water at 160; the number of houses flooded 1,600; the number of persons dwelling in them 8,000.

Florida is said to grow the pineapple of [illegible]. A single acre of good soil will produce, with little culture, from $500 to $1000 worth per year. When the Florida everglades are drained, there will not be a finer country in the world for every species of tropical fruit.

At a recent session of the Schenectady Court, Dorus Brand, a German woman, obtained a verdict of two thousand dollars against the Troy and Schenectady Railroad Company, for injuries sustained by being run over by the locomotive.

A man named John Welsh has been convicted at New Orleans of murdering his wife. The verdict of the Jury was, "Guilty, without capital punishment." The reader will be reminded of that other famous verdict, "Not guilty, if he will leave the town."

There are now eight candidates for the gold box bequeathed by General Jackson to the bravest man in the New York Regiment. The candidates address their communications to Alderman Morgan, the Chairman of the Committee of the Common Council.

Lieut. Lynch, the Winchester Republican states, is about to appropriate a large portion of the proceeds of his work on the Dead Sea, to the oprhans of Lieut. Dale, his first officer, who died whilst engaged in the expedition.

The London Times expresses the apprehension, that all the better class of small farmers are about emigrating to this country, leaving only the impoverished land-owners and the pauper inhabitants of the various workhouses.

Grasses of all kinds look uncommonly well in West Jersey, and give promise of heavy yields. Wheat is excellent, and the crop, unless seriously injured by the fly while ripening, will be above the average of the few past years.

We learn from the Newburyport Herald, that the meeting-house in Hampton, N. H., which has recently been refitted and painted, was struck by lightning on Saturday, and badly damaged. The steeple was nearly demolished, and the splintered timbers and boards were thrown to a great distance.

The Artesian Well at Charleston has reached the depth of 886 feet. A thermometer lowered to the bottom indicated the temperature at that point to be 82 3-4, while at the surface it was 74. A few days since, at the depth of 756 feet, the thermometer marked 92 1-2.

The Shawneetown (Ill.) Advocate of Friday, says that a stranger, some few miles above that place, was whipped to death last week. The Advocate attributes the act to some men from the Kentucky side of the water.

Capt. Lelacheur has succeeded singly and alone in introducing 500 Bibles and 3,000 Testaments into Central America, and has paid $185, in addition to $150 previously remitted.

John Augustus has been security for the unfortunates who have been arraigned at the Police Court of Boston to the amount of more than six thousand dollars since January last. Not a man, within this time, of those whom he has thus befriended, has deceived him or proved a defaulter. This speaks volumes for humanity.

Three men were drowned near Pittsburgh on Wednesday, while crossing the Monongahela River. They were Englishmen. The names of two of them are John Chapman and William Wilks.

We are happy to learn from the Rochester Democrat, that F. S. Rew, Esq., one of the editorial brotherhood, has received from a friend residing at San Francisco, remittances to the amount of $6,000 or $8,000.

For ten years, says the Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph, the crops of wheat, rye, oats, potatoes and grass, have not promised more abundantly. Indeed, we never saw better; and should the wheat escape mildew and rust, it will be one of the greatest crops ever produced. The grass is particularly heavy elsewhere, in all locations; and the oats, which is a very uncertain crop, indicates an abundant yield.

The third week in June has not been so warm for ten years as this year. Neither cloud nor shower during the week came to temper the fiery rays of the sun, and the thermometer reached 97 in the shade, and fell but a few degrees before sunset.

About $6,000 has been subscribed towards the establishment of a public wash-house in this city, on the plan recently adopted with so much success in London. About $14,000 more is required, in order to carry the plan into effect.

From a recent exhibit of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, its assets appear to be $642,217 60, while its liabilities amount to only $8,403 94. The profits of the Concern are annually divided among the several Conferences.

Four thousand people, out of a population of 60,000, died at Limerick, Ireland, in one month, of the cholera.

A letter to the Eastport Sentinel, dated Rio de Janeiro, April 2, says: There is a report that the ship Florida, from New York to California, was lost off the River Platte, and 200 lives lost. Many of the vessels in here have had long passages—some 75 days—many have lost spars and had a hard time.

The Gloucester News, of June 23d, says that the dread of cholera has completely cured people of lobster-eating. They are worth nothing in the market; about 2000 were thrown overboard at Eastern Point the other day.

A French paper says, "The recent sudden increase of cholera in Paris took place on a Sunday, a day of general amusement. One writer says 1600 died in three days. The enormous consumption of ices was one cause." Drinking to excess probably had as much to do with it.

The proprietors of the Quincy Whig have recovered four hundred and fifty dollars from Mr. Woods, the publisher of the Quincy Herald, in a suit for libel. Of that amount, however, sufficient only was retained to defray the expenses of the suit, and the balance was generously restored to the defendant.

Some villain placed obstructions on the Michigan Central Railroad, between Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti, which threw the train of Wednesday last off, and detained it for 12 hours. It was very fortunate that no lives were lost.

Massachusetts has paid for the support of paupers sick with [illegible]—$8,052 86 of which fell upon Boston, $10 000 [illegible] $2,000 upon the town of Fall River.

Rose-bugs, the voracious pests of grape-vines, &c., have made their appearance in the neighborhood of Boston, and are making sad havoc. Ditto at Brooklyn, L. I., and various other places.

Ancient grave-stones have been discovered on Boston Common, bearing date 1672, 1685, 1702, &c. The names were Burrill, Tyng, and Porter. They were found by some workmen while digging a trench.

The Western papers remark that the Lake cities, Toledo, Cleveland, and Sandusky, are free from Cholera. At Buffalo and Chicago it exists, but in a mild form.

A dispatch dated at Montreal, June 28, says that the steamer Passport collapsed her boilers that morning at Cornwall, by which accident nine emigrants were instantly killed, and fifteen persons scalded.

We notice, says the Newark Advertiser, that several more deaths have occurred in different parts of the State from exposure to the sun, over-exertion, drinking cold water, &c.

The proprietors of the Quincy Whig have recovered $450 from Mr. Wood, the publisher of the Quincy (Ill.) Herald, in a suit for libel.

Abraham Sawyer, of Caton, Steuben Co., recently recovered a verdict of $950 of Samuel Weal, for the seduction of his daughter whom he had promised to marry. The case was an aggravated one.

The room of Mr. L. Mowbry, at the St. Charles Saloon, St. Louis, Mo., was recently robbed of a fine diamond pin valued at $1,000.

Two young ladies at Wallingford (Ct.) named Jane Andrews and Juliet Miller, aged 18 and 13, were drowned on the 22d while bathing.

The Legislature of New Hampshire recently voted by a majority of 63 not to abolish Capital Punishment.

Five persons died in Baltimore, on Saturday and Sunday, June 23 and 24, from the effect of the intensely heated atmosphere.

The venerable Lyman Beecher, D. D., is expected at Boston soon, to spend the remainder of his days.

A Greek, named Debolli, recently deceased at St. Petersburgh, left $250,000 to the Greek government. A portion of this amount is to found a University.

Lord Stanley has been shipping many of his poor tenants to the United States, paying the passage money himself.

"Old Hays" was first appointed Marshal of New York city by Mayor Varick, in 1798. He is still High Constable of the city.

Thomas Flynn, the well-known comedian, died in New York of cholera, on Saturday, at the Centre-street Hospital.

The Mormons are congregating in large numbers on the shores of the great Salt Lake, buried amid the solitudes of the Rocky Mountains.

A letter from California, received at Nantucket, says: "A man's life here is worth about fifty cents on the dollar."

The Board of Health at Rochester, recommend that there be no celebration of the coming 4th of July in that city.

Counterfeit 5's on the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Albany are afloat. The paper is much whiter than that of the genuine, and the engraving heavier.

At the recent marriage of Miss Meyrick to an officer of Dragoons, her uncle, the Duke of Cleveland, made her a present of a purse containing £10,000.

There are 8,300 poor-house officers in England, whose salaries are more than two millions of dollars per annum.

A young man named Clifford was drowned while bathing in a pond at Dedham, on Saturday afternoon.

An exhibition of American plants has been made in London. They were valued at £35,000.

Bishop Polk of Louisiana has lost 23 negroes by the cholera.

DIED.

In Sangerfield, N. Y., on the 23d inst., of pulmonary consumption, NANCY ROGERS, wife of Clark T. Rogers, in the 46th year of her age. Sister Rogers, some eighteen years since, made a profession of religion, and connected herself with the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, of which she remained a member until removed by death to the church above. She was a great sufferer in her last sickness, which was protracted. She bore it, however, with great patience, giving evidence that her religion was not vain. In her death the husband has lost an affectionate companion, the children a pious mother, the Church a beloved sister. God only can heal the breach. S. B. C.

In Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y., May 24, 1849, of croup, ELNORA E. POTTER, only daughter of E. H. P. and Rozana E. Potter.

New York Markets—Monday, July 2.

WHOLESALE.

Ashes—Pearls $5 56; Pots 5 62.——Flour and Meal—Flour, common and good State and Western 4 44 a 4 75; pure Genesee 5 06. extra Ohio 5 87, extra Genesee 6 00. Rye Flour 3 06 a 3 12. Jersey Meal 3 00.——Grain—Wheat is dull, Wisconsin selling at 76c., Ohio 1 00 a 1 06, Genesee 1 29 a 1 30. Rye 57c. Oats 34 a 36c. Corn, 54c. for Western mixed, 55c. for round white, 57 a 58 for Northern and Jersey Yellow.——Provisions—Pork, Mess 10 50, Prime 9 00. Mess Beef 11 50 a 13 00. Butter, Ohio 7 a 10, Western tub 10 a 13½c. Cheese dull at 4 a 6½c.

RETAIL HOUSEHOLD MARKETS.

Apples—About gone, Russets sell for $3 a 3 50 per bbl. Beets—8 and 10 for a shilling. Lima Beans—Shelled, 15d per qt. Cucumbers—4 cts. each. Eggs—8 and 9½ for a shilling. Lettuce—A penny per head. Mint—Per bunch, 2 cts. Leeks—Per bunch, 6d. Green Peas—Good and plenty, and 25 cts. per bushel. Potatoes—New, about 3s per half peck, 10s per bushel; Old, 10 a 12s a bushel; per half peck, 2s. Maple Sugar—Retail, about 10 cts. per pound; wholesaled at 6 a 9; country manufacturers get, on the average, 6d per pound.

LETTERS.

Ephraim Maxson, V. Hull, Lucius Crandall, N. V. Hull, A. A. Saunders, Jos. Mann, C. M. Lewis, Wm. Green, W. K. Smith, S. B. Crandall, W. B. Gillett, R. Lewis, L. P. Clark, John Bright (New York,) Samuel Davison (right,) J. Chadwick (yes,) F. C. Morgan (yes.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of tne following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

David Maxson, W. Edmeston,	$2 00	to vol.	6	No.	52
J. Chadwick, Enfield Center,	2 00	"	6	"	52
Lucretia Lewis, Brookfield,	2 00	"	6	"	52
Erastus Miller, South Otselic,	2 00	"	6	"	52
L. T. Rogers, 2d, Waterford, Ct.	2 00	"	6	"	52
Jas. Rogers, "	2 00	"	6	"	52
Harris Lanphear, [illegible] R. I.	2 00	"	6	"	52
Abel Maxson, Ceres, Pa.	2 00	"	6	"	[illegible]
J. Forsyth, Pratt, O.	2 00	"	6	"	52
M. Babcock, "	2 00	"	6	"	52
S. F. Babcock, North Hampton, O	2 00	"	6	"	52
A. A. Saunders, Newport, R. I.	50	"	6	"	13
E. R. Lewis, "	50	"	6	"	13

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

Wait Crumb, DeRuyter,	$4 00	to vol.	5	No.	52
Henry Crandall, "	2 00	"	5	"	52
W. S. Burdick, "	1 25	"	5	"	52
H. W. Maxson, Sacket's Harbor,	2 00	"	5	"	52
T. B. Stillman, New York,	2 00	"	5	"	52

Bruce's New York Type-Foundry.

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C.
Pica,	per lb. 30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb. Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

Our Specimen Book is freely given to all Printing Offices.

Printers of Newspapers who choose to publish this advertisement, including this note, three times [illegible] the 1st of October, 1849, and send us one of the [illegible] will be paid for it in Type when they purchase from us, of our own manufactures, selected from our specimens, five times the amount of their bill.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.

GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

[Copy.]

CAMBRIDGE, Washington Co., N. Y.,
June 18, 1849.

Geo. W. Savage, Esq.,
Pres't Eagle Life and Health Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to express to your Company my thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which you paid the claim for insurance on the life of my brother, Doctor F. R. Robertson, which was insured for the benefit of his mother. The manner in which the claim was met and paid, is creditable to your institution. No deduction was asked, nor was there any objection raised, but the whole amount insured paid as soon as presented' and without waiting until it became due.

A policy of this kind is indeed valuable. I trust you will have the kindness to express our deep acknowledgment to your Board of Directors, and oblige

Your obedient servant,
R. K. ROBERTSON.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returni g any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The i sured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Pamphlets containing the necessary information may be had gratis at the office of the Sabbath Recorder.

AGENTS WANTED.

A number of active and intelligent men are wanted, who can furnish satisfactory references, to act as local or traveling agents, in procuring applications for Life and Health Insurance. To men of energy, this is a good opportunity, as a liberal commission is paid on all risks obtained. For further information apply personally, or by letter—(post paid, as none other will be taken from the post-office)—to

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
206 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miscellaneous.

THE PRAIRIE GRAVE.

BY CARRIE RUSSELL.

Fair May had hung her blossoms out
On vine and shrub and tree,
And sent her sunbeams, hand in hand,
Across the azure sea,
When just within an oak tree's shade,
Far in the Western wild,
A mourning mother stood beside
The coffin of her child.

She heeded not the low-breathed hymn,
The simple, heart-felt prayer—
She thought not of the stranger band
That gathered round her there;
But when another footstep came,
She knew the heavy tread;
And saw her husband's bloated form
Close by the precious dead.

One careless look the father gave,
Brushed back a falling tear,
Then laughed a wild and druken laugh,
And staggered from the bier;
While stranger-hands smoothed back the hair,
So dark, and damp, and cold,
And hid the little shrouded form
Beneath the heavy mold.

And then each stranger turned away
And left the mourner there,
Alone in her deep wretchedness
And with her wild despair;
And as she pressed her trembling hands
Against her burning brow,
She murmured, in her agony,
"If God would take me now!

"My child! my child! my darling one!
How can I leave you here?
Without one human eye to watch—
One weeping mourner near!
[illegible] thy prairie grave,
The filling sail will bear me on
Across the shining wave!

"And there, amid the rock-crowned hills,
Where in my girlhood's hours
I heard the wild bird's gushing song,
And plucked the forest flowers—
There I shall miss thy low, sweet voice,
Thy merry, childish play,
The soft light of thy languishing eye,
That drove my gloom away.

"My child! my child! oh who will come
At mellow eventide,
And, with a heart of yearning love,
Sit fondly by thy side?
Oh who will watch the Summer flowers
In graceful beauty wave,
Or hear the wild winds sing around
This lonely prairie grave?

"Oh darling! could I take thee back
Within the old church shade,
Where, eight long, weary years ago,
My eldest born was laid!
But here—oh! here—no human eye
One burning tear will shed—
No aching heart will come to pray
Beside thy lowly bed!

"But ah! my darling, there is One
Who never yet forgot!
And His all-seeing eye will watch
This little, lonely spot!
And I will drive this burning pain
Back from my throbbing brow,
And strive to thank our Father, God,
That he hath called thee now!" [Tribune.

STORY OF A SAILOR.

Four years ago I left the port of Boston, the master of a fine ship bound for China. I was worth ten thousand dollars, and was the husband of a young and handsome wife, whom I had married six months before. When I left her, I promised to return to her in less than a twelvemonth. I took all my money along with me, save enough to support my wife during my absence, for the purpose of trading when in China, on my own

For a long time we were favored [illegible] prosperous winds; but when in the Chinese Sea a terrible storm came upon us, so that in a short time I saw that the vessel must be lost, for we were drifting on the rocks of an unknown shore. I ordered the men to provide each for himself, in the best manner possible, and forget the ship, as it was an impossibility to save her. She struck—a sea threw me on the rock senseless, and the water would have carried me back into a watery grave, had not one of the sailors dragged me further up the rocks.

There were only four of us alive, and when morning came, we found we were on a small uninhabited island, with nothing to eat but the wild fruit common to that portion of the earth. I will not distress you by an account of our sufferings there; suffice it to say, that we remained sixty days before we could make ourselves known to any ship. We were taken to Canton, and there I had to beg; for my money was at the bottom of the sea, and I had not taken the precaution to have it insured.

It was nearly a year before I found a chance to come home, and then I, a captain, was obliged to ship as a common sailor! It was two years from the time I left America that I landed in Boston. I was walking in a hurried manner up one of its streets, when I met my brother-in-law. He could not speak nor move, but he grasped me by the hand, and the tears gushed from his eyes.

"Is my wife alive?"

He said nothing.

Then I wished I had perished with my ship, for I thought that my wife was dead; but he very soon said:

"She is alive."

Then it was my turn to cry for joy. He clung to me, and said:

"Your funeral sermon has been preached, for we thought you were dead for a very long time."

He said my wife was living in our cottage in the interior of the State. It was then 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and I took a train of cars that would carry me withih 25 miles of my wife. Leaving the cars, I hired a boy, though it was night, to drive me home. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when that sweet little cottage of mine appeared in sight. It was a warm moon-light night, and I remember how like a Heaven it looked to me. I got out of the carraige and went to the window of the room where the servant girl slept and gently knocked. She opened the window and asked, "Who was there?"

"Sarah, do you not know me?" said I.

She screamed with fright, for she thought me a ghost, but I told her to unfasten the door and let me in, for I wished to see my wife. She let me in, and gave me a light, and I went up stairs to my wife's room. She lay sleeping quietly. Upon her bosom lay our child, whom I had never seen. She was as beautiful as when I left her, but I could see a mournful expression upon her face. Perhaps she was dreaming of me. I gazed for a long time—I did not make any noise, for I dared not to wake her. At length I imprinted a soft kiss upon the cheek of my child. While doing it, a tear dropping from my eye, fell upon her cheek. Her eyes opened as clearly as though she had not been long sleeping. I saw that she began to be frightened, and I said:

"Mary, it is your husband!"

And she clasped me about my neck and fainted.

But I cannot describe to you that scene. She is now the happy wife of a poor man. I'am endeavoring to accumulate a little property, and then I will leave the sea for ever.

THE LAST DAYS OF EX-PRESIDENT POLK.

An interesting account of the closing scenes in the life of the late President is given by a Nashville correspondent of the Herald. Mr. Polk's fatal illness, it appears, was induced by over-exertion while arranging the details of his spacious mansion, and more directly by placing the books in his large library. For the first three days his complaint, (chronic diarrhea,) which was with him of many years' standing, excited no alarm—but the disease baffling all the skill of his medical advisers, other aid was called in, but to no purpose. Mr. Polk continued gradually to sink day by day. The disease was checked upon him four days before his death, but his constitution was so weakened, that there did not remain recuperative energy enough in the system for healthy reaction. He sank away so slowly and insensibly, that it was eight hours before he died, after the death respirations commenced. He died without a struggle, simply ceasing to breathe, as when deep and quiet sleep falls upon a weary man.

About half [illegible] his death, his venerable mother entered the room, and kneeling by his bedside offered up a beautiful prayer. The scene was strikingly impressive. Major Polk, the President's brother, was also by his bedside, with other members of the family.

On the succeeding day the body lay in state, and the mansion was everywhere shrouded in black. Masonic ceremonies were performed over the corpse before it was encoffined. The coffin bore the simple inscription: "J. K. Polk. Born November, 1795. Died June 15, 1849."

The body was deposited in the Grundy vault, temporarily; but it will soon be removed to a vault on the lawn of the ex-Presidential mansion, where a willow now stands, and over it will be erected a stately marble cenotaph; thus the body of the President from Tennessee will lie entombed in the heart of its Capital. Mr. Polk, by will, the evening before his death, gave the lawn to the State, in perpetuity, for this purpose.

Mr. Polk sent for Rev. Dr. Edgar, of the Presbyterian Church, seven days before his death, desiring to be baptized by him. He said to him impressively:

"Sir, if I had suspected twenty years ago, that I should come to my death-bed unprepared, it would have made me a wretched man; I am about to die, and have not made preparation. I have not even been baptized. Tell me, Sir, can there be any ground for a man thus situated, to hope?"

The conversation fatiguing Mr. Polk too much for him to be then baptized, it was postponed, to take place the next evening; but in the interval, the ex-President recollected that when he was Governor, and lived here, he had held many arguments with Rev. Mr. McFerren, the talented and popular Methodist minister of the place, his warm personal and political friend, and that he had promised him that when he did embrace Christianity, that he, Rev. Mr. McFerren should baptize him. He, therefore, sent for Rev. Dr. Edgar, made known this obligation, expressed his intention to be baptized by his friend the Methodist minister, and accordingly was so consecrated.

Mr. Polk has died worth about $100,000, the bulk of which is settled upon his amiable lady.

STARVATION IN IRELAND.

The increasing numbers of destitute and unemployed Irish emigrants in our midst, give abundant token that the accounts which reach us of suffering and starvation in Ireland, are not exaggerated. In this and the adjoining cities the applications for relief and work, are more numerous the present season than ever before. And the prospect is, that this influx of immigration, so far from abating, will continue to increase at a ratio, restricted only by the lack of vessels to convey to our shores the thousands who are preparing to come.

The details in some of the Irish papers are terrible. A letter from Ballingford gives a fearful picture of affairs in that section of the country. People are dying by the wayside from exhaustion, produced by the want of food; and it is affirmed that dead bodies actually strew the fields and ditches for want of persons to bury them. In the work-house the cholera had appeared, and made terrible havoc. The Galway Vindicator, the Limerick Chronicle, the Nenah Guardian, and other Irish papers, all contain the most harrowing accounts of suffering and death. The population of Ireland, under misrule, starvation and disease, is rapidly wasting away. Thousands flee from the land yearly, and thousands, who cannot escape, remain on the soil to die. It was recently stated by the County Surveyor for Mayo, in the course of an examination before a committee of the House of Lords, that in that county alone, fifty thousand acres of ground, heretofore in cultivation, with an enormous extent of mountainous country, have been abandoned. In 1845, the population was 400,000 and upwards. It has since decreased to 300,000. Of the deficit, 100,000, about 50,000 died through the effects of the famine, 30,000 emigrated to the colonies, and the remaining 20,000 fled to the neighboring counties of England and Scotland. Of the 300,000 still in Mayo, are there only 20,000 families capable of supporting themselves.

Another witness before the same committee, speaking of the plains of Mayo between, said: "Ten years ago, I suppose I am under the mark, when I say the bullocks, heifers, and sheep, grazing in this district were worth £200,000. How many animals did I see (during a ride across these plains)? Not one—not even a herd's cow—not a living thing did I see but a curlew or a plover."

A curious monument of the religious rites of the ancient Gauls, has just been discovered at Suévres. It is an immense block of stone, which various indications show to have been used at the human sacrifice of the Druids. The little city of Suévres contains many other interesting monuments of the times of the Romans and of the middle ages.

TRAVELING IN MEXICO.

An overland emigrant to California gives the following discription of a day's ride among the Mexican mountains:—

A country more broken and wild than we passed over that day cannot possibly be conjectured, and had we been mounted on American horses it would have been impossible to have proceeded. Along one ravine particularly it seemed an impossibility to progress. It was between the bases of two lofty mountains that towered up into the clouds, and whose jutting rocks, under other circumstances, would have inspired awe if not terror. The bed of the ravine was piled with huge stones, and sometimes so far apart that the animals would have to jump from one to the other to clear the chasm between; but they were sure-footed and true, and during the day but two of them fell. Now and then a rock or chasm would cause us to leave the ravine, when we would be forced to ride along the sides of the mountain, so sloping that the animals would lean towards the ascent so far that the upper foot would frequently come in contact with the rocks. Had the animal made the least slip or misstep at such times, itself and rider would have been hurled below upon the rocks, and probably both dashed to pieces. It was while on the side of one of these mountains that we were first inspired with anything like fear. Two rocks lay about six feet apart, and it was necessary to jump from one to the other in order [illegible] immediately thought of dismounting, but the Mexicans having cleared with their animals, the sense of shame predominated over fear, and not to be behind them we made the jump, and cleared it without accident. We were some four hours traveling in and near this ravine. If I had the time and ability, a full description of the country we passed over would be of more interest to you and your readers than anything that could be written from this country.

THE SWALLOW.

The skill employed by birds, beavers, and bees, in the construction of their places of abode was noticed. After several remarks had been made, the Doctor gave the fable of the birds that came to the magpie to learn how to construct a nest; the latter, after much labor, and listening to many objections, flying away, telling them they were too wise to be instructed; and so leaving them as they were found. The point to be established on the occasion was, that man was the only creature that had the power of invention; the birds, &c., having made no improvement since God taught the first how to build. "The nearest approach to reason in animals I was ever witness to," said the Doctor, "was at Ratcliff Close, near Bury, in Lancashire. Looking up to the eaves of a house, I saw a number of swallows' nests in a row, and perceiving no place of ingress, I inquired of Mr. Bealie, the proprietor of the building, how it happened that they assumed such an appearance, when he told me, that in that neighborhood they were designated 'blind nests.' Before the return of the swallows in spring, some sparrows had taken possession of them. On the arrival of the original proprietors, attempts were made to eject the occupants; but the sparrows sat, and maintained possession. Other swallows came to aid the lawful owners; but no power which they possessed would serve the purpose of ejecting the villainous bird! What was the result? The swallows, after various and fruitless attempts, assembled on the roof of the building, and sat for some time as though in grave deliberation; they then flew away, each returning in a few seconds, with mud in its bill, with which they closed up the holes, thus burying the sparrows alive, where, in those nests, they remain entombed to this day." "That," said a friend, smiling, who heard the relation, "was returning evil for evil, with a vengeance." The Doctor, who was one of the last men to act on the lex talionis system himself, commenced to advocate, with no unapt illustration, for the poor, harmless swallows: "What," said he, jocosely, "if a man were to enter my house, take possession of it, and turn my wife and children out of doors, should I not, on finding that I could not eject him, be justified in nailing him in?"

[Everett's Life of Dr. Adam Clarke.

THE COW TREE.

Mr. Lact was the first person who made known in Europe one of the most curious vegetable productions of the equinoxial regions—a tree which yields a kind of milk entirely analogous to that of a cow, and which, for that reason, has been called cow tree. The singular juice, on account of its similitude to the milk of that animal—in place of which Baron Humboldt has seen it used for every domestic purpose on the farm of Barbula—has been admired by every traveler.

This vegetable milk possesses all the physical properties of the milk of animals, only it is a little thicker, and mixes easily with water; it also becomes yellow, and thickens on the surface like cream. When boiled, it does not coagulate, but a thick yellow pellicle is formed on the surface. Acids do not form with this milk any coagulum, as with that of the cow.

If the juice of this valuable tree is so pleasant and nutritive to the natives, how much more grateful must it be to the traveler who penetrates to these high mountainous regions, when exhausted by fatigue, hunger and thirst. On the road from Patito to Puerto-Cabello, all the trees of this species which are met with, exhibit numerous incisions, made by travelers, who anxiously search for them during a journey through these parts. But it is not for its pleasant and nutritive juice alone that the cow tree is valuable; because nature, ever bountiful, has given it a doubly useful property; for beside the fibrin, it likewise contains an abundance of wax, which may be extracted with facility.

NEW USES OF GRANITE.—Those who have taunted New-England with producing nothing but granite may change their tune. A Mr. McDonald, in Scotland, has discovered a method of calcining granite to a fine clay of extraordinary strength for pottery, especially for making water-pipes, some of which are as large as 18 inches bore. And a discovery has been made in Ireland, that the granite on an extent of 70 miles in Wexford contains so large a proportion of potash, that the alkali can be extracted by a chemical process, so as to become an article of commerce. It is estimated that there are 2,000 tons of potash, the produce of America, consumed annually in England and Scotland, the present cost of which is £40 per ton; and that by working the granite of Darkley, which extends inland to Sandyford, the same quantity could be extracted by means of the capital of $10,000, and sold at £20 per ton, yielding a revenue of £40,000, to remunerate the capitalist and diffuse the blessings of employment among the people, and not only render it quite impossible for the Americans to compete with the Irish, but really push an Irish trade in potash into the American Continent. [Dublin Evening Post.

SENSE OF RESPONSIBILITY IN CAMELS.

The camels with which I traversed this part of the desert were very different in their ways and habits from those which you get on a frequented route. They were never led. There was not the slightest sign of a track on this part of the desert, but the camels never failed to choose the right line. By the direction taken at starting, they knew, I suppose, the point (some encampment) for which they were to make. There is always a leading camel, (generally, I believe, the eldest,) that marches foremost, and determines the path for the whole party. If it happens that no one of the camels has been accustomed to lead the others, there is very great difficulty in making a start. If you force your beast forward for a moment he will contrive to wheel, and draw back, at the same time looking at one of the other camels, with an expression and gesture exactly equivalent to "apres vous." The responsibility of finding the way is evidently assumed very unwillingly.

After some time, however, it becomes understood that one of the beasts has reluctantly consented to take the lead, and he accordingly advances for that purpose. For a minute or two he goes on with much indecision, taking first one line and then another, but soon, by the aid of some mysterious sense, he discovers the true direction, and follows it steadily from morning to night. When once the leadership is established, you cannot by any persuasion, and can scarcely by any force, induce a junior camel to walk one single step in advance of the chosen guide. [Traces of Travel.

MINNESOTA TERRITORY.

Correspondence of the Missouri Republican.

This is a very desirable and healthy territory, situated between the 43 degree north latitude, and the British possessions of the North, is settled mostly by Yankees of stirring industry. Everybody is hearty, hale and lively, no sickness—no disease—and no idlers—all seem busy and happy. They have everything good to eat, and well cooked, and as far as the 47th degree north, I find every twenty miles a comfortable cabin, built within the last six months, tenanted with smiling countenances who seem contented. I find some old settlers who have intermarried with the Indians, and know how to cook and dress like Americans. I ate of their cooking, and found it good and healthy. There are many Indians all along the streams, and we see them every day in crowds as we ride along—they are friendly and well disposed. There are some of the most beautiful lakes and rivers here I ever saw, with green bottoms, which afford some of the finest fish—trout in abundance. There is a great demand for all kinds of mechanics, who obtain the highest wages. There is a great demand for good cows, cattle, horses, and mules, which command a round price. No one can fail to do well here that has "any do" or energy of character in him, but you cannot drink liquor here; it don't agree with the country or you—you don't need it or want it.

AN INDIAN GRAVE.—On Tuesday last, says the Port Hope (Upper Canada) Advertiser, as some laborers were employed at Mr. Waddell's new house on the hill, they came upon an Indian grave. The skeleton was nearly perfect, and by its side lay that of a dog—no doubt the faithful companion of the red man's last days upon earth. A gun-barrel, almost wholly corroded, with a part of the ramrod, a knife, a brass kettle, and a large number of beads, were found, as also a beautiful carved stone pipe, surmounted on the far side by a well-executed human head. The bones of his lower extremities were quite perfect, with the exception of the feet, and would give the height of their former possessor upward of six feet. Some hair of the dog was also found. The probability is, that the grave is not less than 60 years old, and possibly may have been 100. The whole hill has been a cemetery for their race now almost extinct; at distances along its whole range, for nearly a mile, skeletons have been exhumed, from time to time, during the process of road-making, or excavating cellars, &c. Some handsome and valuable silver ornaments were found near the present grave a few years since.

AN INDIAN BURIAL GROUND IN NEW JERSEY.—The Boston Cultivator says, it appears by the Burlington Gazette, that an Indian skeleton was revealed to some workmen engaged recently in leveling the ground for a house at the new village of Beverly, a few miles below on the Delaware. The body lay about two feet below the surface, on the edge of a knoll facing the north, and had been buried in a sitting posture. The teeth were perfectly sound, the skull entire, but most of the bones were broken, showing that a long period of time had passed since they had been deposited in the ground. An old Indian pipe was found with the bones. Subsequent discoveries show that the spot where the skeleton was discovered, was formerly an Indian burial ground. Some ten or a dozen skeletons have been exhumed, and near the spot about half a bushel of arrow heads. One skeleton was disinterred, with brass ornaments round the arms and legs, and clay pipe, skulls, &c., and even the color of the clothing in which it had been buried was distinctly visible. The body had been buried in a red or scarlet blanket."

THE OLDEST SENATOR.—The oldest Senator in Congress is Mr. William S. King, of Alabama. The Senator longest in Congress is Col. Benton, of Missouri. At one time Colonel Benton was toasted as the "father of the Senate." He denied the "soft impeachment," and transferred the honor to Col. King, who was, as anterior in service, entitled to the soubriquet of "father of the Senate." "But," added Col. Benton, "I regret to add, that my friend—a homeless bachelor—is father of nothing else!"

SUN-STROKE, OR "COUP DE SOLEIL."—Dr. J. S. Kilbourne, through the New York Tribune, gives the following account of the nature and mode of treating what is commonly called Sun-stroke:—

Sun-stroke consists essentially in a paralysis of the nerves that supply the heart. These nerves are principally from the eighth pair or "par vagum," which arise from the medulla oblongata, at the base of the brain. Hence it is that in this affection we get symptoms similar to those that result from "concussion of the brain." The danger of this disease is just in proportion to the degree of paralysis.

As the disease consists in a want of action of the heart, common sense, without any physiological knowledge, would suggest the appropriate mode of treatment, viz. stimulants and counter-irritation. Place the patient on his back, in a horizontal position—give him fresh air; keep him well covered and warm; apply cold water to his head—hot bricks, sand, &c., to his feet and around him—frictions, mustard, to the pit of the stomach and extremities. Internally give stimulants—as brandy, ether, ammonia, capsicum, &c.

OZONE.—The Alexandria Gazette acknowledges its obligations to Caleb S. Hallowell of that place for the following remarks on Ozone:

"Ozone, to which Dr. Bird accredits the cholera, was discovered by Professor Schonbein, the inventor of gun cotton. It is generated by the passage of electricity through the air, and is the cause of the peculiar odor perceived during the working of an electric machine, or after a stroke of lightning. It bleaches powerfully, and is in many respects analogous to chlorine.

"Ozone, it is said, may readily be generated by exposing common phosphorus to moist air, and it is probable that the peculiar smell arises partially or wholly from the presence of this substance.

"The question has been asked, what is ozone? In answer we give the words of Berzelious: 'We have thus arrived at the highly important result, that ozone is no peculiar element, nor any combination of known elements, but is oxygen gas peculiarly modified.'

"Leach has asserted, that galvanized air, owing to the ozone it contains, can be used to advantage for bleaching, and is, in fact, one of the most effective bleeching agents known."

ARTIFICIAL MAHOGANY.—The following method of giving any species of wood of a close grain the appearance of mahogany in texture, density, and polish, is said to be practiced in France, with such success, that the best judges are incapable of distinguishing between the imitation and the mahogany. The surface is first planed smooth, and the wood is then rubbed with a solution of nitrous acid. One ounce of dragon's blood is dissolved in nearly a pint of spirits of wine; this and one-third of an ounce of carbonate of soda are then to be mixed together, and filtered, and the liquid in this thin state is to be laid on with a soft brush. This process is to be repeated, and in a short interval afterward the wood possesses the external appearance of mahogany. When the polish diminishes in brilliancy, it may be restored by the use of a little cold drawn linseed oil.

PATENT SAFETY BRIDLE.—Mr. Henry Seitz, of Marietta, Lancaster county, Pa., is the inventor of a very ingenius bridle, for which letters patent were recently granted, whereby it is utterly impossible for a spirited horse to kick or run away, and perfectly safe for a lady to drive or ride. The principle on which it is constructed is to hold the horse by the application of a pully around which the reins are made to pass at the side of the horse's mouth, which enables the rider to exert a great deal of lever power to control the mouth of the animal, and to check him at any moment. We consider this a very useful improvement, as with some horses, especially when they are young, the old curb, when pulled, makes them to rear and pitch, to the great danger of the rider. This bridle effectually remedies this evil.

ORIGIN OF THE ST. LOUIS FIRE.—The St. Louis papers publish the affidavit of Henry Fredericks, the watchman of the steamboat White Cloud, in which the recent fire had its origin. On the night of the conflagration he went on board the boat at 7 1-2 o'clock, and met an Irishman coming off, who told him he had been looking for a friend. On examination he did not discover that the Irishman had done any injury, but about two hours after, the fire broke out. While it was burning, Charles Blount, carpenter of another boat, came and told him that he had known for three days that the White Cloud was to be burned, and wished he had the money paid for setting her on fire. This Charles Blount has left St. Louis for New Orleans, but the authorities have taken measures to secure his arrest.

One of the most formidable corps in the Magyar army is that of the Horse-breakers (Czikes) which are in no respect inferior to their South-American brothers, in the art of using the lasso. This corps is regularly organized. Its mode of fighting consists in throwing a cord, from a great distance, which entangles the enemy, and which, moreover being armed with an iron hook, inflicts the most horrid wounds.

According to the Puritan Recorder, there are now in Massachusetts eight Congregational Pastors who have preached their fiftieth anniversary sermons. The Recorder says this number will not seem small when it is considered that of the 450 Orthodox churches existing in the Commonwealth, full one-half have been organized within 35 years.

There was never a greater number of suicides in France than at present. Not only the epidemic suicides, which seem to ravage different countries at intervals, and then disappear together with the causes that produced them; but a frightful abundance of voluntary deaths, which take place every year, every month, every day, with almost mathematical regularity.

The Washington Globe remarks that many an old hat has gone to an evening party, and came out as good as new.

The mind, as well as the body, is strengthened by moderate and well-timed exercise of its powers.

Nineveh and its Remains.

With an account of a visit to the Chaldean Christians of Kurdistan and the Yezidis, or Devil Worshipers, and an inquiry into the Manners and Arts of the ancient Assyrians.

BY AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, ESQ., D. C. L.

WITH an Introductory Letter, by Rev. Edward Robinson, D. D., author of "Biblical Researches in Palestine," &c. In 2 vols., with about 100 illustrations. $4 50.

 Every word of the text and a FAC-SIMILE of ALL the ILLUSTRATIONS and MAPS of the English edition will be given in this.

"Taking this only as a book of travels, we have read none for a long time more interesting and instructive. In his dissertations he is full and copious without being tedious; his style is plain, vigorous, and particularly unaffected; it is the natural language of a strong mind fully master of its subject, and warmed and enlivened, without being inflated or kindled into rhapsody by the enthusiastic, without which he would never have conceived or achieved his wonderful task."—Quarterly Review

"We repeat, that there has been no such picture in any modern book of travels. Park is not braver or more adventurous, Burkhardt is not more truthful, Eothen not more gay or picturesque than the hero of the book before us."—London Examiner.

"This is, we think, the most extraordinary work of the present age, whether with reference to the wonderful discoveries it describes, its remarkable verification of our early biblical history, or of the talent, courage, and perseverance of its author. It is impossible to read his work without finding our minds absorbed in wonder at the development of that period, and of its work of art, where one of the early descendants of Noah 'built Nineveh, and the city of Rehoboth, and Calah, and Rossen, between Nineveh and Calah, the same being a great city.'—(Genesis 10th, 11th, and 12th verses.)

"We will only add, in conclusion, that in these days, when the fulfillment of the prophecy is engaging so much attention, we cannot but consider that the work of Mr. Layard will be found to afford many extraordinary proofs of biblical history, and of the extreme accuracy of the denunciations of the Prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, against the kings of Assyria, and of the destruction of Nineveh in particular. Even the colors and decorations, as found in the palace of Nimroud, agree exactly with those described by the Prophet Ezekiel. The circumference of Nineveh, as mentioned by the Prophet Isaiah, was found by Mr. Layard to be extremely accurate, and the connection of the Assyrians with the Jews was clearly ascertained. The history also of the Kings of Assyria, as shown on the various sculptures, is highly interesting, and throws great light on the manners of that ancient people."—The Times, (London,) Feb. 9, 1849.

"Of the historical value of his discoveries, too high an estimate can hardly be formed."—N. Y. Recorder.

"We cannot doubt it will find its way into the hands of scholars and thinkers at once, and we shall be surprised if it does not prove to be one of the most popular, as it certainly is one of the most useful issues of the season."—Evangelist.

"As a record of discoveries, it is equally wonderful and important; confirming in many particulars the incidental histories of Sacred Writ, 'disentombing temple-palaces from the sepulcher of ages, and recovering the metropolis of a wonderful nation from the long night of oblivion.'"—Com. Advertiser.

"It has been truly said, that the narrative is like a romance. In its incidents and descriptions it does indeed remind one continually of an Arabian tale of wonders and genii."—Dr. Robinson, in Introductory Note.

"The work of Mr. Layard has two prominent and distinct characters. Its narration of wonderful discoveries is of high and absorbing interest; but as a book of modern travels, abounding in lively and piquant descriptions of the manners and habits of a people always regarded with intense interest, it is second to none."—Democratic Review.

"We can recommend it as a valuable work."—Observer.

Orders received by all Booksellers.

G. P. PUTNAM, Publisher,
155 Broadway, New York.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Instructor in Natural Sciences.
AURELIA F. ROGERS, Preceptress.
MARY M. CLARK, Teacher of Music and Painting.
Other experienced Teachers are employed as Assistants.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First,	commencing Wed., Aug. 23,	ending Nov. 29.
Second,	" " Dec. 13,	" March 21.
Third,	" " April 4,	" July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

TUITION, according to studies,	$3, $4, or $5 00
EXTRAS—Drawing,	1 00
Painting,	$2 00 or 4 00
Tuition on Piano,	8 00
Use of Piano,	2 00
Chemical Lectures, and Experiments,	1 00
Writing, including Stationery,	50
Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, bedstead,	1 50
Board in private families, per week,	$1 00 to 1 50

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

Text books furnished at the lowest price.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

IRA SPENCER, M. D.,
President of the Board of Trustees.

DERUYTER, Madison Co., N. Y., June 12, 1848.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—S. P. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to
GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

W. B. Gillette

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 4.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JULY 12, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 264.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

REVIEW OF MAHAN ON THE SABBATH.

We have just been favored with a copy of a work recently published on Moral Science, by Rev. Asa Mahan, President of the Oberlin Collegiate Institute. As might have been expected, the subject of the Sabbath has not escaped the author's notice. Although we are willing to do great deference to the abilities of the man, and award to him that full measure of sincerity in the expression of his views which we claim for ourselves in opposing them, yet we have seldom seen an article embracing so little satisfactory evidence in favor of the positions assumed. He assumes:—

1st. "That there is, under the present dispensation, a Sabbath."

2d. "That the seventh day, as such a Sabbath, has been repealed by divine authority expressed and implied."

3d. "That the first day of the week is the present Sabbath."

For proof of the first proposition, he refers to the original institution as of perpetual obligation, and of universal application. He says:—

"The Sabbath was originally given, not to one people, but to the race. The fact that the account of the origin of the institution is connected with that of the creation, itself, is sufficient evidence that its origin is coeval with that of the race, and that it was not designed for any one people alone, but for the entire race of man." P. 247.

"The reason assigned for the institution, marks it as designed for the race. What if the Most High had said, 'I finished the work of creation in six days, and rested on the seventh for this reason; I now, thousands of years after the creation, sanctify this day as an institution of temporary obligation for one, the least, almost, of all the branches of the human race!' No man having any proper respect for the Scriptures can put such a construction upon such a passage."

"We might with the same propriety argue that any of the other ten commandments was given to the Jews alone, as precepts of temporary obligation, as to affirm that the Sabbath was thus given." P. 248.

We of course agree to all this, but cannot avoid noticing the contrast when the foregoing are compared with some following paragraphs. On page 254, in commenting upon Col. 2: 16, he says:—

"Now if the term 'Sabbath' here employed refers to the seventh day, or to the Jewish Sabbath," &c.

Again, he calls the seventh day the Jewish Sabbath, on page 255, in explaining Rev. 1: 10:—

"This (Lord's day) could not have been the seventh day of the week, or the Jewish Sabbath."

Now, what does the term "Jewish Sabbath" mean? Why, surely, a Sabbath peculiar to the Jews. But if, as the author has shown, it was a Sabbath for the entire race of man, it could not have been a "Jewish Sabbath," unless it be shown that the Jews constiuted the entire race of man.

The following passage, commencing on page 249, deserves particular attention:—

"The reason originally assigned for the institution requires to be specially noticed. 'And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it He rested from all his works which God had created and made.' The reason here assigned, as well as that assigned by our Saviour, designates the institution as of changeless obligation. As long as creation should stand before the creatures of God, as his grand work, the reason for observing the institution on the seventh, instead of any other day of the week, would remain unchanged. If, on the other hand, the time should come when God should perform a work infinitely more important than the creation, such an occurrence would demand, not a destruction of the institution, but a change from the seventh to the day when this last and crowning work was completed. Such an occurrence as the above, however, instead of being a reason for the abrogation of the Sabbath itself, would be an additional reason, of infinite weight, for its continued observance on a different day."

We agree with the author, that the reason assigned for the institution designates it as of changeless obligation. But what was the institution, predicated on the reason that God rested on the seventh day? To institute means, "to establish, to fix, to appoint." An institution, then, is "something established, fixed, appointed." In the present instance, the act of instituting was the appointing of a day. The institution was the day appointed. The day appointed was the seventh day. Therefore the seventh day was the institution. We state the case thus: 1st. The institution is of changeless obligation. 2d. The seventh day is the institution. 3d. Therefore the seventh day is of changeless obligation. It was the day which God sanctified; or, in the words of the author, (page 247,) which he set apart from a secular to a religious use. It was the day which God blessed, or which, as the author says, he ordained as a day of special blessing to all who would duly observe it.

Thus it appears, that the sanctification and the blessing both rest upon the seventh day, and upon that alone. Whoever would tear them from that day, seeks to put asunder what God has joined together. It is in vain to say, that it was the Sabbath which was sanctified and blessed, irrespective of the day, for this were not only a denial of the word of God, but an absurdity in itself. If we substitute the term Sabbath (which means rest) for the term seventh, we shall have rest day as the day which was blessed. But it is the day still, and not the rest, which is only an adjective denoting what day was blessed, viz. the rest day of God, the seventh day of the week. When the day was sanctified, or set apart, that moment it became an institution. The institution was then blessed by attaching to it, inseparably, the condition of rest, in imitation of God's rest.—To say, then, that it was the Sabbath, or rest, that God blessed, is the same as saying that he blessed the blessing, for the rest was the blessing.

"As long as creation should stand as his grand work, the reason for observing the institution on the seventh instead of any other day would remain unchanged."

Assenting to this proposition, we propose still farther, that inasmuch as the fact that God rested on the seventh day was the reason of its sanctification, it will remain sanctified so long as that remains a fact. That God rested on the seventh day is as true today, and will be myriads of ages hence, as when the shades of night fell upon the first Sabbath of the Lord our God. It is, and will be to all time, the Sabbath of the Lord. It stands, an imposing memorial of God's creative power—a monument, to perpetuate that sublime display of Omnipotence, when from nothing this mighty orb sprang to being—when an inert mass of clay leaped into conscious existence, clothed in the attributes of Deity. When presumptuous Atheism shall declare, that all came by accident, this ever-enduring monument, from its cloud-capped summit, rebukes the impious lie, and declares, "I am the Lord thy God."

As regards the proposition, that when some event more important than creation should transpire, it would not destroy the institution, but demand a change to the day on which the event transpired, we remark:

1st. We have shown the Sabbath to be commemorative of God's rest from creative works, and therefore the seventh day. Now, as no other day could have been instituted in commemoration of that rest but the day on which the rest occurred, it follows, as an irresistible conclusion, that the institution ceases the moment that the seventh day is left out of the calculation. There was but one rest-day, and consequently but one day sanctified as a commemorative institution. There was but one reason assigned for the sanctification of a day, and that reason inseparable from the seventh day. There is, then, no reason in the nature of things for the sanctification of any other day as a rest day than the day on which God rested. God restad on the seventh day. The Sabbath and the seventh day, therefore, are inseparable.

2d. The reason for the Sabbath, says the author, designates it as of changeless obligation. Now, still adhering to the original reason for the institution, we ask, How are we to get over the change? The argument is neither more nor less than this:—1st. God appointed a day for a rest day, because he himself rested on that day. 2d. The day thus appointed was the seventh day. Conclusion, therefore the first day is the rest day.

3d. To maintain that the Sabbath is of changeless obligation, because God rested on the seventh day, and sanctified it for that reason, as a memorial of the work of creation, is a palpable violation of all the laws of association upon which monumental institutions rest, and which alone give them efficacy as such, unless that identical Sabbath day be maintained. What would we think of commemorating Washington's birth day on the 5th of June, or our nations' birth day on the 20th of September? It was on the 22d of February that Washington was born, and no other day is entitled to the honor which a grateful people bestow on that. It was on the seventh day of the week that a finished world spread its beauties before its great Creator. Other days may have their own honors—honors, it may be, far surpassing those with which God has crowned this; but whoever dares to pluck the wreath from this, to clothe another, is an impious intruder upon God's own prerogatives.

We have no disposition to deny that some greater event than creation has occurred, but yet we cannot see how mortal man can determine the relative lengths of two lines, both of which stretch far into the mists of infinity. If redemption be "infinitely more important than creation," then creation must be infinitely less than redemption. Now we ask, how can an institution exactly adapted to commemorate an infinitely small event, appropriately commemorate one infinitely large? We proportion our honors to the events or persons honored; and this is right. What would we think, were our nation to make the same display on the birth day of Washington's horse, as on his own? We should at once call it unnatural. So we affirm, that if redemption so much exceeds creation, then the honors of that day should as much exceed the honors of the original rest day. Again, we affirm, that the day now observed by the mass of Christians is not the day on which the great work of redemption was completed. We have no disposition to deny that Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week, (though we do not believe it can be shown by any fair interpretation of Scripture,) for we consider that event as having no bearing whatever on this controversy. The author claims that the change be made "from the seventh to the day when this last and crowning work was completed." Now we think this crowning work was completed when the blessed Son of God bowed his head and yielded up his spirit, saying, "It is finished." By his tragical death, God was reconciled to man, and redemption purchased for every believing soul. The work of redemption was then completed, full satisfaction was made to the justice of God, and the world which deserved to die was saved from death by this merciful substitution. The lamb of God was sacrificed (put to death) to take away the sin of the world, and it was done.—"He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9: 26. "We have redemption through his blood." Eph. 1: 7. This sentiment runs through the whole Bible. "He gave his life a ransom for many." "While we were yet sinners, he died for us." "We who were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ." These texts, with numerous others, most clearly demonstrate the proposition, that the work which the Father sent him to do was completed when he died. If he died for, or instead of, the world, then the world was redeemed from death when he died. This is a case of absolute necessity, for it was absolutely necessary that Christ should die for the world to be saved from death. If, then, Christ must die for us, we live only through his death. He was the substance and end of all the types and the legal dispensation. His death was the great sacrifice to which they pointed—the ushering in of a merciful dispensation, the rending of the veil, the opening of prison doors, the full and complete redemption of every believer.

Now, if we adopt the author's rule, and change the institution to the day on which this last grand work was completed, we must observe the day on which Christ said it was finished or completed, viz. on the day of his death. Whatever day this was, it is quite certain that it was not the first day of the week.

In thus recognizing the death of Christ as the grand and crowning work of redemption, we mean no indifference to that other glorious event, the resurrection. It was indeed glorious. It was, and ever is to be, the assured seal and earnest of the living again of those who sleep in Jesus—a sure guaranty that this body, though it moulder back to dust, shall not be lost, but shall finally come up from its slumbering to life everlasting. The resurrection was also a glorious demonstration of the divinity of that mission which he finished on the cross. Those, then, who observe the resurrection day in remembrance of the grand scheme of redemption, do in reality only commemorate one of the witnesses that such a scheme was divine. Glorious and grand as was the plan of redemption, completed on the cross, and attested by the forsaken tomb and the rising Lord, we cannot consent that it should rob another event of its commemorative institution, and appropriate it to itself. Nor is this necessary; for God, willing that the creation of the world should still be remembered, and commemorated by its own time-honored and appropriate institution, the seventh day, did ordain for this new event its own remembrancer, fitted exactly to its own character, leaving the Sabbath, as it ever hand been, a monument of creative power. The Lord's Supper is the institution, and the only one, appointed by God in commemoration of redemption. To this it is peculiarly adapted. "Take, eat, this is my body which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me." Also of the cup, "This do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me." 1 Cor. 11: 24, 25. What event in his life was this to commemorate? "For as often as ye do eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." We have found abundant Scripture testimony that redemption was completed when the Son of God poured out his blood for sinners, and that God has ordained the Lord's Supper in commemoration of that event. What, then, becomes of the author's declaration, that God has ordained the Sabbath in commemoration of that event, and that too on a day remote from the day on which that event was consummated? Is God so destitute of ways and means, that he must transfer an institution from one event over to another, to commemorate it, leaving the first uncommemorated? Then verily is the universe in unsafe hands. If the Sabbath may be moved thus from one event to another once, then there is no reason why it may not again, and no mortal can tell how soon redemption may be without a remembrancer, as creation certainly is, if, as the author says, the Sabbath has passed from it to a more recent event.

[To be continued.]

◆

Rev. J. A. James' Conversion.—If the present lecturer, says Rev. J. A. James, has a right to consider himself a real Christian—if he has been of any service to his fellow creatures, and has attained to any usefulness in the Church of Christ, he owes it in the way of means and instrumentality to the sight of a companion, who slept in the same room with him, bending his knees in prayer on retiring to rest. That scene, so unostentatious, and yet so unconcealed, roused my slumbering conscience, sent an arrow to my heart; for though I had been religiously educated, I had restrained prayer, and cast off the fear of God; my conversion to God followed, and soon after my entrance upon College studies for the work of the ministry. Nearly half a century has rolled away since then, with all its multitudinous events; but that little chamber, that humble couch, that praying youth, are still present to my imagination, and will never be forgotten, even amidst the splendor of heaven, and through the ages of eternity.

THE INQUIRY.

Tell me, ye winged winds,
  That round my pathway roar,
Do ye not know some spot
  Where mortals weep no more?
Some lone and pleasant dell,
  Some valley in the West,
Where, free from toil and pain,
  The weary are at rest?
The loud wind dwindled to a whisper low,
And sighed for pity as it answered "NO."

Tell me, thou mighty deep,
  Where billows round me play,
Knowest thou some favored spot,
  Some island far away,
Where weary man may find
  The bliss for which he sighs—
Where sorrow never lives,
  And friendship never dies?
The loud waves rolling in perpetual flow,
Stopped for a while, and sighed to answer "NO."

And thou, serenest moon,
  That with such lovely face
Dost look upon the earth,
  Tell me, in all thy rounds,
  Hast thou not seen some spot
Where miserable man
  May find a happier lot?
Behind a cloud the moon withdrew in woe,
And in sweet voice, but sad, responded "NO."

Tell me, my secret soul,
  O! tell me Hope and Faith,
Is there no resting-place
  From sorrow, sin, and death?
Is there no happy spot,
  Where mortals may be blessed,
Where grief may find a balm,
  And weariness a rest?
Faith, Hope, and Love, best boons to mortals given,
Waved their bright wings, and whispered, "YES, IN HEAVEN."

◆

CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

The following inquiries appeared some time ago in the Recorder, viz:—

1st. Ought a distinction to be made between public and private trespasses, in the discipline of the church?

2d. Does the Bible invest the management or discipline of the church in the brethren and sisters, or in the brethren alone.

I wish to suggest a few thoughts upon the subject of these queries.

I. Correct views, of church organization and discipline, are identified with the prosperity of the church. Church discipline is the right application of right principles to wrong conduct. An offense, or trespass, is the transgression of some law of Christ's kingdom. Offenses may be classified as follows:—

1st. Minor, or small offenses, such as must be endured.

2d. Private, such as cannot be proved.

3d. Personal, where one member injures another, in his person, property, or reputation, and proof is at hand.

4th. Public, where all are equally injured, and therefore all require satisfaction.

5th. Insufferable, such as require immediate exclusion.

1. Under the head of minor offenses, I would include what are commonly, although often improperly, called imperfections, such as illiberality, levity, backwardness, irritability, obtrusiveness, want of devotion, tenacity in one's own way, backing out of responsibility, &c. That many of the above offenses, and others not named, are to be endured with patience, is certain, unless removed by gentle rebukes. If such erring ones cannot be reclaimed, those that are strong must bear the infirmities of the weak. Yet it is proper to say, that there are cases where members are to be excluded, while we may acknowledge them as Christians. The church, as well as private individuals, is to avoid conniving at the appearance of evil.

2. Private offenses, or offenses in relation to which there is no proof. Solomon says, "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor himself, and discover not a secret to another." In the mouth of witnesses, facts are to be established. The rule in such cases I understand to be this: The offended member is to go to the offender, and tell him his fault. If he acknowledges it with sorrow, the offender is gained. But suppose he denies the charge, although it is true, what then? Leave it with him and his God. Discover not this secret to another. For, suppose you take one or two more, and in their presence make the charge; it is denied; and how can these two decide, without evidence? They cannot, but would become witnesses against him who made the charge. Thus the innocent member might be proceeded against, and, as he could not acknowledge he had told any thing but the truth, he would of necessity be excluded. For what? For bringing a charge which he could not sustain according to the law of Christ's kingdom, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. Some, indeed, maintain, that it is their duty to make the exposure, and leave the event with God. But that God designed guilt to be established by proof is certain. See Deut. 19: 15. Num. 35: 30. Deut. 17: 6. 1 Tim. 5: 19. Matt. 18: 16. 2 Cor. 13: 1. Heb. 10: 28. Prov. 25: 8—10.

3. Personal offenses, concerning which proof can be adduced. The rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew is the only guide in such cases. The aggrieved member is first to go and tell or convince the offender of his wrong, if possible; fairly state the matter, and state also the sources of proof. If not successful in gaining the offender, one or two more are to be called in, when the same complaint is to be made in their presence. If not successful here, the thing is to be carried to the church, before which body the complaint ought to be submitted in writing.

4. Public offenses. Under this head I include heretics, or those who head a faction, or cause divisions—covetousness, railing, slandering, covenant-breaking, neglect of the duties of church relation, non-submission to majority, neglect of Sabbath worship, also of the Lord's Supper, neglecting to labor with a member who has done an injury, neglecting to meet monied contracts, Sabbath-breaking, backbiting, &c. Now, although the rule in the 18th chapter of Matthew is primarily applicable to cases of personal offense, yet I am of the opinion, that it is of equal utility in cases of public scandal. I am aware that the general way is for the church to appoint a committee of inquiry. But to this there are serious objections. In the first place, it supposes a communication has been made to the church of a reported offense. If the report be true, surely the direction in Matthew would have superseded the necessity of a committee, for that course followed includes a committee. If the report be not true, the supposed offender is most unjustly slandered and injured by the communication made, and the appointment of the committee of inquiry. In the second place, the practice of sending committees has not the sanction of precept or example, I think, in the Bible, which the rule in Matthew has, and it is equally applicable to a public as to a private offense. Nothing but an absolute impossibility of obeying the rule given in Matthew, therefore, ought to lead to its neglect in a case of public offense. And I ask, what right has the church to introduce the committee rule without any sanction from the Bible?

5. Offenses insufferable, like the case of incest, in the church of Corinth, are to be treated in a similar manner, both in the exclusion, and, when penitent, restoration.

II. In whom is the government of a church invested—in all of its members, or in the brethren alone? Says Neander, "As Christianity did not invalidate the laws of our original creation, it did not allow the female sex to step out of the peculiar habits indicated for it by nature herself." Paul says, "Let the woman learn in silence, with all subjection;" "I suffer not a woman to teach or usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence." Here is an actual prohibition, except in cases of extraordinary prophetical impulse, as recorded in 1 Cor. 11: 5. I am of the opinion, that the Scriptures do not impose upon the sisters the arduous task and duty of administering the government and discipline of the church, but that this responsibility rests solely on the brethren. Nor does the exclusion of the females imply any thing derogatory to them, or menial. On the contrary, it is, and ought to be considered, an exemption by the Head of the Church from a most awful responsibility. Says the author of Church Polity, "This unscriptural notion originated, probably, in that spurious delicacy which induces some ministers, on baptismal occasions, to administer the ordinance to the women first."

ECCLESIASTICUS.

◆

SINGULAR RENCOUNTRE.

A short time since, a poor woman living in Manchester, had the good fortune to learn that a legacy of £200 had been left her by a deceased relative; and finding that it would be necessary that her husband, who was in America, should be present before the money could be paid, wrote to him to come back, which he did, and he met her by appointment in Liverpool not many days ago and drew the money. The wife, conceiving, now that they were in possession of so much money, that there could not be any objection to her returning to America with him, proposed to do so, to which he made no objection, but having the greater part of the £200 in his pocket, he managed to give her the slip. Wandering through the streets in search of him, she attracted the attention of a female standing at the door of a lodging-house, and appearing to await the arrival of a second party. The female, observing her to be weary, invited her in, and asked her to partake of refreshments, saying that she had been making merry, that her husband had come from America, and had drawn a legacy of £200 in Manchester, and was that day expected in Liverpool. These, with other particulars, roused the real wife's suspicions, which were soon cofirmed by the husband entering the house in a state of intoxication. A scene ensued, the two wives asserted their claims, but the new wife and the husband, being both overcome by the superabundance of good things they had taken, were helpless, and soon fell asleep. The first wife, who had merely partaken of moderate refreshment, coolly bethought herself of searching her husband's pockets, and found there £190, with which she forthwith started for Manchester, leaving the drunken couple to enjoy their meditations when they awoke. [English paper.

From the London Times.

DESCRIPTION OF LIBERIA.

The colony of Liberia lies midway between Sierra Leone and Cape Palmas, and was established by the American Colonization Society in 1820, by an immigration of free or liberated people of color in the United States. Since that period, its population, including the aborigines who have incorporated themselves with the immigrants, has increased to upwards of 80,000, while the land they occupy extends along 920 miles of coast, and reaches, on an average, about 80 miles into the interior. The proportion of the population born in America, or of American descent, is estimated at about 10,000, and such has been the effect of their example and influence, that out of the remaining 70,000, consisting of aborigines or of captives released from slavers, at least 50,000 can speak [illegible] understand [illegible] while their habits are rapidly becoming those of civilized and steady agriculturists. The desire for education is also manifested by the surrounding tribes, and instances are not uncommon of natives sending their children four or five hundred miles from the interior, to be instructed in the primary schools established in the Republic. Of these there are thirty-six in operation, with an average attendance in each of about forty aboriginal pupils.

The whole of the territory of Liberia has been purchased from time to time from the aboriginal owners, and in this way at least twenty petty sovereignties have been extinguished. In its former condition, the coast was the constant resort of slavers; but the traffic is now effectually surpressed as far as the jurisdiction of the Republic extends, and its entire abandonment is an invariable stipulation in every treaty of trade and protection into which the Republic may consent to enter with neighboring States. The disposition to avail themselves of treaties of this description is plainly on the increase on the part of the surrounding natives; and, it is estimated that not less than 2,000,000 of persons in the interior now obtain their supply of European goods from the Republic, and from the kindred colony, Cape Palmas. Last year eighty-two foreign vessels visited Liberia, and exchanged merchandize, for articles of African production, to the amount of $600,000.

The natural resources of Liberia are immense, and are steadily in progress of development. The principal articles of export are ivory, palm oil, (of which $140,000 worth was shipped in 1847,) camwood, gold dust, &c. Coffee is indigenous, and of excellent quality, and is now being cultivated extensively. It yields more than in the West Indies; and the belief is [illegible] slave-labor. Sugar also thrives well, but enough only is grown for home consumption, and there is no present hope of competing with Cuba or Brazil. Cocoa has just been introduced, and promises well. Cotton, it is expected, will soon become an article of export. Indigo, ginger, arrowroot, and various other articles of commerce, likewise grow luxuriantly. Rich metallic mines exist in the country, and only require capital to open them up.

The population is, upon the whole, well disposed to work, and the rate of wages per day is about 1s. sterling. It is an extraordinary feature of this part of the coast, that horses and other draught animals will not live, and hence every kind of transport, except that upon the rivers, is performed by manual labor. Much of the camwood which is exported from Liberia is brought a distance of 200 miles on men's backs. It is seen, however, that this difficulty, which appears a great one at first, may have the effect not only of insuring the people labor, but of stimulating them to every kind of mechanical contrivance by which it may be overcome. The climate of Liberia although more healthy than Sierra Leone, is still deadly to Europeans, but the improvement it has undergone during the last ten years, from the effect of clearing, draining, &c., is stated to have been most remarkable. The colored immigrants from America, who used invariably to suffer from fever on their arrival, are now able to go to work at once. The duration of life amongst the colonists is considered to be about the same as in England.

At Monrovia, the port and capital, the population amounts to about 9,000. A large portion of the territory has been accurately surveyed, and is sold in sections by the government, at from 50 cents to $1 per acre. The government of the country is precisely on the American model, consisting of a President, a Vice-president, a Senate, and House of Representatives, the number of Members in the former being six, and the latter twenty-eight. The possession of real estate to the value of $30, is the electoral qualification. The revenue, which was last year about $20,000, is derived entirely from an ad valorem duty of 6 per cent on imports, and the produce of land sales. Ardent spirits, the use of which it is sought to discourage, form an exception, and are taxed 25 cents per gallon. The principal trade is carried on by barter, but there is a small paper circulation of about $6,000, redeemable on demand.

The organization of the Republic, as an independent state, took place in July last year, when Mr. Roberts, who had formerly acted as Governor under the Colonization Society, was elected President. Speaking of his qualifications, Commodore Perry, of the United States navy, says, in a report to the American Government, dated 184[illegible]:—

"Governor Roberts of Liberia, and Russworm of Cape Palmas, are intelligent and estimable men, executing their responsible functions with wisdom and dignity, and we have in the example of these two gentlemen irrefragable proof of the capability of colored people to govern themselves.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 12, 1849.

Notice.—Seventh-day Baptist Chapel, New York; East Eleventh Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues; Thomas B. Brown, Pastor. Preaching every Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, A. M. The public invited to attend. Seats free.

Persons from abroad, who may be stopping in the lower part of the city, or Brooklyn, are informed, that by taking the cars at the City-Hall, or the Manhattanville stages, they will be left at the head of Eleventh Street, in Fourth Avenue; or, they can stop in Third Avenue, next corner from the Chapel, by taking stages of either of the following lines: Bowery and Third Avenue, Pearl Street and Fulton Ferry, Astoria and Yorkville, or the Harlem stages.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

In compliance with a Call published in the Sabbath Recorder, a meeting was held at New York, on the 23d day of May, 1849, to organize a Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society. After prayer by Thomas B. Brown, Joshua B. Maxson, of Stephentown, N. Y., was called to the chair, and Walter B. Gillett, of New Market, N. J., was appointed Clerk.

The Constitution prepared by the Convention of Delegates from the Associations, which met at New Market, N. J., in September last, was then taken up, article by article, and adopted, after some slight amendments. the Convention, to take the necessary steps to obtain subscribers to the Constitution, and to prepare for the organization of the Society, reported:—1st. That they had made arrangements to secure the subscription list of the Sabbath Recorder for the paper of the Publishing Society; 2d. That they had sent an agent into different sections of the denomination to obtain members, who had secured subscriptions amounting to about $1,700; 3d. That in anticipation of the Society's organization, they had taken rooms for its accommodation at No. 9 Spruce-st., New York. This report, with the financial questions which it involved, was referred to an Auditing Committee, who reported upon it at a subsequent stage of the meeting, when a vote was passed approving the course pursued by the Prudential Committee, and discharging them from farther responsibility in the matter.

The following persons were then elected Officers of the Society for the ensuing year:

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.

Vice Pres.
- NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
- J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
- MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
- CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
- J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.

Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.
Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.
Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.

Co-Trustees,
- GEORGE GREENMAN, of Mystic, Ct.
- JOHN D. TITSWORTH, of Plainfield N. J.
- WM. M. ROGERS, of Brooklyn, L. I.
- ISAAC D. TITSWORTH, of Shiloh, N. J.

To the Board of Trustees, thus selected, was referred the whole business of making arrangements to carry forward the operations ciety.

Proceedings of the Board.

The Board of Trustees of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society have held two meetings—one at Pawcatuck, R. I., on the 27th day of May, and the other at Plainfield, N. J., on the 4th day of July. It is not deemed necessary here to state minutely all that they have done, or to sketch all the plans that they have had under consideration for the advancement of our publishing interests. The following statement, however, seems to be necessary for the information of the members of the Society, and the patrons of the paper.

The question who should be employed to take the general supervision of the Society's business, was of course one of the first to be considered. After full deliberation upon the subject, the Board have engaged Geo. B. Utter to take the General Agency of the Society. The editorial charge of the paper they have committed to Geo. B. Utter and Thomas B. Brown.

Relative to the size and price of the paper, the Board have deliberated very freely and fully. A desire had been expressed, on the part of some of its friends, that the price should be reduced, while others had expressed a preference that its size should be increased. The Board, after considering all the facts in the case, have judged it best to increase the size of the paper, and to continue the price as heretofore. In its present form, the Board think the Recorder will not suffer by comparison with the general run of religious papers, either in respect to the amount of matter it contains, the quality of paper used, or the price at which it is afforded.

In regard to collecting the funds subscribed for the benefit of the Publishing Society, the Board have concluded to put that business into the hands of agents in the different sections. The following persons have been appointed to make the collections, and it is expected that they will attend to the business soon after receiving lists of the names from the Corresponding Secretary:—

S. S. Griswold, for Rhode Island.
George Greenman, for Mystic, Ct.
Wm. Maxson, for Waterford and New London, Ct.
Ellis A. Davis, for Shiloh and Marlboro, N. J.
Walter B. Gillett, for New Market, N. J.
Lucius Crandall, for Plainfield, N. J.
Paul Stillman, for New York.
Joshua B. Maxson, for Stephentown, N. Y.
John Whitford, for Berlin, N. Y.
James Summerbell, for Petersburg, N. Y.
Charles Potter, for Adams, N. Y.
Benj. Maxson, for Hounsfield, N. Y.
Christopher Chester, for Verona, N. Y.
Martin Wilcox, for 1st Brookfield, N. Y.
[illegible] O. Rogers, for 2d "
Ephraim Maxson, for 3d "
James R. Irish, for DeRuyter, Lincklaen, Truxton, Scott.
Wm. C. Kenyon, for Alfred, N. Y.
[illegible] Lamphear, for Friendship, N. Y.
James Bailey, for Genesee, N. Y.

No doubt there are persons disposed to become members of the Society, who have not yet had an opportunity to subscribe to the Constitution. We publish that document below, and hope that many will forward their names with the amounts necessary to make themselves members or honorary directors of the Society.

CONSTITUTION

ART. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

ART. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

ART. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

ART. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, one or more Vice Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Trustees to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body. Five members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

ART. 5.—The Board of Trustees shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

ART. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (23d day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Trustees shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

ART. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Trustees be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

ART. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

DOINGS AND FEELINGS OF THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIANS.

Several weeks ago we published an account of the trial and suspension of Rev. J. W. Morton, by the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, for denying that the first day of the week is the Sabbath by divine appointment, and maintaining that the seventh day ought to be observed. Since his suspension, Mr. Morton has been engaged in preparing for the press a work on the subject, embodying the substance of what he would have said before the Synod, if that body had seen fit to give him a hearing before passing upon him the sentence of condemnation. When this work is published, those who are disposed to read will be furnished with the means of judging of the truth of the Synod's assertion, that "denying that the first day of the week is the day kept, is a heinous sin and scandal, contrary to the Word of God, and the profession of the Reformed Presbyterian Church founded thereon." Meanwhile, perhaps our readers would be interested in an account of the doings and feelings of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod, as derived from their official minutes, published in "The Covenanter" for July.

Mr. Morton's case came up on the first day of the session, and the following minute concerning it is made:—

It having been stated to the Synod by Rev. D. Scott, that the Rev. J. W. Morton, missionary to Hayti, had in a very public manner declared his adoption of views in regard to the day to be observed as the Sabbath contrary to those taught in our standards, viz., that the seventh day of the week, and not the first, is to be observed as the day of rest—therefore, Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to deal with Mr. Morton, and to report such a course of action as it may deem proper in his case tomorrow at commencement of afternoon session. Committee, D. Scott, S. M. Willson, and Thomas Dunn. J. Milligan added by motion. Inquiry having been made as to Mr. Morton's standing in the mean time, the Moderator gave as his decision, that Mr. Morton is not, under the circumstances, entitled to deliberate and vote in this court.

On the following day, the Committee reported, that they had conferred with Mr. Morton on the subject of the Sabbath, and that he adhered to the opinions avowed by him in his printed Circular. They therefore recommended that the Synod proceed to try the case by libel. The Clerk was directed to serve a copy of the libel upon Mr. Morton, accompanied with a citation to appear and answer to the same in the afternoon of the day following.

Of what took place on that day, this minute is made:—

Order of the day, viz., the case of Mr. Morton, called for. The libel was then read by the Clerk; when Mr. Morton having, in reply to the Moderator, answered that he was prepared for trial, the substance of the libel was again stated in his hearing. Mr. Morton was then called upon, according to the rule provided for such cases, either to confess the charge or put himself upon his trial. Mr. Morton in return acknowledged that he had denied that the day commonly called the Christian Sabbath is so by Divine appointment, and then proceeded to plead the irrelevancy of the charge by endeavoring to prove the perpetuity of the law for the observance of the seventh day. While so doing, he was arrested by the Moderator, who informed him that the charge contained in the libel was such that Mr. Morton could only prove its irrelevancy to censure by proving that the appropriation of the first day of the week, known as the Christian Sabbath, to secular employments, or teaching so to do, is not relevant to censure, which attempt the Moderator would consider disorderly, and would not allow.

From this decision J. M. Willson appealed, when the Moderator's decision was unanimously sustained. Upon this Mr. Morton declined the authority of the court.

Resolved, That Mr. Morton's appointment as missionary to Hayti be revoked.

Resolved, That inasmuch as Mr. Morton has now publicly declined the authority of this court, he be suspended from the exercise of the Christian ministry, and from the privileges of the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

The Moderator then publicly pronounced the sentence of suspension on Mr. Morton, agreeably to the above resolution.

So much for the doings of the Synod. The following report of the Committee on Foreign Missions will give an idea of the feelings of the Synod, and also make our readers acquainted with its missionary efforts:—

The Committee on Foreign Missions respectfully report:—In due season, after the last meeting of Synod, the Board entered upon the execution of the several orders of Synod, respecting the Foreign Mission, and at their meetings, as detailed in the minutes of their proceedings, the original of which accompanies this report, gave these orders their mature deliberation and final completion, as far as the means in their possession allowed.

Mr. Morton, the missionary appointed by Synod, was sent out late in the autumn, after Synod's last meeting. Every attention had been bestowed on his preparation, by the acquisition of the French language, by arrangements for the translation of our Shorter Catechism by the missionary, and by furnishing him with Bibles and Testaments, for sale or distribution, and also appointing a French translation of the Book of Psalms, to be arranged for music by Mr. Morton for the celebration of social worship. A reasonable, but, as it was thought, according to our means, a liberal appropriation was made for the missionary's outfit, for his yearly support, and for the contingent expenses of the mission, required by a hired room and its furniture, for preaching and teaching. He left, commended by the prayers we trust of many, to engage in the first foreign missionary effort of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in this country, and arrived at Port-au-Prince, in Hayti, the field of his future labors, on the 13th of December, 1847. On the second Lord's day after his arrival, he preached his first discourse, but was subjected to interruption and delay from the regular discharge of his ministry, by want of a suitable place, till the February following. In its progress he met with disappointment and neglect, his hearers, generally few in number, not exceeding, at any time, twenty-five, and sometimes he was compelled to leave the place and turn the key on his unoccupied room, as not a single hearer appeared. His school was also slow in its progress, long few in number, and never passing over seventeen scholars. He found it most expedient to constitute it a pay instead of free school, as the latter form subjected it to the interference of government regulations at once onerous and hurtful.

During these tardy operations, Mr. Morton became subject to a change of principle respecting the Christian Sabbath, and by a printed circular addressed generally to our ed the first day of the week, which the Christian Church has always observed as the Christian Sabbath, and returned to the Jewish seventh. Aware, we presume, that he could no longer expect to be the acknowledged missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, he prepared for his return to this country, to appear at the present meeting of Synod, and learn their decision in his case.

He has left behind him some school-room furniture, and also fixtures provided for his place of preaching. The room he had rented remains under a lease which holds till November next, when it expires, the money for the rent of which till that period, he informs the Board, in a recent interview, he had left for payment in the hands of a suitable person, with whom also he had deposited the key of the room containing the above-mentioned fixtures, subject to the order of the Board. The whole, however, are of little value.

Mr. Dodds was, in accordance with your directions, ordained to the holy ministry, with a view to this mission, in due season, by the Pittsburgh Presbytery, and intelligence of his readiness to set out for the field of missionary labors was early communicated to the members of the Board. At that juncture, however, our funds in the hands of the Treasurer were very low, and as no satisfactory intelligence had been received of the condition of the mission from Mr. Morton—as it was known that the social state of the Island of Hayti was greatly agitated—as, moreover, the meeting of Synod was drawing nigh, it was judged prudent by the members of the Board, for these and a variety of collateral considerations, to defer any action till the whole matter could be laid before you, for your more mature deliberation, and Mr. Dodds, therefore, was not sent.

Our Treasurer's accounts have been carefully examined, and after the entire discharge of Mr. Morton's claims, a balance of two hundred and forty-two dollars and eighty-three cents remains at the disposal of Synod. The whole expense incurred by Mr. Morton's mission, amounts to one thousand six hundred and seventy-three dollars and forty-eight cents.

Your Committee cannot refrain from an expression of deep concern at the failure, thus far at least, of an effort on which the church entered with such general interest, zeal, and liberality. Whether it shall be deemed expedient to resume and continue its prosecution, they leave wholly to the future consideration and judgment of the church. In the meanwhile, they judge that in the present adverse and even prostrate state of the mission, its attendant circumstances and discouraging influence on the minds of our people, a period has arrived which imposes on this Board an entire surrender of the charge which they have received at your hands. They are the rather induced to this measure by the uncertainty which may exist in the minds of the Synod, and of the church at large, respecting the continuance of the present mission, or if that be determined, whether it shall be, in its present form, and by the conviction that, in any event, it should be left in your power to proceed to an entire reconstruction of the system, both in respect of persons and measures, that may hereafter be required in its prosecution, should such prosecution be finally judged expedient."

The following paragraph from the Letter to the Reformed Presbyterian Synod of Ireland, develops still farther the feelings and plans of the Synod, and we therefore copy it:

"Our foreign mission has met with a severe check. Mr. Morton, our missionary, having changed his views with regard to the Christian Sabbath, has returned, under circumstances unhappy for himself, and especially unhappy for the interests of our mission. We have felt constrained to suspend for a season our operations; but do not misunderstand us, we still cherish the hope that Providence will open up the way for our resumption of this good work under happier auspices. In the mean time, we take comfort in believing that the seed sown will not all be lost; that the day will disclose some fruit of our toil, expenditure, and prayers."

CHEAP PAPERS.

A circumstance occurred the other day which induced us to look at the terms of some of our exchange papers. The first we took up was the Watchman and Reflector, a Baptist paper published at Boston, in which we read, "Terms, $2 50 per year, payable at the end of six months." The second, which came in our way, was the Independent, a Congregationalist paper recently started in this city, the terms of which are $2 50 in advance, or $3 at the end of the year. The third in order was the Christian Observer, a Presbyterian paper published at Philadelphia, in which we read, "Terms, $3, payable at the expiration of the year, or $2 50 in advance." The fourth and last, was the Christian Intelligencer, a Dutch Reformed paper, published in this city, at "$2 50 per annum, if paid within six months, or $3 if paid at the end of the year." Verily, thought we, as our eye glanced at these prices, publishers and readers are coming to their senses. A few years ago, there was shuch a mania for cheap literature, that many publishers of religious papers were induced to put down their prices to gratify it. The result in many case was a short life, and a bankrupt death. In other cases, it was a loss of influence and value, from the necessity which was created of reducing the amount of editorial labor bestowed upon the papers.

The Old School General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, at its recent meeting, had under consideration, but did not adopt, a project for a cheap religious paper, which is thus commented upon by the Philadelphia Presbyterian:—

"There was a project before the Assembly which, although originating in good feeling, exhibited a want of information in the premises. We refer to the proposition for the establishment of a cheap weekly paper under the immediate patronage and support of the General Assembly. Our testimony on this subject may be received with suspicion as interested, nevertheless we shall say a word on the topic, although it shall be very brief. The eagerness for what are called cheap papers is, in our judgement, much more selfish than our opposition to it. It betrays the desire of enjoying the hard labor of others without a remunerating compensation. If publishers are forced to gratify these unreasonable demands, they must exact from the hard working men under them the same amount of labor for diminished wages. This is the way that cheap papers operate. It is like boasting of getting a shirt made for twenty-five cents, at the expense of the poor, starving, toiling seamstress, who thus wears herself into the grave to afford cheap things to those abundantly able to pay a fair rate of wages.

"The usual price of weeklies is but a fair one. The spirit of competition may induce some to reduce it, often as we know, to their own bankruptcy, as well as to the grinding of the faces of the poor laborers. In this way, with little original matter which is paid for, and with advertisements which are well paid for, they may for a time succeed. For well regulated papers, however, which require the supervision of editors, and which are furnished with good correspondents, the present rates are not too high. Should the Church undertake a project of this kind, we fearlessly predict it would satisfy no one, because it would be expected to do the impossible thing of satisfying every one. Besides, it would be a heavy annual expense to the Church, which, if not paid in the form of a subscription to the paper, would be demanded in contributions in other ways. We believe the whole project to be impracticable in the Presbyterian Church, whatever it might be in the Methodist, where their Journal is supported by their vast and almost princely Book Fund. We could say much more on this subject, but refrain, with the single remark, that practical men acquainted with all the details of a printing and publishing establishment, will condemn the craving for cheap papers as unreasonable and unjust. In our own experience, we have generally found our poorest subscribers most cheerful and prompt in the payment of their subscriptions—the complaints generally come from a different class, who, not appreciating our labors, would probably complain that they were charged with postage, although they might receive our sheet gratuitously."

A GARDEN IN LIBERIA.—A correspondent of the Public Ledger, giving an account of Monrovia, the capital of Liberia, mentions that on the morning after his arrival (Nov. 1, 1848) he was "awakened by the twittering and singing of a host of the feathered tribe, and on arising and opening the shutters, the magnificent sight of a tropical evergreen was presented to our delighted view. It was the garden of Rev. H. Teague, with beds of culinary vegetables, with a profusion of orange, lime, and other, to me unknown, trees, crowded with fruit and a good number of beautiful flowers; among them the China rose, which is in perpetual bloom; also the coffee and the papan tree, from the fruit of which a pie can be made, that no epicure can distinguish from a green-apple pie. As every house has a large garden attached to it, the occupied position of Monrovia covers quite a large area. The houses are large and airy, and the most of them have large porches back and front."

DRUNKARD'S LAND.

Drunkard's Land is supposed to have been discovered in the early ages, and was visited by Noah soon after the flood. It is situated on the hemisphere opposite to the beautiful continent of Sobriety, although there is now a smooth road uniting the two. This road was made by a very respectable person by the name of Moderation, who was not aware of what he was doing, until he found himself within the Capital of Drunkard's Land, a large and populous city named Brandydom, situated in the heart of the country, and regarded as its principal strong hold. You arrive at Drunkard's Land by embarking at Natural Appetite, a thriving town on the coast of Health. Then cross the Moderate Ocean, round Tipling Point, pass Cape Decency, and sailing through Riot Bay, arrive within sight of the continent. The first land that meets your view is that of Convivial Mountains, at the base of which you debark.

Drunkard's Land is bounded on the north by the Moderate Ocean already mentioned; on the east by Irreligion; on the west by Brutality; and on the south by the Bottomless Pit. The country, from its extreme northern boundary, to the Pit, which constitutes its southern limit, is one rapid declivity all the way, and grows abrupt as it nears the bottom. The whole life of the inhabitants is occupied in making their way from the top of this slope to the base. This is accomplished, generally, in a very short period, and each individual terminates a brief existence by rolling or stumbling off the brink of the precipice into the abyss below. W.

SCOTCH TESTIMONY AGAINST SLAVERY.—An English paper says that the United Scotch Presbyterian Synod have given forth a strong and decided testimony against the Slavery of North America. Their language is plain, pointed, and energetic. They condemn Slavery as an accursed practice, a heinous sin, a grievous abomination; and they tell their American co-religionists that they can hold no church-fellowship with those who possess property in slaves, or make merchandize of their fellow-creatures. They also strongly condemn the unchristian custom of having separate pews or ranges of pews for the colored and white population. The souls of men, they say, are of equal value in the sight of God; and they can enjoy no cordial communion with religious professors who exhibit a practical denial of that great truth, and in the very place, too, where it might be least expected, and ought certainly to be least observed.

PICTURES THAT ARE PICTURES.—There is now on exhibition, at the new Pavilion in Astor Place, New York, a series of pictures well worthy of a visit. They were got up in Europe to bring out a new principle in dioramic exhibitions; and so successful were they, that one of the artists was made a knight for his discovery. The pictures are very large—so large that no building in this city was adequate to their exhibition, and it was found necessary to erect a Pavilion exclusively for the purpose. The pictures now up, are a View of the City and Harbor of Brest in France, and a Moonlight View of the Ruins of Holy Rood Chapel—original paintings by the celebrated artists Daguerre and Bouton.

A FREE CHURCH IN SWEDEN.—We learn from the Paris religious journals, that a number of peasants in Sweden, after in vain remonstrating for four years, against the anti-evangelical changes introduced into the prayers, the hymns, and the catechism of the legally established Church, have renounced this Church, and formed a new Church independent of the State.

TRAVELING AGENT.—Eld. Walter B. Gillett has been engaged as a Traveling Agent for the Sabbath Recorder, and will enter upon his duties next week. Particulars of route, &c., hereafter.

ILLNESS OF DISTINGUISHED PERSONS.—It was reported in New York, on Sunday last, that Henry Clay had died of cholera; but later dispatches represent that he is alive, and likely to recover. Gen. Winfield Scott has been lying dangerously ill at West Point, of chronic diarrhea. At last reports, Mrs. Gen. Harrison was very sick at Great Bend, of diarrhea, and it was feared that her constitution would not be able to resist the disease.

A Recommendation.

At a season when the providence of God has manifested itself in the visitation of a fearful pestilence which is spreading its ravages throughout the land, it is fitting that a people whose reliance has ever been in His protection should humble themselves before His throne, and, while acknowledging past transgressions, ask a continuance of the Divine Mercy.

It is therefore earnestly recommended, that the first Friday in August be observed throughout the United States as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer. All business will be suspended in the various branches of the public service on that day; and it is recommended to persons of all religious denominations to abstain as far as practicable from all secular occupations, and to assemble in their respective places of public worship, to acknowledge the Infinite Goodness which has watched over our existence as a nation, and so long crowned us with manifold blessings, and to implore the Almighty in His own good time to stay the destroying hand which is now lifted up against us. Z. TAYLOR.

WASHINGTON, July 3, 1849.

METHODIST ITINERANCY.—A colored missionary, who has been laboring several years on the West Coast of Africa, writes to Rev. J. B. Pinney in the following strain, under date of Robertsville, Africa, April 17, 1849:—

"The Methodist itinerant system is not exactly adapted to heathen Africa. It may do for civilized colonists. Out of ten years labor, I have spent eight among the natives, and am more and more confirmed in the above opinion, which I do not hesitate to declare on all proper occasions. Every once in two or three years we are obliged to move, and you are well enough acquainted with the native African character to know that it requires two years to overcome prejudices against 'God Palaver,' settle the question that you are no trade man, and have no sympathy for heathen vices, while you love the heathen 'heart.'

"A school of some twenty or twenty-five children may be established by any man of energy, and the scholars may make rapid and gratyfying progress—but just started we must go. The children, the people, know not our successors—and the pupils must again be conducted through the same cause of induction; or, as is more commonly the case, the enterprise wholly fails. It is a most remarkable fact, moreover, that I have never known the pupils under one preacher to collect under another, until this year—and these were Congoes who could do no other way. Here necessarily, some 'beating the air' is to be deprecated, until Providence points a better course."

PROSPECTS IN CHINA.—There is some apprehension, as the time approaches stipulated by the treaty for the free access of Englishmen within the walls of Canton, that there may be terrible scenes of disorder and bloodshed. The missionaries, however, seem to entertain a different opinion. An American missionary, in a recent letter, says:—

"Our intercourse with the people is of the most friendly character. We mingle among them with entire freedom. I never felt safer in America than I do here. The impression made upon my mind by all I see and hear is, that God is about to display his power in this heathen city, and that the day of China's redemption is drawing nigh. But we must have more missionaries. God, by his providence, is calling for more laborers. Oh, if the Church could only see China, degraded, bleeding China, she would hasten to pour her wealth and talent upon these shores."

BREACH OF PROMISE.—For the benefit of the unmarrried of both sexes, to whom a right understanding of the law may be important, we copy the following from an opinion of Judge Black—recently affirmed by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, per Coulter, Justice, Dowey vs. McMillan. 8 Barr, 160:

"If a man offers to marry a woman or promises to do it, he is not bound to comply with it, unless she agree to accept him. It takes two to make a marriage contract as well as any other bargain. Where a man has a contract of marriage with a woman, and merely puts it off, and she becomes impatient, she cannot drag him into court and demand damages, unless she has formally offered to perform the contract on her part, and he dishonestly refuses, and so puts an end to the contract, because perchance he would prefer the marriage to the suit, and he ought to have a chance to make a choice."

PROGRESS OF FREE PRINCIPLES.—The Presbyterian Herald, of Louisville, referring to the laws of Southern States against teaching slaves to read, says:—

"Whatever views may be entertained upon other points, we think all good men will agree, that the Christian citizens of those States ought never to rest satisfied until they have done all in their power to eradicate such laws from their statute books. They are a standing monument of disgrace to the States that have enacted them, and ought to have no binding force upon the conscience of the Christian master."

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.

A letter from Rev. William Bowen, informs us that the Baptist church in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., have for several months enjoyed a gentle refreshing from the Lord. Fifteen have been added to the church by baptism.

Rev. W. F. Parish writes to the Register, that at Mendon, Monroe county, N. Y., the presence of the Spirit has been manifested for some time. "Souls have been hopefully converted, backsliders reclaimed, discordant feeling harmonized," and thirty to forty, by baptism, letter and experience, received into the church.

Rev. A. C. Cornwell, of Broadalbin, communicates to the same paper the fact of interesting baptismal scenes in the church in that town. "Among the number baptized, is the remarkable instance of an old lady in the one hundredth year of her age."

The Tennessee Baptist has an account of an extensive revival at Lebanon, Tenn., the seat of Cumberland University, an institution sustained by the Presbyterian church. From the best information, 130 persons had professed a hope in the blood of Christ; "64 accessions have already been made to the Baptist church, and 8 or 10 of this number are from the Methodist and Presbyterian societies."

The South Baptist church, Providence, Rev. S. B. Willis pastor, has recently been much revived. Backsliders have been restored, and sinners converted. Twenty-five have been baptized since March.

The Mobile Tribune says: "The protracted meeting of the Franklin street Methodist church, which has had no intermission for the past six weeks, will be continued indefinitely at the St. Francis street Church. Thus far the labors of the ministers have been attended with the most happy results. More than one hundred and eighty persons have been converted, one hundred and sixty-two of whom have attached themselves to the Methodist churches of this city."

The Christian Chronicle notices an interesting revival at Parkersburg, Pa., where, since about the middle of May, thirty-seven have been baptized. [Watchman and Reflector.

THE CHOLERA IN NEW YORK.

The last week has witnessed a slight increase of cholera in New York, as is shown by the following summary of the reports of the Board of Health :—

July 3,	new cases,	54,	deaths,	26
" 4,	"	84,	"	27
" 5,	"	64,	"	26
" 6,	"	71,	"	28
" 7,	"	67,	"	22
" 8,	"	43,	"	27
" 9,	"	120,	"	46

It is rather surprising, in view of the ravages of cholera in other places, that it is so mild in New York. At St. Louis, during the past week, the deaths from this one disease have avaraged about 100 a day. At Cincinnati the number of deaths has been nearly as great as at St. Louis. For the week ending July 1, there were 733 deaths from cholera in St. Louis, 697 in Cincinnati. During last week there were 317 deaths from cholera in New York. A writer for one of the daily papers says :—

"Circumspection in diet and dress, avoidance of excitement, passion, and extreme fatigue, with an instant resort to medical treatment upon the occurrence of the first symptoms, are very properly and generally practiced, and the disease, thus resisted, proves quite controlable. If neglected for hours, it is almost inevitably fatal. It must not be forgotten that, while the vigorous and cautious have sometimes been attacked, a great proportion of the victims have either been guilty of some glaring impudence, or were enfeebled by previous ill health or debilitated by the ravages of dissipation. Broken-down constitutions stand no chance at all with the pestilence. There are thousands in our city, as elsewhere, who stand no chance at all against a serious attack of common dysentry, and many have been reported as dead of cholora who have had nothing but a common diarrhea. Still, the mortality is very great, and will probably remain so while the hot weather continues."

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

Two steamships—the Washington and the Canada—have arrived since our last, bringing one week's later news from all parts of Europe.

ROME still holds out against the French forces. On the 11th of June a breach was made in the walls of the city, and the French obtained possession of one of the gates. The determination of the inhabitants to resist as long as possible, seems not a whit abated. A letter from Rome, dated June 9th, states that the measures of defense on the one hand, and those of attack on the other, were being carried on with unremitting zeal in and around Rome, and the destruction of property rendered necessary by them is absolutely frightful. Not only have hundreds of charming villas and casini in the neighborhood of the city walls or gates been set on fire and blown up during the last few days, but the interior of the town now commences to suffer from the unsparing orders of the military engineers, and this morning the magnificent Theater of Apollo, with the adjacent houses bordering the Tiber, from the bridge of St. Angelo to the Arcodi Parmo, are to be sacrificed and demolished, as forming a dangerous point for attacking the fortress of St. Angelo, in case the enemy should succeed in effecting an entry within the city walls.

HUNGARY has been very successful in her operations against the Austrians and Russians. A tremendous battle was fought on the 13th, 14th, and 15th of June, near Raab, on the Danube, in which the Hungarians were victorious. The loss on both sides was very severe—one account says that the Austrians and Russians lost twenty-three thousand, the Magyars eight thousand. Three minor but sanguinary conflicts have taken place—at Jordanow, at Peterwardein, and not far from Presburg—the first and last resulting in Hungarian victories. At Peterwardein, the Austrians claim the advantage, but admit a severe loss.

The Hungarian Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs has published a form of prayer to be offered in all churches for the triumph of the Hungarian cause, in which it is said of the Russian invaders, that they come "to annihilate liberty, independence, and faith—to enslave the people and carry them off into bondage—to desecrate churches and holy places—to murder the aged and the young, and force the chastity of women," &c. The head of the Hungarian church has moreover instructed the clergy to preach a crusade against the Russians, to make the war an object of religion and of duty, and to tell the people to take all they have and withdraw into the interior of their country, and thence to make war to the knife against the Russians.

From ENGLAND nothing important is reported, except that news had just been received of a refusal, on the part of the Emperor of China, to open the trade of Canton to the British on the terms of existing treaties. It was feared that trouble might be the consequence.

IRELAND is as bad off as ever. The usual reports reach us of poverty, sickness, and death. The progress of evictions still continues. From Lord Ventry's trust estates, in the County of Kerry, there have been driven, since the 15th of May, 254 individuals. In Tipperary the Clonmel Chronicle records cases of the same kind.

On the 14th of June an American vessel arrived at Marseilles from Trieste, having on board 185 prisoners of war, most of them Poles ordered to be transported to New York, but she had scarcely got out to sea when the prisoners insisted on being taken to Marseilles; and the captain, having only eight men under his command, found himself forced to obey. But on her coming into port, the Prefect ordered the ship to be towed by the steamer Eurotas to Toulon, there to wait the orders of the Government as to the final destination of the prisoners.

A Hungarian lady who was the means of delivering some Austrian officers into the hands of the Magyars, has been tried by Court Martial, at Presburg, and sentenced to be publicly scourged. This is the most brutal act on record.

THE KENTUCKY TRAGEDY.

Various and conflicting accounts have been given of the recent tragedy in Kentucky, to which Cassius M. Clay was a party. The following version of the matter, from the Shelbyville (Ky.) News, is about as reasonable as any we have seen :

Foxtown, where the tragedy occurred, is five miles from Richmond, on the turnpike road to Lexington. It was muster day, and many were in attendance to hear the candidates.

Major Squire Turner, a candidate for the Convention, was the first to take the stand. He had been speaking about an hour, when Mr. Clay interrupted him, asking him to divide the time, so that Mr. Chenault and Mr. Burnam might have an opportunity to give their views upon the various subjects now agitating the country, and that he did not wish to speak himself, but the people wished to hear the other candidates. Mr. Turner continued half an hour longer. During his remarks he read the article from Mr. Clay's paper, which was the cause of the citizens of Lexington tearing down his press.

After Mr. Turner had concluded his remarks, Mr. Clay asked Mr. Chenault, who was about taking the stand, to permit him to make an explanation, which he did.

Mr. Clay remarked, that the article spoken of was not written by himself; that it appeared in his paper while he was lying dangerously ill; that it was written by a Southern slave-holder, as he thought, for the sole purpose of having his press destroyed. Major Turner remarked, 't was no matter—he (Mr. C.) should be responsible for it as an Editor. Mr. R. Runyan then asked Mr. Clay a question, which he wished him to explain. After Mr. Clay made the explanation, Runyon remarked, that it was not so; that he (Mr. C.) could not prove it. Clay observed, that he could prove it; that if he could not, he (Mr. R.) might spit in his (Mr. C.'s) face. Runyan again asked him by whom could he prove it? Clay then said to him, that he could prove it by Major Turner, whose tool he (R.) was. Getting off the stand, Clay remarked that Runyon had tried upon several occasions to insult him, and that he was only acting as a volunteer tool for Turner. Mr. Cyrus Turner then stepped up to Clay, and shaking his fist in his face, remarked to him, that it was a d—d lie. Clay then attempted to draw his knife. Turner seeing his intentions, struck him. Clay then struck Turner with his fist, which knocked him down. Mr. Alfred Turner then struck Clay, knocking him down; he fell near C. Turner, and the impression is that it was at this time Cyrus Turner received his stab. Two men then caught Clay, and were pulling him away, when Thomas Turner stepped forward, presented his revolver and burst three caps at Clay.

It is not known when, nor, generally, by whom, Clay received his stab; it is known, however, but has not been divulged.

Clay is much bruised from his head down. He complains more of his back than the stab in his breast. He says that he is stabbed in the back; but on account of the pain he suffers, it has not been examined; nor is it really known whether or not he is stabbed in the back. The wound in the breast is a very bad one, but not as dangerous as was first supposed. While he was being conducted into the house, after the fight, he desired to speak. After his friends telling him that he must not—that he must go into the house and lie down—he turned round facing the people, and in a clear, loud voice, remarked, "I am dying; but am dying in a glorious cause—the cause of Liberty." After making this remark, he was conducted into the house, and has been lying in this position ever since. There are some hopes of his recovery.

Cyrus Turner died of his wound Sunday morning, after forgiving Mr. Clay for the deed.

KOSSUTH.

Louis Kossuth, the President of the Hungarian Republic, was born April 27th, 1807, of a poor but noble Sclavonic family in the North of Hungary. His talents procured the aid of friends to complete his education. In 1835 he was employed as a reporter of debates in the Hungarian Diet; and these debates were circulated at an increased expense in manuscript, to escape the Austrian censorship of the press—the debates being of an exciting character, in opposition to the Austrian rule. For this offense he was seized and thrown into a dungeon for three years; one of his companions in prison having been rendered blind and another insane by the severity of their treatment. His sufferings awakened public sympathy, and he became the editor of the Pesth Hirlap; but the publisher was bribed by the Austrian Government to discharge him. He then turned his attention to the formation of societies for various objects of public improvement. Being elected a member of the Hungarian Diet, which met at Presburg on the 11th of November, 1847, he soon obtained the lead of the body; and on the open rupture in September last, he was appointed Chairman of the Committee of safety, and has since exercised the entire control of public affairs, until, on the absolute rejection of the Hapsburgh dynasty, he has been unanimously and by acclamation called to the office of Chief of the Republic.

"As a statesman, he has exhibited the most consummate foresight and the most boundless resources, and a genius that never quailed under adversity. As a military chief he has shown the union of the most daring courage with prudence which, though it may have seemed like over-caution at the moment, proved in the result to be most wise and sagacious. As an orator, he exercises a surprising power. The effect of his eloquence is described as truly astonishing. When he arises to speak, his features, finely moulded and of an oriental cast, though pale and haggard as from mental and physical suffering united, immediately excite interest. His deep-toned, almost sepulchral voice adds to the first impression. Then, as he becomes warmed by his subject, and launches into the enthusiastic and prophetic manner peculiar to him, his hearers seem to imbibe all the feelings that so strongly reign in his own bosom and to be governed by the same will. In his tour through the provinces to raise the landstrum (all the able-bodied,) so great was his power over the peasantry that frequently men, women and children together, running to their houses and seizing hooks or whatever their hands could find, assembled on the spot and insisted on being led directly against the enemy.

THE OVERLAND EMIGRANTS.

The Cincinnati Times has a letter dated May 17, from Fort Childs, 300 miles west of Independence. We make the following extract:—

On the 10th we arrived at the junction of St. Joseph's Road, and in the course of the morning, saw so many wagons, that we hought we must lighten our loads and get in advance of the tide of emigration, or our mules and oxen must suffer in consequence of short feed; therefore, about noon we stopped and held a meeting, and passed a resolution appointing a committee to examine all the wagons, and throw out and abandon every thing that was not absolutely necessary; accordingly we left behind the wagon that we purchased for carrying our corn, which cost $210, blacksmith's tools, consisting of anvil, forge, sledge-hammers, &c., about 200 mule-shoes, several extra axle-trees, and came very near leaving the coining apparatus, most of the company being in favor of so doing, it being very heavy; we also changed the rice, sugar, &c., from boxes into bags. While we were engaged in this business, a train of over 50 wagons passed. They reported that they had passed between 600 and 700 wagons, some they left at St. Joseph's, and that a great many of them had to throw away a part of their loading, almost every one loading too heavy; one train they passed had abandoned 1,200 pounds of bacon, among other things. So many trains have started, that fears are entertained that they cannot all get through, as there will not be grass enough for the animals; this, and the anxiety to get to the gold diggings as soon as possible, are the causes of property being abandoned. Among the wagons that passed us, was one train from Georgia, with carriage or hack containing a man and his wife; that train also had several slaves with them.

ANNEXATION OF CANADA.—Not only some of the leading journals in Canada, but some of the leading journals in England, favor the annexation of Canada to the United States. The Canadians have been comparing our Constitution with their own, and they think that with slight alterations they might be admitted as a State or States. They think the change might be made without much noise, or without producing much of a shock in the minds or feelings of the Canadians, and without much virulence or party feeling. They also think that they would take a national pride in being thus annexed. There is a large party in England who favor the plan of dissolving the connection with the British North American Provinces; and the London Examiner, a paper of considerable influence, comes out in favor of annexing Canada to the United States. The editor says: "We hesitate not to say, that if we and the North American Colonies can part in peace and friendship, the departure would undoubtedly be a gain to both parties, but more especially to ourselves." The Times says that "annexation is an idea of growing familiarity." From the above, it would appear that we shall soon be called upon to admit Canada into the Union, whether we are willing or not. How will the South like this? Will they be willing to admit more free States at the North, or will they oppose it as they do the admission of free States at the South? We think that the North will generally be in favor of annexing Canada.

DREADFUL STAGE ACCIDENT.—As the Louisville stage was going out from Maysville, Ky., on Tuesday morning week before last, loaded with thirteen passengers and a heavy lot of baggage, the brake broke in descending the hill, at the entrance of the bridge, throwing the driver to the ground, and of course leaving the horses free of all control. They immediately dashed into the bridge at headlong speed, and when a little more than half way through, they struck some of the wood-work, throwing the stage over and pitching the passengers who were on the top among the timbers, the trunks falling upon them, and the coach getting broken to atoms. Prof. Sherman, of the Columbia Institute, had his skull fractured and his face terribly crushed, which, with other fatal injuries, caused his death shortly after. Mr. Pleasant Smith, a citizen of Nashville, was so badly injured as to make it doubtful whether he can survive; and a German, W. Goldstein, a merchant of Philadelphia, had his leg fractured in two places, which, with other hurts, renders his recovery doubtful. Several ladies were inside, who fortunately were unhurt.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, under date of Monrovia, May 20, says: The slave trade is as far from being broken up, or even in a measure suppressed, as ever. The English have for the last month or two been blockading the Gallinas, and burned down the establishment ashore, but it seemed to produce little effect. A few days since H. M. brig Alert descried a felucca a short distance at sea, becalmed, and supposing her to be a slaver, they sent boats to board her; but in attempting it, they were beaten off, with the loss of the first Lieutenant and master killed, and 8 or 9 seamen killed and wounded. So you perceive that little can be done. It is the general opinion, that the slavers will be armed vessels in future, and it is known that many of them carry a great number of men. There are now lying within pistol shot, two vessels, under the Sardinian flag, which are known to be slavers. Finding that they could not land their cargoes at Gallinas, they are discharging them here, so as to send them overland.

STARVATION.—A child starved to death, a few days since, in Louisville. The Louisville Journal says that its parents arrived in that city a few days before in search of employment, and they were without food for a day or two, seeking employment. As soon as their condition was made known, assistance was promptly offered. It was at first refused by the head of the family, who said that he only wanted employment, but he finally accepted the proffered aid.

Another case of similar character occurred a week or two since in Cincinnati—inability to procure work, and a pride that would not stoop to beg. The Mercury of that city remarks, in connection with this case, that "the pride that asks for work, instead of bread, is manly, and to be honored; but that which refuses bread, when work is not to be had, is stupid and criminal."

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—A shocking accident occurred on the afternoon of July 5, down the bay from Providence, R. I., caused by the collision of the steamer Perry with a sail-boat named the Sea Bird. The Perry was passing down near Field's Point, on her last trip to Newport, between 6 and 7 o'clock, when she came in contact with the Sea Bird, and, notwithstanding every exertion was made by her officers and men to prevent it, the sail-boat was cut in two and immediately sunk. Two females and four men were on board; one of the females was struck by the bow of the Perry, and was instantly killed; and the other passed under the boat, was picked up, but survived but a few hours. The men were all picked up and saved, though with considerable difficulty.

ELOPEMENT.—At a house in this city, says the Boston Traveler, it was recently discovered, that a young person who had come there to board dressed in male apparel, was in reality a woman. Upon being questioned she at once acknowledged that it was so. She stated that she had lately been working at a mill in Manchester, N. H., that she had agreed to elope with a man who had promised to marry her, and had assumed the disguise to prevent trouble. Upon her arrival here the man deserted her and she was at a perfect loss what to do with herself. She was given up to Mr. John Augustus, who at once had her clothed in female apparel. Her male apparel consisted of a straw hat, thin light jacket, shoes, black handkerchief, with turn-down collar, and thick pantaloons. Her hair had been cut short, but a straggling hair or two had been left, and first excited the suspicion of the people of the house as to her sex. She stated that she had a father and mother living in Vermont.

CONVENTION OF COLORED CITIZENS.—Such a Convention was held in Hudson, N. Y., on the 5th. A large number was present, and the procession was imposing. S. Myers of Albany called the Convention to order and presided. Excellent speeches were made by Revs. O. G. Beam of New Haven, H. Hicks and J. N. Gloucester, New York, and by Messrs, J. H. Townsend, New York, H. Bibb, Michigan, Geo. Haydock, Hudson, Rev. Mr. Waldo, Poughkeepsie, and Rev. Mr. Layman. There were some 3,000 persons present, and the gathering was all that could have been desired.

HURRICANE.—We learn from the Oxford (Miss.) Organizer of the 16th ult., that a tremendous wind storm passed that place on the 10th, which was very destructive to timber wherever it passed. At Panola it destroyed much of the timber. At one place where the people assembled to church, five or six horses were killed by the falling timber. A tree fell upon a horse with a man upon him, killing the horse without materially injuring the rider.

SUMMARY.

The Albany Atlas of June 20th says: "Two packages of gold came to our Post Office to day, from David B. Winne, formerly resident of our city, now of California, directed to his mother—who, alas! died about a month since! One of these was a package weighing 18 ounces, with a postage of $14 50, and another of pure gold dust, with a postage of $1 50. They were valued at some $200 or $300."

A State Convention of the Editors and Proprietors of Country Newspapers throughout the State of New York, in favor of the restoration of the law of Congress of 1845, granting free circulation to newspapers within 30 miles from their place of publication, will be held at Syracuse on Wednesday, the 19th day of September next, at 12 o'clock at noon, to adopt measures to secure such restoration.

Several Irish families of respectability have arrived in New York within the past week, whose intention is to go "Out West." They have formed parties, and concluded to keep together. The heads of families who are here now were poor-land guardians, town councillors, magistrates, and gentlemen farmers at home, and formed the pith and marrow and intelligence of the country.

We learn from the Kalamazoo (Mich.) Gazette, that a man by the name of Alaxander Martin, of that county, was killed on the railroad by being thrown upon the track by his frightened horse, in front of a locomotive, which passed over him. He survived but a few hours. On hearing of the accident, J. W. Brooks, Esq., Superintendent of the road, promptly sent to the family five hundred dollars.

A number of colored persons have recently associated themselves together for the purpose of forming a settlement in Florence, Oneida County, N. Y., twenty-five miles from Rome. They have made a purchase of 1100 acres of land, and a number of families are already on the premises—8 of them from New Bedford, Mass.

Late arrivals from Hayti confirm previous accounts of the suffering in the Island of Hayti, from want of food caused by the late severe drought. At Miragoane June 6th, not a barrel of flour or bread was to be had, and several persons had died of starvation. A quantity of flour had been seized by the starving inhabitants of Miragoane.

In Cincinnati, one night last week, anti-cholera fires were kindled at the intersections of may streets. The fuel used consisted generally of a parcel of dry wood or pieces of boards, with about a cart-load of stone-coal, for each fire. At some places sulphur, and others, tar barrels, were added.

The entire lengths of the various canals and slack water navigation improvements in Ohio, made since, 1825, is 821 miles, at a cost of $15,359,999. Of railroads, there are now in Ohio 274 miles completed, and 463 in progress.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, says that twelve vessels have left Havanna for the coast of Africa for the purpose of engaging in the slave trade. They were said to have sixty-one guns among them.

Biggs, the man accused of sending threatening letters to W. B. Astor, in New York, has been tried and found guilty. The punishment is five years imprisonment in the State Prison.

It costs the British government $50 per day for firing salutes.

A veteran Jerseyman has been removed in the death of Rev. Jas. G. Force, of Sandyston, Sussex Co. He served in the Army of the Revolution, and was at the battle of Monmouth. Another old Jersey Blue, and one of the original proprietors of the soil, John Byrant, died at Kingston, near Princeton, on the 29th ult., aged 86. Byrant was an Indian and a pensioner.

At South Worcester, Otsego county, on the 30th ult., two young ladies, named Sybil and Ferguson, together with a Mr. Strain, who had gone in to save them, were all drowned, near Strain's Mill. Mr. Strain left a wife and eight children.

In the town of East Bridgewater, Mass., containing about 2500 inhabitants, Dr. Orr, the resident physician there, has attended more than fifty births since January 1st, 1849. During the same period of time there have been only three deaths in the town, all of consumption.

A Californian at San Francisco, writing to a friend in Boston, says: "I think you have acted wisely in staying at home. Many of those bound here from the States will be sadly disappointed in their expectations."

Prof. James Hamilton died of cholera at Nashville on the 21st ult. He had been Professor of Mathematics in the Nashville University for twenty-five ... Prof. H.'s sisters also died during the same week.

At Portland Mrs. Caroline M. Swett has been found guilty of trespass in damaging the groggery in which her husband obtained too much liquor. The jury advised a lenient sentence. The defense her counsel set up was temporary insanity!

A squirrel hunt came off on the first day of June in Thompson Valley, Tazewell Co., Va., that was commenced on the first of April. The parties were headed by Capt. A. Thompson, Jr., and Capt. David Spence. Upon counting scalps, Thompson counted 3,621, Spence 3,411. Total, 7,032.

A dispatch from New Orleans, dated June 26, says a rumor prevails that a company of 71 emigrants from Rapides, La., en route for California, has been attacked by Indians this side of the Rocky Mountains, and that all except six were murdered.

The Kingston Whig of the 30th of June, alludes to the accident on the St. Lawrence river to the steamboat Passport, at Cornwall, and states that sixteen of the passengers had already died, and others were lingering in a precarious condition.

At St. Louis, on the 28th ult., a Mr. Schridier was supposed to have died of cholera, and was taken to the grave, where a noise in the coffin being heard, it was found that he was still alive. He is recovering.

The Richmond (Ky.) Chronicle of the 28th ult. says: "Col. C. M. Clay is still improving, and his physicians and friends entertain very little doubt of his recovery."

The Royal Chinese Junk, with "Mandarin Kaying and Artist Jansing, in full dress," is lying at the East India Docks, London, for exhibition.

The Louisville Courier tells of a man who lost his second wife, of cholera on the 14th inst, his first wife having died of the same disease only a month previous!

Bishop McCloskey of Michigan, has written a form of prayer to be used in his diocese in view of the cholera.

Mr. McConnell, a farmer residing near Springfield, Ill., has sent nine tons of wool to an eastern market—the produce of his own clipping for the present season.

The New York Mirror suggests that for every penny the Catholics send to the Pope, the Protestants should send a shilling to the Roman Republic.

Mr. Frederick A. Packard, well known as the head of the American Sunday School Union, has been elected President of Girard College, Philadelphia.

The Detroit Free Press of the 18th ult., states that the wool brought to that market in six days will amount to one hundred thousand pounds.

By recent experiments on the Reading (Pa.) Railroad, it has been ascertained, that a locomotive fired with Anthracite coal consumed $3000 less fuel per year than the best wood engines.

In the word abstemious the five vowels of the alphabet stand in their grammatical order, a-e-i-o-u. The word facetious presents the same accidental singularity, and facetiously brings in the y.

An article in the Newark Daily Advertiser estimates the sum paid annually for heat in this country at $300,000,000.

MARRIED.

In Verona, N. Y., July 5th, by Eld. Christopher Chester, Mr. ANSON PALMER to Miss ELIZA HOUGHTON, all of Verona.

In Preston, Chenango Co., N. Y., July 4th, by Eld. Joshua Clark, Mr. WM. S. MUNGOR, of Sangerfield, N. Y., to Miss MARY JANE ROGERS, of the former place.

Receipts for the Missionary Association.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association acknowledges the receipt of the following sums since his last report through the Recorder:—

Collection at the Eastern Association,		$101 30
Ch. and Soc. at Watson, by H. W. Babcock, f. m.		4 00
Col. at Central Association, by E. Maxson,		50 33
2d Ch. Brookfield, by W. Whitford,		23 04
2d Ch. Verona, by A. G. Burdick,		3 00
Betsy Osgood, Westmoreland,		1 00
Elizabeth Osgood,		1 00
1st Ch. Brookfield, by M. Wilcox,		16 88
Ch.atNewMarket,N.J.,byW.B.G.,	f.m.19 25, h.m. 50	19 75

	F. M.	H. M.
From Waterford, by W. Maxson;
" James Rogers,	3 00	1 00
" A. Lester,	1 00	— —
" D. Rogers,	5 00	3 00
" D. Rogers, 2d,	3 00	1 00
" D. Brooks, Jun.	50	50
" O. Maxson, Jun.	50	25
" E. Brooks,	1 00	50
" E. R. Brooks,	1 00	50
" B. F. Rogers,	2 00	1 00
" John Gardner,	1 00	50
" Wm. Maxson,	5 00	2 00
" M. Saunders,	25	25
	23 25	10 50	33 75

A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

☞ The Treasurer begs leave to call attention to the importance of noting correctly the name of our missionary organization. He is addressed, at different times, as Treasurer of the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, of the American Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society, &c. He is Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association. Let this be remembered, and mistakes, which might be important in their consequences, would be prevented.

New York Markets—Monday, July 9.

Ashes—Pots and Pearls both $4 56 a 4 62, which is an improvement in the latter.——Flour and Meal—Flour, 4 56 a 4 62 for common and ordinary State, 4 69 for straight State and Western, 4 75 and 4 87 for favorite brands, 4 87 a 5 00 for round hoop Ohio, 5 00 a 5 12 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 2 92 a 3 00. Jersey Meal 3 00.——Grain—The market for Wheat is dull; Ohio is held at 1 02; Genesee 1 30. Corn, 56c. for Southern White, 55c. for round white, 58 for round Northern. Rye 56½c. Oats 33 a 34c.——Provisions—Ohio Pork, 9 00 for Prime, 10 50 for Mess Beef is in good demand; City Mess 12 75, Country Mess 12 25, extra Chicago 13 00. Butter, Ohio 7 a 11c., Western 10 a 13½. Cheese 3 a 7c.

LETTERS.

Ephraim Maxson, H. P. Burdick, S. S. Griswold, W. P. Langworthy, H. W. Stillman, B. Nichols, G. Greenman, W. B. Maxson, C. Card, Joshua Clarke, I. D. Titsworth, C. Sheppard, D. Coon, Wm. Maxson, C. Chester (at Rome to-day,) K. Burdick (should be glad to, but can not,) M. Wilcox (started July 6.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Christopher Chester, Verona, N. Y.		$5 00
Orville A. Williams,	"	5 00
Ichabod Williams,	"	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of toe following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

G. H. Perry, Hopkinton, R. I.	$2 00	to vol.	6	No. 52
Lafayette Coon, "	1 00	"	6	" 26
G. H. Noyes, Westerly, R. I.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Sophia Maxson, [illegible]	2 00	"	6	" 52
O. Maxson, Jr.	2 00	"	6	" 52
A. W. Thomas, Shiloh, N. J.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Caleb Sheppard, Greenwich, N. J.	2 00	"	6	" 52
J. D. Titsworth, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	"	6	" 52
A. D. Titsworth, Metouchin, N. J.	2 00	"	6	" 52
J. L. Scott, New York,	2 00	"	6	" 52
And. Wood, "	1 00	"	6	" 26
Lucy Carpenter, Stephentown,	2 00	"	6	" 52
H. J. Wells, Little Genesee,	1 00	"	6	" 26
Jairus Crandall, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
N. Hallock, Ulysses,	2 00	"	6	" 52
W. P. Longwate, Pendleton,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Joel Jones, Akron,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Purdy Jones, Canada,	2 50	"	6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

H. N. Burdick, Hopk'n, R. I	$2 00	to vol.	5	No. 52
Sanford Noyes, Westerly, R. I.	2 00	"	5	" 52
Sam'l Saunders, "	2 00	"	5	" 52
Dennis Burdick, "	2 00	"	5	" 52
J. C. Ayers, New Market, N. J.	2 00	"	5	" 52
K. Burdick, Dundaff, Pa.	3 00	"	5	" 38
Geo. Stillman, Coudersport, Pa.	4 00	"	5	" 52
Geo. Hood, Ossian,	2 00	"	5	" 52
S. Stebbins, Cowlesville,	2 00	"	5	" 52

Bruce's New York Type-Foundry.

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C.
Pica,	per lb. 30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb. Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

Our Specimen Book is freely given to all Printing Offices.

Printers of Newspapers who choose to publish this advertisement, including this note, three times before the 1st of October, 1849, and send us one of the papers, will be paid for it in Type when they purchase from us, of our own manufactures, selected from our specimens, five times the amount of their bill.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.
GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

[Copy.]

CAMBRIDGE, Washington Co., N. Y.,
June 18, 1849.

Geo. W. Savage, Esq.,
Pres't Eagle Life and Health Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to express to your Company my thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which you paid the claim for insurance on the life of my brother, Doctor F. R. Robertson, which was insured for the benefit of his mother. The manner in which the claim was met and paid, is creditable to your institution. No deduction was asked, nor was there any objection raised, but the whole amount insured paid as soon as presented and without waiting until it became due.

A policy of this kind is indeed valuable. I trust you will have the kindness to express our deep acknowledgment to your Board of Directors, and oblige

Your obedient servant,
— R. K. ROBERTSON.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

AGENTS WANTED.

A number of active and intelligent men are wanted, who can furnish satisfactory references, to act as local or traveling agents, in procuring applications for Life and Health Insurance. To men of energy, this is a good opportunity, as a liberal commission is paid on all risks obtained. For farther information, apply personally, or by letter—(post paid, as none other will be taken from the post-office)—to

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
206 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miscellaneous.

THE NEGRO GIRL.

BY MRS. S. H. B. SMITH.

The Nashville American says that a negro girl belonging to Louis O. Lisby, committed suicide recently, to avoid giving information of her mother's place of concealment, who had run away.

And must my mother feel again
The dungeon rack, the crushing chain?
The stinging scourge, the bitter jeer,
Again fall on my tortured ear?
As all defenseless thou hast stood,
Beneath the infuriate lash—O! God!
And scarcely dared to lift on high
Thy look of speechless agony?

Thou, who wast ever good and kind—
To duty all thy thoughts inclined—
Whose love has been the one bright ray,
Cheering my drear and toilsome way,
Before my tottering steps could stray,
From the lone cabin where I lay,
And sobbed away the weary hours,
'Till thou might'st come, at shut of flowers;

The sultry tasks of daylight done,
To greet me, underneath the moon,
Stretching my arms in eager glee,
At the first sight I caught of thee,
Scarce turning from thy close embrace
To note gay buds which thou did'st place
Within my hand—though dearly bought,
The toys thy wearied steps had sought.

And when my growing strength could share
Thy mid-day toils, if noon's hot glare
Fell on my shrinking head, how soon
And smiled to see me gently [illegible]—
Beneath the cool Magnolia's shade,
While thy own love-nerved arm has wrought
The double task, my rest that bought.

And O, when o'er me sickness came,
Unmindful of thy toils-pent frame,
Can I forget the tender care
Which seemed each pain to soothe and share?
I could have deemed it sweet to die,
Beneath [illegible] soft, that loving eye,
While thou did'st hold my fevered hand,
And whisper—of the better land,
Bright visions, which no longer cheer
My darkened path of gloom and fear.

No! by thy love, and by thy woes,
My mother, I can ne'er disclose
Thy refuge, though my spirits, faint
At the strange pangs their threat'nings paint;—
Yet I shall quail, beneath the glance
Of those stern eyes, whose look, perchance,
May read within my trembling breast,
The secret by no words confessed.

But, unappalled, the death-closed ear,
Their fierce, menacing tones may hear,
And no revealing word be wrung
From death's cold lip, and palsied tongue.
O! it is fearful thus to die—
Yet, in that brighter world on high,
May some sweet angel plead for me,
Dear mother, that I died for thee.

From the Boston Chronotype.

STORY OF ELLEN CRAFTS.

In a city about nine hundred miles south of Mason & Dixon's line, Ellen Crafts was held as a slave. Because we find her in this degrading condition, let it not be understood that she is a negro. Ellen Crafts, though a slave, is white; or, rather, to be strictly correct, a brunette. She is about nineteen or twenty years of age, and will readily pass in any circle as a dark-colored white girl. Girls dark as Ellen, are as often met with, as those of fairer skins. We are not describing the chief attraction of a ball-room, but something more, when we say that firmness, intelligence, and perseverence, are distinctly and impressively marked upon her countenance. Her hair is long, straight, and dark-colored, nose prominent, eyes dark, large and expressive. We are thus particular, to show her connection with the Anglo-Saxon, and to show how little there is of any feature by which the enslaved is so readily recognized.

In the city from which Ellen fled, she acted as body servant or slave to another young woman, possibly her sister—for our knowledge of the "patriarchal institution" leads readily and naturally to that inference.

While in this situation, she married. It is for the profit of the master that early marriages should be a law of custom. The union contracted by Ellen proved to be a happy one. The husband, William,—slaves have no right to other names—has proved himself to be every way worthy of her. By his industry, and by turning night into day, he contrived to procure enough money to purchase a portion of his time from the man who claimed to own him. It cost William all he had, but it procured him privileges which enabled him, by assiduous application, to lay by another store,—a large portion of which, the lion's share, went to swell the master's ill-gotten gains,—for new and dear-bought privileges.

By dint of saving and starving, William contrived to accumulate for himself and wife, enough to purchase for each, many little comforts and privileges. They were thus enabled to ameliorate their condition, and were for a time happy. Though not permitted to see each other oftener than once a week, they had many secret meetings.

These stolen interviews were sweet and precious. Were they not, ye who love the wife of your affections? Thoughts of their condition, their hard lot, mingled with unavailing regrets, without doubt, were the principal ones exchanged between them. But this condition they were constrained to endure, almost joyfully, in view of the greater deprivation and sufferings of their fellow slaves.

Privileges like these, however, were destined to bring their rich harvest. Thoughts of liberty are never long absent from a slave or prisoner. Hope beckons forever, even through sorest ills. This was the great subject, between Ellen and William. In the long lone hours of night, that were but ushering in, to them, another day of bondage, the spirit of liberty visited them. Not inappropriate to their condition is the exclamation of David: "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."

It is quite certain that they could have escaped from the city in which they were. But whither could they flee? Without a place, without means of support, hunted by every slave-catcher, "like the patridge upon the mountains," surrounded by enemies, their capture was certain; and stripes, separation, accumulated woes, would be their lot.

These considerations filled their hearts with sadness. But liberty, ever bright and fair, bid them to hope on. For many weeks they thought of many plans of escape, which promised success, but could find none.

They had heard vaguely, of the abolitionists of the north; but they had been represented to them as monsters more to be dreaded than the slave-driver himself, and their hopes led them not that way. Still they would inquire concerning them, and one day sufficient was learned to determine their course. They would flee to the abolitionists.

Their star in the east had indeed arisen, but how could they follow its glorious path? The nearest city to them was Philadelphia, a distance of 1000 miles, a weary way for fugitives from slavery. But the determination once formed, every obstacle was to be overcome. Accordingly their sleeping and waking thoughts were given to find out the way to the spot where liberty dwelt.

The first obstacle to be overcome was to secure the necessary funds for the proposed flight. By double toil, by more than miserly saving, a sufficient sum was acquired. They were, for slaves, really rich, and now freedom or death, rather than slavery, was their joint language.

The plan adopted, displays a degree of ingenuity which could not have been acquired under the ordinary circumstances of life. Solitary confinement or a life of perpetual bondage are the only incentives which bring out all the latent ingenuity of the man. The thoughts of the captive are upon one point. The whole energy and strength of his mind are directed to one aim. Let such an one see but the slightest probability of success, though it be but the faintest glimmer, and that faith, which overcomes mountains, lifts the man into the paradise he would gain. That faith secures the boon.

It was decided that Ellen should personate a sickly young man, and that William should represent the servant. The plan proposed involved a large expenditure, since young men who travel with their servants are supposed to be rich. But it secured this great, this abounding advantage. By this disguise they could take the public highway, and the most rapid conveyances. Besides, the very boldness, the originality of the plan, was designed to be their greatest safeguard, for, who would look for a fugitive from Slavery under the hat of a pale faced, sickly youth, pursuing his way north, in quest of health, attended by a serving man?

So for the plan. Its execution was now the great point. Could a disguise, impenetrable to the slave-catchers, whose scent is like the blood-hound's, and with the blood-hound, be procured? Over this vital question Ellen and William pondered day and night, with palpitating hearts. But that genius which gave the bold scheme birth, was yet fertile in resources. The first idea was a prestige of its full accomplishment.

There was no point, however minute, in the habiliments of a young man, that was not studied with as much care as ever Newton or Herschell studied the heavens. This was necessary, for a young woman who first attempts the apparel of a boy, is sure to be discovered at the first glance, by an accurate observer. Hence Ellen practiced nightly in her new garb until she had become thoroughly trained.

But to the dress itself. A slave cannot purchase a suit unquestioned, as another person may. Therefore extreme caution became necessary, else the cherished scheme of months would have been discovered and overthrown. Then they must die, for "if hope be dead, why seek to live."

William was the purchaser. At various places and different times, under numerous pretexts, he bought the required articles. The hat was a very high bell crowned, or, as he stated it, "a double story hat." Next he bought a sack, which, on being put on proved a "world too wide," but Ellen thought that was no objection, as "sacks never fit!" The vest proved to be a very long one, reaching below the hips, but fashionably cut; and as it was "all the go," was adopted without demur, especially as the sack could be buttoned over and hide the disproportion of its size. Then the pantaloons were of most liberal dimensions, and boots, more easily obtained, completed this part of the wardrobe. A pair of green glasses were procured for the purpose of making Ellen look older, for when fitted out in her new rig, she looked exceedingly young. Besides, her features might be recognized by any person whom they might meet, that knew them, while upon their journey.

These preparations having been made, a day was appointed for their flight. That day, so fraught with all their wildest hopes, arrived. Nothing had been omitted. Two trunks were obtained, sufficiently ponderous for the baggage of a young man on his travels. Nothing had been forgotten. As it became necessary to register names at hotels, and sign a certificate for the slave, "the servant who accompanied young master," a bandage and a sling for Ellen's right arm was thought of; why? She could not read or write. As impertinent travelers might scan the young man's face too closely, a convenient swelling, which required poulticing, enveloped her cheeks. As voluble and inquisitive persons might be too particular in their inquires, sickness, fatigue of traveling, would be sufficient excuse against rudeness for not answering.

Thus equipped, William, having nerved his courage up, went boldly to the ticket office and purchased a "through ticket" for "young master" and myself to "filadelfy." No questions were asked, and the tickets were obtained.

Next morning, the fearful and dangerous passage was commenced. At the depot Ellen was not recognized. So complete was her disguise, that a porter there, one of her early suitors, addressed her as "young master." She kindly bestowed upon him a small trifle to encourage him in politeness.

Along the road, at the various stopping places, the "sickly youth" received the blessings of many for his liberality in rewarding any slight service. Their custom was to put up at the first hotels, for they determined to travel as "big bugs."

They passed through many perils and hair-breadth 'scapes, but not once did Ellen's courage fail, or her inimitable and unapproachable endurance and perseverance give way, during all their journey through the slave States. After the cars left Baltimore for Philadelphia, William, wearied with anxiety and watching, laid himself down to sleep in the "Jim Crow Car," where he invariably rode, for a slave could not presume to ride with his master. It was his invariable practice, to run nervously back at every stopping place to see that "young master was safe." For this affectionate attention he received the approbation of many passengers, and was rewarded with several presents. And from Washington to Baltimore, his devotedness to his master's health was pointed out to several Northern gentlemen as an evidence of the close bonds of affection subsisting between master and slave.

We left William sleeping in the "Jim Crow Car." At Havre de Grace, where the Ferry is crossed, William remained sleeping. Ellen was called upon with other passengers to change cars. But, where was her husband? Her courage began to fail, and despair to sieze upon her. She dreaded the worst, a woful disappointment, so near the goal of their desires. She could not be comforted until the baggage master relieved her, by rudely waking the "black rascal" who so neglected his master. We will not attempt to describe Ellen's feelings when she was relieved from her fears.

They arrived in Philadelphia on Sunday morning, the day of rest—a day of rest to them, from all their toils and suffering. What an appropriate ending for such a journey. It was commenced on Wednesday, and they consequently traveled one thousand miles in four days and a half, through the enemy's country. An escape as difficult,—and to them far more glorious—than Bonaparte's journey from Egypt through a coast and sea studded with the British fleet.

A CHINESE FARM-HOUSE.

The farm, however small, is not so much the estate of an individual proprietor as the house of a family, or seat of a clan, many generations of which, under one acknowledged head or patriarch, are often congregated in the same dwelling. As the farm-houses in general differ but little from each other, except in size, I will endeavor to give the reader a description of one. In a small island formed by a moat for the supply of water and the rearing of ducks and geese, well sheltered by bamboos and other trees, and nearly hid from view, stands the house, consisting of one floor only, built, when possible, of stone, in other cases, of brick (of so superior a quality as to become an article of commerce with this country, and to find its way to Liverpool) or of wood. In the centre is a large hall, called the "Hall of Ancestors," common to all the family. In it are arranged the household gods (among which are invariably the Taouist divinities, presiding over hearing and sight) and relics, such as an ancestral picture, in the most conspicuous part of the wall, on each side of which is an aphorism of Confucius, and in front a table bearing incense-burners and fruits, as offerings, and ornamental vases, &c. The hall also serve as a dry-room for their seeds, and a depository for the smaller implements of husbandry. It is the scene of their entertainments, many of their festivals, and the adoration of their gods, but never used for culinary purposes. This forms the nucleus of the building; around it are the dwelling rooms of the different divisions of the tribe, and as often as a marriage takes place, an apartment is added for the newly-wedded couple; and, in time, the whole presents rather the appearance of a village than a single dwelling-house.

The furniture of each family consists of a bed, highly ornamented, in many cases carved, and richly inlaid with ivory; a few high-backed chairs, often of bamboo; a plain, polished, round table, washing utensils of brass, and, in one corner of the room, cooking utensils, consisting of a block fire-place, in which a few round pans are set with masonry, though, in the larger establishments, the kitchen is a separate building. Around the room are several red varnished cabinets, and in these apartments the females are employed in the household duties of needlework, spinning, &c; a spinning-wheel and loom forming necessary appendages to each farm-house in those parts where cotton is grown. Nearly everything for the use of the family is home-made; agricultural implements are home-made and repaired; cotton is grown and spun, and made into clothes; silkworms are reared, and all the process of winding and weaving done by the family; flour is ground, cakes are baked, and samshoo is distilled from rice, and as much as required stored; the rest, and whatever other produce is not wanted for home consumption, is either exchanged for other necessaries amongst the neighbors, or sent to some town in the vicinity to find a market. In Kiangtau, where that species of cloth better known under the name of nankin is made, the drapers, who are proprietors of large houses in the cities, hire stalls outside the walls, and meet the farmers on the road and buy their cloth, paying in bills drawn on their own houses. The live stock consists of a liberal supply of fowls, ducks, geese, goats, and pigs, and a dog or two (scarcely any family, however poor, is without one or more of the latter two,) together with one or two bullocks and buffaloes, according to the labor required. The buffalo is almost an amphibious animal, being constantly in the water. The impliments are very simple and primitive; I may almost say barbarous.

[Lieut. Forbes's Five Years in China.

HYDROCHLORIC GAS.

For a considerable period, this noxious vapor was one of the greatest nuisances to the manufacturer and to the neighborhood, blighting vegetation for a great distance around the works. Enormous sums were spent in erecting gigantic chimney stacks, such as those of the Messrs. Tennant, near Glasgow, where one of the largest rears its head fully one hundred feet higher than the top of St. Paul's Cathedral. Its occupation has gone, with the advance of chemical knowledge; and it now remains a huge monument to the ignorance of the past. In other cases, the muriatic acid was let off into the common sewer, and glad were the manufacturers to get rid of their acrid and troublesome product in this quiet way. But now that muriatic acid has entered into its proper chemical relation with the arts, it is as carefully preserved and retained as it was formerly dismissed. Various plans exist by means of which it is collected and reduced from the gaseous to the liquid form. The most common of these is, to conduct the vapors which rise from the decomposing salt into flues, which terminate at the bottom of a tower chimney, filled with flints of coke. A number of minute jets of water play on the coke at the top of the chimney, and the fluid gradually filters down, meeting in its course the ascending noxious vapors. These become immediately condensed, and the liquid percolating to the bottom, there enters a tunnel, and is conducted into a receptacle, now in the form of liquid hydrochloric or muriatic acid. [Electric Review.

The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer of the 25th ult. states that Bishop Freemen has preferred charges against General Belknap, the commanding officer at Fort Gibson. Specifications, irreligious conduct, in not permitting the chaplain at that post to preach longer than an hour.

CALIFORNIA—LETTER FROM GOV. SMITH.

A gentleman in this city, says the Washington Union, has received a private letter by the last steamer, dated at San Francisco, California, from the gallant and meritorious Major General Persifer F. Smith, commanding the third or Pacific division of the United States army; which, although not intended to meet the public eye, we deem it so highly interesting that we have extracted several paragraphs for publication—the gentleman yielding to our wishes in that respect:—

"You only think of California in connection with gold; and, indeed, a most wonderful connection it is. As to the extent of country holding the precious metal, and the comparative facility with which it is procured, there has been no exaggeration. The whole slope of the Sierra Nevada, on the western side, for a length of more than 400 miles, and in a belt of at least 40, contains it in greater or smaller quantities; and it may extend still further, when further research is made. It is found simply by digging and washing the earth; no expensive machinery and no intricate chemical process are necessary to develop the magic hoard. A pickaxe, shovel, or even a butcher's knife, to loosen the earth and stones, and the most simple basin for washing, have been as richly rewarded as the most approved machines from other countries. Good luck in the laborer choosing his location, has more than compensated for want of skill. The real difficulties lie in the hardships to be encountered, in the remote, uninhabited spots where the gold is found. Want of food and over working, excited by success, bad water, exposure, and dissipation, all combine to exact a heavy tribute for the wealth when found. All are not successful, but every one works on, hoping that the next blow of his pick will disclose a treasure that will surpass all he has hitherto heard of. Many die unheeded, many come off sick; but there are ten arriving from each quarter of the globe to replace every one who goes. Chinese, Sandwich Islanders, Chilians, Peruvians, Prussians, Mexicans, French, English Irish, outnumber as yet the Americans, but the latter will soon have their share. Provisions, woolen clothing, liquors, kitchen and mining utensils, sell at an enormous profit in the mines; other articles scarcely sell at all. Woman's gear is altogether a drug.

The amount of gold hitherto found is hard to determine. It is said about $4,000,000 have been exported. I shall be able in a few weeks, from facts I am collecting, to make some approximation to it.

In the mean time, all this is disastrous for us. No servants are to be be had; $250 a month has been refused in my presence by a cook. All my servants have quit, and yesterday I engaged one at $100 a month, because he is too sick to go to the mines, but I shall certainly lose him if he gets his health.

The quartermaster pays $5000 a year for the house I live in, and it would make a poor toll-house for a country bridge. The climate is cold all the year round, and foggy in the summer. The hills are bare, and the country is all hills—(forgive the bull.) The beef is execrable, and vegetables—none; voila la carte.

Any one who will come here to dig gold or bring goods with him to sell to the diggers, will make money. No other business will succeed. Whoever comes must bring a house with him; there are but few here, and lumber is worth $600 per thousand."

THE ROMAN VILLA AT HARTLIP, ENG.

Farther searches made by Mr. Bland have disclosed more apartments, together with some subterranean chambers, which, on one side, are reached by a flight of eight steps, each formed of three layers of flat tiles, and on the other by steps cut out of the natural chalk; these rooms have been stuccoed, and colored red and white. Among the objects lately discovered during the excavations are a balance in bronze, neatly made, upon the principle of those now in use for weighing letters, with hinges to permit it being carried in a small and convenient compass; a glass vase, ornamented with raised designs, representing chariot races and gladiatorial fights, over which appear the names of the chief charioteers and combatants; and a large bowl of red glazed ware, elaborately ornamented with rich foliage patterns, mythological subjects, and a figure of Victory, with a wreath and palm branch, crowning a small figure in a costume resembling that of the Byzantine Imperial garb of the 6th and 7th centuries. The character of this dress is in many respects so marked that it would seem to decide that the villa was occupied even after the Romans had left Britain. Coins of Honorius are among those discovered, and there is a fibula in speculum metal, of a decided Saxon character. The construction of the hypocausts, and the general arrangement of the rooms, resembles those of the Roman villas discovered in London during the last 10 or 20 years, all of which, we believe, except that at the Coal-Exchange, were destroyed as soon as found. Mr. Bland has most liberally preserved those found upon his estate and rendered them available to science.

SILEX.—The Farmer and Mechanic contains in its report of the proceedings of the Farmers' Club, a striking account of the part played by silex, or the earth of flints, in the vegetable world. The beautiful glossy coating of straw is flint. The rattan of the East Indies is admirably coated with it. Examine with a microscope the surface of wheat straw, or of rattan, and you see this glossy coat broken in circular stripes around the stem, showing that it is caused by the necessary bendings of the stems under the pressure of winds and other forces. This apparently refractory substance is proved to be soluble in water, and used by the plant in forming this beautiful coat impervious to water. By experiment, silex (silicia) has been dissolved by hot steam, carried up as vapor, and then falling, condensed like a hoar frost. It has long been supposed that plants have power to gain a coat of glass, and their flowers to use the metals for their colors. The flowers of violets have been made to exhibit the fact that gold was in the violet color.

NEW INVENTION IN BAKING.—An invention has been made in Glasgow, Scotland, which promises to be of great service in the process of baking. Some idea of its effects may be formed from the fact that a little model, a mere toy in appearance, standing upon a table less than a yard long, and only half as wide, is fully capable of doing the work of five or six bakers—a class of men whose labor is well known to be none of the lightest. The dough is both made and moulded by the machine into loaves of the required size and shape; and, by an original and ingenious process of mixing and kneading, which can be done either with or without barm, the usual loss of weight, attributed to evaporation in "raising the sponge," is avoided; and a great saving in flour, as well as time and labor, is consequently effected. The bread manufactured by the model of the machine is of the most excellent quality.

ANNIHILATION OF SPACE.—The railroad across the Isthmus of Panama will doubtless soon be built. The changes which the Isthmus route will produce in the time necessary to accomplish several voyages, is thus statistically set forth, according to a report of Hon. T. Butler King. The rate of a steamer being 12 miles an hour, one may travel from New York

To Calcutta in	47	days
Canton in	36	"
Shanghae in	35	"
Valparaiso in	17	"
Callao in	12	"
Guayaquil in	9	"
Panama in	7	"
San Blas in	12	"
Mazatlan in	14	"
San Diego in	16	"
San Francisco in	18	"

NEGRO REPRESENTATIVES AT THE COURT OF ST. JAMES.—The London Times of May 21st, devotes three columns to the names of parties who attended the Queen's Drawing-Room, on her Majesty's birth-day. In the list of diplomatic personages present, is the name of M. M. Deleva, (Senateur,) Haytien Minister. In another place it is announced that the Haytien Minister presented N. E. Sequy Killevaleix, Secretary of the Haytien Legation. In honor of the same occasion, Lord Palmerston entertained the corps diplomatique. Among the guests of the banquet, we notice the names of the United States and Haytien Ministers.

AKRON FLOURING MILLS.—There are at Akron, Ohio, five flouring mills, making on an average 135,000 barrels of flour annually. During the running season they make about 1,000 barrels per day. They give employment to over 80 persons. The amount of money paid out per annum by these mills is nearly $800,000. Beside the mills at Akron, there are several other mills in Summit County. It is estimated that all the mills in that county pay out the sum of $1,000,000 per annum for wheat and labor.

VARIETY.

"The estate that was left" said an Irishman to his lawyer, "was a pig and a bushel of potatoes, which were to be divided between the heirs, myself and brother. The Executors shut the pig up with the potatoes, and during the night he eat them up, and now we want to know how we are to divide the property."

A man who had purchased a pair of new shoes, finding the road rather a rough one, concluded to put the shoes under his arm, and walk home barefooted. After a while he stubbed his great toe, taking the nail off as "clear as a whistle." "How lucky!" he exclaimed, "what a tremendous lick that would have been for the shoes!"

John Randolph, in one of his letters to a relative, says:—"I know of nothing that I am so anxious you should acquire as the faculty of saying no. You must calculate on unreasonable requests being referred to you every day of your life, and must endeavor to deny with as much facility as you acquiesce."

"Suppose," says the Yates County Whig, "that the country papers enter into a 'league' not to support any man for office hereafter unless he shall have been one year previous to his nomination an advance paying subscriber to our respective papers?"

Since 1789, all the revolutions in France have taken place under Popes of the names of Pius. Louis XVI. was dethroned under Pius VI.; the Directory was overturned under Pius VI.; Napoleon fell under Pius VII,; Charles X. under Pius VIII.; and Louis Phillippe under Pius IX.

The Hannibal Journal gives the following as the superscription of a letter which lately passed through the post office of that town:

'to my dear ant Sally
She Cawgar
Elinoize
I had a short ager spell to-day.'

"Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh." The Literary Gazette gives the following as the prayer taught the children of Scarborough wreckers in times of yore—"God bless daddy! God bless mammy! God send a ship ashore before morning! Amen!"

Plutarck has transmitted to us the remarkable answer of a Spartan whom a priest wanted to confess. "Is it to you or to God I am to confess?" "To God," answered the priest. "In that case," replied the Spartan, "Man, begone!"

An old writer thus describes a talkative female: "I know a lady who talks so incessantly, that she won't give an echo fair play. She has such an everlasting rotation of tongue, that an echo must wait until she dies before it can catch the last words."

The aggregate number of hogs killed in the West, for the season 1848–9, is stated as at least 1,500,000, of which 27,500 were killed on the Mississippi, 72,200 on the Missouri, and 219,000 on the Illinois; the remainder in the States of Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana.

Queen Victoria's kitchen is officered by larderers, a chief cook and three master cooks, with four apprentices, a store-keeper, two green office men, three kitchen maids, two steam engineers, and a chief clerk on a salary of $3,600 a year. The apprentices pay as high as $1000 premium to be admitted into the chief cook's employment.

Nineveh and its Remains.

With an account of a visit to the Chaldean Christians of Kurdistan and the Yezidis, or Devil Worshipers, and an inquiry into the Manners and Arts of the ancient Assyrians.

BY AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD, ESQ., D. C. L.

WITH an Introductory Letter, by Rev. Edward Robinson, D. D., author of "Biblical Researches in Palestine," &c. In 2 vols., with about 100 illustrations. $4 50.

 Every word of the text and a FAC-SIMILE of ALL the ILLUSTRATIONS and MAPS of the English edition will be given in this.

"Taking this only as a book of travels, we have read none for a long time more interesting and instructive. In his dissertations he is full and copious without being tedious; his style is plain, vigorous, and particularly unaffected; it is the natural language of a strong mind fully master of its subject, and warmed and enlivened, without being inflated or kindled into rhapsody by the enthusiastic, without which he would never have conceived or achieved his wonderful task."—Quarterly Review.

"We repeat, that there has been no such picture in any modern book of travels. Park is not braver or more adventurous, Burkhardt is not more truthful, Eothen not more gay or picturesque than the hero of the book before us."—London Examiner.

"This is, we think, the most extraordinary work of the present age, whether with reference to the wonderful discoveries it describes, its remarkable verification of our early biblical history, or of the talent, courage, and perseverance of its author. It is impossible to read his work without finding our minds absorbed in wonder at the development of that period, and of its work of art, where one of the early descendants of Noah 'built Nineveh, and the city of Rehoboth, and Calah, and Rossen, between Nineveh and Calah, the same being a great city.'—(Genesis 10th, 11th, and 12th verses.)

"We will only add, in conclusion, that in these days, when the fulfillment of the prophecy is engaging so much attention, we cannot but consider that the work of Mr. Layard will be found to afford many extraordinary proofs of biblical history, and of the extreme accuracy of the denunciations of the Prophets Isaiah and Ezekiel, against the kings of Assyria, and of the destruction of Nineveh in particular. Even the colors and decorations, as found in the palace of Nimroud, agree exactly with those described by the Prophet Ezekiel. The circumference of Nineveh, as mentioned by the Prophet Isaiah, was found by Mr. Layard to be extremely accurate, and the connection of the Assyrians with the Jews was clearly ascertained. The history also of the Kings of Assyria, as shown on the various sculptures, is highly interesting, and throws great light on the manners of that ancient people."—The Times, (London,) Feb. 9, 1849.

"Of the historical value of his discoveries, too high an estimate can hardly be formed."—N. Y. Recorder.

"We cannot doubt it will find its way into the hands of scholars and thinkers at once, and we shall be surprised if it does not prove to be one of the most popular, as it certainly is one of the most useful issues of the season."—Evangelist.

"As a record of discoveries, it is equally wonderful and important; confirming in many particulars the incidental histories of Sacred Writ, 'disentombing temple-palaces from the sepulcher of ages, and recovering the metropolis of a wonderful nation from the long night of oblivion.'"—Com. Advertiser.

"It has been truly said, that the narrative is like a romance. In its incidents and descriptions it does indeed remind one continually of an Arabian tale of wonders and genii."—Dr. Robinson, in Introductory Note.

"The work of Mr. Layard has two prominent and distinct characters. Its narration of wonderful discoveries is of high and absorbing interest; but as a book of modern travels, abounding in lively and piquant descriptions of the manners and habits of a people always regarded with intense interest, it is second to none."—Democratic Review.

"We can recommend it as a valuable work."—Observer.

Orders received by all Booksellers.

G. P. PUTNAM, Publisher,
155 Broadway, New York.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Instructor in Natural Sciences.
AURELIA F. ROGERS, Preceptress.
MARY M. CLARK, Teacher of Music and Painting.

Other experienced Teachers are employed as Assistants.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First, commencing Wed., Aug. 23, ending Nov. 29.
Second, " " Dec. 13, " March 21.
Third, " " April 4, " July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

TUITION, according to studies,	$3, $4, or $5 00
EXTRAS—Drawing,	1 00
Painting,	$2 00 or 4 00
Tuition on Piano,	8 00
Use of Piano,	2 00
Chemical Lectures, and Experiments,	1 00
Writing, including Stationery,	50
Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, bedstead,	1 50
Board in private families, per week,	$1 00 to 1 50

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, ac. companied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

IRA SPENCER, M. D.,
President of the Board of Trustees.

DERUYTER, Madison Co., N. Y., June 12, 1848.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman,
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—O. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW-YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ [illegible] post paid to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY G. B. UTTER & T. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 5.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JULY 19, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 265.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

REVIEW OF MAHAN ON THE SABBATH.

[Continued.]

Upon the second proposition, viz. that "the seventh day as a Sabbath has been repealed by divine authority, both expressed and implied," the author remarks:—

"1st. The seventh day as the day on which the institution is to be observed, has been abolished by the direct authority of inspiration. In proof of this assertion, I adduce a single passage bearing directly upon the subject. Col. 2: 16—'Let no man judge you therefore in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days.'"

The author affirms, that the term Sabbath in this text includes the "seventh day or Jewish Sabbath," and therefore that it, along with all the other Jewish rites, was superseded by the direct authority of God. That it includes this day, he says, is evident from the fact that all the other days instituted under the old dispensation were included under the terms "holy day" and "new moon;" to which we reply, that these are general terms, including the particular feasts, such as "the sheaf of first fruits," the "feast of trumpets," the "day of atonement," the "feast of the tabernacles," &c., all of which are called Sabbaths. Now, that these same Sabbaths are referred to in the texts quoted, is evident from the fact that they were all ceremonial rites, having an antitype in Christ. "Which are shadows of things to come; but the body is of Christ." Col. 2: 17. That the weekly Sabbath was one of these shadows, having an end in Christ, is an absurdity too glaring to need refutation—1st. Because the Sabbath is a demand of nature, as imperative after as before Christ; and, 2d. Because it was instituted before sin came into the world, and could not, therefore, have been typical of this redeemer from sin. The author remarks:—

"The objection that the Jewish feast days must be referred to, from the fact that in the original the plural form of the word is used, is without any weight whatever, from the obvious fact that this form is most commonly used in the New Testament to distinguish the seventh day."

To which we reply, that this term in the original occurs in the singular form in more than three-fourths of the instances of its occurrence in the New Testament, as will appear to any one sufficiently versed in classic literature to distinguish the singular from the plural form of the Greek noun, Sabbaton.

Dr. Clarke says, the term toon sabbatoon, in the text, refers to the Jewish feasts of weeks, and this opinion is sanctioned by the best translators and commentators of the age. But the proposition of the author finds ample refutation in the fact that the apostles continued to observe the same day after this injunction of Paul to the Collossians as before, clearly showing that the weekly Sabbath was not alluded to in the text.

The opinions of ancient as well as modern writers on this subject are entitled to credit. We propose to contrast the opinions of a few learned men, observers of the first day, with the opinion of the author, upon this text. Cawdry and Palmer, in a treatise on the Sabbath, written in 1646, say: "The apostle, in Col. 2: 16, speaks of other holy days and Sabbaths, and not of the weekly Sabbath."

Shepherd remarks upon Col. 2: 16, Rom. 14: 4, 5, and kindred passages, "If we suppose that these places be meant of the weekly Sabbath, and rigidly urge them, we may quickly press blood instead of milk out of them, and wholly abolish the observance of any Sabbath."

Dr. Owen, in his Treatise on the Sabbath, says, speaking of this text, "It is known and confessed that at that time all Judaical observation of days, whether feasts, or fasts, weekly, monthly, or annual, were by themselves and others called their Sabbaths, and that kind of speech is here observed by the apostle."

Richard Byfield remarks, "The apostle there (Col. 2: 16) speaketh not of the fourth commandment, because he teacheth of those Sabbaths which were of the same rank with the new moons."

The same festivals are alluded to in Gal. 4: 10—"Ye observe days and months and times and years." These in verse nine are called "beggarly elements." Now to class any precept of the Decalogue with weak and beggarly elements, says the last-mentioned writer, was far from the apostle to think, and abhorrent to all Christian ears and religion.

Again, the apostle, in Col. 2: 17, mentions those ordinances alluded to in the 16th verse, as things "against us, contrary to us." Now, if the weekly Sabbath was included, then sure it was against us, contrary to us. But such a charge against the Sabbath is false in every feature, for it was most emphatically made for, or in favor of man, and not against him. It will not at all meet the difficulty, to say that it was the seventh day, and not the Sabbath, that was abolished, for we have shown the seventh day and the Sabbath to be inseparable, and, as Shepherd says, such a construction wholly abolishes the observance of any Sabbath whatever. Theophilus Brabourne, a minister of the Established Church, says, "Now, if you make the seventh-day Sabbath by this text a shadow and abolished, then you abolish the whole fourth commandment, and it must stand as a cypher in our Bibles."

The division some times made of the fourth commandment into moral and positive, is neither ingenious nor wise. If the day of the rest be positive, and the rest itself "moral," the day is no less enduring, for this "positive" command to rest on the seventh day was given for a positive reason, which reason will exist as long as God exists. Now what do men gain by calling it positive; for, if positive it was a part and parcel of God's own law, of which Christ says, (Matt. 5: 14,) "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Now one of three things is true: Either the seventh day was not so much as a tittle of the law, or Christ predicted falsely, or the author's position is false, in relation to the passing away of the original Sabbath.

Concerning the author's last proposition, viz. 'that the first day of the week is the present Sabbath,' he remarks:—

"In establishing this proposition, I will in the first place direct attention to Rev. 1: 10—'I was in the spirit on the Lord's day.' From this passage I affirm, that there is under the present dispensation a Sabbath, and that the one now regarded by Christians generally as such, is that day."

In endeavoring to show from this text that there is a Sabbath, the author says, that the term "Lord's" has a fixed and definite meaning, and denotes any thing set apart from a common to a sacred purpose, as "the Lord's Supper," the "Sabbath of the Lord thy God." We admit that the term "Lord's" means something definite, that is, it is used to denote whatever belongs to the Lord; but it does not of necessity mean a weekly Sabbath, any more than it means the planet Jupiter. It is used in the Scriptures to denote other things than a weekly Sabbath; as in Thess. 5: 2, where the coming of Christ is called the "day of the Lord," or Lord's day. But, admitting for a moment that it means the Sabbath, then we affirm that it means the seventh day, because that day is frequently denominated the Lord's day, or day of the Lord, as in Isaiah 58: 13, where God, by the mouth of the prophet, calls the Sabbath "my holy day." In Matt. 12th, Mark 2d, Luke 6th, it is affirmed that Christ is Lord of the Sabbath day, which was the seventh day. Now, if Christ was Lord of the Sabbath day, then it was his, and these expressions are equivalent to "Lord's day." "The Sabbath of the Lord thy God," is a common form of expression applied to the seventh day. The author remarks, that "this term could not mean the seventh day, because that is always called the Sabbath." We have already shown, that the seventh day is sometimes called the Lord's day; and we now affirm, that the term "Lord's day" could not have meant the first day, for that is invariably called the "first day" and never "the Sabbath" in a single instance in the whole Bible; so that an individual reading the Bible for the first time, without comment, would no more suppose the first day to be the Sabbath, than he would suppose the third day to be.

Some have supposed the day spoken of to be the weekly Sabbath, because John was in the Spirit on that day. But this amounts to nothing, unless it be assumed as a major proposition, that "any day in which John was in the Spirit is the Sabbath day." This is without any proof whatever; therefore the conclusion fails.

Again, says Mahan, "The term Lord's day was understood by the whole church at the time in the very sense attributed to it." This we deny, and affirm that the apostles never understood it so, from the very obvious fact, that they never called the first day in a single instance "Lord's day." The four evangelists had all written concerning the resurrection, and the Acts of the Apostles were written, yet the term Lord's day was never by one of these writers applied to the first day of the week, though they often spoke of that day. What but a zeal bordering on infatuation, could ever have prompted such a declaration? We affirm, that it is without one iota of Scripture testimony, and therefore must be rejected by every one who believes the Scriptures perfect, thoroughly furnishing unto all good works.

The author is not without a dernier resort in this trying emergency; for, without a single attempt to prove by the Bible the proposition, that the church understood the revelator to mean the first day, he disturbs the manes of the sleeping Fathers to prove what he thus virtually acknowledges that the Bible does not reveal. For ourselves, we are satisfied with the testimony of inspiration, though we may admit the concurrent testimony of history to any fact stated in the Bible. But when, as in the present instance, the fact is not at all stated in the Scriptures, but is actually contradicted, we may safely allow the sleeping fathers to sleep on. However, to show how little assistance the author obtains from this source we are willing to follow him among the tombs of the ancient dead, and learn of them. But in canvassing the writings of the Fathers, great caution must be observed, for they are at best but uncertain lights. They have nearly all come down to us through the Romish Church, which claims itself to have changed the day of the Sabbath, and would not, therefore, be very careful to preserve testimony against itself.

The first writer quoted by the author, is Barnabas. It is sufficient to say of this epistle, that there is no evidence of its genuineness, and that it is condemned by the best historians. Eusebius, who lived near the time when it was written, characterized it as a "spurious writing, entitled to no credit." "It is an injury to St. Barnabas," says Dr. Milner, "to ascribe this epistle to him." Mosheim, in his abridged Church History, page 54, says that it is the work of some superstitious Jew, of mean ability. With such testimony against it, we were surprised to find it quoted by any author of such extensive erudition; and the more so, because, if it be genuine, it is a refutation of the author's own theory, inasmuch as Barnabas says that the six days of creation, spoken of in Genesis, mean six thousand years, and the seventh day the seventh millennium, in which, after the ungodly have been judged, and the season of the wicked one abolished, the Son shall rest in that millennium. According to this epistle, no Sabbath at all would be kept till the beginning of the other world, or holy age, which beginning Barnabas calls the eighth day; "for which cause," says he, "we observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus rose from the dead." Thus the resurrection was the ushering in of the rest of a thousand years, which the rest of God foreshadowed; and yet the author quotes this in proof of his theory of a weekly Sabbath upon the first day of the week! Verily, drowning men will catch at straws.

Our author next quotes Ignatius, as "contrasting the practice of sabbatizing with living according to the 'Lord's day.'" We suppose he alludes to the passage in the epistle to the Magnesians, for in no other epistle extant is the subject mentioned. The passage is in the 3d chapter, and 3d verse—"Wherefore, if they [the old prophets, see first verse] who were brought up in these ancient laws, came nevertheless to the newness of hope, no longer observing Sabbaths, but keeping the Lord's day, in which also our life is sprung up by him, and through his death, whom yet some deny, how shall we be able to live different from him?" This is a strange passage for an author to quote, who maintains that the day was changed [illegible] rising on the first day, and that the seventh was observed till that event; for Ignatius expressly declares, that the holy prophets kept the Lord's day, or first day, ages before Christ appeared on earth. It is sufficient to say of this passage, that it is the production of some shallow interpolator. During the late controversy in the English Church, a delegation was sent to Syria in search of the most ancient manuscript of Ignatius known to be in existence; it was found; but it contained only a small part of what is now ascribed to that author. Among the missing passages, was the one under consideration. The author has therefore taken the weapon of some designing forger, and in his thrust at the Sabbath of the Lord has upturned his own theory.

Again, Mr. Mahan quotes Ignatius as saying, "Let every friend of Christ celebrate the Lord's day." To this we only remark, that we cannot find such a passage in any of his epistles.

Pliny the younger is quoted. In his letter as Governor of Bithynia to the Emperor Trajan he says:—"They are accustomed, on a stated day, to meet before daylight, and to repeat among themselves a hymn to Christ as to God." This stated day, the author thinks, was the first day. We think not, for the reasons, 1st. That Pliny does not inform us what day it was. 2d. That the first day was not at that time observed as a Sabbath. 3d. That the seventh day was observed as the Sabbath at that time, as we shall presently show. We therefore more fairly infer that he alluded to the seventh day.

Justin Martyr is next quoted:—"On the day called Sunday, there is a meeting in one place of all the Christians who live in the towns or in the country, at which the four gospels are read;" this, and certain other ceremonies, were performed, for the reason that God made the world, and Christ rose on the first day. But Justin Martyr says farther, that after these ceremonies, all returned home to their labors. This, then, could not have been the Sabbath, but was simply a festival observed by the Christians of Rome and the surrounding country, in honor of the resurrection of Christ. Such festivals, we freely admit, were common at that time, but not as a substitute for the Sabbath day.

Allusion is next made to Dionysius, who, when writing to the Romans, informed them that the epistle of their late bishop had been read in the church at Corinth, while they were keeping the Lord's day. This has no weight, inasmuch as there is abundant evidence that the Lord's day, or Sunday, was not yet substituted for the seventh by the church generally.

In proof of the assertion, that Sunday was not yet substituted for the seventh day, we refer to various writers of that period and later. Socrates, in his ecclesiastical history, written A. D. 440, says, "Touching the communion there are sundry observations and customs; for though, in a manner, almost all the churches throughout the whole world do celebrate and receive the holy mysteries every Sabbath day, yet the people inhabiting Alexandria and Rome do not use it. The Egyptians adjoining Alexandria, and the inhabitants of Thebes, do of a tradition celebrate the mysteries on Sunday." From this we learn, that nearly the whole world observed the seventh day, and the few who observed Sunday did so from tradition. Sozomen, who wrote about the same time, corroborates this view. He says, "Almost all Christians, except at Rome and Alexandria, assemble on the Sabbath, and also upon the first day of the week." Here the Sabbath and first day are contrasted, the same as in the New Testament. Festivals were held on the first day, the Sabbath still existing, as ever, among nearly all Christians. The Council of Laodicea, A. D. 365, provided that the gospels should be read on the Sabbath. Gregory of Nysa, in his expostulation, says, "How can you look upon the Lord's day, if you neglect the Sabbath? Do you not know, that they are sisters, and that in despising one you affront the other?" Here we observe, that the term Lord's day did not mean the Sabbath, as understood by these ancient writers. We think it may be safely asserted, that the term Sabbatum, for many centuries, was not applied to any day but Saturday. Eusebius, in his Ecclesiastical History, page 358, calls Friday "the day before the Sabbath."

There is an important distinction between the Sabbath and a religious festival. Sunday was early introduced as a festival, and kept up through opposition to the Jews. Dr. Neander says, "Opposition to Judaism introduced the particular festival of Sunday very early." Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, says, in the fourth century, "We assemble on Saturday, not that we are infected with Judaism, but to worship Jesus, the Lord of the Sabbath." Luther characterizes Sunday as a festival: "Let festivals be abolished, and none be observed, but Sunday." See D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, vol. 2d, page 92. Ignatius is explicit on this point, if we allow his testimony: "Let us keep the Sabbath in a spiritual manner, not in bodily ease, but in the study of the law, and in the contemplation of the works of God; and after we have kept the Sabbath, let every one that loveth Christ 'keep the Lord's day festival.'" That Sunday was a festival, but not in place of the Sabbath, is farther urged by Neander, in his Church History, who says, "The festival of Sunday was always a human ordinance, and it was far from the intention of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect—far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday.

This transfer, as we might easily show, was by human authority, but as this is not our present purpose, we will quote only a single authority. Edward Brerewood, Professor in Gresham College, London, in 1630, remarks, "It is commonly believed, that the Jewish Sabbath was changed into the Lord's day by Christian emperors, and they know little, who do not know, that the ancient Sabbath did remain, and was observed by the eastern churches, three hundred years after our Saviour's passion."

We are informed, in Lucien's Ecclesiastical History, that the term Lord's day was applied to Sunday by Sylvester, Bishop of Rome, in the reign of Constantine; and by Eusebius and others, that Constantine appointed the Lord's day, that it should be consecrated to prayer, and that Christians learned to observe it of him. See Life of Constantine, book 4th. Certainly, if they learned to observe the Sabbath on Sunday of him, they knew it not before.

In conclusion, we think that a fair analysis of history, and the writings of the Fathers, clearly shows that the term Lord's day was not applied to Sunday in the sense of a Sabbath till about three hundred years after Christ, and that, until that time, the seventh day was generally observed. That the Sabbath and first day were kept distinct, appears evident, not only from the writers quoted, but from all the canons of the church for many centuries; and even in the Acts of the British Parliament in the early part of the eighteenth century, a form of expression was employed recognizing this distinction.

[To be concluded.]

THE VATICAN.

The vatican, which crowns one of the seven hills of Rome, is an asemblage or groupe of buildings, covering a space of 1200 feet in length, and 1000 feet in breadth. It is built upon the spot which was occupied by the garden of Nero. It owes its original to the Bishops of Rome, who erected an humble residence on its site, in the early part of the sixth century. Pope Eugenius III. rebuilt it on a magnificent scale, about the year 1150. A few years afterwards, Innocent II. gave it up as a lodging to Peter II., King of Arragon. In 1405, Clement V., at the instigation of the King of France, removed the Papal See from Rome to Avignon, when the Vatican remained in a condition of obscurity and neglect for more than seventy years. But soon after the return of the pontifical court at Rome, an event which had been so earnestly prayed for by the poor Patriarch, and which finally took place in 1736, the Vatican was put in a state of repair, again enlarged, and thenceforward considered as a regular palace and residence of the Popes, who, one after the other, added buildings to it, and gradually enriched it with antiquities, statues, pictures, and books, until it became the richest repository in the world.

Its library was commenced fourteen hundred years ago. It contains 40,000 manuscripts, among which are some by Pliney, St. Thomas, St. Charles Borromeo and many Hebrew, Syriac, Arabian and Armenian Bibles. The whole of the immense builings forming the Vatican are filled with statues, found beneath the ruins of ancient Rome, with paintings by the masters, and with curious medals, and antiquities of almost every description. When it is known that there have been exhumed more than 79,000 statues from the ruined temples and palaces of Rome, the reader can form some idea of the riches of the Vatican.

The Vatican will ever be held in veneration by the student, the artist and the scholar.

THOUGHTS OF HEAVEN.

No sickness there,
No weary wasting of the frame away,
No fearful shrinking from the midnight air—
No dread of summer's bright and fervid ray!

No hidden grief,
No wild and cheerless vision of despair;
No vain petition for a swift relief,
No tearful eye, no broken heart, are there.

Care has no home
Within that realm of ceaseless praise and song—
Its tossing billows break and melt in foam
Far from the mansions of the spirit throng.

The storm's black wing
Is never spread athwart celestial skies!
Its wailings blend not with the voice of spring,
As some too tender flow'ret fades and dies.

No night distils
Its chilling dews upon the tender frame;
No moon is needed there! the light, which fills
That land of glory, from its Maker came.

No parted friends
O'er mournful recollections have to weep;
No bed of death enduring Love attends,
To watch the coming of a pulseless sleep!

No blasted flower
Or withered bud celestial gardens know!
No scorching blast, or fierce descending shower,
Scatters destruction like a ruthless foe!

No battle word
Startles the sacred host with fear and dread!
The song of peace Creation's morning heard,
Is sung wherever angel-minstrels tread!

Let us depart,
If home like this await the weary soul;
Look up, thou stricken one, thy wounded heart
Shall bleed no more at sorrow's stern control.

With Faith our guide,
White-robed and innocent, to trace the way,
Why fear to plunge in Jordan's rolling tide,
And find the ocean of Eternal Day? [Nat. Era.

NAPOLEON—TWO PICTURES.

We were forcibly struck lately, says the Knickerbocker, in reading Dumas' 'Shores of the Rhine,' by this contrasted picture of 'Napoleon going to and returning from Waterloo.' The two scenes are worthy the pencil of Delaroche:

"We saw two carriages approaching, galloping each with six horses. They disappeared for an instant in a valley, then rose again at a quarter of a league's distance from us. Then we set off running towards the town, crying 'L'Empereur! L'Empereur!' We arrived breathless, and only preceding the Emperor by some five hundred paces. I thought he would not stop, whatever might be the crowd awaiting him, and so made for the post-house, when I sunk down half dead with the running; but at any rate I was there. In a moment appeared, turning the corner of a street, the foaming horses; then the postillions, all covered with ribbons; then the carriages themselves; then the people following the carriages. The carriages stopped at the post. I saw Napoleon! He was dressed in a green coat, with little epaulets, and wore the officer's cross of the legion of honor. I only saw his bust framed in the square of the carriage window. His head fell upon his chest—that famous medalic head of the old Roman Emperors. His forehead fell forward; his features, immovable, were of the yellowish color of wax; only his eyes appeared to be alive. Next him, on his left, was Prince Jerome, a King without a kingdom, but a faithful brother. He was at that period a fine young man of six-and-twenty or thirty years of age, his features regular and well formed, his beard black, his hair elegantly arranged. He saluted in place of his brother, whose vague glance seemed lost in the future—perhaps in the past. Opposite the Emperor was Letort, his aid-de-camp and ardent soilder, who seemed already to snuff the air of battle; he was smiling too, the poor fellow, as if he had long days to live! All this lasted for about a minute. Then the whip cracked, the horses neighed, and it all disappeared like a vision.

* * * * * * *

"Three days afterward, toward evening, some people arrived from St. Quentin; they said that as they came away they heard cannon. The morning of the seventeenth a courier arrived who scattered all along the road the news of the victory. The eighteenth nothing. The nineteenth nothing; only vague rumors were abroad, coming no one knew whence. It was said that the Emperor was at Brussels. The twentieth, three men in rags, two wounded, and riding jaded horses all covered with foam, entered the town, and were instantly surrounded by the whole population, and pushed into the court-yard of the town-house. These men hardly spoke French. They were, I believe, Westphalians, belonging somehow to our army. To all our questions they only shook their heads sadly, and ended by confessing that they had quitted the field of Waterloo at eight o'clock, and that the battle was lost when they came away. It was the advanced guard of the fugitives. We would not believe them. We said those men were Prussian spies. Napoleon could not be beaten! That fine army which we had seen pass could not be destroyed. We wanted to put the poor fellows into prison; so quickly had we forgotton '13 and '14, to remember the years which had gone before! My mother ran to the fort, where she passed the whole day, knowing it was there the news must arrive, whatever it were. During this time I looked out in the maps for Waterloo, the name of which even I could not find, and began to think the place was imaginary, as were the men's accounts of the battle. At four o'clock, more fugitives arrived, who confirmed the news of the first comers. These were French, and could give all the details which we asked for. They repeated what the others had said, only adding that Napoleon and his brother were killed. This we would not believe. Napoleon might not be invincible—invulnerable he certainly was. Fresh news more terrible and disastrous continued to come in until ten o'clock at night.

At ten o'clock at night we heard the noise of a carriage. It stopped, and the Postmaster went out with a light. We followed him, as he ran to the door to ask for news. Then he started a step back, and cried 'It's the Emperor!' I got on a stone bench, and looked over my mother's shoulder. It was indeed Napoleon; seated in the same corner, in the same uniform, his head on his breast as before. Perhaps it was bent a little lower; but there was not a line in his countenance, not an altered feature, to mark what were the feelings of the great gambler, who had just staked and lost the world. Jerome and Letort were not with him to bow and smile in his place. Jerome was gathering together the remnants of the army; Letort had been cut in two by a cannon ball. Napoleon lifted his head slowly, as if rising from a dream, and then, with his brief, strident voice, 'What place is this?' he said. 'Villers-Cotoret, Sire.' 'How mrny leagues from Soissons?' 'Six, Sire.' 'From Paris?' 'Nineteen.' 'Tell the post-boys to go quick,' and he once more flung himself back into the corner of his carriage, and his head fell on his chest. The horses carried him away as if they had wings!"

The world knows what had taken place between those two apparitions of Napoleon!

THE PASTOR AND THE PRESS.

There is much truth in the following passage from a British religious newspaper. Pastors endowed with the talent of writing acceptable articles for the press, much increase their influence for good by using that talent.

"The press is, in this respect, by far the most powerful auxiliary to the Pulpit that is known, or can be devised. Let no man, then, think that such labors—under given circumstances—are foreign to it, still less, that they are necessarily injurious to such pastors as sustain them, or to the churches under their care. The greatest blessing that could happen to many Churches, would be the communication to their pastors of the intellectual and moral stimulus which editorship is so pre-eminently calculated to supply; and it is, we think, on this ground, to be regretted that such labor is necessarily so very limited; but by wise arrangements it may be increased to a vast extent, in all the more populous districts of every country. A period of from one to four hours daily thus spent, in the early morning and forenoon, would be to them, and, by consequence, to their flocks, a perennial source of ever-growing intelligence and moral power—grand accompaniments of spiritual life. In thus speaking, of course, the possession of the necessary measure of physical and intellectual energy is assumed. There are many most excellent men, and most efficient pastors, whose corporeal strength and mental [illegible] endure such continuity of effort—all, such are, therefore, excepted, and, did opportunity present, ought not to enter them. Those, happily, who can least afford it, are generally those who least require it. Every man in his own order. But there are good people so intelligent and so unreflecting, that they would place all men in one order, and that the lowest. They imagine that in proportion as a pastor does much for the press, or for public institutions connected with religion and humanity, he must necessarily do less for them. No mistake can be greater He may, with perfect impunity from these people, lounge, sleep, saunter, stroll, and while away, in doing absolutely nothing, twice the time that, well employed, would, in a course of years, suffice to command for him a merited portion of literary distinction—the time that would suffice to conduct a journal, or to render great service in the work of public societies. Never yet was pastoral efficiency impaired, or Christian churches injured, by habits of study in a minister, whether such studies take the shape of manuscripts which may never see the light, or of periodical literature. Would that the reverse could be affirmed with equal truth."

DANGER OF BEING IN DEBT.

The following instructive passage, is from the Memoir of Dr. Milnor, and relates to the early part of his life:

"My next door neighbor is in debt. Upwards of two years ago he borrowed from me about two hundred dollars, and immediately afterwards one hundred and ten more. The latter sum he engaged to return in twenty-four hours. I have never received a shilling of these sums in money; but, as he is a book-seller, I have, at his earnest solicitation, taken books of him to the amount of nearly two-thirds of the demand. His note for the balance is now due, and he urges me to take Viner's Abridgement, which satisfies the debt, except thirty or forty dollars.

During the whole time since the loan, he has persevered in a system of cringing prevarication and promises, which he must have known at the time he dealt them out, he never would fulfil. Various artifices, false tales, shifts, and pretences, he has made use of; and I have been the dupe of them. I cannot believe him to be so destitute of feeling as not to be mortified and degraded in his own estimation, by the imagined necessity of resorting to them. But in the one case or the other, I am unable to point to myself a more humiliating situation for a human being to stand in.

I have derived from this transaction two pieces of instruction, which are, in my view, an adequate compensation for the whole sum, had such an event happened:—

1. To be cautious of hastily and unadvisedly lending money to a man of whose ability and punctuality I am not well assured, unless it be accompanied by adequate security.

2. To adhere religiously to a determination which I formed at the moment of commencing business, never to incur a debt which I have the remotest apprehension of being unable, or even finding it inconvenient to discharge. And, in order constantly to possess the means of keeping this resolution, whatever my income may be, always to live within it."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 19, 1849.

Traveling Agent.—Eld. Walter B. Gillett having been engaged to travel a while as Agent for the Sabbath Recorder, will visit most of our churches in the State of New York previous to September 1st. His primary object will be to increase the subscription list of the paper, and to collect what is due for it up to the close of volume 5. He will also take the names of persons who may wish to become members of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and receive and transmit to the Treasurer any moneys subscribed for the benefit of that Society.

THE CHOLERA.

In view of the ravages committed by this mysterious and dreadful disease, not only in our own city, but in all parts of the country, we cannot but feel that the present is a solemn time. The great and terrible God is in our midst, admonishing us to submit ourselves to Him. Twice, in the course of seventeen years, has this scourge gone over our world, marching from the Indies through the kingdoms of Europe, and thence to the American continent. This circumstance, in connection with the political and social revolutions which have occurred in the mean time, and are still going on, the famines in the old countries, the extensive commercial embarrassments, and distresses of various kinds, reminds us solemnly of our Lord's declaration, that "nation shall rise up against nation, and kingdom against kingdom, and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places." Matt. 24: 7. We repeat it, therefore; we consider it a solemn time. God seems to have "come out of his place," and to be calling aloud to men that they should awake to righteousness. But "God speaketh once, yea, twice, and man perceiveth it not." Job 33: 14. Do men perceive the hand of the Almighty in this pestilence which sweeps over the land? No, verily. It would seem as if they did not wish to see it; as if they were willing to see any thing else but his hand. They talk sagely about the established laws of nature, about the sin of violating them, and the security which people might enjoy if they would regard them; they theorize concerning the modified condition of the atmosphere, the diminution of electricity, the presence of ozone; they see, or try to see, the influence of secondary and proximate causes; to these causes they are willing, if they can, to trace the disease, but higher than these they are not willing to go. The Hand that puts these causes in motion, they see not. They would think it a superstition, unworthy of their philosophy, to supplicate the interposition of Omnipotence to stay the plague. They rather choose to postpone their prayers, until they become certain that they cannot help themselves; for, as yet, they are not quite convinced of that.

We do not set ourselves against those scientific investigations, which would discover the proximate and remote causes of this, or of any other disease. Far be it from us to do so. Christianity rejoices in the profoundest discoveries that science can make; and hails, with gladness, any remedies which may, in this way, be provided for the calamities of our race. But we sadly deplore that Atheism of the human heart, which seems to think that, when a calamity has been traced to its natural causes, there has been found all that there is of God in it; and that, when these natural causes have been duly regarded in the provision of remedies, all the acknowledgment of God has been made that is necessary. Persons of this spirit have no idea of humbling themselves in fasting and prayer. Any proposition to this effect they meet with a sneer, or, at any rate, with an air of great doubt whether it would do any good. They may be reminded that, in ancient times, God's people always resorted to prayer, in view of the calamities that were upon them; that it was the means of staying the plague from the land of Israel, under King David's reign, (2 Sam. 24: 25;) that it was the resort of Moses, when the fire of the Lord burned in the camp of the Hebrews, by reason of which the fire was quenched, (Num. 11: 2;) and that God has expressly said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee." (Ps. 50: 15.) But, in their opinion, these instances stand too far back in the mists of antiquity, and are too little understood, to be held up as examples for imitation. They have serious doubts, whether these cases ought not all to be explained in such a manner, as to do away every thing of the miraculous pertaining to them. To the people of that age they, doubtless, appeared miraculous; but that was in consequence of their rude and uncultivated state. Had they been thoroughly schooled in science, they would have been able to explain them upon natural principles, and, instead of resorting to prayer, they would have provided such remedies as the researches of science dictated. At all events, the philosophy of these days of boasted refinement, assumes that, if there is a God, he is tied to work only through the medium of certain established laws; and that beyond these laws he cannot possibly go to accomplish his wonders in the earth. In the opinion of these vain philosophers, therefore, fasting and prayer are of no use to any but the ignorant, who, because of their superstitious belief in a God that displays himself by signs and wonders, may have their minds tranquilized by such exercises. But for those who look upon every thing as taking place according to fixed laws, they are quite useless. Such philosophy we deplore; it is Atheism at heart.

We have no sympathy with the philosophy which would bind up the Almighty, so that he cannot display his power in the universe, except according to fixed laws. We believe that He does, occasionally, step aside from the ordinary laws of nature; and we believe that, in any and all of his providences, there is enough of the miraculous, to constitute a foundation for supplicating earnestly his interposition in our favor. We do not mean to intimate, however, that the cholera is a miracle, in the commonly-received sense of the term; nor that it is not regulated in its movements by certain natural laws. For aught we know, it may be as rigidly controlled by natural laws, as the gravitation of the earth, or the operation of electricity. But what we do mean to teach, is that it is eminently a visitation from God; that God is in it, speaking more loudly to the rebellious race of men, and calling upon them with more earnestness than He does in the common dispensations of his providence, to humble themselves before Him. Every thing in nature declares "his eternal power and Godhead," and the wise will receive instruction; but there are some things which seem to speak with louder voice than others, if peradventure the slumbering conscience of the sinner may be awakened. We regard the cholera as one of these loud-speaking providences. It says to every one, "Be still, and know that I am God."

One very important lesson which this providence seems designed to impress upon our minds, is that God is a Being of infinite power, and that we are wholly at his mercy, being utterly unable to cope with Him. At the present time, when men, because of their attainments in science, seem to be almost ready to think that they have got beyond the reach of the Almighty, it is necessary that there should be something to make them feel that they are still in his power. Science has done much to give man an immunity from calamities. The time was, when "the shining of God's glittering spear," and "the noise of his tabernacle," struck terror to the heart. Now, a man dwelling in a house protected by a good lightning-rod, sits very quietly during a thunder-storm. Formerly, the small-pox carried dismay into every community where it appeared. Now, it is rendered comparatively harmless by vaccination. Science is constantly achieving similar results. So deeply have men penetrated the mysteries of nature, and discovered its laws, so amazingly multiplied have been their discoveries within the last quarter of a century, and so much have they done towards neutralizing the evils to which they were once subjected, that they begin to think they may live and prosper without calling upon God. But God will show them, and is now showing them, that they are as much dependent upon him as ever. He is teaching them, that his resources are not exhausted, and that, however amazing may be their attainments in science, He has them complete- [illegible] He can call them to account, for unto God the Lord it belongs to say, "I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand." Deut. 32: 30. If the present terrible scourge should have an influence to fix this lesson deep in our hearts, it will not have come in vain. *

A CHURCH ORGANIZED IN ILLINOIS.

To the Friends of Home Missions:—

We are slowly but steadily gathering strength in this beautiful country. Our usual Sabbath-day congregations are now from sixty to seventy-five persons. On the first day of this month, sixteen adults—ten brethren and six sisters—united in solemn covenant to maintain the worship, institutions, and discipline of the churches of our Lord Jesus Christ. A few others have given us their names, who were not able to be with us on the occasion. Others are here with no letters from the churches to which they belonged. Some were not ready to take the same responsibilities we have done. We however feel confident in the love, and in the faith and order we have embraced.

In the Church Covenant, we vow "to be governed in all our conduct, in the church and in the world, by the plain intent and requirement of God's Holy Word, as contained in the Inspired Scriptures—to freely contribute of our property, as we shall be able, to support the poor and needy of our own church members, and to defray the expenses of maintaining the worship, ordinances, discipline, and ministry among ourselves, and to spread the gospel through the world." As a Declaration of Faith, for the instruction and confirmation of the young and inexperienced among us, and for the information of those who are without and desire to know our views, we adopted the Expose published by the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, A. D. 1833. Our Church Discipline declares Jesus Christ to be the only Head of the Churches, and the government thereof to be administered in his name, and according to the instructions and requirements of his Word, by all the adult male members of each particular church. Being required by that Word to have no fellowship with the unfaithful works of darkness, but rather to reprove them, we hold that the habitual use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is a disciplinary offense. We disclaim all fellowship with the holders of slaves, and their abettors; and, likewise, with all adhering members of Secret Societies, under whatever name or pretence they may be organized. When two-thirds of the church shall vote that the necessary expenses of the church require it, we agree to have our property averaged by a committee of the church, for a contribution to defray the same.

After the organization of the church, Samuel Davison was chosen Pastor and Moderator; Dennis Saunders, Deacon and Treasurer; John R. Butts, Church Recorder.

A communion season was appointed for next week, and the first Sabbath of every alternate month afterward.

Thus we have set up our banner in the name of the Lord, and we now entreat the interest of our sister churches in our behalf. Pray that the word of the Lord may have free course, run and be glorified among us. S. D.

N. B. I would seriously advise all our brethren and sisters who are intending to emigrate into the neighborhood of any of our western churches, to take letters of dismission with them, from the churches to which they now belong. S. D.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill., 3d of 7th mo., 1849.

THE JEWISH DISABILITIES BILL.

By reference to the summary of Foreign News, in another column, it will be seen that the Bill before the Parliament of England, for the removal of Jewish Disabilities, has been rejected by the House of Lords. The ground upon which its rejection is justified, may be gathered from the following sketch of the debate in its second reading. Of course our sympathies are all with the advocates of the bill; and we are glad to learn that Baron Rothschild, who is deprived of his seat in Parliament by this vote of the Peers, has come forward for reëlection with a prospect of success. The agitation of the question has already done much good, and is destined to work out the emancipation of the Jews.

In the House of Lords on the 26th ult. the Earl of Carlisle, in moving the second reading of this bill, spoke long and eloquently in advocacy of the justice and expediency of the measure, which he said was not, like that of last session, simply confined to the admission of Jews to Parliament, but went to amend and simplify the oaths taken by members of other religious persuasions. The Jews, he said, though admitted to municipal privileges, were the only religious community debarred of political rights. The noble lord then combatted, in detail, the various objections against the measure, and, in conclusion, called upon their lordships to act in the spirit of Christianity, by doing unto others as they would that others should do unto them in removing the last remnant of intolerance from the statute book by admitting a long-oppressed race to the sign and substance of equality still denied them, and rendering thus a just measure of reparation for all the wrongs and woes of the past.

The Earl of Eglinton objected to the bill, chiefly on religious grounds. The Jews suffered no persecution in this country; but the solemn duty of their lordships was not to permit those who did not believe in Christ to legislate for a Christian church and na- [illegible] second time that day three months.

The Duke of Cleveland thought, after the Quakers, Moravians, and every class of Dissenters, had been admitted to seats in Parliament, it would be a great hardship and injustice to exclude Jews, being British born subjects of her Majesty. He supported the bill.

The Archbishop of Canterbury believed that the effect of the bill would be to lower the character and obligations of Members of Parliament, by making it a matter of indifference whether they belonged to the Christian communion.

The Archbishop of Dublin supported the bill, as neither inconsistent with the principles, nor repugnant to the genius, of Christianity; that there was no justification for the contending exclusion of the Jews; and that their lordships must either retrace their steps, and exclude from office all who did not belong to the Established Church, or they must, in consistency, consent to the abrogation of this last restriction.

The Bishop of Exeter opposed the bill. He observed that in a Republic all had an equal right to admission to the offices of the State, but ours was a Monarchy in which the sovereign was bound by oath to maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and more particularly the Protestant reformed religion established in the kingdom. Parliament was the great council of the nation, the council of the Crown, and was sworn to be the protector of the true religion; therefore every one admitted to it must be ready and able to give faithful advice to the Crown in the discharge of its duties. Could a Jew be a faithful counsellor of the Crown in maintaining to the utmost the true profession of the Gospel? This could not be admitted for an instant. He had no wish to quote Scripture in the heat of debate, but he felt no scruple in telling noble lords that Parliament was bound, as every individual was bound, to remember that "whatever we do, whether in word or in deed," we are to do all "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

The Earl of Shrewsbury considered this more a political than a religious measure. He could see nothing but the necessary carrying out of the great principles of civil and religious liberty, now so intimately interwoven with the Constitution.

The Earl of Winchelsea denounced the bill as one of an infidel and unchristian character, calculated to draw down the judgments of Almighty God upon a country which, like two other Protestant countries, Holland and Sweden, had stood secure amid the wreck and chaos of the civilized world, solely because, in the midst of their many sins, they had held fast the faith which God had blessed, and put their hope and confidence in him.

The Duke of Argyle had heard with great regret and some astonishment the noble Earl (Winchelsea) stigmatize, as he had done, a measure supported by a very large portion of that House, and just advocated by a father of the Christian Church.

The Earl of Desart recognized the Jews as fellow-citizens and fellow-subjects, but could not acknowledge them as fellow-legislators, and, therefore, opposed the bill.

The Bishop of Oxford professed the kindest feelings toward the Jews, individually, but would not admit them into Parliament, for, by so doing, they would destroy the foundations of the greatness of that Christian England, which had hitherto afforded them an asylum.

Lord Brougham ridiculed the alarms of the Right Rev. Prelate as the most extravagant of all chimeras. Having accorded to members of the Hebrew persuasion judicial functions, official station, and the elective franchise, with power to canvass and spend money at elections, it was absurd attempting to draw an impassable line between those concessions and their admission to seats in the Legislature. They had admitted the Roman Catholics, he said, not because they did not dare to exclude them, but because it was a wise, honorable, and sound policy to admit them. But if they now excluded the Jews only because they dared to exclude to exclude them easily, then he would say that their Lordships would be casting a backward look upon their past conduct which would do the Jews less harm than it would do their Lordships' discredit.

The Earl of Carlisle, in reply, said, with reference to the Roman Catholic oath, that he presumed it was not the wish of the House of Commons to disturb the settlement of 1829, but he would take, with pleasure, any opportunity of placing the Roman Catholics on a level with their Protestant brethren, in this as well as in every other respect.

The House then divided, and the members were: Content, 70: non-content, 95; majority against the second reading, 25. The bill is, consequently lost.

From the New Jerey State Gazette.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH IN OLD TIMES.

The question whether the observance of the Sabbath should not be enforced by the law is to this day an unsettled question in this State, practically if not legally. The same question was, very early in our history, a subject of difference among our rulers. By the annexed document, for which we are indebted to Dr. McCheeney, it appears that the Governor and Council of East Jersey, early took ground against rigid laws to enforce the observance of the day. It will be seen that these dignitaries went into the question like real theologians; and sustained their side, right boldly, with text, chapter and verse.

Att a council held at Elizabethtown the 24th of March Anno D^{m} 198^{2}_{3}

Tho^{s} Rudyard Dep Governor & P'p'r'r

Capt^{n} Barry
Capt^{n} Palmer
Capt^{n} Sandford &
Benj^{n} Price } of the Council

The Deputy's sent up here a Bill for the Better observation and Keeping holy the first day of the week or Lords Day. Which being read, the Councill agreed not there-wth having these exceptions thereto, viz^{t}

1.st Ther's an act already that sufficiently p'vides for abstinence for dayly labour.

2.^{d} This enforces people by payness and penaltyes to worship whether their worship [illegible] none than any. Better to be silent than to offer the sacrifice of fools. The worship of the wicked is abomination to the wholy God.

3. The bill obligeing all p'sons to worship in publick or private or pay 5.s Every p'son who has not witness of his private worship (wh. is much if hee has any) must pay 5s. It seems unreasonable to take witnes for private worship.

4. This Bill insinuates as if the first day were holy W^{ch} the holy scriptures never said more than any other. Every day his holy to the Lord, hee has noe profane days. But the holy scriptures say hee that regardes a Day, regardeth it unto the Lord. And hee that regardeth not. Se Rom 14. 5.6—If one man esteeme a day above another, another esteemes every day alike. Lett every man be fully p'suaded in his owne minde. Lib'ty of conscience ought to be p'ferred and Licenciousnes punished w'h this Bill seems not equally to secure."

The Revival in Wisconsin.—Rev. Dr. Clary, of the Congregational Church, at Beloit, Wisconsin, gives the following interesting sketch of the revival at that place:—

"The past winter was a season of great religious interest here. The presence of the Holy Spirit was manifest in all the place. God's people have been greatly revived, and many souls have been converted to God. Protracted meetings were held in the Baptist, Methodist, and Congregational Churches, with good results. The conversions have extended to all classes and ages in the community, mostly, however, among the youth. Many family altars have been erected, and voices are heard in prayer which before were used to profane God's name. Some who believed and stoutly defended error, now advocate the truth as it is in Jesus." Young gentlemen and ladies from about here at school, who came without hope, now sit at Jesus's feet and delight to learn of him. The Sunday-school, Seminary, and College, seemed, for a time, to be covered with the cloud of God's presence. Among the converted youths, some are known to have the ministry and work of missions in view. The numbers who have united with the Baptist and Methodist churches I do not know. More than forty have united with the Congregational Church. Additions are still being received by all the churches. The whole number entertaining hopes, I should think, is between 150 and 200. The influence of this work in the place and in the community around is decidedly salutary. Its characteristics were, stillness, deep conviction for sin, deep sense of Christian responsibility, entire consecration to God—and seeking higher attainments in Christian graces and knowledge.

It was, indeed, a glorious work, and its influence is the more extensive on account of the educational advantages of the place. This is the fifth revival enjoyed by this church since its organization ten years ago. Its present number is over two hundred.

Revivals of religion have been enjoyed in many of the churches in this region the past winter, some of which were of great power and extent. We hope yet to see and hear greater things than these. Let God alone be praised.

Interesting Law Case.—A case of considerable interest and importance is soon to come before the Supreme Court of New York. It seems that Rev. J. Roosevelt Bayley, formerly a member of the Episcopal Seminary in this City, became a convert to the Roman Catholic Church. His grandfather, the late James Roosevelt, was a member of a Presbyterian Church, and a man of large fortune. Being opposed to the change of faith in his grandson, he transferred, by a codicil, an estate which he had previously given to him, to the Union Theological Seminary in this City. Mr. Bayley is now the Private Secretary of Bishop Hughes, and is contesting the will of his grandfather, with expectation of recovering this portion of the estate.

Religion in the Presbyterian Church.—The Narrative of the State of Religion in the Presbyterian Church of the United States, (Old School,) adopted by the General Assembly, speaks favorably of the spiritnal condition of that Church. According to that document, unity prevails, there is an increasing appreciation of the ordinances of divine worship, Christian munificence is on the increase, the cause of Christian education advances, Presbyterianism, as a system of church government, is flourishing, and revivals have been enjoyed in many Presbyteries.

Christian Principle.—The Congregational Journal tells of a missionary of the American Board at Bombay, who, having acquired a thorough knowledge of the Mahratta, the English East India Company offered him a salary of $13,000, if he would relinquish his calling, and aid them in writing and making contracts with the natives. On his peremptory refusal, they offered him $50 per week if he would afford occasional assistance two hours in a day. This offer he also rejected, saying that no money could tempt him to relinquish the work he was sent to perform.

Remarkable Escape of a Colporteur.—It is stated in the American Messenger, "that as a colporteur was returning from Parras, a Mexican threw a lasso which missed him, knocking off his hat. A second throw was successful, and his body was inclosed in the noose. The Mexican's horse started off at full speed, the lasso was drawn out its length, and the colporteur expected to be hurled from his horse, and drawn away to death. But the hand that took off Pharoah's chariot wheels in the Red Sea, loosened the rope from the robber's saddle, and the colporteur was undisturbed upon his horse. He gathered up the instrument of death safely in his own hands, while his intended murderer rode hastily out of sight."

Interference of an Established Church.—The Dublin correspondent of the N. Y. Observer says that at Killeshandra, the other day, the Presbyterian minister, Mr. Sweeny, determined to improve the solemnities of a funeral; and, pursuant to the existing law on the subject, sent a notice to Mr. Irvine, the Protestant clergyman, to that effect. But the latter, determined that the former should do no such thing, sent round the neighborhood and collected an immense number of Orangemen, to assist him in preventing it, which they did effectually, by shouting and otherwise impending Mr. Sweeny's address. The result was a riot; the established clergyman summoned Mr. Sweeny and his friends to the Quarter Sessions, for trespass on his "freehold," the church-yard, without his consent; and Mr. Sweeny summoned Mr. Irvine and his friends for impending him in his religious duty. The magistrates were very glad, upon some technical informalities, to dismiss both complaints; and advised them to "make it up outside."

Queries.—Is one bound, in all cases, to rebuke his brother, or tell him his fault, if he trespass? Is one bound, in all cases of trespass, to institute a course of discipline, or is he at liberty to refrain if he chooses? In short, have I a right to suffer sin on my brother, because of peculiar circumstances; or, am I bound to rebuke the sin, let the consequences be what they may? Will some one give his views upon the subject. Q.

The Cholera and Drunkenness.—The Covington Journal, in speaking of brandy as a cholera preventive, says: "The immense consumption is really alarming. An old physician of Cincinnati, it is said, has expressed his opinion, that all who do not die of cholera this year, will die of mania-potu next year."

A Mournful End.—The Western Olive Branch, published at Indianapolis, states that Augustus Littlejohn, the Revivalist, recently died in the Ohio Penitentiary, whither he had been sent under the assumed name of Hamilton. Just previous to his death, he acknowledged who he was.

Keep Cool.—A writer in the Charleston Mercury says: "Let the insulting and insufferable aggressions of 'Free Labor' and 'Free Soilers' be met with the sword, instead of stale 'Resolves' about our rights as guarantied by the Constitution, which they contemn and despise."

Distinguished Visitors.—Rev. Frederick Monod, says the Independent, will probably visit the United States in the fall, in behalf of the free churches of France, accompanied by the Rev. Baptist W. Noel.

Missionaries Returned.—Rev. William Youngblood and wife, of the Borneo Mission, and two children; Mrs. A. J. Caswell from Siam, and three children, arrived at Boston recently in the Zingari from Sourabay.

Fatal Accident on the Sabbath.—The Detroit Free Press, of July 9, gives the following account of a fatal accident which occurred at the Dépôt of the Central Railroad, in that city, on Saturday morning, July 7. We do not say that it was all because the people were at work on the Sabbath, instead of being at rest, "according to the commandment." But is it not as good a proof of God's regard for the seventh day, as the general run of those published to show his regard for the first day?

"The cars came in at the regular hour, and the locomotive was disconnected as usual from the passenger cars, but the power and headway with which they were driven was so strong that it was impossible for the brakeman to check the passenger train, so that it run with full force against the platform at the eastern end of the track, breaking the baggage and emigrant cars in pieces, and killing three persons in the emigrant car, Mr. Wm. C. Ball and his son 10 years old, and a Mr. Willis. The first two were shockingly mangled, and were dead when taken from the cars. Mr. Willis, who had his leg torn off, was taken to the hospital alive, but he soon afterward died.

"The engineer upon the locomotive was also unable to stop the speed of the engine, until it run some distance into the passenger dépôt, on the north track among the new cars, to which it did slight injury.

"Mr. Ball, who with his son was killed, was a laboring man from Chicago, on his way to Dutchess Co., N. Y. His wife was with him, but she fortunately escaped injury. Mr. Brooks, the Superintendent, in behalf of the Company, assumed the payment of the medical and funeral expenses of her husband and son, made her a donation of $500 in cash, and will send a messenger to convey her to her friends free of expense."

Cleanliness for the Poor.—The trustees of the "People's Bathing and Washing Association," incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, have issued an appeal to the public, to take the stock for building an establishment in this city like those which have been so successful in London. They only ask a fund of $100,000; and as they expect to obtain the free use of the Croton water, they express their belief that—

"By availing ourselves of the best experience of the English bathing and washing establishments, in procuring and arranging the necessary fixtures, they may very soon be prepared to offer a good clean bath for the trifling sum of two or thre cents; and for about two cents per hour to furnish the means of enabling a woman to wash, dry, and iron well, in the short space of two or three hours, the week's clothing of a family of six or eight persons; which, in her own limited, inconvenient, and crowded apartments, it would require several days to do, to says nothing of the unhealthfulness, filth, confusion, and discomfort inseparable from the necessity of doing such work in what is with many families their only cooking, eating, sleeping, and sitting room. The evil effects upon the whole family of thus rendering home comfortless and unattractive must be obvious to all."

Bible Distribuion in Italy.—When the Grand Duchy of Tuscany was in the revolution, the Bible was for the first time freely circulated in that country. The people were delighted to possess it and to study it for themselves. One agent at Florence sold forty a day. Colporteurs went every where unmolested. But when a Provisional Government was established, in the name of the absent Duke, the Bible printing-office was visited by the police, who seized on an entire edition. The house of an English gentleman, who had labored efficiently to distribute the Scriptures, was also searched, and the Bibles and Testaments found in it carried off. When he remonstrated, they replied that they highly approved of the circulation of the Bible, but they could not interfere with the instructions of the spiritual authorities. A specimen of the freedom Italy may expect, if the Roman Republic is destroyed at its birth.

An Open Bible.—At the late anniversary of the British and Foreign School Society, the Earl of Carlisle, (Lord Morpeth,) referring to the magnificent celebration of the new Republic, which had just taken place in Paris, where upon the steps of the altar was placed a statue of Religion with a Bible half open, said, "I am glad, sincerely glad, to read of any such disposition, such tendency—but I would remark, that it is the glory of this country, and the special spirit of this Society, to display the Bible, not half, but wholly open to all the people."

RESPONSE TO THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

To the Ministers and Members of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

Beloved Brethren—In view of the ravages of the pestilence—of our violations of the law of God—of the judgments of Heaven by flood and fire, upon our people, and of the withholding of spiritual influence to so great a degree from the Church, our General Assembly set apart the 28th of last June, as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer.

But still the ravages of the pestilence are increasing and extending, and the President of the United States has appointed the first Friday of August as a day of National "fasting, humiliation and prayer," on which, as a people, through Jesus Christ our Lord, "to implore the Almighty in his own good time to stay the destroying hand which is now lifted up against us."

And lest any of you should deem the keeping of the one day a reason for the neglect of the other, on the advice of several brethren, I would hereby express to you my conviction that the keeping of the day set apart by our Chief Magistrate will be in entire accordance with the uniform history and custom of our Church, and with the spirit of the recommendation of the last Assembly.

And I would hereby affectionately advise all our ministers and churches, sacredly and in true faith, to consecrate the Third Day of August next to the great purposes of its appointment. NICHOLAS MURRAY,
Moderator of the General Assembly.

Elizabethtown, N. J., July 11, 1849.

THE CHOLERA.

The following is a summary of the Reports of the Board of Health in New York last week:—

July 10,	new cases	111,	deaths	44.
" 11,	"	85,	"	30.
" 12,	"	116,	"	38.
" 13,	"	80,	"	38.
" 14,	"	123,	"	51.
" 15,	"	76,	"	37.
" 16,	"	158,	"	55.
		749		293

It will be seen from the above, that the epidemic has increased a little within the week. The weather has been exceedingly hot, and no rain has fallen. While this continues, there will not be much mitigation of the prevailing sickness.

In Philadelphia there have been from 50 to 100 cases per day for a week past.

At St. Louis, the Cholera is said to be decreasing. There were, however, 563 deaths from the disease, between Monday morning and Friday night of last week.

The epidemic is said to have disappeared from many of the places in the West and South-west where it has heretofore raged.

◆

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Niagara arrived at New York on Sabbath last, bringing dates from Liverpool to June 30th, London 29th, Paris 28th, and Rome 23d.

Rome still holds out, although there is but little prospect of her final success. After a severe bombardment, three squadrons of the French army succeeded in establishing themselves within the outer walls of Rome on the 22d of June. They have since been occupied with operations for acquiring possession of the interior bastions and defenses. Every inch of ground was stoutly defended by Garibaldi. It is said that Gen. Oudinot has submitted fresh terms to the Triumvirate, which it is possible the Romans may accept, to prevent the carnage which is likely otherwise to follow. Meanwhile, the English Government has presented a friendly remonstrance against the bombardment of Rome, and has urged on the French Government the necessity of coming to an accommodation with the Romans.

From Hungary and Austria there are conflicting accounts of the battles reported last week. There was, no doubt, hard fighting and great loss on both sides, but which party was victorious is not easy to say. Kossuth has ordered the Austrian prisoners, several thousand in number, to be employed on the work of the Szyolnok and Debreczin Railway. The Russian Army in four columns marched from Gallicia into Hungary on the 17th and 18th under the command of Prince Paskewitch. It is said that cholera, typhus, and other maladies, are raging in the camp, and that the Magyars display greater enthusiasm than ever.

In France there is nothing important transpiring. Paris was perfectly quiet on the 28th. Much has been said of late in the French Assembly about the danger of war. The Minister of Foreign Affairs recently made a speech, in which he declared that there is no danger of war. A new law for regulating the press is proposed. It is nearly the same as the law of Louis Philippe, and powers are given for the temporary suppression of every journal attacking the Constitution or making an appeal to arms. The policy of the Government towards Rome is said to be producing considerable dissatisfaction in the French Cabinet.

From England, we learn that the bill before Parliament for the removal of Jewish disabilities, has been rejected in the upper house by a majority of 26. This vote is an exclusion of Baron Rothschild, Member of Parliament elect for the City of London. The Baron thereupon accepts the Chiltern Hundreds, and appeals to the electors of London in a new election. His election is considered certain. The House of Commons has approved the second reading of the marriage bill to render valid marriages with the sister of deceased wives. The Smith O'Brien transportation bill is now an act of Parliament. It is supposed that the approaching visit of Her Majesty to Ireland will be signalized by her royal pardon to the Irish State Prisoners.

We learn from China, that the Emperor has refused to carry out the stipulations of the two treaties which provided that Canton should be open to foreigners. In the communication of Seu, the Governor of Canton, to Mr. Bonham, he says the Emperor had determined that as the people of Canton had refused to receive foreigners into the town, how can he follow an opposite course to the people? From the nature of the Proclamation it is quite plain that the authorities were prepared to resist the entrance of the foreigners into the city. But a great sacrifice of human blood has been avoided by Lord Palmerston having given special directions that nothing more should be done than to report the repudiation of the treaty to him. The large naval forces which were assembled in the Canton River to protect the various foreign interests, have all dispersed.

From Vally, (Island of Java,) the accounts announce a complete victory by the Dutch. The attack commenced on the 13th of April, and after 13 days' hard fighting all the fortifications were taken, and the Netherlands flag was hoisted within the walls. The Vallans, it was said, had 5,000 killed, &c., and the loss of the Dutch was about 250. It is assumed that the Island will forthwith be annexed to the Dutch possessions.

◆

Sweeping for Coin.—"What," asks the eloquent Dr. Cumming of London, in a discourse on the lost coin in the parable, which the woman recovered by lighting a candle, sweeping the house, and seeking dilligently until she found it—"What is all this that is now taking place on the continent of Europe? It is the sweeping of the European house, that Christ may find the lost coin, restamp it with his image, reprint on it his name, give it a new currency, and make all rejoice that the lost is found, and the hidden is discovered."

Philadelphia on Sunday.—The Philadel- Bulletin gives the following graphic picture of a Sunday in that city:—

"Two dreadful railroad accidents in the outskirts of the city, three frightful cases of stabbing, four murderous collisions between firemen, two horrid deaths from intemperance, one suicide, a serious accident at Manayunk, the destruction of the steamer Gen. Green by fire at Red Bank, and an accident at that place to a young man of Southwark, an accident to an omnibus, several ordinary accidents, run-aways, &c., besides a continual rioting in which whites and blacks were engaged, in the southern part of the town, throughout the whole day and evening of Sunday.

◆

Death of Mrs. Madison.—Mrs. D. P. Madison, widow of James Madison, the fourth President of the United States, died at Washington, on the evening of July 12. She was born a member of the Society of Friends in Virginia, about the year 1770. Her maiden name was Paine. She was young when her father removed to Philadelphia. When some twenty years old she married a lawyer by the name of Todd, who died in less than three years after the marriage. She had one son by him who still lives in Virginia. She married Mr. Madison at Philadelphia in the year 1794, when he was a member of Congress. During his Presidency Mrs. Madison did the honors of the White House with eminent grace and dignity, and since constantly occupied a distinguished place in society at Washington and and Virginia. She leaves no children except Mr. Todd.

◆

The Oldest Inhabitant Dead.—A writer in the Savannah Republican mentions the death, on the 29th of March, of Mrs. Louisa Thrower, at her residence on the Ogechee, who was at least one hundred and thirty-three years of age. At a census taken in 1825, her age was put down at 110, and some accounts made her 137 at the time of her death. She had seven children before the revolution; her youngest living child is between 70 and 80; she has great-grandchildren 30 years old, and a number of great-great-great-grand-children living in Florida. Her sight failed her for a while, but returned 20 years ago, so that she could thread a fine needle, or read the finest print. Her faculties remained almost unimpaired till her death. She had been a member of the Baptist Church for more than a hundred years.

◆

Medical Education of Women.—A correspondent of the Liberator says that efforts are making to provide a school in Boston for the education of females for appropriate professional duties, particularly the department of Midwifery. Something has been accomplished. The American Medical Education Society, for promoting this object, numbers five hundred members, among whom are representatives of all the professions, and of all sections of the great public, including forty clergymen of the different denominations. The President of the Society, E. C. Rolfe, M. D., has instructed twenty intelligent females, and they are getting into a successful practice.

◆

Election among the West India Negroes.—The election at the French Island of Martinique for two Members of the National Assembly has been a great event among the people. 70,000 enfranchised slaves voted upon the occasion. Besette, a colored man, and Puicol, a planter, were returned by a large majority. 130,000 votes were polled. Besette had suffered punishment at the hands of the planters in the cause of emancipation. He participated in the late revolution in France, and scarcely allowed the Provisional Government to get well into operation, before he petitioned for the emancipation of the blacks in all the colonies of France.

◆

Charitable Bequests.—The Philadelphia Inquirer says that Mrs. Babel Wohileben, well known to many respectable families of that city as a teacher of French, and recently deceased, has made the following disposition of her property, exceeding $10,000: To the Theological Seminary of Auburn, $2,000; American Home Missionary Society, $50; American Bible Society, $50; American Tract Society, $50; American Board of Foreign Missions, $50; to Pauline Butler, $600; Rachel J. Harrison, $600; to her cousins, Henry Fabry and sister, $1,300; Dr. McNair, $200; and the residue to the Asylum for Indigent Widows and Single Women, on Cherry-street.

◆

New Style of Shot Towers.—Shot towers have been superseded by a new invention, by which a current of air is forced upward in a flue, and thus retards the shot as it falls from above, and cools it, without making it necessary that it should drop from any great height, a tower of moderate height answers the purpose. Formerly it might have cost $80,000 to build a shot tower; now we are told one may be built for an eighth part of the sum, and the process of manufacture is greatly cheaper. A shot factory on this plan is now in operation in New York.

◆

Rare Industry.—The Alliance and Visitor says that Rev. Mr. Milton, of Newburyport, was an Englishman by birth, and was educated for the ministry by the famous Countess of Huntingdon, who testified her regard for her scholar by sending him in after years a golden cup, which is now in the possession of a daughter of Mr. Milton. At his death, a few years since, it was found that Mr. Milton had two hundred sermons on hand which he had not preached.

◆

English Church.—Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel continues to officiate in London as a seceding clergyman, without having recourse to the only mode which would seem in any degree to legalize his ministrations. He preached, not as a tolerated Dissenter, but in the same way as all other seceding clergymen had done, without molestation, till the Bishop of Exeter fired off the canon law at Mr. Shore. He is in this way vindicating the right of his brethren, which all seceders from the Establishment have hitherto exercised, thus to go forth into the broad field of the Universal Church, at once to deliver their message, as sent servants of Jesus Christ, and to deliver their own souls.

To Keep Fish Alive.—The London Literary Gazette has the following, in relation to keeping fish alive:—

"Those worthy individuals who take delight in Izaak Walton's art, and who, moreover, are in the habit of sending the results of their sports to their epicurean acquaintances, must learn an indispensable piece of information, viz: how to keep fish fresh. This may he done by soaking the soft part of bread in brandy, and inserting it into the gill of the fish while it is yet alive, afterward sprinkling it over gently with brandy. Thus prepared and carefully packed in straw, the fish will keep alive ten or twelve days, as may be proved by putting it in fresh water at the end of that time, when after a few hours' immersion, it will recover from its protracted drunkenness."

◆

Land Warrants.—There has been a recent and important movement in Land Warrants which has carried the price up from $108 a $110 to $128 a $130 each. The movement has been mainly by speculators, but there has been in aid a large order from Chicago, and there is also an undercurrent impression that the Secretary is buying them up for Government account. The supply is moderate, excepting what is in speculative hands. These warrants are eqnal to $200 in cash at any land office in the country, and there is no reason that they should not still improve.

◆

Thirteen Persons Drowned.—The Newfoundland Royal Gazette states that a boat belonging to Nicholis Power, with thirteen persons on board, left St. Johns on the 5th ult., in company with another boat for Branch, in St. Mary's Bay. When they left the wind was N. W. and they anchored at Cape Holland that night, but on the last watch Power's boat went adrift, and was seen lying-to next day, since which time nothing has been seen or heard of them. It is supposed that they have either been run down or drifted out to sea, and all hands perished. By this event, six widows, and twenty-six children are represented to have been left id a state of utter destitution.

◆

Danger of Reverie.—Do any thing innocent rather then give up to reverie. I can speak on this point from experience. At one period of my life, I was a dreaming castle builder. Visions of the distant and future took the place of present duty and activity. I spent hours in reverie. I suppose I was seduced in part by physical debility. But the body suffered as much as the mind. I found, too, that the imagination threatened to inflame the passions, and if I meant to be virtuous, I must dismiss my musings. The conflict was a hard one. I resolved, prayed, resisted, sought refuge in occupation, and at length triumphed. I beg you to avail yourself of my experience. [Channing.

Coincidence.—The late Postmaster of New Bedford, Mr. Green, was appointed by Mr. Polk. The mail which brought him the announcement of his appointment, brought also the announcement of the death of General Jackson. The telegraph which brought the news to New Bedford, of the re-appointment of Mr. Bailey, the old Postmaster, brought also the death of Mr. Polk.

◆

SUMMARY.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Columbus, Ohio, July 12, says that the Cholera rages dreadfully in the Penitentiary; 80 convicts have died since July 4. About 200 are now in the Hospital, and they are dying at the rate of one per hour. Doctor Yard, one of our physicians, who volunteered his services, died of the epidemic last night. Dr. Lathrop, the resident physician, is not expected to live.

The news pours in upon us from almost every quarter of the State, says the Ohio Statesman, of the terrible destruction of the wheat crop, by rust and fly, (red weevil.) Thousands upon thousands of acres are not worth cutting—whole fields remain untouched by scythe or sickle. Our own wheat is a pretty fair crop, and about the only one we know of in this region.

We learn from the Mt. Vernon (O.) Times that at Lee and Dunn's Mill, in that county, on the 5th, a boy twelve years of age was caught up by a shaft performing sixty revolutions in a minute, and was literally crushed to pieces. His brains and nine pieces of his skull were strewn over the floor.

The gold medal prepared at the Mint in Philadelphia, for the purpose of being presented to General Taylor, by order of Congress, for his gallant achievements at Buena Vista, was sent to Rough and Ready by Adams & Co's Express. It cost $3,000, and is said to be very beautiful.

The Legislature of New Hampshire has unanimously voted to present a suitable block of granite to the Washington National Monument, with the name of the State inscribed thereon, agreeably to the suggestion of the Board of Directors of the Association, and have appropriated $300 to the object.

The City Council of St. Louis has passed an ordinance forbidding, under a penalty of from $20 to $100, the sale of any vegetables, fruits, fresh pork, sausage meat and fish, in any of the markets, or at any other place within the city limits.

Mr. Amos Tilton, of Lansingburg, Monmouth Co., N. J., has a land-turtle which he found on his place, bearing date 1711, and the initials A. E. M. If this date be correct, the turtle has been marked 138 years. Add to this its age before it was marked—less than 40 years—and you have a venerable old age.

Bishop Purcell, in an address to the clergy and laity of the diocese of Cincinnati, says: "We lose more than seventy a day, more than five hundred a week, of our Catholic population!"

David B. Ogden, a distinguished member of the New York Bar, died at his temporary residence at Port Richmond, Staten Island, on Monday last.

The whole number of interments in St. Louis, during the week which ended July 8, was 1,086, an increase of 200 upon the previous week, and of over 500 upon the week ending June 25.

It is estimated, says an exchange, that full atenth of the slaves of Louisiana have died of cholera.

The Boston Times tells of a shipment from Charleston (Mass.) of large quantities of boiled lobsters, packed in ice, prepared for Barbadoes. This is certainly a new feature in trade, and shows unequivocally that the loss of a home market is no obstacle to the determination to do business which every Yankee seems to inherit, and exert the more energetically the greater the obstructions placed in his path.

The passage from New York to Chicago or Milwaukie is now made in sixty hours, by means of the Central Michigan Railroad. The enterprising Bostonians, having completed the Central Road through Michigan, have a daily passenger line of boats of their own from Detroit to Buffalo, along the Canada coast, and a passenger and freight line engaged between the same ports on the American coast. The authorized capital of this company is eight millions.

Mrs. Eliza Ann Ennis, widow of the late Wm. Ennis, Esq., has received the appointment of Sutler at Fort Adams, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of her husband. It is the first instance where a lady received an appointment like this, and it was obtained through the kind exertions of Col. Gates, sustained by all the officers at the Fort.

An aged lady at Fredericksburgh, Va., Mrs. Margaret See, has offered to emancipate her slaves in the Fall, if the American Colonization Society will give them a free passage to Liberia, Mrs. See contributing $200. Mrs. See's daughter proposes to liberate her four slaves at the same time, if a free passage can be given them.

A hail storm passed over parts of the Counties of Lycoming, Columbia and Luzerne, Pa., some two weeks since of unusual violence. In Muncy, and its vicinity, it was not uncommon to see hail stones of the size of a man's fist. They measured 8 and 9 inches in circumference, and weighed as high as 6 ounces. Window glass was broken and the crops much injured.

A company is now forming in the city of Mexico, composed principally of Americans. merchants and others of enterprise, to transport California passengers from New York and New Orleans, through Vera Cruz and Acapulco to San Francisco in fifty days. The stock required is estimated at $300,000.

Mrs. Caroline L. Sweet, who has been on trial at Portland, for an assault on Mr. Cole's grog shop, doing considerable damage, because it was a tippling place for her husband, has been convicted of trespass, and sentenced to pay a fine of $10 and costs of court, amounting to a little over $60. The money was immediately paid.

The great Fire at St. Louis, which was supposed to have originated by being purposely set on a steamboat, is proved to have been accidental, having originated from sparks proceeding from passing boats lodging on a newly-painted deck, and favored by a high wind blowing on them.

Accounts from Texas confirm the painful rumor of the destruction of Captain Veach's company of California emigrants by the Indians. Out of thirty persons composing the company, only four were left to tell the sad tale of misfortunes which befel their companions.

The Burlington (N. J.) Gazette says, some fruits taken from that city to Philadelphia for sale, have been brought back and thrown away. Nobody would have them as a gift. The owners lost their labor, their freight, their expenses, their produce—everything. Cause—Cholera.

The Philadelphia Ledger states on official authority, that up to the 5th inst., the amount of the precious metal deposited at the Mint in that city, for coinage, from the "diggings," had reached within a fraction of $2,000,000.

Counterfeit tens on the State Bank of Ohio, have been detected in Pittsburgh; they are dated May 5th, 1848, number 533, payable at the Union Branch, Massillon, signed S. Barnard, Cashier, and a facsimile of President Swan's writing.

The managers of the American Institute awarded at their last Fair, 55 gold medels, 298 silver medals, 61 silver cups, 480 diplomas, $120 50 in cash, premiums to apprentices, and 140 vols. of agricultural books.

The Lebanon (O.) Star says that no case of cholera has ever occurred in any of the 17 Shaker villages of our county—a circumstance indicating the value of cleanliness, and temperance in all things.

W. Cainnes, of New Castle, Beaver county, Pa., has given $1000 to the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church, to educate colored missionaries for Africa.

During the recent session of the Protestant Episcopal Convention of Indiana, Rev. Dr. Upford, formerly of Albany, but for many years rector of Trinity Church of Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, was elected Bishop of the diocese of Indiana.

A deer is still occasionally found among the cultivated fields of Western New York. On Tuesday, 3d inst., one was taken near Rochester by some workmen on the Canal tow-path.

The old Postmaster at Bloomingdale Michigan, refused to deliver the Post Office to the newly appointed incumbent for some reason, and Mr. Sedgwick the new Postmaster opened another.

John Wilder Esq., an old and respectable citizen of Wyoming Co., and for several years Sheriff of Genesee, was thrown from his wagon a few days since and killed.

It is stated by the municipal authorities of New-Orleans, that the expenses incurred in stopping the Sauve crevasse exceed $80,000.

Indian remains—mainly skeletons—have been discovered in Lynn (Mass.) upon the premises of Mr. Samuel Riker, on Sagamore Hill.

A penny contribution from Sunday School Scholars in Massachusetts is contemplated, says the Traveller, for the purpose of erecting a monument to the late Rev. Wm. B. Tappan.

The New York Mirror—"Who ever dreamed of concealing or doubting the fact that we, as a people and a nation, fraternize with everybody in their struggles for freedom, except the Haytiens?"

A few days ago, a man at Pittsburgh died of the sting of a locust.

We learn from the interior of New Hampshire, that little or no rain has fallen since the first of June, and the growing crops have suffered materially in consequence. Unless copious showers are soon experienced, the crops will be almost entirely ruined.

The Erie Railroad Company has lately concluded a contract with an English House for 5,000 tons railroad iron, for which it pays $42 50 per ton, in its own stock at par. This road is now under survey to Lake Erie, and the company has iron enough contracted for to complete it.

The Franklin Typographical Society, of Boston, acknowledges donations of 300 volumes from the different publishers of that city, comprising some of the most valuable works in the English language.

The Albany Journal says, some of the farmers in Cayuga, Seneca, and Monroe counties, complain that the "weevil" or "fly" has destroyed a very considerable portion of their wheat.

The Saratoga Whig of the 12th announces among the arrivals of distinguished personages, the names of Gen. Herrera, of Mexico, and Hon. J. Slidell, of New-Orleans.

Dr. Buck, of Boston, gives it as his opinion, that the dreaded cholera is, after all, but epidemic cholera morbus. He says the best preventive is a clear conscience, a bold heart, and temperance in all things.

A brig is about to be dispatched from Chicago, (in the heart of the American continent,) to San Francisco. She passes down the Lakes and the St. Lawrence, out the gulf and round the Horn.

A Presbyterian Female College has been determined upon by the Salem Presbytery, Ohio. It is to be located at Salem, which is said to be easy of access.

Excellent Queensware is made in Ohio. At Liverpool, in that State, there are seven manufactories of this article. They employ 180 men, and turn out $70,000 worth annually.

The Providence Journal says that D. K. Hardman and Joseph Greene were brought before the court of Magistrates on Thursday and fined $1 and costs each for being indecently drunk.

On the first inst., a jewelry establishment at Philadelphia, was robbed of 200 gold and forty silver watches, and other property to the amount of $20,000.

The Boston Journal, upon authority, contradicts the report that Dr. Lyman Beecher intends to return to the East to reside. He will remain connected with Lane Seminary.

A stage-driver in Madison County, N. Y., lately cut his throat, while seated on the stage and the stage full of passengers. He was deranged.

Passengers were lately ticketed through from Milwaukie to Buffalo on the first class steamers for one dollar.

◆

New York Markets—Monday, July 16.

Ashes—Pots and Pearls each $5 62.——Flour and Meal—Flour, common State and mixed Western 4 87 a 4 94 straight State and Michigan 4 94 a 5 00, good Ohio and favorite Indiana 5 00 a 5 12. pure Genesee 5 18. Rye Flour 2 94 a 3 06. Jersey Meal 3 00——Grain—Genesee Wheat is held at 1 25 a 1 30, Ohio at 1 02 a 1 06, Upper Lake 76 a 80. Rye is dull, selling at 57c. Corn 54 a 55c. for mixed Western, 58 a 59 for round Northern and Jersey.——Provisions—Mess Pork 10 62, Prime 9 00. Beef, Mess 12 50 a 13 00, Prime 10 50 a 11 00. Butter 7 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 13c for State. Cheese 2 a 4c. Potatoes, new 1 37 a 1 50 per bushel. Spring Chickens 75c. per pair. Maple Sugar from 6 to 9c. per lb. Wool—There is a fair business doing, and the market is rather firmer. The sales during the week have been about 60,000 lbs. Fleece at 36 a 37c. for Saxony, 34 a 35 for Merino, and 28 a 30 for common and ¼ blood. The arrivals since the opening of navigation are 400,000 lbs. Pulled Wool is scarce. Foreign is very dull.

MARRIED.

In Scio, N. Y., May 27th, by Eld. Rowse Babcock, Mr. Edward G. Witter and Miss Cordelia Crandall, both of the above place.

◆

DIED.

In Plainfield, Otsego Co., N. Y., May 29th, Mrs. Phebe Burdick, widow of the late Amos Burdick, of said town, aged 82 years. Sister B. had long been a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, N. Y. By a long, consistent, and persevering Christian life, patient resignation under protracted physical infirmities and severe afflictions, and her triumphant hope in death, she has given satisfactory evidence to all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, that she has fallen asleep in Jesus.

In Brookfield, Madison Co., N. Y., July 2d, Mrs. Catharine Burdick, relict of the late Amos Burdick, of Brookfield, N. Y., in the 72d year of her age. Sister Burdick was also a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield. We trust she is now united with the assembly of the spirits of the just made perfect, in her heavenly Father's kingdom.

In Amity, N. Y., on the 10th of February last, Mr. Martin Stillman, aged 18 years. The funeral was attended at Phillipsburg, by a large concourse of people. Sermon by Eld. Rowse Babcock, from 2 Kings 20: 1—"Set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live.'

At Shiloh, N. J., on the 4th of July, in the sixty-sixth year of her age, Mrs. Lydia West, widow of Samuel West. She had in early life been hopefully converted, and continued a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in that place until removed by death to join the church above. Sermon on the occasion from 2d Timothy, 4: 7, 8, "I have fought a good fight," &c.

D. C.

LETTERS.

Rowse Babcock, John Whitford, L. Crandall, W. C Kenyon, J. P. Stillman, David Clawson, J. P. Livermore, A. Covey, E. S. Davis, Samuel Davison, James Summerbell, Maxson Green, A. H. Glazier, Wm. B. Maxson, Geo. Greenman, M. Robinson, J. R. Irish, Hiram Sherman, Ephraim Maxson (a list, with prices, next week.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Wm. S. Dunham, Shiloh, N. J.	$5 00
E. P. Larkin, "	5 00
Maxson Green, Alfred,	5 00
Hiram Sherman, Verona,	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

I. H. Dunn, New Market, N. J.	$2 00	to vol.	6	No. 52
Wm. Dunham, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
J. Wheeler, Farmington, Ill.	2 00	"	6	" 52
Jas Lewis Ulysses, Pa.	2 00	"	6	" 52
B. Randolph, Berlin,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Orren Burdick, "	1 00	"	6	" 26
C. Sisson, Leonardsville,	2 00	"	6	" 52
R. Saunders, Sweden,	2 00	"	6	" 52
H. Crandall, Alfred,	1 00	"	6	" 26
N. Maxson, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Geo. Sherman, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Elisha Potter, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Asa Burdick, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
Geo. W. Allen, "	2 00	"	6	" 52
John Allen, "	2 00	"	5	" 52
T. E. Babcock, Independence,	2 00	"	6	" 52
Wm. B. Clarke, Andover,	2 00	"	6	" 52

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held at the house of John D. Titsworth, in Plainfield, N. J., on the first fourth-day of the week in August, commencing at 2 o'clock, P. M. Geo. B. Utter, Rec. Sec.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Constitution.

Art. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

Art. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

Art 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Trustees.

Art. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, one or more Vice Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Trustees to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body. Five members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.

Art. 5.—The Board of Trustees shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

Art. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

Art. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (23d day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Trustees shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

Art. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Trustees be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

Art. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

Officers.

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.

Vice Pres.
- NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
- J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
- MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
- CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
- J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.

Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.

Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.

Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.

Co-Trustees,
- George Greenman, of Mystic, Ct.
- John D. Titsworth, of Plainfield, N. J.
- Wm. M. Rogers, of Brooklyn, L. I.
- Isaac D. Titsworth, of Shiloh, N. J.

Union Academy.

THE second or Fall Term of the Union Academy will commence on the 13th of August, 1849, under the charge of—

E. P. LARKIN, Principal,
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress,
Rev G M LANGWORTHY, Lecturer on Moral Science.
Miss AMANDA M. CRANDALL, Teacher of Piano.

During the Fall Term of each year, a TEACHERS' CLASS will be organized, for the purpose of more thoroughly preparing Common School teachers for their responsible, but too long neglected avocation. A Course of Lectures will be delivered before the Class upon the various modes of teaching and governing Common Schools; and during the Term, the Class will be critically examined and instructed in those branches which they are expected to teach. Every effort will be made to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to teach; and no individual can receive a recommendation from the Faculty of this Institution, who is not thoroughly qualified to fulfill all the specifications of his recommendation.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the School:—

First—Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this School.

Second—Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his religious denomination.

Third—The exercises of the Institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth—No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the Institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This Institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county-seat, and twelve miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

Terms:

Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per Term. Piano music $10 00 extra. Incidental expenses 25 cents per Term. Settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

The Winter Term of the first year will commence the third Monday in December.

The Spring Term will commence the third Monday in March, 1850.

The Second Academic Year will be divided as follows:—The first Term will commence the first Monday in August; the second Term will commence the third Monday in November; the third Term will commence the second Monday in March, 1851. Each Term will continue fourteen weeks.

Board of Trust.

Hon. LEWIS HOWELL, President.

Rev. G. M. Langworthy,	Dr. Wm. B. Ewing,
Rev. S. K. Kollock,	Thomas E. Hunt,
Rev. David Clawson,	Isaac A. Sheppard,
John Bright,	F. G Brewster,
Isaac West,	John T. Davis,
I. D. Titsworth,	Ethan B. Swinney.

Bruce's New York Type-Foundry.

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C.
Pica, per lb.	30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

Our Specimen Book is freely given to all Printing Offices.

Printers of Newspapers who choose to publish this advertisement, including this note, three times before the 1st of October, 1849, and send us one of the papers, will be paid for it in Type when they purchase from us, of our own manufacture, selected from our specimens, five times the amount of their bill.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.

GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

Miscellaneous.

A WIFE TO HER HUSBAND.

Linger not long. Home is not home without thee:
Its dearest tokens do but make me mourn.
Oh! let its memory, like a chain about thee,
Gently compel and hasten thy return.

Linger not long. Tho' crowds should woo thy staying,
Bethink thee, can the mirth of friends, though dear,
Compensate for the grief thy long delaying
Costs the fond heart that sighs to have thee here?

Linger not long. How shall I watch thy coming,
As evening shadows stretch o'er moor and dell;
When the wild bee hath ceased her busy humming,
And silence hangs on all things like a spell!

How shall I watch for thee, when fears grow stronger,
As night grows dark and darker on the hill!
How shall I weep, when I can watch no longer!
Ah! art thou absent, art thou absent still!

Yet I should grieve not, though the eye that seeth me,
Gazeth through tears that make its splendor dull;
For, oh! I sometimes fear, when thou art with me,
My cup of happiness is all too full.

Haste, haste thee home, into thy mountain dwelling!
Haste, as a bird unto its peaceful nest!
Haste, as a skiff, when tempests wide are swelling,
Flies to its haven of securest rest!

EPIDEMIC CHOLERA.

The following suggestions on the subject of cholera, made by Dr. Drake, of Cincinnati, to the people of that city, are equally applicable to other places:—

Strickly speaking, there is no preventive of the cholera; but all constitutions are not liable to it, any more than all are liable to ague and fever, influenza, or any other form of disease. But, although we know of nothing that will prevent the disease, we know of many things which can and do bring it on, after the poison has been taken into the system. These are exciting causes, and ought to be carefully avoided. The disease will, however, assail some constitutions, notwithstanding all exciting causes may be avoided.

Of the exciting causes, one is the premature laying aside of flannel and other warm clothing. In addition to this, (and belonging to the same head,) getting wet in a shower, remaining long in damp places, sitting in a strong current of air at night, and sleeping with but little bed covering, should all be carefully avoided. Every sitting and lodging-room ought to have a fire in it for a part of every day, especially for a few hours before occupying it. Thus, the shop, office, family sitting-room, church, and school-house, should have fires kindled in them early in the morning, and kept up for two or three hours; but this is still more necessary in lodging-rooms, which should be warmed and dried by brisk firs, kindled in the early part of the evening, and allowed to burn down before bed time.

A second class of exciting causes is connected with diet. Loading the stomach with any kind of food, especially at night, may bring on the disease; and omitting to eat at the usual time may do the same thing. Much reduction in the quantity of food, (the individual still being in health,) is not proper. In fact, a nourishing diet is best; but it should be plain and digestible. Meat or boiled eggs should be eaten every day. Boiled ham, corned beef, corned mutton, well-seasoned beef-steak, and poultry, are best. On the whole, salted meats are more proper than fresh; and all should be well seasoned. Veal, fresh pork, and fresh fish, should be avoided. Of salt fish, mackerel and salmon are too hard; but codfish with potatoes is proper. Old cheese is safe, and maccaroni prepared with cheese may be eaten. Hot bread should be avoid—stale bread or crackers only should be used. Of culinary vegetables, mealy potatoes, well boiled hommony, and rice, are not only the best, but all others had better be omitted. Pies, tarts, and all kinds of pastry, are improper.

Of drinks, sweet milk, tea, coffee, and chocolate, may be taken as usual. Those who drink malt liquors at their meals, should limit themselves to freshly-brewed strong beer, well hopped. As to brandy and whiskey, they cannot prevent cholera. They who are in the habit of using either, should notlay it aside; but they should avoid all excess. Those who have not such a habit, should by no means begin now. The use of brandy, in the treament of disease, must not be confounded with its use as preventive. The irritation of the stomach and bowels produced by the first impress of alcoholic drinks, may even contribute to bring on the disease; and sour wines are still more likely to have that effect.

CHOLERA INCIDENTS.

The St, Louis New Era of June 29th, has the following:—

We yesterday noticed the death of Mr. Robert Ranson, of this city, book-keeper of Mr. W. S. Gilman, one of our most extensive grocery houses. A few weeks since he was the head of a family, consisting of a wife, four children, and a step-sister, in the full enjoyment of health, all of whom now people the City of the Dead. Mother, children and sister, have all been swallowed up in death, each in their turn being swept off by the "pestilence that destroyeth at noon-day."

The St. Louis Organ of the same date, gives another instance not unlike the one above:—

A German had buried in succession his wife and four children, he with two helpless infants being all left of a once happy and industrious though poor family circle. It was the mournful story over again, another of his innocents had been claimed by Maker The necessary papers were made out and handed to him. Manly fortitude struggling with nature's fondness for all he loved, now torn from him, gave way, and the big tears, dreadful to look on at all times from a man, rolled over his cheeks unchecked, as he exclaimed, "You have got them all from me but one, and that, perhaps, you'll have tomorrow." He came the next day; that one, the last one, had followed the others to a better world—and he, scarcely conscious of his actions, stalked forth a living representative of death.

The Louisville Courier of July 2d, says:

About a week since, a German, residing in the rear of Brassmeyer's, on Water street was attacked with Cholera. At the same time, his little child was also taken, and they both died. In the mean time, his wife, the sole surviver of the family, was taken down and about to die. A German woman who came to the family in the capacity of nurse, was attacked with Cholera, and also died. Then another was sent for, who took her place by the bedside of the sick woman, and the next day she was taken home with the Cholera, and died in a few hours. The woman still struggled on between life and death, attended by some of her neighbors, among whom came two relatives of the deceased husband. The priest was sent for to administer the rites of the Church to the apparently dying woman. She also wished to make her will, for she had property, and money in the bank. The bequests were attended to, and the will about to be drawn up, when the priest and the two men quarreled, and a fight ensued in the room, which ended in the forcible ejectment of the priest from the house by the two brothers, who were in turn served in the same way by some of the neighbors. The next morning some of her friends went to see her, and found her up and dressed, but apparently in great distress. She told them that the men in the room up stairs had been in a terrible way through the night. They went into the room, and found one dead, the other dying. They had been stricken with the Cholera during the night, and died alone and unheeded.

TOWNS IN CALIFORNIA.

Some very interesting letters, from the Presbyterian Mission in California, give us a better insight into the progress of settlement in that auriferous country than anything that has yet come to hand. From them we learn that San Francisco, although greatly injured by speculation, will undoubtedly keep its position far ahead of any other town, in wealth, population and importance. Next to it in rank is a new settlement called Benicia, laid out as a speculation, and likely to prove a capital one. It is about fifty miles from the harbor of San Francisco, with which it is connected by the great bays of San Francisco and San Pablo. Its harbor will accommodate the largest ships, which can lie close ashore, in consequence of there being a natural levee. Commodore Jones and Gen. Smith have recommended it to the President as the best depot at the West for the army and navy. On the Sacramento river, 120 miles from San Francisco, lies Sacramento City, formerly Sutter's fort. This is the residence of the miners, as is also a town called Stockton in the same region. The former, notwithstanding its unhealthy position, increases rapidly. Sononama, a Spanish town, lies on a small stream running into the Bay of San Pablo, and is the residence of many great Spanish land-holders, as well as Gov. Boggs, late of Missouri, and the headquarters of Gov. Smith. Monterey is another well-known Spanish town. Napa city, Yount's rancho, and the Head of Napa, are all growing villages on Napa Creek. Napa city is the newest, makes the most pretensions, and grows fastest. Santa Cruz is a Spanish town on the road from Monterey to San Francisco, as is also Santa Clara. From all the accounts we have seen, speculation seems to be running riot in California. There were towns enough in all conscience before the breaking out of the gold fever; but every fresh mail brings us a multitude of new town projects, and every letter written appears to have some particular one in prospect. Beside those named above, there are a number of old Spanish towns laid down on the maps, which nobody mentions now. [Phila. N. American.

THE PEDLER AND HIS DOG.

In one of the churches of Lambeth, England, there is a painting on a window, representing a man with his dog. With this painting there is connected a story, which is worth telling. Tradition informs us, that a piece of ground near Westminster bridge, containg little over an acre, was left to the parish by a peddler, on condition that his picture, accompanied by his dog, should be faithfully painted on the glass of one of the windows. The parishioners, as the story goes, had this picture executed accordingly, and came in possession of the land. This was in the year 1504. The property rented at that time for about a dollar a year. It now commands a rent of nearly fifteen hundred dollars.

The reason given for the pedler's request is, that he was once very poor, when one day, having occasion to pass over this piece of ground, and being weary, he sat down under a tree to rest. While seated here, he noticed that his dog, who was with him, acted strangely. At a distance of several rods from the place where the man sat, the dog busied himself for a while in scratching at a particular spot of earth, after which he returned to his master, looked up earnestly into his face, and endeavored to draw him to the spot where he had been digging. The pedler, however, paid but little attention to the movement of his dog, until he had gone through these manœuvres several times, when he was induced to accompany it. To his surprise he found, on doing so, that there was a pot of gold buried there. With a part of this gold he purchased the ground on which the treasure had been discovered, and bequeathed it to the parish on the condition before named. So the pedler and his dog are represented in the picture which ornaments the window of that church.

"But is the story a true one?" methinks I hear my little friends inquire. I confess it has something of the air of one of Baron Munchausen's yarns; and I am a little in doubt about the correctness of it. But that tradition is generally believed, I am told, in the Lambeth parish, where the picture may still be seen by anybody who takes the trouble to visit the place. The story may be true. Stranger things than that have happened. [Woodworth's Stories about Animals.

Singular Current of air over the Lake.—The Captain of the schooner Traveler, says that on his passage to Milwaukie from the Michigan side, while not a breath of air stirred the water, which was perfectly unruffled and clear and smooth as a mirror, a breeze was constantly blowing aloft so strong that with her topsails alone set, the schooner ran seven miles an hour for some hours. During all this time no breeze was felt on deck, but on going up the rigging some fifteen feet or more, the wind could be sensibly perceived, increasing in violence higher up, and bending and twisting the topmast as in a severe gale. The captain said that the rapid movement through the still water, with the lower canvas useless, and no air on deck, and at the same time the upper sails filled and strained to their utmost capacity, was singularly beyond description. This is certainly a very remarkable phenomenon, such as seldom occurs on land or water.

A PICTURE OF WESTERN EMIGRATION.

The following very striking picture we find in the St. Louis Reveille of June 15th. It is from a letter dated at the ford of Little Blue River, May 26th:—

Since leaving the Kansas, we have passed at least one thousand teams, and we are still behind more than two thousand others. We are scarcely ever out of sight of the emigrants. A long white line, before and behind, points out the road, relieving very much the monotony of these, to me, very dreary plains. Horsemen are constantly passing and repassing, galloping over hill and dale; and it is very difficult to drive from the mind the idea that we are still within the precincts of civilization. Every now and then, as we ford a creek, or pass through a small strip of wood, I look inadvertently for the fences and habitations of the husbandman, but all that can be seen that indicates that man has been here, are the stumps of trees felled by emigrants, and a well-beaten road.

Since my last, the army of gold diggers has received mighty and powerful reinforcements. It now numbers over 10,000 men, and has a baggage and provision train of 2,527 wagons. The prairie is dotted with them as far as the eye can reach; not an instant has there been for the last two or three weeks, that emigrants and emigrant wagons have not been in sight from this post.

The great majority now crossing the plains, were profoundly ignorant when starting of what was before them—had no idea of what an outfit consisted, and in short, looked upon crossing the prairies as nothing but a pleasure trip, where killing buffalo, wolf hunting, &c., formed the prominent features.

The result of such want of experience was, that almost every wagon that left the frontiers was overloaded, not with articles absolutely necessary, but with such articles as each might fancy he would want while on the prairies, or after he reached the end of his journey. Saw-mills, pickaxes, shovels, anvils, blacksmith's tools, feather beds, rocking-chairs, and a thousand other useless articles for such a trip, filled the wagons as they left the Missouri river. Soon it was found that the loading was too great for the teams, and now overboard goes everything. The road is lined with various articles—even gold vases and gold washers are abandoned by the roadside. Quantities of provisions share the same fate, which it is to be feared will be sadly wanted by those who threw them away, before they reach the Pacific.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

It is reported in the Swedish official journal, that at the King's Mine, at Königsberg, two lumps of Native Silver, severally 238 and 436 pounds, had been obtained within the preceding two months. The mine was offered for sale in London twenty years ago, for £10,000, but failed of purchasers. It now yields to the Government more than this sum annually.

A valuable spring of mineral oil has made its appearance in a coal-pit near Alfreton, England. The oil has a dark, tarry color, but on distillation affords a valuable liquid, which has been found to be a good substitute for Chloroform as an agent for acting on the nerves of sensation, besides a colorless, inflammable oil, excellent for lamps.

The Belgian Government has instituted two prizes, one of five thousand francs with a gold medal, and the other of one thousand francs—the first for the best work on Agriculture, and the second for the best treatise on tpe Potato Disease. The manuscripts must be all sent to the Ministry of the Interior before the first of January, 1850.

Chloroform has been found to dissolve readily the various fatty and resinous substances, and generally all highly carbonized compounds. It will dissolve caoutchouc, and with copal forms a good limpid varnish.

An announcement has lately been made of the discovery of coal in the Magellan Straits. If abundant and of good quality, it will prove of great importance to steam navigation. Samples of the coal, it is said, have been transmitted to the Admirality for scientific examination.

M. Dureau de la Malle concludes a recent series of elaborate investigations into the climate of ancient and modern Italy, with the observation that the limits for different agricultural products were the same in the early as in the recent periods; and that, from the time of Augustus till now, there has been no sensible modification of temperature, either as regards the months or the years.

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Most of our readers, says the Dalton (Ga.) Eagle, will doubtless remember an account of a shocking murder, which appeared a few weeks ago, as having been recently perpetrated in the County of Putnam. Mr. David Ross, a very wealthy and prominent citizen of that county, was returning from his Factory on the Oconee River, to his family residence, about half a mile or three quarters distant, at nine o'clock on a dark night. While passing through the swamp on foot and alone, he was shot dead with a double-barreled gun, in the hands of some person unknown. One of the charges took effect in the head, and the other in the body of the deceased. The assassin stood so near as to burn his victim with the powder. The Coroner's Jury, after a patient and laborious investigation, rendered a verdict, charging a son of Mr. Ross with the murder. We learn from a citizen of Putnam, that one of the circumstances which led to this conclusion, was the examination of one of the wads with which the gun was loaded. It appeared in evidence, that the deceased was the only subscriber to the Macon Telegraph in his neighborhood; and upon close examination, it was discovered that one of the wads was composed of a piece torn from that paper. And we learn from another source, that the number of the paper from which the wad was torn, was found in a shot-bag, which had been used by young Ross, on the same day the murder was committed. The piece was compared, and fitted so complete as to satisfy the Jury that the wad had been taken from the same paper found in the shot-bag. This, we understand, was one of the strongest circumstances that settled suspicion on the young man.

Printing in England and America.—A letter from London to the Boston Post, thus compares the facility with which books are printed in London and New York:

"The art of printing advances far more rapidly in America than here. Liverpool, nearly as large as New York, has no printing done by steam. In London, but one or two printers of books, print by steam, and very rarely print more than twelve pages of a 12mo. book at a time. From an extensive acquaintance with the manner and speed of book-printing in New York and London, I will vouch for the fact, that of all the books printed in the two cities, our printers print three copies to the Londoner's one in the same time. First class publications are generally better 'got up' in England than America. But, got up equally as well, the New Yorkers will print two copies to their one. Not one book in four in London is stereotyped. In New York, three out of four. In London, one publisher lately boasted that he actually published a book in three days from the time he received it. That is quoted as an extraordinary operation that was actually accomplished once. In New York, the Harpers have issued many a book in from twenty-four to thirty hours after its receipt."

Shoe Business in Lynn.—The shoe business is the life of Lynn. Only women's, misses's, and children's shoes are made here. Engaged in this business there are of manufacturers, or men who 'carry on' the business, 78; of cutters, or men who 'cut out' the shoes, 175; of men and boys so employed in making shoes, 2,458; of men and boys so employed, but living out of town, 900; of women and girls employed in binding shoes 4,925; of the same so employed and living out of town, 1,600; making of employees an aggregate of 10,058. The number of men and boys employed in making shoes is more than seventy percent larger now than it was in 1842. The increase of the number of women and girls employed in binding shoes, has we presume, been correspondingly great. But it should be stated that the shoe business in 1842 was unusually depressed; that much less of it was done during the last than will probably be done during the present year. The number of pairs of shoes made during the last year was 3,190,000; the number purchased from other towns was 350,000 pairs. The cost of the material of these was $1,435,545: that of making them $957,030; making the cost of the 3,530,000 pairs of shoes to have been $2,392,575. The cost of making shoes now is about one-sixth less than it was a dozen years ago. [Lynn Pioneer.

New England and Virginia.—Two hundred years ago, in 1649, a pamphlet was published in London, entitled "A perfect Picture of Virginia," in which occurs the following passage: "New England, four days' sail distant, has trade to and fro, and takes from Virginia many cattle, much corn and other things. That New England is in a good condition of livelihood, but for matter of any great hope but fishing, there is not much." Compared to Virginia, this is as Scotland is to England, so much difference, and lies upon the same land northward as Scotland does to England; there is much cold, frost and snow; their land so barren, except a herring be put into the hole you set the corn in, it will not come up; and it was great pity, all those planters, now about twenty thousand, did not seat themselves at first at the south of Virginia, in a warm and rich country, where their industry could have produced sugar, indigo, ginger, cotton, and the like commodities." So it seemed at that time, (says Mr. Hildreth, in his History of the United States, from which the above is extracted,) but how much has New England, cold and sterile, with its sole staples of fish, ice, and granite, outrun, even in the career of wealth, all the boasted regions of tobacco, cotton and sugar!

A Trance of Fifteen Years.—A young woman, named Ann Comer, of Farrington, Devon, has remained in a decided state of unconsciousness for the past fifteen years. It is thought by many that she is in a trance. Her mother assured the writer, that for eleven years she had not partaken of the least particle of food. She keeps her bed, has a placid smile, and though possessing vitality, has no consciousness of the approach of any party, neither can she distinguish any object. She has been visited by some of the most eminent in the medical profession; and others, since her case had been made known, have been called to witness what might be justly termed this phenomenon in nature.

Two of 'em.—"Scraps," of the Tuscaloosa Observer, used to manage the business affairs of an uncle in Pittsburgh, who, among other peculiarities, was very economical of words. One day the old gentleman, hearing that there was a boat at the wharf, by which he wished to make a large shipment of coal, wrote thus to Scraps:

Dear Scraps:
; board. Yours, Nuncle.

Scraps beat him, though, at his own game. He wrote back:

Dear Nunc:
: Yours, Scraps.

Explanation—Se-mi-col-on: (See my coal on board.) Col-on: (Coal on.)

Sir Isaac Newton.—When Sir Isaac Newton was a boy, he was employed in servile labor. Sometimes he was sent to open the gates for the men that ware driving the cattle to market. At other times, he carried corn to market, or attended the sheep. One day his uncle found him in a hay loft, working out a mathematical problem, and he was sent to school. There he discovered his great and various talents. At the age of eighteen he was sent to the University at Cambridge, England, where he distinguished himself.

Peculiar Book.—A Christian convert once said to a missionary in Cassay, Asia: "The Word of God is truly wonderful; for I have some new thought whenever I look into it. I do not find it so in any thing else. But the Word of God is like a fountain which sends forth waters every day; they are not the same, but although they differ, they are all very good. Even the same verse says something new whenever I look into it."

Canine Sagacity.—On the Fourth of July, Mr. Alexander Wintemute, while attempting to swim across the Niagara River to an Island, called Strawberry Island, when about half way, lost his strength and was drowned. The dog of Mr. W. had accompanied his master in the water, and was the means of discovering his loss and the recovery of his body by his friends. The dog, from the moment his master sank, continued to swim in a circuit of some fifty feet, howling and barking for about two hours. The continued cries of the dog, uttered in the most pitiful and lamentable strains known to the race attracted the attention of neighbors from the shore, who at length went to the dog, and recognizing him, concluded from his sorrowful cries, and earnest manner, that his master was in the water. This proved to be so; on searching, his body was found within the circuit made by the dog, as he swam round and round. When the body of his master was taken into the boat, nothing could exceed the expressions of joy manifested by this faithful animal, which, quite exhausted and feeble, was taken into the boat along with the body.

A Fortunate Purchase.—Some time since a brig, the Carlton, was put up for public sale at the London docks and purchased by Mr. Scott, a chain lighterman, at Wapping, for £750. After repairs, the vessel put to sea under Captain Bacon, part owner. It was found necessary to put in at Hartlepool, where whilst the vessel was undergoing repairs at the interior part of the bulls head, 16,000 Spanish dollars were found in a place purposely hollowed out. The dollars are of an old mintage, and very pure silver. The vessel was originally engaged in the slave-trade off the coast of Guinea.

VARIETY.

Fitz-Green Halleck, the poet, gives the following synopsis of "the latest news from Europe:"—

"Kingdoms to-day are up-side down,
The castle kneels before the town,
A monarch fears a printer's frown,
A brickbat's range!
Give me, in preference to a crown,
Five shillings change."

Governor Briggs, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Calhoun, Secretary of that State, give it as their opinion, after much diligent inquiry, that ninety out of one hundred of the young men who emigrate from the country to the city, fail of success, and a large portion of them ignominiously.

Mr. R. Smith, an excellent practical chemist, and an able contributor to the Glasgow Practical Mechanics' Journal, (North Briton,) has discovered a process for printing, coloring and gilding porcelain and earthenware, by means of electricity. The process is said to be quite distinct from the electrotype, and the specimens produced—at one third the usual cost—are represented to be splendid.

The Baltimoreans were a good deal shocked the other day at discovering the carcase of a dog, regularly skinned and dressed, hanging in the slaughter-house of Mr. Charles Louey. The matter underwent a legal investigation, when it appeared that one of Mr. Louey's journeymen had killed the dog for the sake of the hide, and had hung the carcase up by way of a joke.

One of the members of the Massachusetts Legislature, offered a bill which provided that "no lady shall be married except in the town where she resides." It didn't go down, another member knocking it in the head by offering an amendment requiring people to "die in the town where they are born."

We notice in an exchange, an account of a woman whose husband for a State offense was sent to the Illinois Penitentiary—his wife wishing to comfort him in his misfortune, committed a small theft that she might join him, and, together with her infant, has been sent to the same House of Correction.

The whole taxable property of Rhode Island is valued at $80,290,000 for personal estate, and $48,056,829 for real estate. The personal property in the city of Providence is set down at $28,407,000, and the real estate of the city at $16,894,000.

The Frankfort Commonwealth notices the fact that the vote cast at the election held in Fayette county, Kentucky—one of the most wealthy and fertile counties in that State—in 1798, exceeded the vote in 1848; by fifty-six votes! The number of votes cast in 1798 was 2247—the number in 1848, was 2191.

Judge Burnett, Josiah Lawrence, and J. C. Hall, Commissioners appointed by the Legislature of Indiana, have completed a survey of the route of a ship canal around the falls of Ohio, on the Indiana side, and a company has been organized for its construction.

The Common Council of New Haven have passed resolutions revoking all licenses of bowling alleys and saloons, and directed their attorney to prosecute all who shall hereafter be found keeping them.

In one of the Sydney papers is the following:—"Mr. Justice Burton, happening to be about ten minutes late at Court, one day last week, fined himself half a guinea, which he handed over to the Sheriff."

More than 17,000,000 passengers passed over the railroads in Massacusetts during the past three years. Only fifty-six persons were killed, and sixty-five were injured.

Wm. Parker, Esq., recently superintendent of the Boston and Worcester railroad, says, "A man with a drop of the influence of spirituous liquor in his veins, is so far unfit for railroad service."

A letter closed with the white of an egg cannot be opened with the steam of boiling water, like a common wafer, as the heat only adds to its firmness.

Several cannon balls have been found in the Vatican Gallery, at Rome, and have been placed in the collection of coins, with the inscription, "Gift of Pio Nono."

An Iowa paper states that thirteen years ago there were not 500 white innabitants west of Lake Michigan, where now there are nearly a million!

Ex-President Polk was born Nov. 2, 1795, and died at the age of 54, the youngest of all the Presidents. None have died under the age of 68.

[Copy.]

Cambridge, Washington Co., N. Y.,
June 18, 1849.

Geo. W. Savage, Esq.,
Pres't Eagle Life and Health Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to express to your Company my thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which you paid the claim for insurance on the life of my brother, Doctor F. R. Robertson, which was insured for the benefit of his mother. The manner in which the claim was met and paid, is creditable to your institution. No deduction was asked, nor was there any objection raised, but the whole amount insured paid as soon as presented and without waiting until it became due.

A policy of this kind is indeed valuable. I trust you will have the kindness to express our deep acknowledgment to your Board of Directors, and oblige

Your obedient servant,
— R. K. Robertson.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

AGENTS WANTED.

A number of active and intelligent men are wanted, who can furnish satisfactory references, to act as local or traveling agents, in procuring applications for Life and Health Insurance. To men of energy this is a good opportunity, as a liberal commission is paid on all risks obtained. For farther information, apply personally, or by letter—(post paid, as none other will be taken from the post-office)—to

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
206 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DERUYTER INSTITUTE.

REV. JAMES R. IRISH, Principal.
GURDON EVANS, Instructor in Natural Sciences
AURELLA F. ROGERS, Preceptress.
MARY M. CLARK, Teacher of Music and Painting.

Other experienced Teachers are employed as Assistants.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

First, commencing Wed., Aug. 23, ending Nov. 29.
Second, " " Dec. 13, " March 21.
Third, " " April 4, " July 11.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

Tuition, according to studies,	$3, $4, or $5 00
Extras—Drawing,	1 00
Painting,	$2 00 or 4 00
Tuition on Piano,	8 00
Use of Piano,	2 00
Chemical Lectures, and Experiments,	1 00
Writing, including Stationery,	50
Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, bedstead,	1 50
Board in private families, per week,	$1 00 to 1 50

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

IRA SPENCER, M. D.,
President of the Board of Trustees.
DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., June 12, 1848.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. K. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Cressingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY G. B. UTTER AND T. B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 6.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, JULY 26, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 266.

The Sabbath Recorder.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

REVIEW OF MAHAN ON THE SABBATH.

[Concluded.]

Still farther in favor of this view, the author quotes two instances of apostolic example. The first is found in Acts 20: 7—"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached to them, (ready to depart on the morrow,) and continued his speech till midnight." The second is from 1st Cor. 16: 1, 2, "Concerning the collection for the saints." Upon these the author remarks:—

"It is quite evident, that the custom of assembling for worship on the 'Lord's day,' or the first day of the week, was established and universal, at least in the churches at Corinth and Troas."

Here, again, the author confounds the terms Lord's day and first day, which, as before shown, are not used synonymously in a single instance in the whole Bible. Now it is "quite evident" to us, that a single instance cannot establish a general custom, especially when, as in this case, there were numerous instances of the opposite. I allude to the meeting of the disciples to hear preaching. We have no account that Paul preached at Troas but once, and that upon a special occasion, just before leaving his brethren, never more to see their faces. To infer from this single special meeting, that the practice of meeting upon the first day was "established and universal," is an outrage upon all reasoning. But for what purpose had the disciples met? Was it to sabbatize? Nay, verily! The text expressly states, that it was "to break bread," an act having no more relationship to the act of sabbatizing, than prayer has to baptism. Suppose that some author should refer to the Lord's prayer as an example of baptism; it would be no greater outrage upon the common sense of mankind, than Mahan's reference to the breaking of bread as an example of sabbatizing.

It is no more than reasonable, surely, when apostolic example is referred to as a guide for our acts, that our acts should correspond to the example. The author has referred to an example of meeting on first day for the express purpose of breaking bread, from which we affirm, that he is bound to break bread on Sunday whenever he meets his brethren, and, by the example, is bound to do nothing else, for Paul's preaching was only an incidental circumstance of the meeting, and not an object of the meeting. Does the author do this? If not, then is he strangely inconsistent with himself.

Who cannot perceive, that this text proves nothing in favor of Sabbath-keeping, unless it be assumed, as a major proposition, that any day is the Sabbath upon which bread was broken by the disciples? The syllogism will stand thus:—1st. Any day is the Sabbath upon which bread was broken by the disciples. 2d. Bread was broken by the disciples on the first day of the week. Therefore, the first day of the week is the Sabbath. A tyro in biblical literature ought to blush at such reasoning. It proves too much, for the disciples broke bread on the fifth day of the week, and therefore the fifth day would be the Sabbath. Christ also broke bread to the multitude. See Acts 27: 25, Matt. 14: 19, 15: 36, Mark 8: 6—19. Upon this principle of reasoning, all of these days were Sabbaths.

But let us, just here, inquire upon what day the bread was broken mentioned in the text quoted by the author? By the civil mode of reckoning time, which we suppose Mr. Mahan adopts, the first day begins at midnight after the seventh, and ends at midnight before the second day. Now we are informed in the eleventh verse of the thirteenth chapter of Acts, that the bread was not broken till after Paul had restored the young man, which was after midnight. Then, if the author gets a Sabbath from this breaking of bread, it must be, not Sunday, but Monday. Our own opinion is, that this breaking of bread was not the Lord's Supper, but a meal for the satisfaction of nature, because the same term, klasai arton, to break bread, is employed in all the texts above quoted, which refer to ordinary meals. St. Chrysostom among the ancients, and Calvin among the moderns, say it was not to celebrate the Supper, but a friendly meal. But if we allow it to have been the Lord's Supper, nothing is gained; for, as we have seen, by the civil reckoning it took place on Monday morning before daylight, which agrees well with the custom mentioned by Pliny, as quoted by the author, of meeting before daylight to sing a hymn to Christ, &c. But if we adopt the Scripture mode of reckoning, which makes a day to consist of that portion of time from evening to evening, or twenty-four hours, the case is still worse; for, in that case, the meeting was on the evening after the Sabbath, and Paul preached till midnight, then broke bread, and departed on Sunday morning—a strange comment on his sacred regard for the day.

Now, we ask, what does the frequent quotation of this text, by those who would fain abrogate God's holy law, indicate, but a desperation for argument which, like a drowning man, catches at the very shadow upon the surface of the water? If we admit all that is claimed—that it was a religious meeting of the disciples, at which the Lord's Supper was celebrated on the first day of the week—what just notion of argument can a man have to place this single instance of meeting on the first day in the scale against the universal practice of the Apostles and Churches, both Jew and Gentile, in those days? Acts 13: 14, 42, 44—"They came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day... And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath.... And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." Here we have not only Jews but Gentiles recognizing the seventh day as a stated day of public worship; and this same Paul, who at Troas preached one sermon on the first day of the week, preaching statedly on the seventh day. Acts 16: 13, at Phillippi—"And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made, and spake unto the women which resorted thither." Acts 15: 20—"For Moses, of old time, hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." This is given as a reason why they should write to the Gentile converts to abstain from idolatry; from which it appears, that it was common for Gentiles to attend public worship on the Sabbath to listen to instruction. Again, twenty-one years after Christ's death, Paul went to Corinth, and preached to Jews and Greeks every Sabbath for a year and six months. See Acts 18: 4, 11. Here we have Paul regularly observing the seventh day for seventy-eight weeks in succession; and yet Mr. Mahan, President of a Collegiate Institute, professes to believe that he observed the first day, because, forsooth, he stopped at Troas and preached all night. Does he rely upon his own argument? The universality of this practice among the primitive Churches is farther demonstrated by reference to St. Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians 2: 14—"For ye, brethren, become followers of the Churches of God, which in Judea are in Christ." We learn, also, chap. 1: 7, 8, that these Gentile Christians were "examples to all that believe in Macedonia or Achaia," and that they had so extensively disseminated their views and doctrines that Paul and Sylvanus and Timotheus "need not to speak anything." Now what was the character of this Church of Judea, so extensively imitated? It is said of them, Acts 21: 20, that they were all zealous of the law. Being zealous of the law, they of course kept the law. This universal practice was as Christ expected it would be; for in all his intimacy with his disciples he never intimated that the Sabbath of the commandment, which he said was made for man, would cease at his death, but, on the contrary, directed them to pray that their flight from Jerusalem be not on the Sabbath day—an event to transpire forty years after his death. This Sabbath was the seventh day, for Mahan says, "The term Sabbath is never in a solitary instance used by any writer of the New Testament to designate any of the Jewish sacred days except the seventh day.

The passage in 1st Cor. 16: 1, 2, is as follows—"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come." We might very justly dispose of this text by simply affirming, that no public meeting whatever is indicated, but, on the contrary, it was to be a private duty, as clearly indicated by the original text, where we have "eautoo," the dative singular of the reflexive pronoun, signifying "by himself." Who would claim that he was laying by himself in depositing money in a public contribution box? For what then is this text quoted? To make out that the primitive Churches met on the first day of the week. But we see that no meeting is mentioned in the text; therefore it is irrelevant. Allowing, however, that there was a meeting, then we ask for what purpose was the meeting? So far as the text or context indicates, it was for collecting funds for the poor saints, and for that alone. But the author quotes it as an example of Sabbath-keeping, which example is indicative of the Church's duty at the present time. This argument is good for nothing, unless it be assumed, as the major proposition, that any day on which the primitive Churches made a collection for the saints is the Sabbath day, which is manifestly absurd. As that example can only indicate the practice of raising funds for the poor, it proves nothing for Sabbatizing; for where, in God's Word, is that mentioned as characteristic of Sabbath keeping? But in the text the apostle enjoins to lay by themselves in store as they had been prospered; which implies a computation of previous loss and gain—a business certainly incompatible with Sabbatizing.

Upon these two texts, the author bases the inference of the established and universal custom of assembling for public worship on the first day of the week. We have seen that the last text indicates no meeting at all, and the first an evening meeting, and the breaking of bread on Monday morning. On the other hand, we have shown it to have been the constant practice of the apostles to hold public meetings with both Jew and Gentile Churches, week after week and year after year, on the seventh day. Well may the common sense of mankind feel indignant when called upon to adopt such an inference. If so important an event had occurred as the change of the Sabbath, why, among all the railing accusations of the unbelieving Jews against the apostles, do we not find the charge of Sabbath breaking? Certainly, if they had observed the first day of the week, the crafty Jews would have speedily arraigned them. Moreover, if such an event had occurred, why did not the apostles declare it? Paul said (Acts 20: 21, 27,) that he had kept back nothing profitable, and had not shunned to declare all the counsel of God. Now we argue that, as he did not declare the change of the Sabbath, it was not a counsel of God, and therefore not profitable.

The author remarks, finally, "The change of the ordinance from the seventh to the first day of the week, is positively foretold by an inspired prophet." We suppose this could not have been one of the prophets who, according to the passage in Ignatius, quoted by the author, already kept the Lord's day. The prophet quoted is Ezekiel, (43: 26, 27,) "Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it, and they shall consecrate themselves: and when these days are expired, it shall be that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priests shall make your burnt offerings upon the altar, and your peace offerings; and I will accept you, saith the Lord." There seems to be several prominent features about this text which render it rather unfortunate for those who base upon it the change of the weekly Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. 1st. The Bible no where informs us on what day of the week the purging and purifying of the altar commenced, and consequently the conclusion that it ended on the seventh is wholly gratuitous. 2d. As the services of purging were daily, so were the burnt offerings of the priests, which were to commence on some eighth day and continue so forward, daily offerings. This we deem the fair interpretation of the text; so that it indicates nothing in relation to the weekly observance of the Sabbath.

In conclusion, we think we have clearly shown—

1st. That the Sabbath and seventh day to be inseparable, as indicated by the nature of the appointment, and the reason for the appointment.

2d. That, as the Sabbath was not an institution typical of Christ, therefore his death did not at all affect it.

3d. That the apostles continued to observe the seventh day after his death the same as before.

4th. That the primitive Churches, for 300 years after Christ, observed the seventh day as the Sabbath; and that the practice of Sabbatizing on the first day grew out of the ancient custom of holding a festival on that day in honor of the resurrection, and that this change was induced by hatred to the Jews.

5th. That the Christian Church is inconsistent in observing the first day in honor of the crowning work of redemption, inasmuch as that crowning work was not done on that day.

6th. That no allusion to a weekly Sabbath is made by the prophet Ezekiel.

We conclude, then, that no change is either expressed or implied by inspiration; and therefore the original institution, the seventh day of the week, maintains all its sanctity, and all its claims to observance by every rational being. D. E. M.

MODE OF ENCOURAGING A PENITENT.

As a specimen of his peculiar manner of leading a hesitating mind to venture on the Saviour, we may mention a case in Glasgow, which occurred about this time. An intelligent female, who was laboring under a deep sense of sin, was visited by Mr. P., and notwithstanding all his encouragements and prayers, she seemed to be only increasingly distressed, and almost in despair. At length, while on their knees, Mr. P. said to her, "Let us sit up a we'e:" and placing himself beside her, and looking steadily in her face, he said,

"Do ye believe the Bible?"

"I do," she replied.

"Can ye tell me wha made the world?"

She smiled a little contemptuously, and after a pause said, "It was God!" To which he immediately replied, "How d'ye ken? were ye there to see?" She seemed surprised, perceiving that there was evidently more meant by the question than she had supposed, and then remarked, "No, I was not there, but the word of God says that he made it."

"Ah, well, you believe a' that the Bible says, d'ye?"

She said, "Yes."

"Ah, well, we'll see, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him.' Wha says that?"

"The Father."

"Well, will ye do as the Father bids ye? He commands ye to hear the Son."

To this she assented.

"Well, then, what does the Son say? 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out.' 'Come unto me, and I will give you rest.' To the woman in the Gospel he said, 'Daughter, thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven thee," and will he not say the same to you? Is he no saying it even noo? ye dinna believe a' the Bible."

She instantly saw the shame and sin of not trusting in a promising, present Redeemer, and as instantly ventured on his mercy. Confiding in the love, and power, and truth, of the world's Redeemer, she trusted herself in his hands, and found the peace she sought.

LINES,

Addressed by a lady to a widowed friend, who had lost a lovely little boy

"In Heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father."

Silence filled the courts of Heaven, hushed were angel harp and tone,
While a little new-born spirit knelt before the Eternal throne,
As his small white hands were lifted—clasped as if in earnest prayer,
And his voice, in low, sweet murmurs, rose like music on the air;
Light from the full fount of glory, on his robes of whiteness glistened,
And the bright-winged seraphs round him, bowed their radiant heads, and listened.

Lord, from thy world of glory here,
My heart turns fondly to another;
Oh! Lord—our God!—the Comforter,
Comfort, comfort my sweet mother.
Many sorrows hast thou sent her,
Meekly hath she drained the cup,
And the jewels thou hast lent her,
Unrepenting yielded up:
Comfort, comfort my sweet mother.

Earth is growing lonely round her,
Friend and lover hast thou taken;
Let her not, though clouds surround her,
Feel herself by thee forsaken.
Let her think, while faint and weary,
We are waiting for her here;
Let each thought that makes earth dreary,
Make the thought of Heaven more dear.

Saviour, thou in nature human,
Dwelt on earth a little child;
Pillowed on the breast of woman,
Blessed Mary, undefiled.
Thou, who from thy cross of suffering,
Viewed thy mother's tearful face,
And bequeathed her to thy loved one,
Bidding him to fill thy place,
Comfort, comfort my sweet mother.

Thou who from the Heavens descending,
Tears and woes and sufferings won;
Thou, who nature's laws suspending,
Gave the widow back her son;
Thou, who at the grave of Lazarus,
Wept with those who wept their dead,
Thou, who once in mortal anguish,
Bowed thine own anointed head,
Comfort, comfort my sweet mother.

The dove-like murmur died away upon the evening air,
Yet still the little suppliant knelt, with hands still clasped in prayer,
Still were the softly-pleading eyes turned to the sapphire throne,
While angel harp and angel voice rang out in mingling tone;
And as the choral numbers swelled by angel voices given,
High, loud, and clear the anthem rolled through all the courts of Heaven—
"He is the widow's God," it said, "who spared not his own son."
The infant spirit bowed its head—"Thy will, oh God, be done!"

MISSIONARY LABOR IN HAYTI.

The following extracts from the Journal of Rev. Wm. M. Jones, missionary to Hayti from the Baptist Free Mission Society, we find in a recent number of the Christian Contributor:—

I have as usual preached twice a week and attended to my duties, all of which keep me hard at work. The care of the school is considerable. The want of books, maps, charts, keeps me busy contriving. I am translating Mrs. Taylor's "Physiology for Children," for the use of the school. Then I am obliged to translate hymns—write sermons—visit the people, and distribute tracts. Of the sermons I have preached lately, one was on temperance and another on the judgment.

Sorrowful news reaches us to-day from the Spanish part of the island of Hayti. The invading army is in such jeopardy that all the able-bodied men expect to be called away to help their countrymen. This campaign has been in operation about two months.

May 1. This day is celebrated throughout the island as the "Fete de l'Agriculture d'Haiti." A great crowning of flowers came off to-day on the public square, which is near our house. Those only received the wreath who were previously judged to have produced the most on their plantations within the past year. Plaintain and corn stalks, corn cocoanuts, &c., were stuck in roes in front of the platform; around and within were crowded the multitude. The army was drawn up on the outside. A short discourse was read, which was replied to with drum and cries of "Vive le President," &c. Then Gen. Jacques Louis stepped forward in full Haytien uniform, and gave an off-hand oration in Creole. It was a little amusing and somewhat to the point. The "worthies" were then called forward to receive their flowery prizes. In answer to some two or three names, the assembly was informed that they were in prison. The next thing was to go to the Catholic chapel, and attend to their senseless worship. After this, came the tambour dance. Six companies from the country spent the afternoon and evening in different parts of the town. Such a chattering, yelling, screaming, jumping, and dancing! Oh what depravity!

May 3. Francois, one of our regular hearers is obliged to leave for the Spanish part. Poor young man. I have begun to hope he was under conviction. He says that he regrets deeply that he is called away just now. I gave him a New Testament and some tracts, accompanied with good advice. He refrained from weeping, though much agitated. A large company passed our door in the forenoon; shook hands with the general. To lose our neighbors this way gives us great sorrow of heart. From what we hear, scores of those who went from this part of the island have already fallen in battle. I have lately been circulating tracts and writing letters upon the subject of peace. Soon I expect to preach several sermons on the subject. The teacher of my school is becoming quite interested in the principles of peace. While expecting to be called upon the other day, to go off to fight, he declared positively, that he would die first. "I can't fight," said he. "The government may kill me, and I will go to to my God. But to take up arms against my fellow-men, I can't do it." Although I very much fear he would not endure the hour of trial, I hope the principles of the gospel are at work in his heart. In all my preaching and conversation, I teach that the gospel requires that we should prefer death to fighting and war.

May 4. Preached to twenty hearers. The military excitement thins out our congregation.

May 5. Bible-class in the afternoon. Six of us went at 6 o'clock to Navare's, 3-4 of a mile out of town. Met N. and son and a neighbor, and preached to them from the first sixteen verses of the third chapter of John N's house is built on a barren knoll, a place formerly occupied by an indigo factory. One room contained a flock of one hundred goats; their bleating almost drowned my voice at times. I go there next Sabbath evening, and hope to meet more people. So particular are the authorities, that I had to go the la place and get liberty to preach out of the town. This being done, I do not expect any difficulty.

May 6. Preached to twenty-nine hearers from John i: 29—"Behold the lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Two or three new hearers present.

May 7. More excitement. News from the East is, that the army is returning on account of a revolution at Port-au-Prince. Provisions are becoming more scarce and dearer every day. We have been out of bread for more than a month, and know not when any flour will be brought here again. But God will provide. "Blessed are all they who put their trust in Him."

May 11. Through the kind providence of God, some flour has arrived from St. Thomas. Have purchased a barrel of flour, and also one of meal. Sat down to our table with rejoicing hearts—bread and cane syrup—no butter or milk, yet, what a luxury! For six weeks we have suffered much for the want of proper food. We learn that the poor soldiers, during their march into the Spanish part, were at one time five days without food, and obliged to fight and march here and there being nearly surrounded by the enemy. Preached to the parents of the children of the school. About sixty persons were in attendance. Text Prov. xxii: 6—"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

May 12. Sabbath. The regiment of soldiers from this place returned to-day. Eight or ten of their number have been killed, and some thirty wounded. It is reported, that the army lost all their horses, so that the generals were obliged to trudge home on foot. The President declares it his intention to prepare his army anew for another campaign. All the men and boys who are able to bear arms from fourteen years and upwards, it is expected, will then be called out.

Preached this evening at Navare's—place of meeting in the high road, close by the beaten path, which I preferred to being penned up with the goats as I was the other Some soldiers and country people came along and stopped a few moments to listen, and then passed on. Chose for my text Matt. xi: 28—"Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Tried to make the poor creatures feel that they were groaning and sinking under sin—that Christ only could relieve them of their burden.

May 13. Preached this evening from Matt. v: 20, on excelling the Pharisees in religion. Forty persons present—good attention given to the word—some appeared to listen with solemnity.

We occupy the middle room of our dwelling-house for our chapel and school. The room is about fourteen by seventeen: there is a narrow porch or gallery in front. This is altogether too small. During the summer months, the heat in this room is insupportable. I want to build a small chapel, say twenty-four feet by forty. Five hundred dollars would be sufficient.

THE DISEASES OF EGYPT.

In Deut. 7: 15, it is said, "And the Lord will remove from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee." A similar expression is also found in Exodus 15: 26, "If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, and will do that which is right in his sight, and will give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians, for I the Lord am He that healeth thee." In Deut. 28: 50, it is said, "And the Lord will bring again upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, of which thou wast afraid, and they shall cleave to thee." In verses 27 and 35 of the same chapter, erring Israel is threatened with the infliction of a sickness peculiarly Egyptian.

All of these scattered pages agree in this, that Egypt, in reference to disease, is a very peculiar land, and is visited by them in a very special degree. The account of all those who have made the diseases of Egypt an object of particular attention, show that the author is right in this. Wagner, in his Natural History of Man, calls Egypt "a great focus of the diseases in universal history." De Chabrol, in his "inquiry concerning the customs of the modern inhabitants of Egypt," of the most important diseases, says, "With an almost equable temperature, and with an always serene sky, Egypt can have only a small number of diseases, but they are for the most part terrible."

The same author then speaks of single maladies, the plague, which is almost never wanting in Cairo, and particularly in Alexandria; the dysentery, of which he says: "This disease causes great destruction among them, and especially attacks the children, whom it carries off in a frightful manner," the diseases of the eyes with which one at least out of five individuals is afflicted, the small-pox, which in Egypt is frightful and rages far worse than in Europe, etc.

In the "observations upon several diseases which attacked the soldiers of the French army," four seasons of the year are made with reference to healthfulness. The first comprises the time of the inundation. "I name," says the author, "this first season of the year, which continues about three months, the damp season; it may be considered as the winter of the country. The west wind which then blows, increases the dampness of the atmosphere which at evening and especially in the morning is full of mist. The consequence is a coolness which is uncomfortable and detrimental to animal secretions. In this season of the year diseases of the eyes, the hospital fever, the diarrhea and catarrhal pains prevail." "The third season of the year," says the same author further, "which I will give the name of the sick season, since it is destructive to the health of the inhabitants, and especially of strangers, begins about the first of March and continues generally until about the end of May. The south wind takes the place of the east which had prevailed during the earlier part of the year. These south winds are first light, but they increase gradually—they afterwards decrease in the same way—and indeed to such a degree that during a period of about 50 days, from which they have taken the name Chamsin, they are very violent and hot, and hence would become insupportable, if they blew without cessation. At this season of the year wounds heal with difficulty, and are easily seized with mortification. Sicknesses of all kinds take an unusual character, and require the greatest carefulness on the part of the physician, and in general all living beings are more or less affected."

DEATH AT THE PRAYER MEETING.

"His watchword at the gate of death—
He enters heaven with prayer."

Most of our readers will recollect to have seen some time ago an account of "The Death of the Prayer Meeting." That was indeed a most melancholy event; but that to which we shall now invite your attention is of a widely different character. It is of death at the prayer meeting. Some years ago, in a retired corner of the parish of B., might have been seen a prayer meeting, convened by her particular request, in the room of an aged woman, full of faith and good works, who was, by reason of ill health, often detained from the gates of Zion which she loved. She appeared quite well at this time, and received her beloved pastor and friends with a grateful welcome. The exercises were commenced; the accents of prayer and the notes of praise succeeded one another, and mingling together, like a column of sweet incense, went up on high before him who liveth forever. As the hour of hallowed devotion drew to a close, she to whom it was to be "the last of earth," complained of unusual distress, and was removed to an adjoining room. Here she rallied again, and addressed those about her, the last service was concluded, her soul winged its way to the Zion above, where prayer is lost in praise, faith in sight, hope in fruition, grace in glory.

Not unlike this was that scene of which we saw an account in some recent missionary intelligence, wherein a little girl in a heathen land, who had been taught by our missionaries the name of Jesus, and taught by the Spirit to love Him, was laid upon a bed of sickness. At her request, her classmates were gathered for prayer: as one after another engaged in this delightful exercise, the young invalid seemed to revive, and she rose from her couch, and taking the Testament read a portion of Scripture, and then knelt beside her companions in prayer. The desires of a full heart were poured forth for the missionaries and for her poor people. She concluded, and her companions rose from their knees; but the other moved not; they waited and waited, but still the sick girl retained her position. They went to her—they looked into her face—her spirit had fled! "Let me die the depth of the righteous, and let my last end be like theirs." [N. Y. Observer.

The Temptation of Riches.—A wanderer from our motherland, to improve his circumstances, "settled" in one of the most fertile counties in lower Virginia, purchased a small farm, and by the "sweat of his brow" acquired a comfortable subsistence. A member of the Church, it was his privilege "gladly to give of the little" of his wordly goods. On one occasion, he contributed to a benevolent object (much to the surprise of the applicant) fifty dollars. By the death of a relative in England, he became possessed of a large fortune, and was soon after applied to in behalf of the same object. After much hesitation, he presented the applicant with one dollar, which elicited expressions of remonstrance. "The truth is this, my friend," said the donor: "when I had but little, I had the disposition to give much, but now that I have much, I am disposed to give but little."

Progress.—The Western Episcopalian says that the father in a Roman Catholic family in Ohio lately became interested in reading the Bible. He read an hour each evening with his wife. "In a few evenings," we give the words of the narrator, "he stopped in the midst of his reading and said: Wife! if this book is right, we are WRONG.

"He read on, and in a few days longer said: Wife! if this book is true, we are LOST.

"Riveted to the book, and deeply anxious, he still read, and in a week more joyfully exclaimed, Wife! if this book is true, we MAY BE SAVED!"

A Remarkable Eulogy.—The Rev. Joseph Allen, a century or two ago, the remarkably devoted and laborious minister of Taunton (England,) had this testimony given of him after death: "Each thought was to him a prayer, each prayer a song, each day a Sabbath, each meal a sacrament; and so his life on earth was a foretaste of that eternal repast to which he hath now arrived."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 26, 1849.

Traveling Agent.—Eld. Walter B. Gillett having been engaged to travel a while as Agent for the Sabbath Recorder, will visit most of our churches in the State of New York previous to September 1st. His primary object will be to increase the subscription list of the paper, and to collect what is due for it up to the close of volume 5. He will also take the names of persons who may wish to become members of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and receive and transmit to the Treasurer any moneys subscribed for the benefit of that Society.

COMMEMORATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

It is a striking circumstance, that so many of the institutions of our holy religion are commemorative. They are standing testimonies to important facts. The Lord's Supper, for instance, commemorates the fact of Christ's death. "As oft as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." Baptism commemorates the fact of his burial and resurrection, and is a most significant and beautiful emblem of it. When one is buried in the water, and rises again to view, he attests his own belief in the fact that Christ was buried and rose again. The administrator attests the same with regard to himself. Trace back the history of the Church to the time of the Apostles, and it will be found that there has never been an age in which these two institutions of religion have not been attended to; so that we have thus a continuous chain of evidence that the great facts of the Lord's death, and the Lord's burial and resurrection, did actually transpire. And because the whole scheme of Christianity is but an elaboration of the doctrine of these facts, and an application of the same to the condition of fallen man, therefore, the actual occurrence of these facts being proved, we are furnished with an irrefragable evidence of the truth of the Christian religion.

We may reason in the same way concerning the institutions of the Old Testament. The Passover commemorated the very important fact that God spared the Israelites from that destruction with which he visited all the first-born of Egypt, and brought them out from that land of bondage, "with a high hand and an outstretched arm." The Feast of Tabernacles commemorated the fact of the Israelites dwelling in tents during their journey from Egypt to Canaan. The feast of Pentecost commemorated the fact of the giving of the law from Mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day from the departure of the Israelites from Egypt. True, these institutions were prospective as well as commemorative; that is, they were types, which looked forward to the coming of Christ. But their typical character was one thing, their commemorative character another. As types, they are no longer to be observed, even by Israelites; but we are not of those who think that in their commemorative character they ought to be renounced by that people. We see nothing in the Scripture which warrants such an idea.

Besides the institutions of Christianity, and those which were peculiar to Judaism, we find in the Bible another very important one, which is commemorative of a fact in which the whole race of mankind, Jews and Gentiles, have a common interest. We refer to the Sabbath. It commemorates the fact that Jehovah, the God of the Bible, is the Creator and maker of all things, heaven, earth, and sea, and all that in them is; that he employed six days in moulding, arranging and perfecting them, and that he rested on the seventh day, from which point he looked back and "saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." The Sabbath, we say, commemorates this fact, and it is the only institution that does. We repeat it, that all men have a common interest in this fact—the Gentiles as well as the Jews, and the Jews as well as the Gentiles. Hence, the true doctrine concerning the Sabbath is, that it is a testimony to the power, wisdom, and goodness of God, as displayed in creation, and that it thus becomes to all mankind a standing witness against atheism and all the multiplied forms of heathen idolatry.

We need not here dispute whether the Sabbath was enjoined upon man from the beginning, or not until the Israelites were brought out of Egypt, and then only upon that nation. For, whatever way this may be determined, it will still be true that Gentiles are as much concerned in the institution as Jews. Let it be granted, for argument's sake, that it was never formally enjoined until it was delivered from Sinai. Nevertheless, it was then enjoined as a commemorative institution; and we cannot see why it is not the duty of all mankind to observe it, if all mankind are equally interested in the fact which it commemorates. Some tell us, by way of objection, that the Passover was just as positively enjoined upon the Jews, and with as heavy a penalty, as the Sabbath. But, we reply, there is a palpable difference between the two cases. None but Jews were personally interested in the fact which the Passover was instituted to commemorate; but in the fact which the Sabbath commemorates, all Gentiles as well as Jews are personally interested. A Jew is no more bound to acknowledge Jehovah as his Creator than a Gentile is. There is no more of creative skill displayed in the body and soul of a Jew than in the body and soul of a Gentile. The sun does not shine more brightly, the stars do not glitter with more splendor, the rain does not descend more plentifully, the productions of nature are not bestowed with more abundance, upon the Jew than upon the people of other nations. A Gentile may contemplate, with admiration and gratitude, the things of creation, and say, with just as much truth as any Jew ever did, "Thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy works: I will triumph in the works of thy hands." Why, then, object that the Sabbath was never given to any but Jews? The objection is futile. The fact which the Sabbath commemorates concerns all alike, and therefore all are bound to keep it. There is as much sin in disregarding it, as there can be in disregarding any commemorative institution whatever. But we shall return to this subject again.

*

THE IRISH APOSTLE OF TEMPERANCE.

Father Mathew having escaped from the control of the various committees by whom he was beset on his arrival, has gone to work in good earnest. He has spent five days in Brooklyn, during which time he administered the pledge to 7,550 persons. He visited the Navy Yard on one of those days, when the workmen were allowed two hours for dinner, and he addressed them. On board the North Carolina seventy sailors took the pledge, and cheered him from the rigging as he left. From Brooklyn he came back to New York, and commenced talking and administering the pledge at the Catholic Church in Barclay street, which was thronged night after night. He expects soon to visit Boston; and after the extreme heat of the season is past, he intends to make an extensive tour of the country.

Some good Protestant people seem to be rather shy of Father Mathew, because he is a Roman Catholic Priest; and a few go so far as to hint their suspicions that he is an emissary of the Pope. Such apprehensions do not trouble us. On the contrary, we should be glad to see any number of Catholic Priests at work getting the people to sign the temperance pledge at the rate of seven thousand in five days. Such emissaries of the Pope should be welcomed. They will do more to rid the world of the spirit of popery, by making temperate men, than these fault-finders will by opposing them. True it is, no doubt, that Mr. Mathew gives the pledge with the religious ceremonies of the Catholic Church, signing each receiver with the cross, the badge of that Church. But we have not heard of his endeavoring to violate the feelings of conscientious Protestants, by inducing any such to take the pledge at his hands and with such ceremonies. We think, therefore, the best way is to encourage him to get as many as he can to take the pledge with the Catholic sign, while we do our utmost to get others to take the pledge with the Protestant sign, or no sign at all.

ASSOCIATIONAL COMMUNION.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Some weeks ago I proposed a Query, through the columns of the Recorder, whether it would be according to gospel order for some twenty, or more, members of different Seventh-day Baptist churches, if they should happen to be brought together in Philadelphia, and remain over the Sabbath, to celebrate the Lord's Supper, without first being regularly constituted a church? It was supposed, in the query, that there were in the company a minister and a couple of deacons, who officiated on the occasion; and that some time during the following week, having dispatched their business in Philadelphia, they all returned to their respective homes, and resumed their places in the churches to which they respectively belonged. Philadelphia was named, not because the querist supposed that any such proceeding had ever taken place in that city, but because he wished your correspondents not to suspect that he had an allusion to a custom which has obtained currency in our denomination, so that, whoever of them should undertake to reply, might do so untrammeled by that prejudice which so often influences one when undertaking to defend a practice to which he is already committed. Perhaps, however, my wariness has defeated the main object which I wished to accomplish. It may not have been discerned, that I was alluding to a practice actually in vogue with us, and therefore no one has felt interest enough in the question to offer a reply. I proceed, therefore, to make the application.

The brethren assembled represent a Seventh-day Baptist Association. Philadelphia the place of meeting. The minister and deacons, those of like order who generally attend an Association. Their celebration of the Lord's Supper represents the constant practice of each of our Associations, whenever and wherever assembled.

Now I ask plainly, is this custom according to gospel order? Perhaps I need to have the way of God expounded to me more perfectly; and, if so, I hope some of your better enlightened correspondents will undertake it. But according to the notions in which I have been trained, the Lord's Supper is an ordinance which belongs to a church, as such. And, if I am able to see clearly, this is the only view which agrees with a well known principle of our denomination, that the ordinance is never to be extended by a church beyond the limits of its discipline. We do not extend it to the members of other persuasions, because we can exercise no discipline over them. Hence our practice of close or restricted communion, in opposition to open or mixed communion. The ordinance, then, is confined to the limits of a church, and is extended to those members of our own denomination who may be present as visitors. But it is extended to these, only on the presumption that they are, in some sense, within the reach of discipline. For, though not amenable directly to the church where they are by invitation receiving the communion, such is the unity and fellowship obtaining between our churches respectively, that report may be made by one church to another of the improper conduct of any of its members, and discipline secured. Now an Association is not a church, neither is it invested with disciplinary power over the churches. It is merely a conclave of delegates from different churches—each of which is independent and sovereign—for the purpose of accomplishing certain objects prescribed by its constitution; and, from the nature of the case, can exercise no power over a church, except to exclude it from fellowship in case it will no longer coöperate in carrying out the design for which the Association was organized. If I am right in my views, an Association, not being a church, has no more right, as an Association, to celebrate the Lord's Supper, than the supposed accidental assemblage of brethren in Philadelphia.

I admit that there is a beautiful fitness and propriety in a church, with whom an Association may be convened, resolving to celebrate the Lord's Supper in the included Sabbath, and extending, through its pastor, an invitation to all visiting brethren to take a seat with them. Viewed in this light, I can have no objection to the practice, but would rather commend it. But this is not the light in which it is viewed by our people. It is emphatically an Associational practice, inherited from the General Conference. The Association, either by its own vote, or through its committee of arrangements, resolves to celebrate the ordinance, appoints the ministers to officiate, and the deacons to serve. It is, throughout, from first to last, the Association's own proper doing.

I have been frequently invited to officiate at such Associational communions, but have uniformly refused, and generally accompanied my refusal with a suggestion that it was properly the duty of the pastor of the church. I have never yet gone so far as to refuse to participate with my brethren in receiving the elements, though I have always felt somewhat dubious of the propriety of the custom. Perhaps I may be wrong in my premises. I may err in supposing that the ordinance of the Supper belongs to the church as such. But if so, I think that our denomination also errs in supposing that the ordinance should always be confined within the limits of church discipline.

ALPHA.

REASONS FOR FASTING AND PRAYER.

[A correspondent, alluding to the President's recommendation of a day of fasting and prayer, suggests the propriety of particularizing some of our national sins which call for repentance and humiliation. We do not know how better to get at the matter than by copying a part of his letter.]

The President earnestly recommends, that the first Friday in August be observed as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, in consequence of the fearful pestilence that is spreading its ravages through the land. I heartily concur in the recommendation. I believe that it is fit and proper that we humble ourselves under the mighty hand of Jehovah, confess our sins, and implore His mercy. As a nation, we have sinned against God with a high hand. We have made void His law—the law of the Sabbath—by our traditions. God says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." But this wicked nation says, that the first day is the Sabbath, and that on that day we shall not work. Is not this a palpable infringement upon the law of God?—This nation is also guilty of establishing and supporting the abominable system of Slavery, which dishonors God, and does violence to the dearest rights of man—that system of cruelty and oppression which is condemned alike by the Law of God and the Gospel of Christ. These national sins, that are manifestly so flagrant, are not only to be confessed before God, but they are to be forsaken. We should "repent and turn to God, doing works worthy of repentance." Our Saviour said, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." If all men regarded this law of God, how long do you suppose the system of American Slavery would continue? Where is the slave-holder that would be willing to exchange conditions with his slaves? All the principles of a republican government are opposed to slavery and oppression. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are opposed to Slavery as it exists. It is a reproach upon our national honor, which nothing but repentance and reformation will ever wipe away. I wonder that God has so long withheld his judgments, and that amidst all our transgressions he has shown so much mercy.

ST. LOUIS.—The cholera at St. Louis seems to baffle the skill of the most experienced physicians, and from its ravages no class of people appear to be exempt. The latest papers received speak despondingly enough of business prospects, present and to come, in consequence of the frightful havoc the disease is making. The population has been reduced from 70,000 to 50,000 by the flight of those who could leave. The Journal of Commerce says:—

"After years of extraordinary prosperity, during which, from a mere village, it has increased to a large and wealthy city, St Louis has been afflicted of late in an extraordinary manner. It is but a few months since we recorded the destruction by fire of the business part of the city, involving the destruction of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of property; a calamity relatively as great as the great conflagration of 1835 in the city of New York. Soon afterwards the cholera commenced its ravages, and in ten weeks the mortality of the city reached 4,321, of which 2,688 were deaths by cholera.

This, in a population not exceeding 50,000, is indeed a terrible mortality; and has seldom been equaled in any country. From two thirds to three quarters of the deaths were by cholera; 2,422 by that disease having occurred in the short space of four weeks. If New Yorkers would comprehend the extent of the mortality, let them imagine 35,000 deaths in their own city in ten weeks, or 25,000 in four weeks, or 1,000 a day? This would be in the same proportion as the recent mortality in St. Lous."

SUNDAY DOINGS ABOUT ROME.

The following account, given by the London Times, of military operations in the vicinity of Rome on Sunday, June 3d, shows how little deference is paid to that day in times of war. It may be worth the while of those who are curious in such matters, to study the progress of that struggle, and see whether victory or defeat is the reward of the invading army that began its attack on Sunday:

On the morning of Sunday, June 3d, Gen. Oudinot moved a column of attack against the Villa Pamphilia, a strong point outside the walls, at a short distance from the Porta S. Pancrazzia. He commenced by surprising about 200 of Mellara's free corps, and took them prisoners; but Gribaldi's people in the villa itself being on the alert, and the alarm being instantly communicated to the walls overlooking the battle-ground, a desperate engagement took place, the villa being taken and retaken several times in the course of the day. The French troops behaved with that gallantry which distinguishes the nation; but the Romans met them at every point, and as the latter were enabled to bring the artillery from the walls to bear upon them, their loss is represented to have been very severe indeed. The Villa Pamphilia remained at nightfall in the hands of the French, and the works of approach toward the Porta S. Pancrazzia were commenced—but the loss in effecting this object was very great, and I think I do not overstate it in saying that there were from 80 to 100 killed, and from 300 to 400 wounded. The Romans suffered in the same proportion, and independently of the 200 prisoners taken by surprise, I believe they had at least 100 killed and 400 wounded. In the meantime the French, stationed on the hights of Monte Mario, between which and the Tiber, at the back of the Castle of St. Angelo, there is nothing but open fields, finding that their guns did no execution, conceived the bold project of crossing the Tiber, and of entering into the city at that part of it called the Ripetta. For that purpose a chosen body rushed across the fields, and, preparing a raft and a boat, crossed the river, and attempted to carry the barricades by which the Ripetta was defended; but the Romans were prepared at all points, and after the attack was repulsed many of the Frenchmen jumped into the Tiber, and were either shot or drowned in the attempt to recross the stream. At the same period the canon which had been withdrawn from the embrasures of the Castle of St. Angelo, so as to induce the French to believe they had been removed to the bastions, were suddenly run out again, and so heavy a fire was maintained from them, that the retiring troops suffered very severely, and, as one account states, they were so much cut up that even Monte Mario was abandoned by them. The firing did not cease on either side till nightfall, and even occasionally during the night it was resumed from the walls near Porta St. Pancrazzia, for the purpose of incommoding the working parties in the trenches, who could be seen by the moonlight.

MORE ACCIDENTS ON THE SABBATH.

We mentioned last week, the accident which happened at the depot of the Michigan Central Railroad on Saturday, July 7, and raised the question whether those who are in the habit of gathering up Sunday accidents, to prove God's regard for that day, would not do well to consider the meaning of the accidents which occur on other days, particularly on that day which God has set apart for the Sabbath, and claims as peculiarly his own. The two accidents mentioned below occurred on Saturday, July 14. They furnish matter for reflection:—

ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.—As the train was going up to Auburn, on Saturday afternoon, July 14, the engine was thrown from the track near the switch that led to the gravel bed. The stop was so sudden that it brought the tender directly over the engine, the body going some distance forward and the wheels on one side. There were five persons on the engine at the time, William H. Delano, the engineer, Howard Delano, a Fireman, S. Oliver, a workman, and Mr. Dennis, Ex-Mayor of Auburn. The tender struck the Engineer, crushed his head and broke his arm, killing him on the spot. The fireman was so much injured that he died soon after. Howard Delano had an arm broken and his head dreadfully hurt. Mr. Dennis and S. Oliver were also considerably bruised.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A sad accident occurred on Saturday, July 14, about 1 o'clock, at the Iron Works, foot of Ninth street, East River, New York. The men in the employ of Secor & Co. had been hoisting a bed-plate of immense weight for the engine of the new steamer Georgia, which is receiving her machinery from that establishment. A derrick gave way, and struck Mr. Higby, the foreman of the establishment, which occasioned his instant death. He was a native of this city, and about 45 years of age. Two men that were also engaged at the same work, named Beverly Parkin and Francis Miller, were very seriously and it is thought fatally injured. The former had his thigh badly broken and the latter's skull was fractured.

THE POPE AND THE STARVING IRISH.—An English paper says that the Pope has sent Dr. M'Hale 20,000 francs toward the relief of the starving people of the West of Ireland. The post which conveyed this respectable sum—upward of £800—was met by another bound for Gaeta with £345, contributed by the people of the diocese of Tuam to the exchequer of his Holiness.

FREE LABOR IN ST. CROIX.—An engineer residing on the Island, writes to a friend in this city, under date of June 4th, as follows:—

"Matters and things are much changed here since the time of your visit. We have a free population now to deal with. Many were the fears that the Island would in a very short time be nothing but bush and long grass; but I think that these fears are somewhat dispersed by the firm determination of the Government to make the people work either for themselves or for his Majesty. The wages for first class laborers are 15 cents per day, with one stiver per hour for over-time; second class, 10 cents per day; tradesmen, 10 and 25 cents, according to abilities; all having free houses and provision grounds, and being subject to fines if not attentive to work or willfully obstinate. They are at liberty, in October of each year, to engage for the twelve months, to whoever they think proper. With such laws, they are working better than could have been expected from the shameful manner in which they got their liberties. Many of the estates will make reasonable crops, although we have had very little rain since Christmas."

MRS. JUDSON.—The Home Journal notices the sad intelligence recently received, of the sickness of Mrs. Judson, ("Fanny Forrester,") and adds the following reflections:—

"That the constitution of this sweet child of genius was of a consumptive tendency, we knew; but we had confidently hoped that the change of climate and the air of a warmer latitude would exercise the beneficial effects which they sometimes do, and give her even better health than she had hitherto known. If she die there, her grave will be well placed, in a path of duty; but there are those here, to whom a certainty of not seeing her again, in this world, will be heavy to bear. Her day will have been bright and brief, but it sets with rosy promise of a still fairer to-morrow, for the light of a soul like hers sends its brightness, dawn-like, before her into heaven. It is short-sighted to mourn over the pure spirit's descent below the horizon of the grave, when we know that, as the light pales on this side of that dark limit to our vision, it kindles on the other side, in the glowing welcome of angels."

WAR EXPENSES OF ENGLAND.—The war expenses for 1849-50 are calculated in the British Chancellor of the Exchequer's budget at $80,000,000, over and above the many millions paid from the revenues of India. This is a time of profound peace. The estimate for the fighting navy is $35,000,000; for the army $35,500,000; for the ordnance $13,000,000; and so on. No wonder there is much poverty where 80 millions a year have to be paid in time of peace to keep the machinery of war in order.

PLAIN AND TIMELY.—The Black River Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at its recent meeting, had under consideration some of the popular customs of the day, concerning which they resolved unanimously, that "no charitable purpose, or fashionable or social circle, or popular custom of the day, constitutes any apology for any member of the Church, in patronizing or sanctioning lotteries or card playing, or any kind of sinful amusement, or game of chance.

A VETERAN.—Rev. Thomas P. Hunt, the temperance champion, incidentally mentioned, that from April, 1827, to April, 1849, twenty-two years, he delivered ten thousand sermons and addresses! There are, probably, very few preachers in the world who in the same length of time have been so frequently before the public.

REVIVAL.—A letter from Rev. W. F. Purrington, in the N. Y. Baptist Register, describes the progress of a powerful revival in Prattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y. There was little excitement, and cases of conversion were deep, and pungent, and satisfactory. Thirty-two have been added to the church by baptism.

AGAINST READING SERMONS.—At the meeting of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland, held recently in Edinburgh, a resolution disapproving of reading discourses from the pulpits of that Church was carried by a mamajority of 165 against 121.

TEACHERS FOR MINNESOTA.—It is stated that eleven young ladies, in company with Gov. Slade, have gone to Minnesota, for the purpose of establishing schools in that territory. They are sent out by the Board of National Popular Education.

SIGNIFICANT AND JUST REMARK.—A member of the Massachusetts Legislature, in a speech favoring the charter of a Missionary Board, made the following remark:—

"Religion is a singular commodity—the more we export of it, the more we have at home."

THE SCHOOLMASTER.—At one of the religious anniversary meetings in England, the Hon. and Rev. Montague Villers made the following statement:

I recollect that ten or eleven years ago, when I was examining a school and questioning the children, especially on the subject of prayer, I found that there was not a single child in the school, which consisted of children from 8 to 12 years of age, who was not accustomed to repeat as its prayers, and its only prayers,

"Matthew, Mark, Luke and John,
Bless the bed that I lay on".

A correspondent of the Watchman states that the Wesleyan Chapel debts in Great Britain amount to no less a sum than $5,000,000.

THE CHOLERA.

In New York, the Cholera has continued for a week past about as during the previous week. The Board of Health report—

July 17,	new cases,	103,	deaths,	51
" 18,	"	106,	"	40
" 19,	"	87,	"	36
" 20,	"	83,	"	26
" 21,	"	94,	"	36
" 22,	"	75,	"	30
" 23,	"	79,	"	38

In Brooklyn, there are about 30 cases a day. On the 20th, 31 cases were reported, of which 17 were fatal. On the 21st there were 24 cases, ten of which proved fatal.

At Albany, on the 20th, 8 cases and 6 deaths were reported, being a decrease of five in the number of cases.

At Cincinnati, there were 69 deaths from Cholera on the 17th, and 59 on the 19th.

At St. Louis, the epidemic is decreasing. There were 61 deaths from Cholera on the 17th, and 37 on the 21st.

At Alton, Ill., there were 12 deaths on Friday, 5 on Saturday, 4 on Sunday, and 5 on Monday, of last week, from the prevailing epidemic.

At Camden, Mo., the Cholera is raging with great violence. It also broke out on the steamer Monroe, ascending the Missouri, with New York recruits, under Capt. Seymour, and several deaths occurred.

At Philadelphia, on the 17th, there were 73 cases and 31 deaths.

At Montreal, there were 19 deaths on the 20th, and 38 on the 21st. Quebec, 40 deaths on the 20th. Toronto, 33 on the 17th.

The Cincinnati Times has the following: "The town of Boston, in Indiana, 12 miles east of Eaton, Ohio, is now afflicted with cholera, which threatens the entire destruction of its inhabitants."

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Caledonia has arrived since our last, bringing seven days later news from Europe.

From ROME, we have the sad intelligence that the the Assembly, becoming convinced that the city could not be defended, sent delegates to treat for a surrender. It is stated positively, that the French Government has received a telegraphic dispatch, announcing the entry of the French army into Rome on the 2d, and that they were received with acclamations by the people, The division of Garibaldi had been conducted to Civita Vecchia, where they would be lodged and maintained at the expense of the Roman Government. Gen. Oudinot has been recalled from Rome in disgrace, and Gen. Badeau has been appointed Commander in-Chief of the army in Italy in his stead.

From HUNGARY AND AUSTRIA, there is nothing definite or decisive. The recent movements, so far as reported, are rather unfavorable to the Hungarians. The city of Raab is said to have been taken by the combined force on the 28th. It is also said that a vast coil is being drawn around Hungary.

From ENGLAND, we learn that Baron Rothschild has been re-elected for the city of London, the most important constituency in the Empire. He met with pretty strong opposition, but was elected by a majority of over 3000 votes.

CONFERRING DEGREES.—The commencement at Harvard took place last week, when Degrees were conferred about as plentifully as usual. The Degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred upon 78 young gentlemen. The Degree of Master of Arts was conferred on a number. The degree of M. D. was conferred upon 41 students of the Medical School, and that of Bachelor of Laws upon 45 students of the Law School, only two of whom were present. The Degree of L.L.D. was conferred upon Hon. Horace Mann, M. C., Hon. Richard Fletcher, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts; Hon. George Eustis, Chief Justice of Louisiana, and Hon. Theophilus Parsons, Professor in the Law School of the University. The D.D. was also conferred upon Rev. Levi Washburn Leonard of Dublin, N. H.; Rev. George Washington Burnap of Baltimore, and Rev. Charles Kittridge True of Charlestown. Mr. True belongs to the Methodist Church, graduated, as few Methodists do, in 1832, and represents that important denomination in the Board of School Commissioners. The Honorary Degree of Master of Arts was conferred on Professor Arnold Guyot, of Neufchatel, Switzerland; Francis Alger, and Jonathan Ingersoll Bowditch, of Boston.

SCENE IN A SLAVE STATE.—The editor of the New Orleans Picayune says, that on the 10th inst. he witnessed a most disgusting and heart-rending scene in the Third municipality. A negro boy about 12 or 14 years of age had been whipped and cut up shamefully by his mistress, a colored woman, and then sent by his mother to a blacksmith-shop to be manacled. His feet were ironed closely together, and in this condition the mother was leading him through the street. A gentleman who was attracted by the pitiful spectacle sent the boy to the police office, and he was thence sent to the hospital.

A VERMONT BOY.—The Vermont Chronicle says that Rev. Asa D. Smith, of New York, has been recommended by the executive committee of the trustees, for election to the office of Professor of Theology in Lane Seminary. This is the department of Dr. Beecher, who, however, is to retain his connection with the Seminary, as President and Lecturer on Theology. Mr. Smith was once an apprentice in a printing office in the village of Windsor—an example of what Vermont boys may aspire to in usefulness.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

Awful Collision and Loss of Life.

[From Wilmer and Smith's Times, July 7th.]

The steamship Europa, Capt. Lott, arrived at Liverpool on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, after an extraordinary passage of 10 days, 18 hours, from Boston. On boarding the Europa we were grieved to find that she had on board 43 persons, the survivors of the passengers and crew of the American bark Charles Bartlett, which vessel the Europa ran down at sea on the 27th ult., in Lat 54° 49, Lon. 23° 30, about 700 miles to the westward of Cape Clear, causing the loss of 134 lives. The Charles Bartlett, Capt. Bartlett, was an American ship of 400 tons burden, chiefly loaded with lead and chalk, and having 162 steerage passengers, one cabin passenger, and a crew of 14 men, outward bound for New York, and at the time of the collision was going at the rate of five knots an hour, close hauled on the wind. The Europa was sailing at the rate of 11½ or 12 knots per hour. At the time of the collision both vessels were enveloped in a dense fog, which prevented those on board of either vessel seeing beyond a few yards.

At about 3½ o'clock the look-out of the Europa suddenly perceived the ship through the mist, and had just time to announce the discovery when a dreadful collision took place, the Europa striking the Charles Bartlett amidships, and cutting an awful chasm in her side, killing several persons on board. The bark immediately began to settle down, and in a few minutes sunk. The scene during those few minutes was appalling in the extreme. A crowd of suffering wretches, maimed and broken by the collision, lay dead or dying where the bows of the Europa had entered. Some of the individuals who crowded the decks appeared panic-stricken, others ran shrieking to and fro in despair, while some rushed forward and eagerly seized upon the opportunities which were presented for giving them a chance of safety. The most strenuous exertions were made on the instant by all on board the Europa for rescuing from the imminent peril which pressed upon them as many individuals as possible. Hand-buoys and ropes were thrown over, boats were lowered, and every man was busied in those few fearful minutes in rescuing the struggling sufferers from the waves. Yet with all the exertions that could be used, only 43 individuals were saved out of 177, who had recently been alive on board the unfortunate ship. Among those preserved were the Captain of the Charles Bartlett, the second mate, and seven seamen. Of 40 women who were on board only one was rescued.

The following account of the collision is given by Capt. Bartlett:—

At 3 30 P. M., being on the weather side of the poop-deck, I heard a rumbling to windward like distant thunder, turned my ear to windward and my eye to the horizon. The man at the wheel, noticing that I was listening, looked to windward and cried out "Sail ho!" I at once saw what I supposed was a ship, about one point forward of our beam, about 400 yards distant. I ordered the helm up, thinking she did not discover us, thinking that we should have time to clear her before she could come in contact. All hands shouted at the same time to alarm the ship, and I ordered the bell to be rung, and called to the ship to "Port her helm," as I saw that was the only chance of escape. There were nearly one hundred passengers on deck at the time.

All was of no avail, for in one minute from the time we saw the ship, she was upon us, going at the rate of twelve knots, striking us abreast of the after main shrouds. The crash and the terrible scene which ensued I am not adequate to describe. I was was knocked to leeward with the man at the wheel. I recovered myself in a moment, shouting for every person to cling to the steamer as their only hope; I caught hold of a broken chain on the bow, and hauled myself up, shouting at the same time to the crew and passengers to follow. I had barely time to get on the steamer's bow, and, while getting up, I noticed that her bow was into the ship within a foot of the after hatch, and that she was stove clear to the lee side, and that full twenty feet of her side was stove in. There must have been nearly fifty persons killed by the collision, and every exertion was made by Capt. Lott, his officers and crew, and the passengers on board the steamer. The boats were lowered as soon as possible. Unfortunately, only about 10 were saved by the boats, the balance, making 33, more or less, saved themselves by hanging to the bow. The steamer lay by the scene as long as there was hope of saving any.

Cholera in the South.—The Cholera is sweeping off the black population in great numbers. A letter from the Parish of Ascension, La., dated June 18, says: For instance, Dr. Duffel has lost 7 negroes, M. Le Blanc 4, Trist 20, Keener 34, Deile 40, Minor has lost 66 within a week. These are within sight of our house. Down the Lafourche, Col. Bibb has lost 74, Bishop Polk 64, and many others in proportion. The victims seldom have any premonitory symptoms. They are taken with a weakness in their legs, and in two hours they are dead! They have neither diarrhea or vomiting. It is awful to see how they drop down in the field—at one moment perfectly well and hearty, and by the time they are carried to the house they are no more. Every morning there are a number reported dead on the different plantations. This morning there were 3 at Dr. McCall's, 1 at Dr. Duffel's, and 8 out of 12 at Dr. Brunner's. As yet, very few white persons have been affected on the coast.

Infanticide.—A woman from New York, whose name is unknown, recently presented herself at the office of the Health Physician of Brooklyn, with a dead infant in her arms, requesting permission to bury it. Her story was that she had recently come from Ward's Island; that while in New York she took her infant to a physician to see if anything was the matter, and that he told her the child was well. With this assurance she crossed the ferry to Brooklyn, and when she arrived on that side found that the infant was dead. Dr. Goodrich made an investigation into the case, and ascertained that the child had been starved to death, and gave it as his opinion that it had been purposely done, perhaps to excite sympathy.

Steamboat Disaster.—On Sixth-day night, July 20, as the steamboat Worcester was coming through Long Island Sound from Norwich, Ct., she was run into by a schooner. The circumstances were almost precisely like those of the Empire on the North River. The schooner struck her between the wheel and the boiler, cutting entirely through the guards of the hull, carrying away the wheel house, and smoke pipe, and destroying the state rooms, both of which were occupied, but, strange to say, no one in them or on board was hurt. Had the steamboat been one half stroke farther behind in her progress not one on board could have escaped death. The night was foggy, and the catastrophe was probably purely accidental. The passengers were brought to this city by the Empire State.

Compliment to an American Shipmaster.—A splendid Gold Medal, of the value of about sixty dollars, was received at the Boston Custom House, from Washington, to be presented to Capt. Oliver Gorham, of the brig Adelphi, for his successful exertions in rescuing the officers and crew of the British bark Jane Blain, at sea. The following is the inscription of the medal:

"From the British Government to Capt. Oliver Gorham, of the U. S. brig Adelphi, of Boston, for saving the crew of the British bark Jane Blain."

Two beautiful silver ones were also received to be presented to the officers of the Adelphi, Messrs. Lowell and Hussey.

Cholera on the Hudson River Railroad.—Six laborers employed on section twenty-four, a few miles below Peekskill, died of cholera on Friday, and four more previous to Saturday noon. The panic became so great that 320 men (near or quite all on the section) who had just been paid off for the month, fled. Four of them died on the way, and many others were seen vomiting as they went. A cholera Hospital was provided for them in the vicinity of their work, and a physician kept in attendance, but they were too much frightened to remain.

New Banks in Connecticut.—The Legislature at its recent session chartered the following new banks:—The State Bank, at Hartford, with a capital of $400,000; the Farmers' Bank, at Bridgeport, with a capital of $200,000; the Citizens' Bank at Norwich with a capital of $200,000; the Pawcatuck Bank, with a capital of $75,000; and the Deep River Bank, with a capital of $75,000.

Extraordinary Circumstance.—The National Intelligencer mentions it as an extraordinary circumstance, that at the funeral of Mrs. Madison, on Monday, were present two of her old friends who were present at her first marriage with Mr. Todd, sixty years ago, and the latter of whom was also present at her second marriage with Mr. Madison. We allude to the venerable Mrs. Elizabeth Lee, widow of Richard Bland Lee, Esq., of Virginia, and Anthony Morris, Esq., of Pennsylvania.

The Past.—The Cleveland True Democrat, speaking of Judge Tappan, President of the Ordinance Celebration on the 13th inst., states that on arriving at the mouth of the Cuyahoga fifty years ago, in the month of May, he found there one log hut—a sort of Indian hostlery, kept by Lorenzo Carter, That was the beginning of Cleveland! And what a change has he witnessed in that period! It is most wonderful, and no language can describe it.

California Profits.—Our readers will remember, says the Salem Gazette, that a statement was made several weeks since, in reference to the sale of the ship Edwin, of this port, at Valparaiso, by which it appeared that she brought $20,000, and her cargo $15,000. This was a great profit; but it is now said, on the authority of a letter from Valparaiso, that she has since been re-sold at San Francisco at a profit from the last purchase of over $100,000.

New Mode of Measurement.—Mr. Palmer of Albany has recently invented an improved measurer—consisting of an arm attached to a cross, at the end of which is a 'finger,' so constructed as to be easily adjusted to any point desired, thus giving the location and elevation of a required point at one measuring. The cost of the implement will be but a few shillings, and it can be used by ordinary workmen with great facility and perfect accuracy either in Statue, Bust, or Bas Relief. Its simplicity and utility is such, that it will entirely supersede the use of Dividers, Callipers or any other means of measuring now used.

A Sad Case.—The Madison (Wisconsin) Argus of July 10th, gives the particulars of the drowning of three females in Cornelison's mill pond, on Six Mile Creek. It seems that three girls, named Sarah Richison, aged 15; Adelier Rodgers, aged 13; and — Cutsinger, aged 9 years, were at play wading about the pond. The eldest girl stepped off a steep bank, where the water was about fifteen feet deep. As she came to the surface, Miss Rodgers reached out her hand to catch hold of her, and was also drawn in. The youngest, having hold of the dress of Miss R. was pulled in by her, and all three were drowned. No persons were about save an old gentleman named Heffin, who went to their assistance, but came near losing his life, not being able to swim. The bodies of the two eldest were got out in about two hours after the accident, and the youngest an hour or two later.

The Ice Trade.—The quantity of ice exported from Boston, for the month of June, and at antecedent periods, was as follows: To East Indies 1020 tons; Batavia 490; Ceylon and Calcutta, 287; Havana, 563; St. Jago, 230; St. Thomas, 194; New Orleans, 3,467; Mobile, 325. Total for June, 576; previous five months, 35,880. Total since January, 45,450; same time last year, 34,881. Increase, 7,575 tons.

Mr. Alexander Graves, a stage driver, narrowly escaped being buried alive at Columbia, Mo., recently. He was supposed to have died of cholera. His grave was dug, and his coffin was in course of construction, when he showed signs of life. At the latest accounts he was found recovering.

SUMMARY.

Thomas Earle, of Philadelphia, died on Saturday, the 14th inst., at Willow Grove, on the Schuylkill River. Mr. Earle was a native of Leicester, Mass., and was descended from a family belonging to the denomination of Friends. He had formerly taken an active part in Democratic politics, but of late years his connections were with the Liberty party, of which he was candidate for Vice-President in 1840.

The brig Torquois is advertised to sail from Sacket's Harbor for San Francisco. Sacket's Harbor, as most of our readers are doubtless aware, is on Lake Ontario in this State, and the Iroquois will sail down the St. Lawrence, through the Gulf, and thence South, touching probably at some of the West India Islands, thence around Cape Horn to San Francisco.

The people of Tompkins Co., N. Y., have revived the project of making a Canal from Sodus Bay to the outlet of Cayuga Lake. This was a favorite idea some years ago, and it is now revived in the expectation of bringing lake craft from Ontario into Cayuga Lake, and thence forwarding their cargoes by railway from Ithaca via Owego to New York.

The Champlain Ship Canal is being agitated at Troy, and a meeting is to be held to discuss this important project. Should this work be constructed, and the Canal from Troy to Whitehall be enlarged, ships may load on the Upper Lakes directly for Liverpool, and the products of the East reach a market at the West at a reduced cost.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial tells of a sudden freshet in Holt's Creek, Bracken Co., Ky., caused by a terrific thunder-storm—whereby the house of a Mr. Smalley, situated near the Creek, was swept away, and four of the family were drowned: Mrs. S., a son, and two daughters. Other buildings were carried away and much damage done.

Mr. Wilson, the celebrated vocalist of Scotch Songs, died a few days since of Spasmodic Cholera. His death is attributed to exposure to excessive heat during a fishing excursion. He had been unwell of diarrhea for some days, but committed the imprudence of wading in the water while in that state.

The entire number of deaths in New-London, Ct., for the year ending in July, 1849, was, according to the Chronicle, ninety-three. This is believed to be the smallest bill of mortality, for a population of between 10,000 and 11,000, which can be found in the United States, or in any part of the world.

His Excellency, Gov. Trumbull of Connecticut, has issued a proclamation recommending the first Friday in August, to be set apart by the people of that State as a day of national fasting, in accordance with the recommendation of the President of the United States, on account of the existing pestilence.

The brig Eureka is announced to sail from Cleveland, Ohio, for San Francisco, about the 15th of September. Passage $200, in advance. This is the second vessel announced to sail from the Lakes for the gold mines.

The book agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church have received notice of the commencement of the action, by the Southern branch, for recovery of its share of Church property.

Of two hundred inmates in the Westchester County Poor House, N. Y., at the breaking out of the cholera, there are not enough well persons remaining to take care of the sick. Many have fled panic-struck.

The propeller Hartford, which put into Bermuda in distress some time since, on her way from New York to California, was at Bahia on the 29th of May, taking in coal—to sail soon for San Francisco.

There have been heavy freshets in South Carolina, washing away mill-dams, bridges, &c., and by the extreme wet weather, inflicting severe injury on the young cotton plants.

An animal of the Lynx species, known among Canadians by the name of Loupcevior, was shot early on the 7th inst., by the sentinel on duty at Wolfe's Monument, Plains of Abraham. The animal was bounding over the ground in the vicinity of the sentry's post, when, not knowing what sort of beast it might be, he fired and shot it through the head.

The N. O. Courier of 12th says, it has a private letter from a gentleman who was a passenger on the steamer Sultana, which left New Orleans recently for St. Louis, in which he states that of the 450 emigrants on board, 200 died of cholera before reaching St. Louis.

The free colored children, four in number kidnapped near Shawneetown, Ill., some time last Spring, have been recovered, and two of the Kidnappers, a Mr. Harma and a Dr. Carr, have been arrested at Shreveport, La., and after an examination, in default of bail were sent to jail.

Hon. Geo. Tibbits, an aged and wealthy citizen of Troy, died of the prevailing epedemic in that city on Thursday last. Mr. Tibbits but a few years since was Mayor of Troy, and some thirty years ago a State Senator.

A negro man (Ism,) belonging to Mr. John E. Boyd of Berkely Co., Va., died on the 8th inst. He was twenty one years old at the time of Braddock's defeat, making him 115 years old at his death.

Gen. E. Gale, Quartermaster-General of Ohio, died of Cholera at Columbus on the 14th inst.

Hon. Ebenezer Mack died at Ithaca, N. Y., on the 19th inst., of consumption.

The first Electric Telegraph in Ireland, has recently been erected, two miles long, between two railway stations at Kingsbridge.

The Governor of New Hampshire has appointed Thursday, the 15th day of Novembers to be observed as a day of thanksgiving in that State.

The Niagara, on her last trip out, made the quickest voyage ever made from New York to Liverpool, by an hour and twenty minutes.

Ninety-seven convicts have died of Cholera in the Ohio Penitentiary at Columbus, since the 30th of June.

A correspondent of the Maine People's Press, writing from Moosehead Lake, June 18, tells of having just taken across said Lake, a distance of seventeen miles, the largest raft of pine logs ever seen thereabouts—containing, by actual survey, twenty-one and three-fourths acres. These logs are taken at different landings upon the eastern shore of the Lake, and towed by steamboats across to the outlet or head of the Kennebeck waters, by which they are borne to market.

A tremendous fire broke out in Alleghany City, Pa., on the 16th inst. Some twenty-five or thirty buildings were in ashes, including Dr. Smith's church. In consequence of a disagreement between the firemen and the City Council, no efforts were made to stay its progress, the mob not allowing the volunteers from Pittsburgh to work. The military had to be called out to disperse the mob, and protect the Pittsburgh firemen.

A gentleman of Illinois, who lost all his teeth and a portion of one jaw fourteen years ago, by a fall from his carriage, and who has been ever since deprived of the power of distinct articulation, and masticating solid food, has just had his mouth fitted with teeth, gums and jaw, by Dr. A. S. Dudley, of Boston.

Since the 4th of July 100 Gloucester fishing schooners have sailed from that port on their voyage for mackerel, cod, and halibut. These vessels were manned by nearly 1000 persons. The total fleet this year from the port of Gloucester consists of 170 vessels.

The St. John papers are discussing the question of annexation to the United States. They say that commercial depression has driven most of the people there into a wish for a severance of connection with England.

The St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette estimates the entire number of emigrants that have left for California by the overland route, at 35,000. Of these 17,000 started from St. Joseph, Independence, Weston, and Westport.

The State of Connecticut owes $46,212, and has a permanent fund of $406,000. The expenses of the State last year were $142,242.

The Hartford Republican, (Free Soil), edited by Mr. Burleigh, is to be discontinued for want of support.

Speaking of the prospects of the crops in Canada, the Hamilton Express of July 17, says: "The Fall Wheat in this neighborhood will be cut in about ten days. It is most luxuriant and healthy. The Spring crops have suffered from want of rain, but have been much improved by the late showers. Potatoes will be abundant—no sign of the rot. Hay is an extra yield.

The Ohio Cultivator says that the rust has done great injury to all the Wheat in Central and Southern Ohio, excepting the earliest fields, and on high rolling ground. The wheat-fly, too, has been very destructive. Letters from Licking County, the Muskingum valley, and also westward, speak in gloomy terms of the injury from the rust.

The National Intelligencer is requested to state, concerning the expected northern tour of the President, that the time of his departure, and the route he may take, are unsettled, and, indeed, that a continued prevalence of the cholera may render it proper to abandon the journey altogether.

At West Troy, on the 12th inst. Mr. John E. Fellows of Cohoes, his wife, and some nine or ten females, mostly his boarders, went down to bathe and cool themselves in the Mohawk, and Mrs. F. getting beyond her depth, was drowned, before assistance could be rendered.

The New Hampshire Legislature has so changed the law inflicting the punishment of death, that the prisoner who is convicted of a capital offense, shall not be executed until a year after he is convicted; and then his punishment may be commuted by the Governor and Council.

At the Common Pleas in Concord, Mass., Thomas W. Haskins has been sentenced to two years in the House of Correction, and Love Eaton to 18 months, for cohabiting unlawfully, on the spiritual wife plan, in Lexington, Mr. Haskins being a married man and Love a single woman. The affair began Roxbury.

The St. John Morning News of the 13th contains full particulars of the late Riot in that city, by which ten lives were lost, and a number of persons wounded. The riot occurred on the 12th of July, a day commemorative of the landing of the Prince of Orange in England, and the battle of Boyne.

The brig Eagle, now fitting up for California at Gloucester, (Mass.) will take out a load of houses, beside a goodly number of passengers, mainly young men.

The steamship Falcon has arrived at New Orleans. She reports the yellow fever as raging in Havana, and that the deaths were said to amount to 40 per cent of those attacked with the disease.

The brewers of Philadelphia extol malt liquors as a preventive of cholera. The Board of Health of Washington city, particularly enjoin the citizens to avoid malt liquors. How people differ.

The Portland Advertiser says that on Monday, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon, the atmosphere in that city was so clear that the moon, with a bright star near her, Venus, was visible to the citizens with the naked eye.

The large bleaching works at Cranston, R. I., belonging to Mr. W. M. Cooke, was destroyed by fire on Thursday last. The loss is not far short of $20,000. There was an insurance on the same of $7,000.

A son of John Warren, 7 years of age, was drowned in the Cochecho River, Dover, N. H., on Saturday, while in swimming with a party of boys.

Thurlow Weed, of the Albany Evening Journal, has been severely ill from an attack of the cholera.

There are living 520 British officers who were at the battle of Waterloo.

Mr. Blakewell's Copying Telegraph writes four hundred letters a minute.

Geneva, N. Y., contains about 5500 inhabitants, and does not average one death per week.

Dubuque, Iowa, it is said, contains 4000 inhabitants, 5000 dogs, and 50 colonels.

The elegant steamer Commodore has taken the place of the Massachusetts on the Stonington line to Boston, and will run in connection with the C. Vanderbilt.

It is stated that the consumption of water in this city during the warm weather amounts to 30,000,000 gallons a day.

The town of Danvers, Mass., has been indicted for not establishing a High School, according to law.

The town walls of Agde, built by the Phocians, 1800 years ago, have been torn down, and sold by auction.

In Florida a single acre of land will produce a thousand dollars worth of pineapples.

The water was lower in the Hudson on the 15th inst. than it has been known to be before in several years.

The Lockport Courier states that the Catholic Church has adopted the 4th of July as one of its holy days.

The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway charges only half price for females and children.

New York Markets—Monday, July 28.

Ashes—Pots $5 62 a 5 69; Pearls 6 00.

Flour and Meal—Flour, common State 4 81 a 4 87, straight State and fresh Michigan 4 94 a 5 00, pure Genesee 5 06 a 5 18. Rye Flour 3 00. Jersey Meal 2 92 a 2 94; State 2 75.

Grain—Ohio Wheat, prime, 1 10; pure Genesee 1 16 a 1 20. Corn 55 a 57c. for mixed, 59 a 60c. for round yellow. Rye 57c. Oats 34 a 36c.

Provisions—Pork, 9 00 for prime, 10 75 for mess. Beef 11 00 a 11 50 for prime, 13 00 a 13 50 for mess. Butter, 7 a 9c. for Ohio, 10 a 14c. for State. Cheese from 2 to 6c.

Wool—The receipts for last week were about 400,000 lbs. Sales 50,000 lbs. at 26 a 34c. for common and fine Merino; Saxony, 37 a 38c. Some 10,000 lbs. pulled lambs' sold at 25 a 27c. The arrivals of foreign wool have been considerable. Sales 150 bales washed Buenos Ayres at 10c.

MARRIED,

In Hebron, Potter Co., Pa., on the 5th inst., by Eld. J. Bailey, Mr. Wait S. Burdick, of Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., to Miss Diadamia Greenman, of the former place.

In New York City, on the 17th inst., by Eld. Geo. B. Utter, Mr. Thomas Daniell, to Miss Ann Maria Lockland, all of New York.

DIED,

At her residence in Hopkinton, R. I., on the 8th inst., Miss Polly Potter, in the 76th year of her age. She became a believer in Christ, in early life, and united with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, where she remained, an ornament to the Christian name, until she was removed to join the church triumphant. She has gone to that "rest that remains for the people of God.

At the Columbia School, Ark., of bilious fever, on the 29th ult., Mercia M., wife of Geo. P. Maxson, aged 36 years. She was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in DeRuyter, N. Y., and a faithful teacher of young ladies. In the last hour of her consciousness, she gave happy evidence that our loss would be her eternal gain.

LETTERS.

Wm. B. Maxson, Geo. P. Burdick, Geo. P. Maxson, Wm. P. Langworthy, James Pierce, Lucius Crandall, E. Maxson, G. Evans, J. B. Wells, H. W. Stillman, Daniel Coon, E. A. Davis, Maxson Green, Enoch Barnes, Charles D. Langworthy.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

B.Potter, Hopkinton, R. I.	$2 00	pays to vol. 6	No. 52
A. G. Coon, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. Hiscox, Westerly, R. I.,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Z.F Randolph, Plainfi'dN.J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. M. Barclay, New York,	1 00	" 6	" 26
G. P. Burdick, Pitcairn,	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. S. Geer, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
H. C. Coon, DeRuyter,	1 50	" 6	" 52
J.A.Langworthy, Genesee,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Christoph. Teft, Almond,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Geo. Hartwell, Alfred,	1 40	" 6	" 36
J. H. Mosher, New York,	2 00	" 6	" 52
E.Barnes, Sackets Harbor,	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. Langworthy, Alfred,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Eunice Whitford, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Edward Emerson "	2 00	" 6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

C.St.John, Leonardsville,	$4 00	pays to vol. 5	No. 52
T. Saunders, Berlin,	2 00	" 5	" 52
Geo. Champlin, Alfred,	70	" 5	" 52
B. C. Maxson, Ceres, Pa.,	2 00	" 5	" 52
G. W. Maryatt, "	50	" 1	" 13
Geo. Hartwell, Alfred,	60	" 5	" 52
D. J. Burnett, New York,	50	" 5	" 52
Jos. Davis Alfred,	10 00	" 5	" 52
P. K. Shaw, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
H. W. Benjamin, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
D. Satterlee, "	1 00	" 5	" 52

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association.

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed to preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the Session.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution was passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years.

Missionary Association—Executive Board.

A Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held at the house of John D. Titsworth, in Plainfield, N. J., on the first fourth-day of the week in August, commencing at 2 o'clock, P. M. Geo. B. Utter, Rec. Sec.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.

Officers.

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J

Vice Pres.
- NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
- J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
- MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
- CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
- J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.

Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.

Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.

Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.

Co-Trustees,
- George Greenman, of Mystic, Ct.
- John D. Titsworth, of Plainfield N. J
- Wm. M. Rogers, of Brooklyn, L. I.
- Isaac D. Titsworth, of Shiloh, N. J.

Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. KENYON, IRA SAYLES, DANIEL D. PICKET, JONATHAN ALLEN, JAMES MARVIN, DARIUS FORD, DARWIN E. MAXSON;

ASSISTED BY

Miss ABIGAIL A. MAXSON, Mrs. SERENA C. SAYLES, Mrs. MELISSA B. KENYON.

ORRA STILLMAN, Professor of Instrumental Music.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in issuing another Annual Circular, would express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended to it; and they are happy to announce, that the above-named gentlemen have been engaged as a permanent Board of Instruction, by which arrangement the increasing demands of the public can be met most efficiently. Valuable additions have been made to the Library and Apparatus of the Institution, within the past year, and will continue to be made as the good of the School may demand.

Plan of Instruction.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students."

Academic Terms.

The Academic Year for 1849–50 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1849, and ending Thursday, November 22, 1849.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 4, 1849, and ending Thursday, March 14, 1850.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 26, 1850, and ending July 4, 1850.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the students be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified. The regulations of the Institution are then explained, and all arrangements are made for the convenience and accommodation of the students.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from a distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student.

Model Class and Normal School.

This Institution sustains a Model Class, for the particular benefit of those preparing to teach. This Class is under the special supervision of an able and accomplished teacher.

The ages of the scholars attending it, vary from five to ten years; and they are taken promiscuously from the neighborhood.

In the management of this Class, teachers have the opportunity of witnessing the progress made by children under the most approved system of instruction, and can also test their own abilities as teachers.

In addition to teaching in the Model Class, the teachers meet daily during the term, to listen to lectures on modes of teaching and governing a school, the importance and dignity of the teacher's profession, &c.

This department will be open twelve weeks only during the [illegible], but as a large amount of extra labor is bestowed upon this class, and extra [illegible] in its management, the tuition will be the same as the regular full term course. Those teachers wishing to remain till the close of the term will have all the facilities for pursuing their studies with advantage, without additional charge.

The public may also be assured, that no pains will be spared to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to become teachers; and that no one will receive a recommendation as a teacher, from the authorities of this Institution, who is not competent to accomplish all the specifications of his recommendation.

A teacher, to be recommended by the authorities of this Institution, must have attended one full course of lectures on the subject of teaching; and, secondly, he must have been engaged in the instruction of the Model Class, and have evinced in it an aptitude to teach, and ability to govern. If the public employ those who go out hence without a recommendation, we do not hold ourselves accountable for failures, and consequent disappointment.

Expenses.

Board, per term,	From $14 50 to $18 00
Room rent, per term,	1 50
Washing, per term,	[illegible]
Fuel, per term, Spring and Fall, 75c., Winter,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	From $3 50 to 5 00
Lights, per term,	1 50
Incidental Expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Music on the Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except the extras above mentioned,) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

N. B. No departure from this requisition need be asked or expected. Parents should not, therefore, send their children by some neighbor, unless authorized to do their business, leaving them thus unprovided for, and, in a manner, uncared for. Experience of years has taught us that this is the only way in which our business can be successfully managed. Besides, when paid in advance, or settled in advance, every Academic charge is fairly understood; and no man will be surprised, at the end of the term, to find a bill exceeding his expectations.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchanges and losses.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

Rev. N. V. HULL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 26, 1849.

Bruce's New York Type-Foundry.

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C
Pica, per lb.	30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb. Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

Our Specimen Book is freely given to all Printing Offices.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.

GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED.

A number of active and intelligent men are wanted, who can furnish satisfactory references, to act as local or traveling agents, in procuring applications for Life and Health Insurance. To men of energy, this is a good opportunity, as a liberal commission is paid on all risks obtained. For farther information, apply personally, or by letter—(post paid, as none other will be taken from the post-office)—to

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
208 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miscellaneous.

From the Christian Register.

CAN THIS BE DEATH?

Can this be Death?
I see no trace of the last strife,
As when man yieldeth up his life.
Over thy beautiful blue eye,
The lids are shut as peacefully
As when in slumber thou didst rest,
Securely on thy mother's breast,
Can this be Death?

Could the bright spirit flee away,
And leave that smile on lips of clay?
How almost radiant is thy brow!
There's a strange beauty on thee now!
Yes; but the pulses all are still,
The form is motionless and chill,
We catch no more thy balmy breath,
'Tis passed away—and this is Death!
Why do I weep? not that a flower
Folded its leaves at an early hour;
Not that a bird of paradise
Was summoned to its native skies.
I weep for those whose hearts are sorely riven,
Crushed by the blow that freed thy soul for Heaven.

EVIL CONSEQUENCES OF SMOKING.

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years' observation, that Dr. Laycock has become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the use of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking give origin. He proceeded to speak of them as they were met with in the pharyngeal mucous membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system.

The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers, varies from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week; the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week. The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucous membrane, of the lips and tongue, then the tonsils and pharynx suffer, the mucous membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be well examined, it will be found slightly swollen, with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucous. The action of tobacco smoking on the heart is depressing, and some individuals, who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple, a distressed feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than on the left. On the brain, the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than composes to sleep; induces a dreaminess, which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands, and irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking. So are blackness of teeth and gum-boils. There is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, a want of life and energy, and in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisis. Dr. Wright, of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinions; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, cough, inflammatory affections of the heart, lowness of spirits, and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, alimentary, and nervous system. [Eng. Lit. Gazette.

THE HEROIC DAUGHTER.

In the town of Stonington, during the last war, resided a widow with an only daughter. When the attack on the place was made by a British naval force, (an attack which is memorable in the annals of war,) this widow was dying. All the other inhabitants, gathering their household goods, fled into the country. Only one house was occupied by the dying woman and her faithful daughter, who refused to leave her. Repeatedly balls passed through the house. Shells exploded all around them. The thunder of the cannon shook the foundations of the land. But the thunder of the cannon might not prevail to repel the sleep of death, which stole as calmly over lip and eye, and fell as gently on the old woman's heart, as if it had been a sunny spring morning on the glorious ocean shore. Fiercer and louder grew the sounds of battle without, contrasting fearfully with that calm scene within, where the devoted child sat by her dying mother's side, and held her hand, and heard her murmur, as the shot flew by, of long forgotten battle fields, in olden times. Death came at length, that "calm, safe refuge" from all battlings. Undisturbed by the sound of warrings, she fell asleep and heard the voice of the battle no longer. Rising then from her long and holy watch, the daughter called soldiers from the fort to aid her in burying her dead. They wrapped the body in the blankets on which it lay, and carried it in solemn procession to the burial ground in whose inclosure slept profoundly the fathers of the village. There was something sublime in that procession. Men bore their kindred dust along deserted streets, heedless of the missiles of death that darkened the air, and entered the place of rest with their load of clay. Even as they entered, a shell fell before them, and exploding, threw up the earth, and in the trench thus opened, they laid the body and covered it out of the reach of war. Then, and not before, the daughter left her mother alone, and sought safety for herself. [Jour. of Com.

An Interesting Country.—A correspondent of the Methodist Protestant, of Baltimore, in a sketch of a tour through South Carolina, gives the following description of a part of the scenery:—

"What a strange looking country! See! pines, cedars, occasional live oaks, mud puddles, ponds, drains, rice-fields overflowed with water, with now and then an alligator stretching himself out in the sun on the roadside. Well! well! and this is South Carolina country! No wonder the planters seek a home in the city during the warm season. Who would like to be in such near neighborhood to bilious fever, snakes and alligators? Life is short enough at best. If we escape the fever, we may get among the snakes; and if these should not finish us, some monstrous alligator may take a notion to make a meal out of our mortality. See! there is one now—full seven feet long—he lies on the roadside with head slightly elevated, and looking at the passing train, as if we were nobody!"

A FIGHT WITH INDIANS.

The following incident, given by a California emigrant in a letter to the Buckeye Eagle, will give our readers an idea of the adventures to be met with on the plains:—

We have got along well the most of the time, until a few days ago. A party of Indians came to our camp; we gave them their dinner and some presents; they followed us and stole two oxen; we tracked four of them eight miles into a ravine—the worst place I ever was in. Our party was small, there being but twelve of us. All at once we came upon them—they had killed the oxen. They had stolen from other companies, but had never been followed, and so supposed themselves safe. It was not our intention to harm them, but we were on all sides of them before we or they knew it. A shower of arrows soon let us know what we had to deal with.

Capt. Pierce then ran forward and threw down his gun—called and motioned to them to do the same—reached out his hand and cried, "throw down your arms!" A loud war-whoop that made our hair stand on end, and a dozen arrows, was their answer. The chief levelled his rifle at Pierce, but before he could fire a ball from one of our boys had laid him dead. The had every advantage of us, and were making good use of it—retreat was impossible—we must fight, or every one of us cut off. The word "Charge!" was given, and we soon routed them. Our horsemen were on the outside of the ravine, and met them as they came out—they shook their blankets and frightened the horses so that they could not control them.

When we came out of the ravine, about thirty yards to their left, they had three of our men in a corner—Mr. Fisher was one of them—we shouted, but they rushed on—one of the boys fell, another was down with two horses over him, and fourteen Indians were within thirty feet of them. Mr. Fisher turned his horse to charge with the bayonet, when we were almost deafened by the loudest report of a rifle I ever heard, and Mr. Fisher's horse fell dead under him, shot in the breast with an ounce ball. The one that was under the horses now raised his rifle, and their leader fell dead. They then turned and fled, throwing away everything but their arms. One of our boys was shot through the leg—no one else hurt.

THE TURALEE PLAINS IN CALIFORNIA.

The Galena Advertiser publishes the following extract from a private letter from California:—

The Gold Mines have actually ruined California, in an agricultural point of view. In fact, agriculture will never be of any consequence in this country, except where water can be found to irrigate the land; and water is scarce all over the country, except in the mountains. As a grazing country, it is probably the best in the world; and a statement of the numbers of cattle, horses, elk, deer, antelope, etc., that roam wild over the Tularee Plains would not be credited if made. These Plains are, on an average, 50 miles wide, and 500 miles long. In crossing them I have seen a drove of elk that covered more than four square miles of ground, all running at the height of their speed. Droves of wild horses and antelope were quietly feeding a few miles distant, without manifesting the least alarm, as they are accustomed to such stampedes of elk. Millions of wild geese were flying overhead, having been aroused by the elk. Their noise was deafening. Traveling two and a half hours at a brisk trot, through this wilderness of animated nature, brought us to the San Joaquin's timbered banks and to water. At the crossing, the Tularee Plains are forty-one miles wide. The river, like a huge anaconda, winds through their centre. The plain is without wood or water, except immediately on the banks of the river. The plains are literally covered with elk-horns, some of them so large that I could not lift them. One set, in particular, was so enormous, that two men had a heavy lift to throw it into the wagon. It is to be sent home as a curiosity. At the river we got some of the finest salmon, which were speared by our Indians. We also caught some small fish with a hook and line. The water is cold, clear, and transparent. Salmon of 25 to 60 pounds weight were seen wending their way up the stream. We crossed the river in a boat, swimming our horses. The ferryman—a Missourian—told me that fever and ague prevailed to a fearful extent in the neighborhood, and I soon had ocular demonstration of the fact by the shaking of a couple of hereditary bondsmen from Mexico, who were crossing over with us. But the mines, considering the exposure to which a man is subjected, are healthy. Intermittent fever is common, but it yields readily to quinine. But one man died of bilious fever while I was there; he was an Oregonian.

FALLS OF MONTMORENCI.

Quebec lies in the centre of a most beautiful country. The roads in the neighborhood are good, and excursions to the country are very agreeable. Perhaps the most beautiful of these is the Montmorenci Falls, and what is called the Natural Steps; the distance is about nine miles, the roads lying along the banks of the St. Lawrence, looking like a continuous village, from the narrow fronts of the lot, the farm houses being very near each other. The volume of water of the Falls is not very great at this season, not so great as in spring, so that as I saw it, it derived its impressiveness much more from the height of the rock from which it leaps; it is 190 feet in height, Niagara being only 150 or 160 feet, I believe. The position of the fall is very picturesque; just at the base of a bay of the St. Lawrence, some 200 or 300 yards in length, of a horse-shoe form. It is said that the scene is most beautiful in winter time, when the congealed spray from the fall forms a very large cone, sometimes 100 feet high, down which it is a favorite amusement of the Quebeckers to slide on little sledges after the Russian fashion. This beautiful spot has been made the scene of man's self-destruction, like most places of the kind. A young gentleman of good connections rode down to the Falls, tied his horse to a tree, took off his coat, and threw himself over; his limbs were separated from his body by the fall among the rocks, and only parts of his remains were recovered. A few hundred yards above the Fall are the Natural Steps, a great curiosity. The river rushes here through a narrow bed about 10 or 12 feet wide with great velocity, dashing and foaming against the rocks which interrupt its course, and whirling and eddying from the violence of the contest. On one side of this bed rise for about ten or twelve yards the Natural Steps, like a stair, only rather irregular. They have been worn by the force of the water in the soft layers of limestone, and present a most singular appearance, with the river foaming past and the high banks rising on each side.

THE PHILLIPS WILL CASE.

An important trial has been in progress before the supreme Court of Massachusetts, sitting at Ipswich. Edward Phillips was a grandson of the late Gov. Phillips, and the only son of his father. His mother who was Theresa Henshaw, of Northampton, afterwards married Professor Beck, of Cambridge, and has two children by him. Edward Phillips, by dissipation and extravagance, became broken in health, was taken to the Brattleborough water-cure, and there committed suicide. He left a will, giving $100,000 to Harvard College Observatory, and $100,000 to trustees, to allow the income to his mother and his half-sisters, and the bulk of his property to his cousin, William Phillips, already a millionaire, and the representative of their grandfather. The will is contested by the mother, on the ground that the testator had become imbecile in mind by indulgence in the secret vice, and was incompetent to make a valid will. Other formal exceptions were also taken. The testimony of Dr. Weisselhoft to his appearance in 1843 is affecting, and ought to be a warning to our youth against that dreadful habit:—

"His muscles were very feebly developed, he looked pale, and complained of constant pain in the back side of his head, back of his ear; he was sly and suspicious, and manifested great want of judgment, which I conceived was owing to the practice in which he indulged. I have no doubt his habits affected his mind; he wanted in judgment, and wished others to judge for him; was deficient in independence, was jealous and suspicious to a high degree; this I believe to be usual to persons of his bodily health."

The other witnesses, however, including his former guardian, President Quincy, his most intimate friends, his servants, and the most skillful physicians, contradicted all this, testified that he was a person of sound intellect, and many of them denied the existence of the habit as a cause of his ill health and timidity. Of this opinion were the jury, who rendered their verdict on Tuesday of last week, sustaining the will in every particular.

The point of chief interest to the public was, that if the competency of the testator to make a will be successfully contested by the heirs at law, the whole estate will revert to private hands, and Harvard University will be deprived of the liberal bequest of $100,000, which, if the will be sustained, will be appropriated to the support of the Observatory attached to that institution.

MOFFAT THE MISSIONARY.

Dr. A. and the excellent Moffat had been engaged in a missionary service in the north of England, and returned for repose to the house of a friend. They met in the room an aged minister, named Caldwell. In the course of conversation, Moffat adverted to his mother. Mr. C., whom Moffat did not know, not even his name, mentioned that he was a Scotchman. "Yes," said the missionary, "the scenes of my boyhood and youth in my native land are dear to me. I often think of them when far away among the heathen. I often think of my excellent mother leading me, when a little fellow, from Cannon Shore to Falkirk, to the Independent meeting-house, to hear an excellent minister, Mr. Caldwell." He then spoke with enthusiasm of his mother, of the minister, and of the impressions he had received then and there. The venerable listener rose up with tears coursing down his cheeks, and exclaimed, "Can it be? Are you little Bobby Moffat. Is Moffat, the missionary, the little fellow whom his mother used to lead to my meeting-house in Falkirk, when many years ago I was the minister there!" The mutual recognization, and embrace, and rapture, may be better conceived than described. The venerable Caldwell had not till then identified the little boy with the man who has done so much for Africa. May there not be many such blessed surprises when the Christian minister enters his rest, and "his works do follow him?"

A Death-bed Contract.—There lives in Covington, Ky., (or did yesterday,) says the Cincinnati Enquirer of June 10th, a man worth about $60,000, who lies upon what may be, and probably will be, his death-bed. Like many of us, he does not like to die, yet the future he does not think so much of as the worldly treasure he is to leave behind. Physicians he utterly despises, and has, during his present illness, suffered on without their aid; but the excessive bodily pain that he has of late experienced, forced him on Saturday to send for one. On the arrival of the doctor, he submitted his proposition, viz: He agreed to give the doctor Three Thousand Dollars if he would restore him to health, to be decided by three citizens of Covington—but if he died, the Doctor was to pay Three Hundred Dollars to such heir (unknown) as he should name in his will; and positively asserted that not one dime more would he risk. Three thousand dollars was as much as his life was worth. The doctor would not accede to the terms in black and white, but finally compromised in writing, or Two Thousand Dollars if he saved him, and if not, he was to have no fee. We very much fear our worthy friend, the Doctor, from what we hear of the condition of "Old Avarice," will or has lost the Two Thousand Dollars.

Camels on the Prairies.—The proposition to attempt the naturalization of camels into the Western Prairies seems to meet with general favor. There is no reason why the plan should not succeed, as these animals, originally natives of the temperate regions between Southern Siberia and the mountains of Thibet, have been diffused over the whole of Asia and Africa. They are yet used in Turkey, and during the Arab domination, were common in Spain. There is said to be no difference of characteristics between the Tartar steppes and the Western deserts; at all events, the experiment is worth a trial.

Longevity of the Poets.—Wordsworth was lately present at a Queen's Ball in London. A London Journal thereupon remarks:

"Poetry must truly be a healthy occupation. It was never considered very fattening, but the vital and divine spirit must be strong in the tuneful tribe. Here is Wordsworth, aged 79, travelling from Westmoreland, and joining in the court gaities, beside writing sonnets. There is Samuel Rogers, aged 77, running about to routs and picture sales. James Montgomery, at Sheffield, in his 77th year, is still intent on poetry and benevolence; and Thomas Moore, the Little, who, upon Monday, entered upon 70, sings his Irish melodies with as much gusto as ever, sips his pint of claret, and now and then indites honeyed verses on rosy lips, blue eyes, and "all that sort of thing." Joanna Baillie, bordering on fourscore, still graces her retreat at Hempstead. One of the early lakers, Thomas de Quincy, after encountering many reverses in seventy years, and after eating more opium than would kill a company of grenadiers, dreams and writes classic dreams somewhere about "Auld Rekie," joined occasionally by Prof. Wilson, who is getting lazy, though only sixty-one."

A Republican Representative.—Major Noah, in his N.Y. "Sunday Times," has a reminiscence of early travel:

"We remember dropping in once to see Mr. Crawford, of Georgia, who was our minister at Paris; and being told that he was expected from court in a few minutes, we took a book and awaited his return. The door opened shortly, and in walked the ambassador, a 'cracker planter,' bedizened with gold lace, with a sword and cocked hat—a stout man also—who felt and looked as if he were in armor. We gazed a moment, and both broke out into a simultaneous burst burst of laughter. After having made two or three turns around the room, he called to his faithful black, and said—'Here, Cuff, take off my harness."

An Incident.—A singular and painful incident occurred at Whitehall a few days since. A young man by the name of Perry died in New York. His body was sent to Whitehall to his parents, to the care of a merchant. The merchant knew no such family in Whitehall who had a son in New York, but he did know such a family in an adjoining town. The body was accordingly sent to that family, who mourned a son lost. But on opening the coffin, just before burial, the body was found not to be that of their son. Upon inquiry, it belonged to a family of the same name at Whitehall, who had not, until the sad news was announced to them, heard of the illness of their son.

Indifference to Death.—As one of our reporters, says the Cincinnati Commercial, was riding down the hill from St. Joseph's grave-yard he met a rude vehicle drawn by a single horse, and in it a coffin containing the remains of probably a stranger. The driver was in his shirt sleeves, and astride the jaded animal, while sitting upon the coffin in the wagon, was a dirty boy about fourteen years of age, playing a jews-harp! and both man and boy seemed as merry as though they were on their way to a frolic, instead of the eternal resting-place of mortality! Truly, habit begets indifference, and pestilence, like war, seems to obliterate the feelings of solemnity which naturally belong to the human heart.

The Poison in Eggs.—The editor of the Salem (Mass.) Gazette, in publishing an account of the death of Mr. Bassett's children of Brooklyn, says:—A friend, on reading the above statement, gives us the following extract from a Cyclopædia:—"The white of an egg, boiled hard in the shell, suspended in the air afterwards, a liquid drops from it which will dissolve myrrh, which is more than either water, oil, spirits, or even fire itself can effect. A little putrid white of an egg taken into the stomach occasions nausea, horror, fainting, vomiting, diarrhœa, and gripes. It inflames the bile, excites heat, thirst, fever, and dissolves the humors like the plague."

Saying Grace in England.—Mr. Colman, in his European Life and Manners, says, that in England, children even quite young are often called upon to say grace at the table; and that three days before he dined in a large and elegant party, where the lady of the house asked a blessing and returned thanks. He was a week at one house where the eldest daughter of a family, about twenty-two, led in the family worship every morning, and constantly said grace at the table, and so in several other instances.

Death of a Child by a Fork.—Charles A. McIntire, aged one year and three months, died in consequence of a fork having been accidentally thrust into the eye and through it into the brain. A somewhat similar accident happened in Boston several years since. A small child sitting in a chair was given a piece of wire by its mother, to amuse it. The child, after playing awhile, fell off from the chair, and the wire in its hand penetrated the eye and brain, causing instant death.

Station for the Panama Steamers.—The Island of Tabago, fourteen miles from Panama, has been selected by Messrs. Howland and Aspinwall, as the dépôt for their steamers. In a short time vast improvements are to be made there; docks will be built, hotels and dwelling houses erected, and other additions for the accommodation of passengers, as well as the Pacific steamers. The island is about three miles long by two wide, and contains 200 bamboo huts and about 1100 people.

Resemblances.—Some philosopher has remarked, that every animal, when dressed in human apparel, resembles mankind very strongly in features. Put a frock, bonnet, and spectacles on a pig, and it looks like an old woman of eighty. A bull, dressed in an overcoat, would resemble a lawyer. Tie a few ribbons around a cat, put a fan in its paw, and a boarding-school miss is represented. A cockerel in uniform is a general to the life. A hedge-hog looks like a miser. Dress a monkey in a frock coat, cut off his tail, trim his whiskers, and you have a city dandy. Donkeys resemble a good many persons.

What our Fine Fruits have sprung from.—The peach originally was a poisonous almond. Its flesh parts were then used to poison arrows, and was for this purpose introduced into Persia. The translating and cultivation, however, not only removed its poisonous qualities, but produced the delicious fruit we now enjoy.

The nectarine and apricot are but natural hybridation between the peach and plum.

The cherry was originally a berry-like fruit, and cultivation has given each berry a separate stem, and improves its quality. The common mazard is the original of most of the present kind of cherries.

The common wild pear is even inferior to the choke pear; but still, by cultivation, it has come to rank among our finest fruits.

The cabbage originally came from Germany, and is nothing more than the common sea-kale. Its cultivation has produced the present cabbage, and its different acclimatings the different kinds; while its hybridation with other similar plants has produced the cauliflower.

This shows the benefit cultivation has effected; in the mind of man it is infinitely greater. [Am. Agriculturist.

Courtesy.—Shall courtesy be done only to the rich, and only by the rich? In good breeding, which differs, if at all, from high-breeding, only as it gracefully remembers the rights of others rather than gracefully insists on its own rights, I discern no special connection with wealth and birth; but rather that it lies in human nature itself, and is due from all men to all men. Of a truth were your schoolmaster at his post, and worth anything when there, this, with so much else, would be reformed. Nay, each man were then also his neighbor's schoolmaster; till at length a rude-visaged, unmannered peasant could no more be met with, than a peasant unacquainted with botanical physiology, or who felt not that the clod he broke was created in Heaven. [Thomas Carlyle.

The Average Income of Men.—We once took a notion to find out the average annual income of some of the inhabitants of the most favored countries of Christendom. We opened McCulloch's great work on Great Britain, and found his estimate for each to be £16 a year, or about 22 cents a day; and for each person in Ireland, £6 a year, or about 8 cts. a day. We looked into Chevallier's lectures on French Political Economy, and his estimate for each person in France is about £45 a year, or 12½ cts. a day. Our own census estimates the average product of the richest state in the Union at $110 for each person, or 30 cts. per day, while our whole country taken together, slave States and all, yields an annual product of but $52 for each person, or about 17 cts. per day.

Dyspepsia.—An old lady of our acquaintance in a town in Hampshire county, who was apt to be troubled in her dreams, and rather superstitious withal, informed the parson of the parish, that on the night previous she dreamed she saw her grandfather who had been dead ten years. The clergyman asked her what she had been eating. "Oh, only half a mince pie!" "Well," said he, "if you had devoured the other half you might probably have seen your grandmother."

VARIETY.

A curious experiment was recently tried in Russia with some murderers. They were placed, without knowing it, in four beds where four persons had died of the cholera. They did not take the disease. They were then told they were to sleep in beds where some persons had died of malignant cholera, but the beds were, in fact, new, and had not been used at all. Nevertheless three of them died of the disease within four hours. We state this upon the authority of the London Medical Times.

The British National Debt is due to about 270,000 persons, yet the great bulk of it is due to a far smaller number. Nine millions of pounds sterling of the annual interest are divided among 120 or 160 persons. Seven millions of pounds sterling more are divided between four and five thousand persons, and the remainder less than half, is paid in small sums among the remaining 264,000 persons, or thereabouts.

Dr. Josiah Buckman, physician of Woodstock, Vt., is exhibiting to the profession of Boston a very ingeniously constructed sick room bedstead, which far surpasses all that have been previously devised. By the turn of a winch, the patient may be placed in any desirable position, bathed, showered, or put into a vapor bath, without leaving the bed.

In a price current published in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1720, Bohea tea is quoted at fifty shillings per pound, and wheat at only three shillings per bushel. Consequently it would take nearly seventeen bushels of the latter to purchase one pound of the former.

Buckwheat may be sown any time between the middle of June and the 20th of July. The soils most congenial to it are those of a light sandy texture, rather dry and warm. Rolling the surface of the soil after sowing the seed is highly beneficial.

Among the sixteen brass cannon taken by Com. Stockton on the Pacific, now at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is one dated 1675. They generally have the name of some particular saint stamped on them. One of them is called "Jesus."

A negro driver of a coach in Texas, stopping to get some water for the young ladies in the carriage, being asked what he stopped for, replied—"I am watering my flowers." A more delicate compliment could not have been paid.

The physicians of Danville, Ky., have published a card in which they express the opinion, that the use of brandy, instead of being a preventive of cholera, will rather beget the disease.

A lady in Washington, in consequence of inflammation produced by wearing a tight ring, recently had her finger taken off to the knuckle joint.

A girl of fifteen years, in London, has been sentenced to be transported for a number of years, for picking pockets on a Sunday in church.

Of eleven ex-Presidents, Messrs. Van Buren and Tyler alone remain among us.

[Copy.]
Cambridge, Washington Co., N. Y.,
June 18, 1849.

Geo. W. Savage, Esq.,
Pres't Eagle Life and Health Insurance Co.

Dear Sir,—I beg leave to express to your Company my thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which you paid the claim for insurance on the life of my brother, Doctor F. R. Robertson, which was insured for the benefit of his mother. The manner in which the claim was met and paid, is creditable to your institution. No deduction was asked, nor was there any objection raised, but the whole amount insured paid as soon as presented and without waiting until it became due.

A policy of this kind is indeed valuable. I trust you will have the kindness to express our deep acknowledgment to your Board of Directors, and oblige

Your obedient servant,
— R. K. Robertson.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Pamphlets containing the necessary information may be had gratis at the office of the Sabbath Recorder.

Union Academy.

THE second or Fall Term of the Union Academy will commence on the 13th of August, 1849, under the charge of—

E. P. LARKIN, Principal,
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress,
Rev. G. M. LANGWORTHY, Lecturer on Moral Science.
Miss AMANDA M. CRANDALL, Teacher of Piano.

During the Fall Term of each year, a TEACHERS' CLASS will be organized, for the purpose of more thoroughly preparing Common School teachers for their responsible, but too long neglected avocation. A Course of Lectures will be delivered before the Class upon the various modes of teaching and governing Common Schools; and during the Term, the Class will be critically examined and instructed in those branches which they are expected to teach. Every effort will be made to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to teach; and no individual can receive a recommendation from the Faculty of this Institution, who is not thoroughly qualified to fulfill all the specifications of his recommendation.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the School:—

First—Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this School.

Second—Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his religious denomination.

Third—The exercises of the Institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth—No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the Institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This Institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county-seat, and twelve miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

Terms:

Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per Term. Piano music $10 00 extra. Incidental expenses 25 cents per Term. Settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

The Winter Term of the first year will commence the third Monday in December.

The Spring Term will commence the third Monday in March, 1850.

The Second Academic Year will be divided as follows:—The first Term will commence the first Monday in August; the second Term will commence the third Monday in November; the third Term will commence the second Monday in March, 1851. Each Term will continue fourteen weeks.

Board of Trust.

Hon. LEWIS HOWELL, President.
Rev. G. M. Langworthy,
Rev. S. K. Kollock,
Rev. David Clawson,
John Bright,
Isaac West,
I. D. Titsworth,
Dr. Wm. B. Ewing,
Thomas E. Hunt,
Isaac A. Sheppard,
F. G. Brewster,
John T. Davis,
Ethan B. Swinney.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY G. B. UTTER AND T. B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 7. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, AUGUST 2, 1849. WHOLE NO. 267.

The Sabbath Recorder.

MISSIONARY CORRESPONDENCE.

The Rev. Mr. Syle, who appears in the following correspondence, is a missionary of the American Episcopal Church in Shanghai, and from what we gather from the communications of Messrs. Carpenter and Wardner, is a most estimable man. We appreciate that candor and liberality of heart, which prompted him to seek the knowledge of our sentiments from ourselves, rather than take them second-hand, and misrepresented, from others. If all Christians would take this course, there would not be so much acerbity of feeling engendered in controversy as there often is. Mr. S. probably did not expect that this correspondence would be given to the public, and some apology may be due for thus bringing his name before the community. We would only say, that brother Carpenter did not forward the correspondence with the view of having it published, but simply that the Board might be put in possession of a complete report of all his doings for the extension of the cause of truth. The Board, in the exercise of its discretion, has thought fit to make it public. After the lapse of time, it may be necessary to furnish the proof, that our missionaries have not been backward to lay before the missionaries of other persuasions our views. We consider it better to place the whole matter upon record now, than to give occasion for any then to say, "Why have you kept this back so long?" We ought to add, as an evidence of the kindly feeling which has obtained between the parties, that brother Carpenter says, "I am not aware that our friendship has been affected by this correspondence."

The following note I received, I think, some time in the tenth month of 1847:—

Thursday Morning.

My Dear Sir,—I have read all the tracts you were so kind as to send me, and have attained the object I proposed to myself when I asked you for them—namely, the ascertainment of the tenets of your communion, as avowed by themselves. This is, in my view, the best method of avoiding misunderstanding and misrepresentation amongst other denominations. As to the subject matter of difference between your body and other denominations, my view is, that the Sabbath is of divine origin, and perpetual obligation; that a seventh day is to be observed; that under the Jewish dispensation, the onus probandi would lie upon him who should make a change of the resting day from the Saturday to Sunday, but that under the present dispensation, Sunday being the day that has (so to speak) actual possession of the observance, the burden of proof lies on those who would eject it from this position.

In the book I send herewith, you will find a better statement than I could make of the reasons for and evidences of the fact of a change by apostolic authority—Watson's Institutes, part 3, chapter 3, page 394.

Believe me to be, very truly yours,
E. N. Syle.

To which the following is my reply:—

My Dear Sir,—I return the book you kindly sent me, and thank you for the use of it. I am happy to see, by your note, that you regard the weekly Sabbath as an institution of divine origin and perpetual obligation. This view gives to this institution a dignity and importance which challenge the reverential regard of all mankind. It also suggests to us the source whence we are to draw instruction in relation to it.

As it respects the question of burden of proof, which you spoke of, I think that it always rests with the affirmative. Accordingly you affirm, that the first day of the week is the true Sabbath; and your argument is the general opinion of Christians. This you consider sufficient until something is brought against it. I object to the conclusiveness of this argument; and, to make good my objection, I affirm, that in the beginning it was not so; that for four thousand years the seventh day was regarded as the true Sabbath; that it was designed for all mankind, in all ages of the world. But to this you object. You say, I have taken too wide a view of the subject; that the seventh-day Sabbath was designed to be restricted to a part of mankind, and to the former ages of the world. And you affirm, that at a certain time in the history of the world, the Sabbath was changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. It seems to me that it belongs to you to prove your affirmation. Otherwise I must either admit it without proof, or else proceed to prove a negative. As you admit that the seventh day was the Sabbath, I consider my cause secure until proof is offered on the other side. But you have offered your proof in the book you was so kind as to send me. Now, if I object to these arguments, it fairly rests with me to show reason why. The burden of proof, then, now rests with me, not to prove that the Sabbath was not changed, but to show that these arguments do not prove the change. You will allow me, then, to state briefly my objections to the proof adduced.

On page 395, the author says, "We must either have such general principles for our guidance, as have been revealed by God, and cannot therefore be questioned, or some special authority from which there can be no just appeal." I understand him there to admit, that we have no special authority for the change. Then his first argument on general principles commences thus: "Yet when we see that this was done in the apostolic age," &c. From this premise, he draws the conclusion, that the change was made by divine authority. But in the premise he begs the question. I do not admit that the change was made in the apostolic age. In the same sentence, he classes the Sabbath with Jewish rites. It seems to me that this is not only unfair, but also inconsistent with what he says on the preceding page, thus: "We shall soon prove that the Sabbath was appointed at the creation of the world, and consequently for all men." If so, it is not Jewish. Or, if it be, then the marriage institution, appointed at the same time, is also Jewish.

Passing over one or two strong assertions of the author, I come to his main argument; and this, if a sound one, would only prove the possibility of a change in the day on which the sabbatic rest should be held. Of itself, it would not prove the change in question. I refer to his attempt to prove the indefiniteness of the sabbatic law, first from the language used, and second from the rotundity of the earth. From the language used in Gen. 2: 2, 3, and in the fourth command, because the word "week" is not inserted, he thinks that all that is intended by the lawgiver is, "not the seventh day according to any particular method of computing the septenary cycle, but in reference to the six of labor." If this be the meaning of the law, then it appears to me it might be perfectly obeyed, and perfect confusion be the result. Consequently, there would be an imperfection in this law. But it is written, "The law of the Lord is perfect." Therefore, I infer that this view is not the correct one. Would not human legislators act (in a similar case) with more wisdom than is here attributed to the divine legislator? Suppose the Emperor of China should issue a decree for the annual celebration of his birth-day, it being important, for weighty reasons, that it should be done on the same day throughout the Empire; would he command that it should be done on any day of any month, and leave it for the people of each province and each city to settle the time of holding it? Would not the law, leaving the people liable to endless controversy, be a lame one? In a law designed so sensibly to affect the whole current of worldly business as the sabbatic law is, there would seem to be a need of great definiteness. And I have been accustomed to look upon the law of the Sabbath as one exactly adapted to the necessities of the case. Let us see.

Our author, on page 394, states that "those who assume that the will of God is only obligatory when manifested in some one mode, which they judge to be most just," are chargeable with maintaining "a monstrous hypothesis." Now, although the word week is not found either in the fourth commandment or in the account of the institution of the Sabbath in Gen. 2: 2, yet, if God has informed us in some other way, that it was the seventh day of the week that was consecrated, then those who contend for any day, are chargeable with maintaining "a monstrous hypothesis." We know that it was the last day of the week that was blessed and sanctified, and our author admits that this "must undoubtedly imply the sanctity of every seventh day"! In the fourth commandment there is a mark put upon the day there enjoined, which plainly shows it to be the same day of the week that was sanctified in the beginning; for precisely the same reasons are given for enjoining the seventh day in the fourth commandment, which are given for sanctifying the seventh day in the beginning, viz. God's resting on that day, and blessing it, because on it he rested. Now, if it cannot be said of any but the last day of the week, that in it God rested from all his works which he created and made, then it is evident that the fourth commandment enjoins the last day of the week, and no other.

Again, if the septenary cycle of the Jews was reckoned from the commencement of the falling of the manna, with no reference to the creation of the world, as our author supposes, then it seems to be unaccountable, that in the fourth commandment there should be no reference to the falling of the manna, but a marked reference to the work of creation, and the rest of Deity from that work. Putting these two things together, the marked reference in the commandment to the rest of Jehovah from his creative operations, and his miraculous designation of the true day by withholding the manna on it, I am unable to conceive of the thing being made more definite and certain.

The descendants of Abraham, on other points, have been divided into different sects; but in reference to the Sabbath, they always have, and do to this day, observe with great uniformity the seventh day of the week. Whence this definite impression on their minds? Was it not produced by the law of God? But how could it make so definite an impression, if it be itself, when properly understood, the most indefinite thing imaginable? Will it be argued, that Moses and the prophets did not understand the law?

Here, then, are three things, which seem not to be exactly harmonious,—1st, The law of the Sabbath so indefinite as to enjoin only any day, provided it be one in seven; 2d, This law producing the impression on the whole Jewish commonwealth, throughout many centuries, that a definite day was intended; and, 3d, The same law brought forward to convict of sin if another definite day be used as a common working day.

The argument drawn from the spherical form of the earth, if it be allowed any weight, would of course go as much against the first as against the seventh day. But as it proceeds upon the assumption that the command, in order to enjoin a particular day, must necessarily enjoin the same absolute time upon all the inhabitants of the earth, it needs only to be mentioned to be refuted.

It seems to me, that enough objections have been made to the arguments adduced in proof of the change of the Sabbath, to show that the point is far from being proved. No direct proof has been offered; and the indirect is found to be without weight. You will allow me, therefore, to consider my cause gained, until other and better proof be offered on the other side of the question.

Now, my dear brother, what I have written I have written. I have done it because I believe it to be the truth. And truth is no man's private property. I have done as I would be done by, thus fulfilling the Golden Rule in this thing. I have written plainly and freely to you for two reasons; first, because you are a brother beloved by us all; and, secondly, because I wished to place the truth clearly before your mind. The reason why I have not gone over more ground is, because I thought it better to confine myself to what strictly belongs to me, which was, as I thought, only to answer the arguments adduced in favor of the change. These being few and easily disposed of, I had but little to do. If there are still others which strike your mind as important, you will do me a favor by presenting them.

Yours truly, S. Carpenter.
11th Month, 12th.

[Remainder of the correspondence next week.]

A FATHER'S CLAIM TO HIS CHILD.

A True Story.

AARON BURR'S GREAT PLEA.

Many years ago, I happened to be one of the referees in a case that excited unusual interest in our courts, from the singular nature of the claim, and the strange story which it disclosed. The plaintiff, who was a Captain of a merchant ship which traded principally with the West Indies, had married quite early with every prospect of happiness. His wife is said to have been extremely beautiful, and no less lovely in character.

After living with her in uninterrupted harmony for five years, during which time two daughters were added to the family, he suddenly resolved to resume his occupation, which he had relinquished on his marriage; and when his youngest child was but three weeks old, sailed for the West Indies. His wife, who was devotedly attached to him, sorrowed deeply at his absence, and found her only comfort in the society of her children and the hopes of his return. But month after month passed away, and he came not, nor did any letters, those insufficient but welcome substitutes, arrive to cheer her solitude. Months lengthened into years, yet no tidings were received from the absent husband; and after hoping against hope, the unhappy wife was compelled to believe that he had found a grave beneath the weltering ocean.

Her sorrow was deep and heartfelt, but the evils of poverty were now added to her affliction, and the widow found herself obliged to resort to some employment in order to support her children. Her needle was the only resource, and for ten years she labored early and late for the miserable pittance which is ever grudgingly bestowed on an humble seamstress.

A merchant in New York, in moderate yet prosperous circumstances, accidentally became acquainted with her, and pleased with her gentle manners no less than her extreme beauty, endeavored to improve their acquaintance with friendship. After some months he offered his hand and was accepted. As the wife of a successful merchant, she soon found herself in the enjoyment of comforts and luxuries such as she had never possessed. Her children became his children, and received from him every advantage which wealth and affection could procure. Fifteen years passed away; the daughters married, and by their step-father were furnished with every comfort requisite to their new vocation of housekeepers. But they had hardly quitted his roof when their mother was taken ill. She died, and from that time until the period of which I speak, the widower resided with the youngest daughter.

Now comes the strangest part of the story. After an absence of 30 years, during which time no tidings had been received from him, the first husband returned, as suddenly as he had departed. He had changed his ship, adopted another name, and spent the whole of that long period on the ocean, with only transient visits on shore, while taking in or discharging cargoes; having been careful never to come nearer home than New Orleans. Why he had acted in this unpardonable manner towards his family no one could tell, and he obstinately refused all explanation.

There were strange rumors of slave trading and piracy afloat, but they were only conjecture rather than the truth. Whatever might have been his motives for his conduct, he was certainly anything but indifferent to his family concerns when he returned. He raved like a madman when informed of his wife's second marriage, and subsequent death, vowing vengeance upon his successor, and terrifying his daughters with the most awful threats, in case they refused to acknowledge his claims. He had returned wealthy, and one of the mean reptiles of the law, who are always to be found crawling about the halls of justice, advised him to bring a suit against the second husband; assuring him that he could recover heavy damages. The absurdity of instituting a claim for a wife whom death has already released from the jurisdiction of earthly laws, was so manifest, that it was at length agreed by all parties to leave the matter to referees. It was on a bright and beautiful afternoon in Spring, when we met to hear this singular case. The sunlight streamed through the dusty court room, and shed a halo around the long grey locks of the defendant; while the plaintiff's harsh features were even thrown in still bolder relief, by the same beam which softened the placid countenance of his adversary.

The plaintiff's lawyer made a most eloquent appeal for his client, and had we not been informed about the matter, our hearts would have been melted by his touching description of the return of the desolate husband, and the agony with which he now beheld his household gods removed to consecrate a stranger's hearth. The celebrated Aaron Burr was counsel for the defendant, and we anticipated from him a splendid display of oratory. Contrary to our expectations, however, Burr made no attempt to confute his opponent's oratory. He merely opened a book of Statutes, and pointing with his thin finger to one of the pages, desired his referees to read it, while he retired for a moment to bring in the principal witness. We had scarcely finished the section, which fully decided the matter in our minds, when Burr re-entered with a tall and elegant female leaning on his arm. She was attired in a simple white dress, with a wreath of ivy leaves encircling her large straw bonnet, and a lace veil completely concealing her countenance. Burr whispered a few words, apparently encouraging her to advance, and then gracefully raising her veil disclosed to us a face of proud, surpassing beauty. I recollect, as well as if it had happened yesterday, how simultaneously the murmur of admiration burst from the lips of all present. Turning to the plaintiff, Burr asked in a cold, quiet tone—"Do you know this lady?"

Answer—"I do."

Burr—"Will you swear to that?"

A—"I will; to the best of my knowledge and belief, she is my daughter."

Burr—"Can you swear to her identity?"

A—"I can."

Burr—"What is her age?"

A—"She was 30 years old on the 20th day of April."

Burr—"When did you last see her?"

A—"At her own house about a fortnight since."

Burr—"When did you last see her previous to that meeting?"

The plaintiff hesitated—a long pause ensued—the question was repeated, and the answer at length was:

"On the 14th day of May, 17—."

"When she was just three weeks old," added Burr. "Gentlemen," continued he, turning to us, "I have brought this lady here as an important witness, and such I think she is. The plaintiff's counsel has pleaded eloquently in behalf of the bereaved husband, who escaped the perils of the sea, and returned to find his home desolate. But who will picture to you the lovely wife, bending over her daily toil, devoting her best years to the drudgery of sordid poverty, supported only by the hope of her husband's return? Who will paint the slow progress of heart sickening, the wasting anguish of hope deferred, and finally the overwhelming agony which came as her last hope was extinguished, and she was compelled to believe herself a widow? Who can depict all this without awakening in your hearts the warmest sympathy for the deserted wife, and the utterest scorn for the mean, pitful wretch who could thus trample on the heart of her whom he had sworn to love and cherish? Whether it was love of gain, or licentiousness, or self-indifference, it matters not; he is too vile a thing to be judged by such laws as govern men. Let us ask the witness, she who now stands before us, with the frank, fearless brow of a true-hearted woman; let us ask which of these two has been to her a father."

Turning to the lady, in a tone whose sweetness was in strange contrast with the scornful accent which had just characterized his words, he besought her to relate briefly the recollections of her early life. A slight flush passed over her proud and beautiful face as she replied:

"My first recollections are of a small, ill-furnished apartment, which my sister and myself shared with my mother. She used to carry out every Saturday evening the work which had occupied her during the week, and bring back work for the following one. Saving that journey to her employers, and her regular attendance at church, she never left the house. She often spoke of my father, and of his anticipated return, but at length she used to weep more frequently than ever. I then thought she wept because we were poor, for it sometimes happened that our only support was a bit of bread, and she was accustomed to sew by the light of chips which she kindled to warm her famishing children, because she could not purchase a candle without depriving us of our morning meal. Such was our poverty when my mother contracted a second marriage, and the change to us was like a sudden entrance into Paradise. We found a home and a father." She paused.

"Would you excite my child against me?" cried the plaintiff, as he impatiently waved his hand for her to be silent.

The eyes of the witness flashed fire as he spoke.

"You are not my father!" she exclaimed, vehemently. "What! call you my father? you, who basely left your wife to toil, and your children to beggary? Never! never! Behold there my father!" pointing to the agitated defendant; "there is the man who watched over my infancy—who was the sharer of my sports, and the guardian of my inexperienced youth. There is he who claims my affection and shares my home; there is my father. For yonder selfish wretch, I know him not. The best years of his life have been spent in lawless freedom from social ties; let him seek elsewhere the companion of his decrepitude, nor dare insult the ashes of my mother by claiming the duties of kindred from her deserted children."

She drew her veil hastily around her as she spoke, and moved as if to withdraw.

"Gentlemen," said Burr, "I have no more to say. The words of the law are expressed in the book before you; the words of truth you have just heard from woman's pure lips; it is for you to decide according to the requisition of nature and the decree of justice."

I need not say, that our decision was in favor of the defendant, and that the plaintiff went forth, followed by the contempt of every honorable man who was present at the trial. [A New York Barrister.

Many that have passed the rocks of gross sin, have been cast away upon the sands of self-righteousness.

THE TOWN CHILD AND THE COUNTRY CHILD.

BY ALLAN CUNNINGHAM.

Child of the Country! free as air
Art thou, and as the sunshine fair;
Born, like the lily, where the dew
Lies odorous when the day is new;
Fed, 'mid the May-flowers, like the bee,
Nursed to sweet music on the knee,
Lulled in the breast to that glad tune
Which winds make 'mong the woods of June;
I sing of thee—'tis sweet to sing
Of such a fair and gladsome thing.

Child of the Town! for thee I sigh;
A gilded roof's thy golden sky—
A carpet is thy daisied sod—
A narrow street thy boundless road—
Thy rushing deer's the clattering tramp
Of watchmen—thy best light's a lamp—
Through smoke, and not through trellised vines,
And blooming trees, thy sunbeam shines.
I sing of thee in sadness; where
Else is wreck wrought in aught so fair?

Child of the Country! thy small feet
Tread on strawberries red and sweet;
With thee I wander forth to see
The flowers which most delight the bee.
The bush o'er which the throstle sung,
In April, while she nursed her young,
The den beneath the sloe thorn where
She bred her twins the timorous hare;
The knoll wrought o'er with wild blue bells
Where brown bees build their balmy cells,
The greenwood stream, the shady pool,
Where trouts leap when the day is cool;
The shilfa's nest, that seems to be
A portion of the sheltering tree;
And other marvels which my verse
Can find no language to rehearse.

Child of the Town! for thee, alas!
Glad Nature spreads nor flowers nor grass;
Birds build no nests, nor in the sun
Glad streams come singing as they run;
A Maypole is thy blossomed tree,
A beetle is thy murmuring bee;
Thy bird is caged, thy dove is where
The poulterer dwells, beside thy hare;
Thy fruit is plucked, and by the pound
Hawked clamorous all the city round,
No roses, twinborn on the stalk,
Perfume thee in thy evening walk;
No voice of birds—but to thee comes
The mingled din of cars and drums,
And startling cries, such as are rife
When wine and wassail waken strife.

Child of the Country! on the lawn
I see thee like the bounding fawn;
Blithe as the bird when it tries its wing
The first time on the winds of Spring;
Bright as the sun, when from the cloud
He comes, as cocks are crowing loud;
Now running, shouting, 'mid sunbeams,
Now groping trouts in lucid streams,
Now spinning like a mill-wheel round,
Now hunting Echo's empty sound,
Now climbing up some old tall tree,
For climbing sake; 'tis sweet to thee
To sit where birds can sit alone,
Or share with thee thy venturous throne.

Child of the Town and bustling street,
What woes and snares await thy feet!
Thy paths are paved for five long miles,
Thy groves and hills are peaks and tiles;
Thy fragrant air is yon thick smoke,
Which shrouds thee like a mourning cloak;
And thou art cabined and confined,
At once from sun and dew and wind,
Or set thy tottering feet but on
Thy lengthened walks of slippery stone;
The coachman there careering reels
With goaded steeds and maddening wheels.
While flushed with wine and stung at play,
Men rush from darkness into day;
The stream 's too strong for thy small bark,
There nought can sail save what is stark.

Fly from the Town, sweet child! for health
Is happiness, and strength, and wealth.
There is a lesson in each flower,
A story in each stream and bower;
On every herb on which you tread,
Are written words which, rightly read,
Will lead you from earth's fragrant sod,
To hope, and holiness, and God.

SMITH, THE RAZOR-STROP MAN.

A SPECIMEN OF HIS LOGIC.

Every body, from Nova Scotia to Texas, from Cape Cod to the great city of St. Louis, and perhaps along the "Far West" to California, knows the "Razor-strop man." Well, here he is, to the life. Some editor, without telling his whereabouts, (for we found it in an exchange paper without credit,) reports the following "speech," as obtained at a private interview:—

Some folks say that it is right to drink alcohol, because it is a good creature of God. Well, grant that it is; so is castor oil, and so is vinegar, a creature of God; but is that a sufficient reason for a person to drink it three, four, or a dozen times a day? A dog is a good creature of God; but suppose a dog gets mad, and bites a man or women, would you let him alone because, as you say, he was a good creature? Would you be satisfied with cutting off his ear or his tail, or would you knock him on the head, and pitch him headlong into the street? Now, alcohol is more than a mad dog, for a mad dog only destroys life, while a bite from alchy destroys reason, reputation, life, and everything else, besides dragging down the family of the bitten man to poverty and want.

But alchy does n't bite a mouthful, at first. When he first snapped at me, he only tickled me a little. I liked it first-rate, and was anxious to get another, and still another bite. The old rascal of a tyrant kept a nibbling away at my heels, as though he did n't mean to harm me; while I, like a poor fool, kept coaxing him on, until at last he gave me a "snap" in earnest, and took the elbows right out of my coat! Next, he took the crown out of my hat, the shoes off my feet, the money out of my pocket, the sense out of my head, until at last I went raving mad through the streets, perfectly a victim to alchiphobia. But I signed the pledge, and got cured; and if there is any man who has been bitten as I was, let him take this teetotal medicine, and I'll warrant him a speedy cure.

But allowing alcohol is a good creature of God, are there not other good creatures, such as beef, pork, puddings, pies, clothes, dollars, and fifty others "of the same sort?" Now, shall a man cling to the one good creature, and leave the ninety-and-nine untouched? Shall a man drink whiskey, because it is a good creature of God, and go without good food, a good home, a good hat, a good fat wallet, a good handsome wife, and good well-dressed children? No, sirree! As for me, give me good beef and pudding, good pork and sausage, good friends, a good bed, good clothes, a good wife, and good children, and old king alchy may go to——Texas, for all I care.

Some say that wine is a "good creature," because our Saviour once turned water into wine. Very good! But then he did n't turn rum, gin, whiskey, logwood, cocultus-indicus, and cockroaches, into wine, like some people do. He turned water into wine. Now, if any wine-bibbing apologist will take a gallon or a barrel of pure water, and will turn it into good wine, without mixing other stuff with it, I'm the boy as will go in for a swig of it! Such wine must be good, and I go in for that kind and nothing else. But as for your nasty, filthy, drunkenstuff, which is sold in your grog-shops, it's a base counterfeit, and it's a blasphemous libel on our blessed Saviour to liken it to the pure beverage he made.

Now, you, such as prefer one good creature of God to all the rest, go and drink rum or whiskey until you get picked as bare as a sheep's back, after it has crawled through a briar patch; but you, as prefer the ninety-and-nine good creatures, go right and sign the pledge. Thousands have been saved by putting their names to that precious document, and still is there room for a "few more of the same sort."

THE DISTILLER AND THE PREACHER.

Some years ago, the Rev. Mr. Axley, of eccentric but pious memory, had preached to one of the congregations in his circuit, and after the sermon, as was the custom of Methodist preachers in those days, the preacher had class meeting. He had questioned each brother and sister on the subject of their experience, practice, and enjoyment in the divine life, giving each a word of encouragement, comfort, and advice, as the case seemed to require, filling up the intervals by singing a suitable verse with life and spirit, until all the members had been questioned but a certain very prominent member of the church, who, it seems, owned a distillery, and by some means his preacher found out the fact. When, after the most serious conversations with others, the following examination took place—

Preacher—Well, brother Jerry, how do you come on, making whiskey?

Brother (somewhat startled,)—Oh, I do not know, tolerably well enough.

P.—Well, brother, tell us how much money you give for a bushel of corn?

B.—Twenty-five cents a bushel.

P.—Twenty-five cents; very cheap that, I should say; but another question, brother, how much whiskey do you suppose one bushel of corn will make?

B.—Can't say. I suppose, about three gallons. (Very much confused.)

P.—So, three gallons! Why that's a considerable turn out, I should judge. But, brother, what do you get for a gallon of whiskey?

B.—(Looking rather wild.) Seventy-five cents.

P.—Seventy-five cents! Two hundred per cent? And that too, I reckon, by the bushel; you get more by the jug full. But, brother, tell your brethren, is n't the slops very good to fatten hogs upon?

B.—Yes, pretty good.

P.—And won't the hogs you fatten for nothing on the slops, come mighty nigh paying for the corn?

B.—Well, very nigh it.

P.—But come to the question, brother, do you make a good article? Will it bear a bead?

By this time the brother was so perfectly confused by the preacher's interrogatories, that he began to wish he had never seen the preacher or distillery either. The class could scarcely maintain their gravity during the dialogue; and we need not add, that the poor fellow was so tormented, every time he met a neighbor, by the salutation, "Well, brother, how do you come on making whiskey?" and "Do you make a real good article?" "Will it bear a bead?" that he actually broke up his distillery and became a consistent temperance man.

A Man of Wealth.—A man of wealth, living a stranger to religion and its ordinances, was walking and holding this soliloquy—"What a happy man I am! I have an ample fortune, an affectionate wife, and everything to make me comfortable; and, what is more, I am indebted to no one for it; I have made it myself; I am independent of every one; it is all my own. Many persons are under obligations here and there, but I am not. It is all my own." At that instant, a sudden shower of rain drove him to the nearest church. He went in, and just at that moment the minister rose and read his text—"Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price." "What!" said he to himself, "this is a strange doctrine. But it does not apply to me; I am my own, and all that I have is my own." The course of the sermon exposed his obligations to God, and issued in totally revolutionizing his views and feelings.

A Fearful Risk.—The New York Evangelist relates an affecting incident which lately occurred in this city. A pastor at the close of his sermon had made an earnest appeal to his unconverted hearers, and vehemently pressed the question, whether, by delay of repentance, they would run the risk of dying and perishing in their sins? At the close of the service, a lady, while passing out, spoke to a young friend of hers, and asked whether she would run the risk? "Oh yes," she replied, in a thoughtless tone, "I will run the risk." In about a week after, the same pastor was called to attend the funeral of the young lady who had so rashly assumed the fearful risk.

D'Aubigné says—"Where the Spirit is, there is the Church; this is the principle of reform. Where the Church is, there is the Spirit, is the principle of Rome and Oxford."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 2, 1849.

Traveling Agent.—Eld. Walter B. Gillett having been engaged to travel a while as Agent for the Sabbath Recorder, will visit most of our churches in the State of New York previous to September 1st. His primary object will be to increase the subscription list of the paper, and to collect what is due for it up to the close of volume 5. He will also take the names of persons who may wish to become members of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and receive and transmit to the Treasurer any moneys subscribed for the benefit of that Society.

COMMEMORATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

We said, last week, that we should recur to this subject again. We have shown, that the Sabbath, being commemorative, is a standing witness to all mankind against Atheism and the multiplied forms of heathen Idolatry.

We will now suppose, that a person, wandering through the streets of some great city, suddenly comes to an enclosure, containing a collection of spacious and beautiful buildings. On inquiring, he finds that they are designed for a benevolent purpose—say, a home for friendless and indigent females. He obtains permission to enter the enclosure, and the first thing which attracts his notice is an imposing monument, upon which is an inscription to the effect, that the ground was given, the building erected, and the institution endowed, by the munificence of one John Howard; and that this monument was raised to commemorate the fact. We will next suppose, that after this monument has stood unmutilated for many years, some person undertakes to demolish it, and build another in its place, for the purpose of commemorating a different event; or, if he should not choose to build a monument entirely new, that he removes the slab containing the inscription, and substitutes another having a new inscription, an inscription which leaves out the name of John Howard, making no allusion to him, nor to the object for which he had caused those buildings to be erected. Would not the person, who would act thus, show that he did not feel towards the name and memory of John Howard, as he ought to feel? Would it not be natural to infer, that he harbored some enmity against him?—that he did not wish his name perpetuated?—or, that he hated the work itself, and did not wish such a monument of God-like benevolence to be kept in memory? Some such inference, we think, would be perfectly natural. Indeed, we see no room for any other, unless it be this, that the destroyer of the monument was actuated by the mere love of mischief.

The advocates of the first day of the week may take notice, that we have spoken this parable against them. The Sabbath is a monument, upon which is the plain and unmistakable inscription, that Jehovah created the worlds; that by power, wisdom, and goodness, he formed and perfected all in six [illegible] for the very purpose of commemorating this fact, the monument was erected, so that men might have no excuse for atheism, and none for idolatry. Ho! all ye that pass by, the wayfaring man and the fool, as well as the philosopher and the learned, stop—read—and know, that Jehovah is the Creator of all things. Those who deny the obligation of the Sabbath under the gospel, are represented by the man who tears down the monument, and builds another in its place. Those who pretend to admit the perpetuity of the Sabbath, but contend for a change of the day, on the ground of the work of redemption, are represented by the man who secretly removes the slab containing the inscription, and substitutes another, with a different inscription. And now, so far as the design of the Sabbath is concerned, what difference does it make, whether the monument be altogether demolished and a new one built, or merely the slab of inscription removed, and another substituted? Practically, it makes no difference. The advocates of both these seemingly different views, are agreed in their object. They both desire to maintain the observance of a day different from that which the law of the Sabbath enjoins, and both desire it on the same grounds. They both wish to have the first day of the week considered holy, and not the seventh; and both are governed, in this, by a desire of commemorating—not the work of creation, but—the work of redemption.

Must we, therefore, conclude, that the advocates of the first day observance are actuated by a feeling of enmity against Jehovah, as the Author of creation, and that they desire that his name should no longer be had in remembrance on this account? Must we conclude, that they despise the work of creation?—that they see so little of beauty and glory in it—so little of benevolence and goodness—that they think it unworthy of any farther commemoration? We had supposed, that it were enough for unregenerate sinners to cherish enmity against Jehovah as the God of creation. "The CARNAL mind is enmity against God." We had supposed, that when one was created anew in Christ Jesus, his enmity was destroyed, and that he then loved to contemplatd Jehovah as the Author of his existence, and of all created things, and that he began to love the law which Jehovah, as Creator, enjoined. We always thought that the effect of redemption was to open the eyes to see, not only the beauty of redemption itself, but the beauty and glory of creation, and the goodness and benevolence of Jehovah as displayed in the works of his hand. This, at any rate, is our experience; and it is passing strange, if the effect of redemption on every heart to which it is applied, is not to eradicate every thing like atheism, and to create that faith which is firmly persuaded that God exists, (Heb. 11: 6, Ps. 14: 1,) and that the worlds were framed by the word of his power. Heb. 11: 3.

But we are persuaded that our first-day brethren do not mean what their practice so clearly implies. Still we cannot forbear asking, why they go about to tear down the monument which proclaims Jehovah as the Creator of the world? Why seek to demolish that which was set up for the very purpose of being a standing testimony against Atheism and Idolatry. Surely you do not mean to strike hands with infidels and heathens! Or, why seek to alter the inscription which God originally placed upon this monument? Why seek to make it tell a different story, as if the old story was too old to be repeated any longer? You may, perhaps, reply, that a monumental institution, to proclaim Jehovah as the God of creation, is not necessary, inasmuch as it is so abundantly proclaimed by the works of his hands. If so, then it was never necessary; and for four thousand years the Sabbath was a useless institution. The truth is, men are just as apt to be infidels now as they ever were, and the Sabbath is just as necessary now, as a testimony against their infidelity, as it ever was. Why, then, seek to destroy the Sabbath, or to modify it, and alter its character, so that it can no longer be recognized as commemorative of creation? We are astonished that Christians will act thus.

But that which makes their course in regard to the Sabbath still worse is, that they attempt to father it upon Jesus Christ! The church of Rome, with all her impiety, has never been guilty of this. But you, who call yourselves Protestants, alledge that Christ tore down the monument which God had set up to be a witness against atheism and idolatry! You alledge, at least, that he began to batter and deface the inscription, and gave his apostles instructions to complete the work of demolition after his resurrection! If Jesus Christ were an atheist—if he taught that the world came into existence by chance, without any forming hand—if he desired to spread this belief among men, and blot out, as far as possible, every thing which attests that Jehovah was the Creator—we should suppose that one of the first things he would undertake would be to destroy the Sabbath. But if, on the contrary, he came to declare the glory of the Father—if he came to bear testimony against infidelity, and by his redeeming power to lead men back to the acknowledgement and worship of the Creator, as we know he did—it stands to reason, that he would honor the Sabbath, that he would enforce it by his example, and that he would say of this, as of any other divine precept, "I came not to destroy the law—one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from it, till all be fulfilled." Query—Does the requirement to observe the seventh day amount to as much as a jot or a tittle? *

FAST DAY.

The recommendation of the President, "that the first Friday in August be observed throughout the United States as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer," in view of the prevalence of cholera, is likely to be pretty generally complied with. Circulars have been issued by the Moderators of both branches of the Presbyterian Church, by the President of the General Synod of the Reformed Dutch Church, by Bishop Potter of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania, by Right Rev. Bishop Lee of Delaware, by Bishop Otey of Tennessee, and by the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Baltimore, recommending the devout observance of the National Fast Day, by the ministers and churches under their care.

The clergy of Brooklyn, N. Y., have held a meeting and put forth an Address urging the strict observance of the day. The Board of the Baptist Missionary Convention of the State of New York have passed a resolution exhorting the churches and religious community to "unite most heartily and cheerfully in responding to the recommendation of the Chief Magistrate, in observing the first Friday in August as a day of fasting and prayer, with deep humiliation before Almighty God, that his judgments may be removed, and that his Holy Spirit may be abundantly and extensively showered upon us, and enjoyed among us, in the sanctification of his saints, and in the conversion of sinners."

The Governors of several of the States, among which are New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Rhode Island, have each issued Proclamations responding to the President's Proclamation, and recommending that all business be suspended on the day specified. The following is Gov. Fish's Proclamation:—

STATE OF NEW YORK,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Albany, July 23, 1849.

WHEREAS the President of the United States has seen fit to issue a recommendation, that the first Friday in August next be observed throughout the United States as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer: and as I believe that recommendation to be in accordance with the sentiment and the feelings of the people of this State, who recognize it as a fit and becoming duty of a Christian nation, when overtaken by a public calamity, to bow beneath the dispensation of Divine Providence, and while considering our own unworthiness, and the frailty and the uncertainty of this life, to acknowledge the goodness of Almighty God in time past, and to supplicate His merciful interposition in the time of trouble, and his protection for the future;

Now, therefore, I deem it right and proper to unite with the Chief Magistrate of the Union in earnestly recommending to the people of this State to observe Friday, the third day of August next, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, when persons of all religious denominations may assemble in their respective places of public worship, and unite in imploring the Almighty Ruler, in His own good time, to withdraw the grievous sickness with which, in His wisdom, He has seen fit to afflict us, and to restore to us the inappreciable blessing of public health.

HAMILTON FISH.

DENIAL OF GOD.

We dislike to pollute our columns with such an extract as the following, but it furnishes such an apposite illustration of the truth of our remarks, week before last, that we can hardly withhold it. He must be a careless observer, who does not see that infidelity is a growing evil in this wicked world. There is, to be sure, a seeming admission of the existence of God; but if he is a Being so weak that he "can not suspend any of his laws," he can not control them. And if he can not control them, he must be inferior to them, and is therefore not the author of them. The plain meaning of all this is just what the "fool" says in his heart, "There is no God." The last sentence of the paragraph contains an idea, which has no necessary connection with what goes before. We offer no strictures upon it.

The "National Fast."

"Old Zach" has proclaimed a national fast for the removal of the cholera. He asks God, "that he would, in his good time, stay the ravages of the cholera." It is plain, that the President knows as little of the divine government, as, before his election, he avowed himself to know of the politics of his country. God is not going to suspend any of his laws to "stay the ravages of the cholera." We are not sure that he could do so. It is for men to stay those ravages, by observing those laws. There is no other way. We should think the cholera had done a good work, should it awaken the attention of men to the importance of studying the laws of their physical constitutions. We would like to know in what part of the Constitution "Old Zach" fancies he finds authority for calling on the people of this country to fast. [Lynn Pioneer.

INTELLIGENCE FROM CHINA.

The New York Recorder has a letter from Hong Kong, China, dated April 23d, from which we learn, that the 6th of April had passed without the gates of Canton being opened to foreigners. Although things were then quiet, no one would be surprised to see an open collision between the English and Chinese before the close of the present year. Of course this unsettled state of the public mind affects the missionary work unfavorably. Mr. and Mrs. Tobey, who came from Shanghai to Hong Kong by the Houqua, on their way to America, but afterwards concluded to stop a while at the latter place, had returned to Shanghai. Rev. Mr. and [illegible] ciety, Shanghai, had left for England. Bishop Boone was not well when the last news came from Shanghai; and Rev. Mr. Spalding, of his mission, was said to be in poor health. Mr. Shuck and his associates had procured a lot for a chapel. The Revising Committee of the Sacred Scriptures had not agreed on the term to represent the name of Deity, and it was probable they would transfer the Hebrew terms. No baptisms are reported this year at Hong Kong.

WHITE SLAVERY IN GEORGIA.

The Muscogee Democrat gives the following particulars of a curious case, which shows what monsters slavery makes of men, and how little respect slaveholders have for color or parentage:—

On Tuesday last a young white girl by the name of Nancy Fann, who had for two years been an inmate of the house of one James R. Jackson, formerly of Alabama, but lately of Small Creek, in this county, was, on petition of her mother, a Mrs. Gilder, from Hawkinsville, brought before his honor Judge Alexander on a writ of habeas corpus, and after an investigation of the case, delivered in charge of her maternal parent. The circumstances of the affair are briefly these:—Fann's wife had obtained, several years since, a divorce from him for cause, and subsequently married a man by the name of Gilder, who has since deceased. The girl Nancy was taken off by her father, Fann, and brought to Girard, Alabama, whence he removed to Wynton, where about two years ago she was sold by him for a blind horse and Jersey wagon to James R. Jackson, as a slave. By some means the mother heard of the situation of her daughter, now seventeen years of age, and came on here about three months ago, with a view to release her from bondage to the said James R. Jackson. Accordingly she visited the house of the latter, and stayed there three days, when she was ordered off and otherwise abused for seeking subsequent interviews with her daughter, who was treated in all respects as a negro slave by Jackson and his family! This becoming known in the neighborhood, Mr. Jas. M'Guire and other gentlemen interested themselves in the matter, and by the generous and voluntary aid of Col. S. Jones and Col. Rutherford, the Sheriff, assisted the mother in the recovery of her child, as aforesaid, by a writ of habeas corpus.

THE LATEST FROM MRS. JUDSON.—The N. Y. Recorder publishes an extract from a letter of Dr. Judson, dated April 19, as follows:

"Poor Mrs. Judson is still in the doctor's hands. She is, however, improving in health. The heat is now very oppressive. Though the thermometer seldom rises above 92°, it stays there several hours during the day, day after day, and week after week; and this it is that makes it so very oppressive. And then it frequently stays at 90° till 9 o'clock at night, so that the lungs almost lose their elasticity, and forget to breathe. But we are in one of the very healthiest parts of India; and we are all immortal till our work is done; that is one comfort;—and no longer; that is another."

MISSIONARY PROSPECTS AT SHANGHAI.—A letter of Rev. J. L. Shuck, missionary to Shang-hai, China, from the Southern Baptist Board, dated April 9, speaks as follows of the prospects of missionary labor at Shanghai:—

"In our work at present we are somewhat encouraged. We have ten preaching services per week in our mission, three of which are at an out-station in the interior, where we have a school of seventeen pupils. Our present chapel here is within the walls, and we have commenced a second (Gothic) also within the walls. Congregations large and attentive; several inquirers. We are printing several new works (tracts) in Chinese. We have unmolested access to this whole densely populated region round about. Pray for us."

WESTERN BOATMEN.—An effort is being made in St. Louis and elsewhere, to establish a Chapel for the use of boatmen on the Western Waters. There are 50,000 of these men employed on the steamboats, and 20,000 more, it is stated, upon the keel and flat boats, of the Mississippi and tributaaries. More than 8,000 are directly connected with the trade of St. Louis alone, and, on an average, some 1,500 are on shore at one time. To place these within the pale of good influence, is the object of a new Association, having its headquarters at St. Louis, under the title of the 'Western Boatmen's Union." The boatmen themselves are said to be anxious that the work should go on, offering to be held responsible for the salary of their minister.

DEATH OF A RETURNED MISSIONARY'S WIFE.—The Batavia Times, of July 19, announces the death, at Wyoming, of Mrs. Sarah M. Osgood, wife of the Rev. S. M. Osgood, at the age of 35 years, with the following obituary notice:—

"Mrs. Osgood became a subject of divine grace in 1834, and the year following, after deliberation, came to the conclusion to give up the endearments of home, the enjoyments of civilized and Christian society, to labor amid the darkness and degradation of heathenism. She went out in 1836, under the patronage of the Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, and after laboring for ten years, and suffering the privations and hardships incident to missionary life, on account of the failing health of her husband she returned to this country in 1846."

INFLUENCE OF READING NEWSPAPERS.—John H. Prentice, in his recent valedictory on retiring from the editorial chair, which he had filled for forty-two years, has the following sensible remarks on reading newspapers:—

"No man should be without a well-conducted newspaper. He is far behind the spirit of the age unless he reads one, is not upon an equal footing with his fellow-man who enjoys such advantage, and is disregardful of his duty to his family, in not affording them an opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of what is passing in the world, at the cheapest possible teaching. Show me the family without a newspaper, and I venture to say, that there will be manifest in that family a want of amenity of manners, and indications of ignorance most strikingly in contrast with the neighbor who allows himself such a rational indulgence. Young men, especially, should read newspapers. If I were a boy, even of twelve years, I would read a newspaper weekly, though I had to work by torchlight to earn money enough to pay for it. The boy who reads well, will learn to think and analyze; and, if so, he will be almost sure to make a man of himself, hating vicious indulgence, which reading is calculated to beget a distaste for."

DEATH FROM FEAR.—The Covington (Ky.) Journal relates the following instance of the effect produced upon the nervous system by the sensation of fear. The facts, it says, are derived from an undoubted source, and the case is made public in order more impressively to indicate the importance of maintaining a control over the mind, and discarding all unnecessary fear and alarm:—

"A lady in this city, who enjoyed ordinary health previous to the appearance of the prevailing epidemic, became alarmed on its advent, and suffered her mind to dwell on the subject until she became exceedingly sensitive and nervous. Every case she heard of increased this morbid condition of the mind and body. Finally, on being told of the death of an immediate neighbor, she clasped her hands in agony, and exclaimed, 'My time has come!' She then went to bed, and a physician was called in; but no effort could relieve her of the conviction that she had the cholera, and that she was to die of it. Subsequently, indeed, there were manifestations of cholera in the case, but the medical attendant had no doubt they were induced solely by fear. Thus she died within three days after she took her bed."

DR. MUZZY ON BRANDY.—The following remarks on the use of brandy, as a prophylactic in cholera, were made during a discussion on cholera, in the Ohio State Medical Convention recently held in Columbus:—

"Upon boats on the river, the increase of brandy drinking, consequent upon the approach of the cholera has been frightful, and the mortality on board those has been terrible and unprecedented. One boat lost forty-three, another forty-seven, and a third fifty-nine of its passengers and crew. To the temperate, it is an active exciting cause. For the drinker, it is not advisable to drop off the use suddenly; but the quantity should be diminished rather than increased.

"In Albany, in 1832, the cholera was very severe and fatal. Of 336 cases, all but 16 terminated fatally. Of these 140 were intemperate, 55 free drinkers, 131 moderate, 5 strictly temperate—but all but one immoderate eaters, two members of the temperance societies, and one idiot. In that city, which had a population of 26,000 inhabitants, 8,000 were members of the temperance societies of whom only two died. With these facts in view, who can doubt the danger of spirit drinking."

ANTI-MONOPOLY.—The people of Elizabethtown, New Jersey, are out upon Monopolies. They held a meeting at the Court House on the 19th of July, "for the purpose of considering the means to be adopted to destroy the undue influence exercised by the Camden and Amboy Railroad Company, over the Legislature of New Jersey, and to devise the means of rescuing from the grasp of that heretofore irresistible monopoly, the rights of the people of New Jersey sold for a term of years, by a usurping Legislature, to the said monopoly, for ten cents a head on every stranger, or so called 'through passenger,' crossing the State." Spirited addresses were delivered on the occasion, and a series of resolutions was adopted, among which was one in favor of holding an Anti-Monopoly State Convention at Trenton on the 5th of September next.

SECESSION FROM THE ROMISH CHURCH.—At Buffalo, N. Y., on a recent Sunday, there was a public secession of between two and three hundred persons from the German Roman Catholic Church, who entered into a new organization called the Primitive Church. A Mr. Giustiana, who was elected pastor of the organization, has been laboring in Buffalo for some time past, and the result is as above indicated. We are not advised of the points of difference, except that the new organization adopt the Bible as a book of general instruction among its people—in opposition to its exclusion by the old Church.

BLACK AND WHITE INCENDIARIES.—The recent alarming increase of incendiarism in Louisiana, has induced the under-writers in New Orleans to offer a reward for persons concerned in setting fire to any buildings within the State. It is curious to notice, what a difference is made even there between white free men and slaves. They offer three thousand dollars for the conviction of any white person of mature age, and only two hundred for the conviction of any slave. Why such a difference? Is it fifteen times easier to convict a slave than a free man? If so, the Lord have mercy on the slaves.

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.—The "Macedonian," the organ of the Baptist Missionary Union, gives news of unusual interest from the Baptist mission stations among the Karens. At a recent meeting of thirty-five native preachers, they voted to look hereafter to the native churches themselves for their support,—doing it as matter of Christian self-denial, that the Board might spend the more on other fields of labor. Mr. Abbott communicates this intelligence. Mr. Binney gives interesting particulars of the progress of the work around Maulmain, and Mr. Ingalls writes joyously from Aracan.

WARNINGS.—The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser tells of nearly an entire family swept off by the cholera at Black Rock; five children out of six having died in one day, after eating pretty freely of green apples. They had moved from Buffalo to escape the cholera, and became victims of their own imprudence. The same paper says that two men in Buffalo recently ate cherries on a wager, one of whom died of cholera on the following morning. Such warnings ought to deter even those whom reason fails to influence, from indulging their appetites with things which are so notoriously unhealthy.

LIBERAL BEQUEST.—The Treasurer of the American Missionary Association, Lewis Tappan, Esq., of this City, acknowledges the receipt of $1,510 66 cash, and a note secured by mortgage for $3,015, making $4,525 66, being a legacy from the late Dr. Jesse Wheaton, of Dedham, Mass., for the support of the Mendi Mission, West Africa.

RETURN OF A METHODIST MISSIONARY.—Rev. H. Hickok, Missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church to China, whose health compelled him to retire from the mission field, arrived in this city week before last.

Fatal Accident.

CLARKVILLE, Madison Co., N. Y., July 21, 1849.

On the 13th inst., at 1 o'clock, P. M., as Mrs. Gallop and the wife of Jesse Greenman were coming into this village from the north, in a one-horse wagon, they had nearly succeeded in crossing the high bridge over the Beaver Creek, near Col. Phineas Burdick's mills, when the horse suddenly stopped, and commenced backing, perhaps on account of its near approximation to the wagon which just preceded it, in which were the widow of Capt. Israel Putnam Lewis, her daughter-in-law, and two small children. Mrs. Gallop guided the horse in its retrograde movement across the stream some forty or fifty feet, almost to a place of safety, when the wagon cramped, and ran off the bridge the lower side, carrying with it the two ladies and the horse. Mrs. Gallop (the driver and owner of the team) fell directly under the wagon, and the horse on it; and, strange to say, she escaped almost unhurt. A part of one of the thills was broken by the fall, and the part remaining attached to the wagon pierced through the body of the horse, passing through its heart and lungs, and killing it instantly. Mrs. Greenman fell about six feet north of the wagon and horse, breaking her neck by the fall; she of course died almost instantaneously, though slight signs of life were perceivable some five minutes after the fall. She was a very worthy woman, and leaves a husband and several small children to lament her loss. She was on her way to the village to purchase a dress designed as a present for her venerable mother, residing in one of the Western States.

H. B. C.

INTEMPERANCE AND ITS RESULTS.

Illustrations of the sad results of intemperance are plenty enough at all times. But it is not often that a single week furnishes two such as we give below. Let those who practice or encourage the use of intoxicating drinks, look at these pictures, and take warning.

Affair at Rathbun's Hotel.

Lomis Rathbun, the only son of Mr. Benjamin Rathbun, proprietor of the Rathbun Hotel, N. Y., and formerly of Buffalo, is 35 years of age, has contracted habits of intemperance, and drinks sometimes to excess. His intoxication is followed by terrible fits of delirium tremens, and at such times he has as little control over his actions as a lunatic. Every effort of his father to reclaim him from his dissolute life having proved ineffectual; he resided at the hotel when he chose, and did as he pleased. On Wednesday morning of last week, about six o'clock, he got up out of bed, after a week of hard drinking, took up a razor, and attempted to cut his own throat, which his unhappy mother, who had been watching his motion, naturally tried to prevent. It is said that he cried "Good-bye, mother!" before drawing the instrument across his throat, which he wounded severely, but not dangerously. His aged mother seized his hand, and screamed aloud with uncontrollable terror. The unfortunate victim of ardent spirit instantly turned round upon his alarmed and agitated parent, attempted to take her life, exclaiming, "D—n her, I'll kill her!" and wounded her so severely in the throat, with the razor she had vainly endeavored to arrest from him, that her life was for a time despaired of. He cut her throat from ear to ear. One of the waiters heard her groans, and succeeded in dragging the maniac off her mangled body, and securing him. She was weltering in her own blood, and her miserable son was bleeding very profusely. There are now strong hopes of Mrs. Rathbun's recovery. Her son was conveyed immediately to the lunatic asylum, Blackwell's Island.

Affair at Cincinnati, Ohio.

On the 20th of July, a most revolting instance of depravity occurred at Cincinnati, Ohio. It seems that James M. Summons, a degenerate son of a noble sire, (Capt. J. Blair Summons,) has been for years a worthless vagabond and a loafer, although everything has been done by the father to aid and place him in respectable and prosperous business, and that, although cast off by all others, he has been still succored by his indulgent parent, and allowed to remain an inmate of the family.

In the afternoon of July 20th, before the hour of tea, this wretch went to a drug store and asked the young man in attendance for "five cents worth of rat poison." The clerk answered that they did not sell so small a quantity, but that they kept ten cent packages put up on purpose, one of which he bought. To prevent any mistake, these packages were marked with a label, on which was printed a death's head and crossbones, with the word "Poison" in large letters. Going home, he proceeded to the kitchen, where the servant, an intelligent girl, was preparing tea for the family. He made several attempts to get her out on various errands, which she, being busy, declined. At last, the girl having a sore foot, he recommended that she should go and procure a piece of meat, which he would bind on the wound, and it would cure it. It was some minutes ere she returned, and it is supposed that during the interval he took occasion to empty the package of poison into the tea-kettle. Tea was prepared, and the whole family, with the exception of the perpetrator of this diabolical deed, consisting of father, mother, children, and grand-children, and persons employed in the family, sat down—and all partook of the dose prepared for them. After the family had taken tea, a little girl, a grandchild of Capt. Summons, was taken with violent vomiting. Soon after every member of the family, numbering eight in all, was attacked in the same way. Medical aid was promptly procured, and the attake immediately pronounced to be the administration of poison. Notwithstanding every effort was made, Mrs. Rives, a seampstress in the family, died early the next morning, and there is no doubt but that one of the grandchildren, and perhaps others, are dead before this.

Obituary Notice.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As the friends and relatives of sister CATHARINE BURDICK, whose death is noticed in the Sabbath Recorder of July 19th, are scattered through some eight or ten of the States where your paper is read, it is desired that a more extended family history should be published.

Sister Burdick was the daughter of Samuel Clarke and Chloe Clarke, late of Brookfield, N. Y. The former died Feb. 13, 1830, aged 75 years; and the latter, March 19, 1833, aged 73 years. Both parents embraced the Saviour in early life, and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Westerly, R. I. In the spring of 1802, they, with the most of their children, (then consisting of seven sons and two daughters) moved to and settled in Brookfield, N. Y., at that time an almost unbroken forest. In 1806, another sister was added to the family. Of that family of ten brothers and sisters, all yet live, except sister Catharine, who was the oldest of the children.

Those acquainted with the early history of Rhode Island, will recollect, that of the first settlers on the Island, in 1637, were four brothers, Rev. John Clarke (the founder and first Pastor of the First Baptist Church in Newport) and his brothers, Thomas, Joseph, and Carew. Joseph Clarke, (the youngest brother except Carew,) a few years after the settlement of Newport, removed to Westerly, R. I. He was the ancestor of sister Burdick. The two first-named persons in the list of Church members at the formation of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., in 1692, were John Maxson, Jr., and Joseph Clarke, Sen., the maternal and paternal ancestors of sister Burdick. Her great-grandfather was Rev. Thomas Clarke.

H. B. C.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY RETURNED.—The Schooner Margarette Ann arrived at Norfolk, Va., last week, having on board Rev. I. J. Roberts, missionary from China, with his family.

THE CHOLERA.

There was a slight decrease of cholera in New York last week, and the general opinion appears to be, that the ravages of the disease will gradually diminish from this time. The following summary of weekly reports made by the City Inspector since the middle of May, will show how the number of deaths has increased during the excessively hot weather.

	Deaths by Cholera.	Total deaths.
Week ending May 18,	1	323
" " 25,	13	294
" " June 2,	29	270
" " 9,	121	409
" " 16,	145	425
" " 23,	148	498
" " 30,	286	784
" " July 7,	317	702
" " 14,	484	991
" " 21,	714	1049
" " 28,	692	1352

At Philadelphia, the Cholera is said to be decreasing. On the 26th of July there were 38 cases and 9 deaths.

At Cincinnati, also, the epidemic is represented to be diminishing. There were 31 deaths from Cholera on the 25th of July.

At St. Louis, the deaths by Cholera, 31 on the 24th, and 14 on the 27th, which shows a considerable falling off.

The Cholera at Alton, Belville, Greenville, Lebanon, and Hillsborough, Ill., is subsiding gradually. The towns located on the banks of the Illinois River are now free from the epidemic.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamer Europa arrived at Jersey City on the 27th of July, with seven days later news from all parts of Europe. She brings dates from Rome to July 8th, Vienna 8th, Paris 12th, London 13th.

England.

In England, the weather has been unusually hot. July 9th is said to have been the hottest day ever experienced in London, and in Liverpool and vicinity the heat has been not less excessive. On the 9th, at Liverpool, the thermometer stood at 86° in the shade, and 120° in the sun.

The cholera is steadily on the increase. The week before the steamer left, there were 152 deaths in London, and in Liverpool 201. The disease has broken out in a very fatal form in Southampton, and seems to infect the entire southern coast.

The growing crops throughout England and Ireland are represented as giving good promise of an unusually abundant harvest. The potato disease has appeared but in a very limited number of places in Ireland, and at present gives no alarm; while the weather both in England and Ireland is all that could be desired.

Ireland.

The Irish papers contain most distressing accounts of intense suffering and misery that prevail in many parts of that ill-fated country—particularly in the south-western districts. All the work-houses are filled to repletion, and thousands of persons appear actually without the means to keep body and soul together until the crops are available, which fortunately will, from present appearance, be very early. The distress will be severe almost beyond example.

Messrs. O'Brien, Meagher, McManus, and O'Donohue have embarked on board the war schooner Swift, which immediately sailed for Van Dieman's Land. Previous to the departure of the prisoners, they prepared and placed in the hands of a mutual friend, an address to their countrymen.

France.

The elections to fill 35 vacancies were going forward quietly, and the results, as far as ascertained, are in favor of the moderate candidates. In Paris, the ministerial candidates were all returned. In the Provinces, Lamartine and a few Socialists have secured their election.

A great deal is said in France about the intervention of England relative to Roman affairs. The Marquis of Normandy has presented a note to the French Government from Lord Palmerston, demanding explicit explanation as to the intentions of France with regard to Rome, how long it is intended that the French army shall occupy the Roman territory, and whether it is resolved to support the Pope.

The Legitimist and Jesuit journals are setting up a cry for the absolute and unconditional restoration of the Pope, but the correspondent of the Times says upon reliable information that no such folly is intended by the French Government.

The present accounts of the cholera are favorable. The deaths have fallen to fewer than 30 per day and are daily decreasing. The total number of deaths in Paris and suburbs since the breaking out of the cholera in January last is said to have been more than 20,000.

Italy.

The Roman Assembly, in its last sitting, unanimously voted the Constitution of the Republic, and ordered it to be deposited in the Capitol as the expression of the unanimous wish of the Roman people. The Constitution is, by a vote of the Assembly, to be engraved on marble, and placed in the Capitol. They also ordered a funeral service to be celebrated in St. Stephen's for those who had fallen in defense of the Republic.

A dispatch from Gen. Oudinot gives an elaborate and vivid description of the final assault made on the 29th June. The Romans fought most desperately, leaving 400 dead with 125 prisoners in the hands of the French, including 19 officers of all ranks. The French admit only 9 killed and 110 wounded.

Venice still holds out against the Austrians, and continues to make a vigorous resistance. Provisions are very scarce. Nothing but black bread, half baked, to be got, meat and wine are become luxuries. Still a calm determination to resist reigns among the Venetians.

Denmark.

A signal victory has been gained by the Danes over the Holsteiners in North Jutland, which is announced to the Minister of Marine of Copenhagen in the following telegraphic dispatch from the Commander of the Danish squadron:—"The Commandant of Frederica has demanded transport vessels for upward of 1,800 prisoners, 30 of whom were officers. The enemy is totally defeated and our victorious army is pursuing them. All the enemy's battering guns are taken, and several pieces of field artillery."

It is said that the Danes have retaken Kolonig.

LATEST FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamer Cresent City, which left Chagres on the 17th of July, arrived at New York on the 27th, with thirty-two days later news from California.

The steamship Panama left San Francisco the 20th June, with about 100 passengers and about $500,000 in gold dust and specie. She arrived at Panama on the night of the 11th July, and would leave again on the 1st of August.

There is but one opinion among the passengers with regard to the gold in California; it is still found in considerable quantities, but it is only the hard-working chaps that can stand the fatigue of digging it. There was no sickness at the mines, and every thing was going on quietly. The number of persons there is estimated at between twenty and thirty thousand—about one half foreigners. Business at San Francisco is very dull, and drygoods and provisions selling below their original cost. Lumber is still in great demand, selling for $350 per M. Rents are enormously high, and rather on the rise.

The following letter, which appeared in the "Placer Times," of May 12, will show how they do things on the Consumne River, California:—

"On about the 20th ult. I left my rancho with a party of Indians in my employ for the mines. After making such arrangements as were necessary, I left them and returned. About the 26th, a party of white men came to their camp, or where they were at work, and killed an Indian while working with a crowbar, and on his knees; they then shot another through the arm, who tried to escape. After a run of a short distance, he was shot through the thigh, when trying to conceal himself, his brains were beat out with rocks and stones. Some white men who were about my camp, on hearing the alarm, ran toward the spot, and met the party coming back, who warned them not to go farther; the Indians were fighting, they said. They minded them not, but proceeded to where they found the bodies of the slain Indians, the remainder of the party having fled.

"The company of whites now followed on the track of the Indians, and about ten miles from my house, overtook a party traveling to their home, and surrounded them without difficulty; in a few minutes commenced separating the men from the women and children, when, apprehending danger, the men broke and attempted to escape. Three were allowed to get off, the rest, fourteen in number, were slaughtered on the spot. The same day, or next, about noon, the party of whites arrived and encamped about 150 yards from my house. Myself, wife and cousin, were out to bury a member of the family, deceased, and previous to leaving the ground I was informed that a party of armed men were at the house and about to kill the Indians there. I returned with my wife, and a few moments after the four Indians left the grave and passed within thirty steps of the camp, when they were fired upon, and one fell dead, another passed not ten steps from my door wounded, the remaining two escaped. The captain of the company came to my house shortly after and requetsed me to kill a beef for his men; I refused, and they soon after raised camp.

"The next morning, I was called by my wife to see two men who were riding rapidly toward the south; in a few minutes they wheeled and galloped hard back. Then I saw Indians running to take shelter in the brush; I sent for them, and they came and told me that a party of white men had taken a small party of women and children prisoners. Where, or for what purpose, I am unable to say. I, with four Indian servants, buried 15 Indians, slain, and found the remains of one partly burned. Mr. Thomas Rhodes, with the assistance of two or three Indians, buried the bodies of the first two killed. The white men report having killed 27 before coming to the house. Twenty-two men, and thirty-four women and children, are yet missing from the rancheria."

Wm. Daylor.

Extraordinary Freak of Lightning.——During the severe thunderstorm on Sunday, says the Macon (Ga.) Journal, the wife of Major Henry Wood, who resides about half a mile from the city, on the Houston road, had a most remarkable and providential escape. She was standing in the garden near the house, having on her person at the time a gold watch, with a gold guard chain which passed round the neck. The electric fluid struck the chain, melting it entirely. From the chain it passed through the watch, partially destroying it. Thence it escaped down her clothing, doing no farther injury until it reached the shoes, which were literally torn to pieces. Mrs. Wood was, of course, knocked senseless at the time, but under the usual remedies, soon after partially recovered, and is doing well. She was severely scorched around the neck, immediately where the chain rested, and was also injured in one of her feet, but in other respects escaped unhurt. We mention particulars in this case, as it is unquestionably more remarkable than any we have ever seen upon record.

Great Freshet in Kentucky.—A correspondent of the Mount Sterling (Ky.) Whig gives an account of a tremendous freshet and loss of property in Morgan County, in that State, on the 12th ult. The flood was confined to two creeks, the Middle and Johnson's Fork of Licking River. The farms were literally torn up, fencing all gone in the bottoms, houses washed away, horses, cattle, swine, &c., drowned, and the inhabitants barely escaping with their lives, some by swimming ashore, and others by clinging to the tops of their houses. So far as heard from no person was drowned. The whole country on these creeks is one continual scene of desolation, and the inhabitants look like specters among the ruins. The crops, that looked so fine and promising, are all swept away, and the want and destitution will be severely felt.

Abduction from New Orleans.—The New Orleans papers contain long accounts of an abduction case, in which the Spanish Consul for Havana is charged with having taken an active and dishonorable part. It is staied that Francisco Rey, late jailor at the Havana, having forfeited his life by conniving at the escape of three State prisoners, fled to New Orleans. Secret emissaries were sent by the Government to snatch him from the protection of our flag, and bear him back to death; and the Spanish Consul is accused of having assisted in the infamous work. They succeeded in decoying Rey from his house, made him so drunk that he was uncouscious of the design upon his liberty, and while in this state put him aboard a schooner, and sent him in irons to Havana.

On the other hand the Consul has published a statement which puts another face on the things. According to this statement, one Vincente Fernandez was imprisoned in Havana for a fraudulent bankruptcy to the amount of over $200,000. Rey, whose true name is Garcia, was the keeper of the jail in which Fernandez was confined. Rey consented to assist Fernandez in escaping from prison, and was himself abducted by the agents of Fernandez, and, together with the bankrupt, placed on board an American vessel and brought to New Orleans, Fernandez promising him $12,000. Upon reaching this city, Fernandez left immediately for Mexico, Rey remaining here without a dollar. Finding himself destitute, he applied to the Spanish Consul and offered to reveal all he knew respecting Fernandez and to return to Havana, provided the Captain-General of that Island would grant him a free pardon for having assisted in the escape of a prisoner. The Spanish Consul writes to Havana, obtains a promise of pardon, for Rey or Garcia, communicates it to him, and Rey accordingly left of his own free accord, with his passport, as appears from his declaration, from the communication from the Captain-General's office, and from the delivery of Garcia's passport under the same.

Shipwreck—Thirteen Persons Starved to Death.—By the Emma Sherrat, which arrived at London on the 11th July, from Sydney, particulars have been received relative to the loss of the British ship Sarah Crisp, Captain Taylor, master, and the appalling sufferings of the crew, thirteen of whom perished from starvation. The Emma Sherrat, on her outward voyage to Hong-Kong, perceiving a vessel in distress, bore down to her assistance, and she proved to be the unfortunate vessel in question. She was leak-laden and water-logged, almost a perfect wreck. Her masts were gone, as well as every thing on deck. With much care, 19 persons, in a shocking state of exhaustion, were taken off the wreck by the Emma Sherrat's boats. They proved to be Captain Taylor, the master, the chief mate, and 17 seamen. The sufferings had been truly awful, having been twenty-seven nights and days on the wreck with nothing to subsist on excepting a monkey and two fishes. All the water they had was about a couple of buckets, which they caught in some old canvass. The second mate and twelve seamen had died from exhaustion. The ship's loss was attributed to a plank starting, as she filled in a very short time, and turned over on her side. The crew jumped on her beam as she went over, and there held on until daylight, when they succeeded in righting the wreck by cutting away the mast.

Singing in Church.—The Wilmington (Del.) Republican of the 19th says: "Quite an unfortunate dispute has arisen between the members of the Bethel Church in Brandywine Hundred, and the choir. Owing to the choir, the other portion of the congregation were unable to participate in the singing, and on complaint of some of the members the matter was brought before the trustees, who decided to dispense with the choir, by a vote of eight to one. Previous to the commencement of worship on the next Sunday, July 1, the choir, notwithstanding they had been notified of the decision of the trustees, took their seats as usual, and commenced singing, when there were some objections made, and finally a push was given, knocking a note-book on the floor, which was then kicked. After considerable recrimination, harmony was restored, and the minister was listened to most attentively. A criminal suit was, however, instituted, and the whole party brought to Esquire Johnson. The hearing lasted nine hours and a half, when the anti-choir party were bound over in the sum of two hundred dollars each, to answer at the next term of Court."

Great Fatality.—In a little settlement between Ohio City and Charleston, Mo., every member of three families, numbering thirteen persons in all, died of the cholera. Their names were Hill, Welch, and Brecken. A Doctor named Myers, who had been attending them, was also taken with the disease, and died alone. The bodies were found in the houses, and in too decomposed a state to be placed in the coffins provided for them. They were buried as they were found. The three or four inhabitants not taken with the disease, fled. In all the instances of great fatality of which we have read, resulting from the cholera, this appears comparatively the greatest.

Texan Punishment.—At Rio Grande City, a short time ago, while in a fandango ballroom, a man by the name of Jack Mills committed an unprovoked murder upon the body of a respectable Mexican citizen of that place—deliberately shooting him down with his revolver. This act so exasperated the citizens of Rio Grande city, when taken in connection with the former acts and threats made by this man, (Mills,) that a meeting was convened and resolutions passed that he should be exterminated. A committee for this purpose was appointed, who most fatally performed their mission—piercing him with full thirty balls!

Curious Disposition of Money.—Mr. David Dunlap died at Portland, in Calloway County, (Mo.) a few days since. It was known that he was possessed of a considerable amount of money, but none of it could be found about his clothes or baggage. Some days after, it was recollected that he had pockets in an undershirt, which had not been taken off at his death, and it was conjectured that the treasure might be found there. Acting under this impression, the grave was opened, the shirt examined, and $2,225 found in this pocket.

Indian Outrages.—A telegraphic dispatch, dated St. Louis, July 27, says:—

Capt. Hughes, who was at Salt Lake, left on the 18th June to come back to the United States. On his way from Fort Kearney, which he left on the 7th, when thirty miles this side of the Fort, his party was surrounded by 500 Cheyennes and Sioux, who robbed the party of their teams, provisions, and every thing they had. The Indians were in pursuit of the Pawnees, for the purpose of giving them battle. Two days afterward they met the Pawnees, numbering 700 warriors, ready to encounter their enemies, and confident of destroying them.

A company of emigrants from Dayton, Ohio, was attacked a few days previous, by the Pawnees, on the Platte Bottom. A fight took place between the parties, in which five Indians were killed and one Buckeye wounded, when the Indians, having had enough, withdrew, leaving the whites masters of the field.

A Mr. Williams with a party left Salt Lake for the United States on the 6th May last. When they had come to about 300 miles the other side of Fort Laramie, they were attacked by the Indians, and robbed of horses and outfit.

Atmospheric Electricity.—Dr. J. L. Comstock, of Hartford, Ct., has recently put forth several statements to substantiate his theory that there will be little thunder and lightning in and about those places which are traversed by railway tracks and telegraphic wires, for the reason that the metalic surfaces constantly attract the electricity of the clouds, and dissipate the power that would otherwise result in explosions. It is stated that in Hartford, since the building of railroads and the erection of telegraphic wires, there has been a remarkable scarcity of thunderstorms. During the time extending from the winter of 1847 to October last, not one severe storm of this description occurred, and lightning was seen but three times from June to October.

Suicide at Sangerfield, N. Y.—The Utica Observer says that Rev. Lorin Haven recently left his father's house, at Sangerfield Center, after breakfast, for the purpose of taking a walk, as was his custom; and not returning, the family toward night became alarmed, made search for him, and found him in a corn-field near by, dead, with his throat cut, evidently the work of his own hand. Mr. Haven graduated at Hamilton College a few years ago, with a good reputation for scholarship. He subsequently studied theology at Princeton. He had been married about a week, and was visiting with his wife at his father's. He was a young man of exemplary moral deportment, estimable in all his private relations, and gave promise of a brilliant and useful career.

SUMMARY.

A miserable and silly hoax was practiced upon the people of Columbus, Ohio, on the 20th of July. A telegraphic dispatch was received from Washington, saying, "General Taylor died of cholera this morning." Two of the papers immediately got out extras, by which the news was extensively circulated. But the next morning proved the whole thing to be a hoax.

A combination is about to be formed of the owners of steamboats and propellers on Lakes Erie, Huron and Michigan, and the Central Railroad Company of Michigan, by which the present ruinous competition may be prevented. The steamers, it is stated, have, with few exceptions, lost money, and are driven to form this combination in self-defense.

One of the leading conservative London morning papers states that M. Thiers contemplates making a demonstration shortly in favor of the Ex-King of the French. It is said that he will head a large number of the National Guard, and members of the Legislative Assembly, who will ask leave of absence from their duties, and proceed to London en masse and tender to the late Sovereign the renewed expression of their homage.

The Bangor Whig says that the Lead Mine recently discovered at Bucksport, Me., is found to extend across the river, and the specimens melted have proved very rich. The quantity is said to be very large, and immediate measures will be taken to work the mines systematically, and it is believed a large profit will be realized.

On Saturday night, 21st ult., another disastrous conflagration occurred at Chicago, destroying property to the value of $60,000. It broke out in the Tremont barn, and before water could be procured, had extended on all sides, until the whole block, with the exception of four brick stores on the corner of State and Lake streets, was burnt up.

At Troy, (N. Y.) on Tuesday last, a Miss Quinn was wounded by fourteen shot, fired by Mr. Joseph Daggett in mistake for a troublesome dog. He blazed away at the object without ascertaining what it was he aimed at. The lady will recover, though badly injured.

The Ontario Woolen Mills, Coburg, Upper Canada, wove and finished nearly 60,000 yards of cloths during the last six months. The year's work will be 140,000 yards. Last year, Mr. Mackechnie, the proprietor, finished, of cloths, tweeds, satinets, and flannels, 100,538 yards.

A correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate, writing from Fort Kearney, June 6, says: "Drunkards have died by hundreds on this route, and sixteen men, professing to be skillful physicians, have been buried between St. Joseph and this place in one month past.

Mr. John Owen and Miss Emeline Harman were drowned near Rockford, Ill., about the 18th, by the upsetting of the wagon in which they were trying to ford Rock River. Four other persons who were in the wagon escaped.

Father Mathew is said to have administered the pledge in New York and Brooklyn to 20,000 persons, during two weeks. He has left this city for Boston.

A lady in Georgia was recently struck with lightning, which scorched her neck, injured her watch, and destroyed her shoes. She was otherwise unhurt.

There have been 25 deaths from cholera in the Erie County Poor-house.

At South Woburn, on Saturday morning, the 14th ult., Mr. Stephen Prince, having put, a scythe edge upwards in his wagon, by the sudden starting of his horse, was thrown from his seat backwards upon the tool, which cut a gash in his side immediately under the left lung, thirteen inches in length and about three inches in depth! His left arm was also cut to the bone a little above the elbow.

The Banner of Ulster publishes an account of an ill-fated couple, who, while enjoying a walk together on the evening of their bridal day, (Friday,) were overtaken by a heavy shower, from which they sought a shelter beneath the shelving bank of a sand-pit, which fell upon and entombed them alive. On Saturday morning they were found buried beneath some ten or twelve tons of sand. They were both committed to one grave.

Seven of the prisoners confined in the jail at Easton, Pa., succeeded in making their escape last week. They made a hole in the wall by means of a table knife and the wooden handle of a shovel, being occupied in the work only half an hour.

Mrs. Sarah Pallett died in Princess Anne County, Va., on Wednesday. She was born on the fourth day of July, 1745, and died on the fourth day of July, 1849—having lived precisely 104 years.

The place of the next Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, has been changed from Syracuse to Pittsfield, Mass., to commence on the 11th of September.

A writer in the Journal of Commerce estimates that seventy-five thousand Germans will arrive at New-York alone this year, and that on an average each person will bring forty dollars in coin—making an aggregate of three millions of dollars!

A telegraphic dispatch of the 17th inst. from St. Louis, says a Mormon train, comprising 400 wagons and 5,000 persons, was crossing at Council Bluffs, a few days since, preparatory to commencing the journey to the Great Salt Lake.

We learn from the Richmond Chronicle, that C. M. Clay, at the last advices, was doing quite well, though for some days previous his symptoms had been quite alarming—so much so as to create the most painful apprehensions.

The honorary degree of L.L.D. has been conferred by Granville College on Senator Thomas Corwin. The Western Reserve College has conferred the like degree on Hon. Peter Hitchcock.

The deficiency in the wheat crop of Ohio this season, it is now pretty satisfactorily ascertained, will be about one-third, or from 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 bushels.

Father Mathew has been invited by President Taylor to become an inmate of the White House at Washington—the nation's guest.

Hon. Joshua R. Giddings has abandoned the idea of going to Paris, on account of the prevalence of Cholera there.

New York Markets—Monday, July 30.

Ashes—Pots $5 87 a 6 00; Pearls 6 00.

Flour and Meal—Flour, ordinary Western and State 4 68 a 4 81; mixed Western and common State 4 94 a 5 00; strait State, good Michigan, good Ohio, and favorite Indiana, 5 00 a 5 18; pure Genesee 5 25 a 5 56. Rye Flour 3 00 a 3 06. Meal, State 2 68, Jersey 2 94.

Grain—The market for wheat is inactive, without change of prices. Rye 58c. Oats 37 a 39c. Corn, 57 a 58c. for Western mixed, 60c. for Northern and Jersey Yellow.

Provisions—Prime Pork 11 00; Mess 11 00. Beef, Mess 13 50 a 14 00; Prime 10 00. Butter 7 a 10c. for Ohio, 10 a 14 for Western. Cheese 2 a 6½c.

DIED.

At Rockville, R. I., July 24th, of consumption, Mrs. Almira Browning, widow of the late Matthew S. Browning, aged 33 years. Sister B. was a devoted member of the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church of Hopkinton. By a consistent Christian life, patience under affliction, resignation to the painful duty of leaving a little son and daughter orphans, and her triumphant hope in death, she has given full evidence of being prepared to enter into the joy of her Lord. C. M. L.

LETTERS.

W. B. Gillett, Lucius Crandall, H. W. Stillman, W. Woodbury, J. Maxson, Jr., H. B. Clarke, S. S. Griswold, I. D. Titsworth, J. Spencer, C. M. Lewis, B. S. Tuttle, Chas. Potter, Jeremiah Barritt, D. P. Curtis.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Berlin, N. Y.		Petersburg, N. Y.
John Whitford	$5 00	Luther Clark	$5 00
Truman Saunders	5 00	Azor Estee	5 00
G. N. Greenman	5 00	Daniel Maxson	5 00
Schuyler Greenman	5 00	Aaron Coon	5 00
Benjamin Vars	5 00
Bradock Hull	5 00	Mystic, Ct.
Russel W. Green	5 00	Wm. M. Barber	5 00
John G. Davis	5 00	Welcome B. Lewis	5 00
Jared Green	5 00	Jos. Cottrell	5 00
Henry Green	2 00	Chas. Mallory	5 00
B. F. Randolph	2 00	Asa Fish	5 00
		Erastus W. Denison	5 00
Plainfield, N. J.
Chas. H. Stillman	5 00	Cowlesville, N. Y.
R. M. Titsworth	5 00	Jeremiah Barritt	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Winter Green, Berlin,	$2 00	to vol. 6	No. 52
Charles Saunders "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Nathan Vars "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Reilay Potter "	2 00	" 6	" 52
David Potter "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Truman Saunders "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Amelia Green "	1 00	" 6	" 52
G. N. Greenman "	1 00	" 6	" 26
Joseph Davis "	1 00	" 6	" 31
Daniel Maxson, Petersburg,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Mrs. D. Maxson "	2 00	" 7	" 5
J. B. Maxson, Stephentown,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Job Spencer, Corning,	1 00	" 6	" 31
Thomas Ashley, New York,	1 00	" 6	" 26
Jer. Barritt, Cowlesville,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Harvey Maxson, Adams,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Henry Bunce, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. A. Morse, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
G. P. Maxson, Columbia, Ark.	2 00	" 6	" 52
C. Matterson, Rockville, R. I.	2 00	" 6	" 52
G Greenman, Mystic, Ct.	2 00	" 6	" 52
C. Greenman, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
T. S. Greenman, "	2 00	" 6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

B. S. Tuttle, LeGrange, O.	$5 00	to vol 5	No. 52
C. H. Stillman, Plainfield, N. J.	5 00	" 5	" 52
J. C. Harris, Bridgeton, N. J.	2 50	" 5	" 52
G. P. Maxson, Columbia, Ark.	1 00	" 5	" 52
Abner Johnson, Dallas, Texas	2 50	" 5	" 52
G. N. Greenman, Berlin	5 00	" 5	" 52
D. P. Hull, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
Benjamin Clark, Petersburg	1 00	" 5	" 52
John Clark, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
T. A. Kenyon, "	2 00	" 5	" 52

Receipts for the Tract Society.

The Treasurer of the American Sabbath Tract Society ackowledges the receipt of the following sums since his last report in the Recorder:—

From 1st Church, Hopkinton, R. I.	$7 00
" 1st Church, Verona, N. Y.	3 00
" Wm. Maxson, Waterford, Ct.	1 00
" David Rogers, 2d, "	1 00
" Oliver Maxson, Jr., "	1 00
" James Rogers, "	50
" B. F. Rogers, "	50

T. B. STILLMAN, Treasurer.

Notice.

The Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Association requests that all communications, intended to aid him in making up the Annual Report, be forwarded to him so that they may be received at least two weeks before the time of the Annual Meeting. Address to the care of Geo. B. Utter. THOS. B. BROWN, Cor. Sec.

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the Session.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution was passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken placo during the three years.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Bruce's New York Type-Fouy.ndr

PRINTING TYPES are now sold at Bruce's New York Type-Foundry, at the following very low prices, for approved six months' notes:—

	ROMAN.	TITLE, &C.	SHADED, &C
Pica,	per lb. 30 cts.	52 cts.	90 cts.
Small Pica,	32	56	95
Long Primer,	34	60	100
Bourgeois,	37	66	108
Brevier,	42	74	120
Minion,	48	84	132
Nonpareil,	58	100	150
Agate,	72	120	180
Pearl,	108	160	220
Diamond,	160	250	300

A liberal discount for cash in hand at the date of the Invoice.

We have now on our shelves, ready for sale in various sized fonts

60,000 lb. Roman and Italic type.
40,000 lb. Fancy type.
4,000 lb. Script and Running-hand.
5,000 lb. Ornaments.
15,000 ft. Type-metal Rule.
15,500 ft. Brass Rule.

Presses, Chases, Cases, Wood Type, Ink, &c., furnished at the lowest manufacturers' prices, either for cash or credit.

☞ For sale, several good second-hand Cylinder and Platen Power Presses, Standing Presses, Hand Printing Presses, &c.

GEORGE BRUCE & CO.,
13 Chambers-street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED.

A number of active and intelligent men are wanted, who can furnish satisfactory references, to act as local or traveling agents, in procuring applications for Life and Health Insurance. To men of energy this is a good opportunity, as a liberal commission is paid on all risks obtained. For farther information, apply personally, or by letter—(post paid, as none other will be taken from the post-office)—to

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
206 Fulton-st., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Miscellaneous.

From the Dubin Commercial Journal.

THOUGHTS

ON SEEING A SPIDER BUILD ITS WEB IN A SKULL.

BY WILLIAM STEDMAN.

Eyeless the socket, and empty the cell,
Ghastly the relic thou workest in well.
Weaving thy web in the cavernous bone,
Usurping the seat of the soul, and the throne
Where the mind swayed the scepter—the scepter has [flown,
And the ossified cell, with its portals of bone,
Marrowless, marrowless.

This head was a woman's—perhaps she was fair,
With her love-lighting eyes, and her dark flowing hair;
With spirit as pure as the seraphic ray
That circles round Hesperus, herald of day;
Or the halo that, shining so softly and bright,
Beams forth from the brow of an angel of light.
Rise, spirit refined, from thy habit of clay!
See, this was thy home—now the home of decay!
Bright soul, once thou lived in this dome-turned wall—
The spider now gluts in its desolate hall,
And the worm, base Vandal, has plundered the shrine
Of the beauty that dwelt on this temple of thine.

* * * * * * *

So Death has been quaffing the horrible bowl
Once teeming with life and the brilliance of soul,
Vain man! in this world of gloom thou art bright
As the glow-worm that shines in the shadows of night,
But the rays of another, effulgent with God,
Betrays the base insect that crawls on the sod.

INCIDENTS OF A COLLISION AT SEA.

At a meeting of the members of the Liverpool Shipwreck and Humane Society, it was resolved to present one of the medals of the Society to R. B. Forbes, Esq., of Boston, United States, for his courage and humanity in leaping overboard from the Europa, on the occasion of the fatal collision, and assisting to save the lives of the passengers in that unfortunate vessel, the Charles Bartlett. Mr. Forbes acknowledges the receipt of the medal by giving an interesting account of the collision. After expressing his thanks, he says :—

"At two o'clock of the day named, not being well, I retired to my state-room, in the forward cabin, and laid down with my clothes on, on the settee, and soon fell asleep. I was suddenly awakened by a crash and a shock which I could not misunderstand. I rushed upon deck, and to the port bow of our ship, where the most appalling spectacle presented itself; the bow of our ship appeared to be half way through the bark, having entered her just abaft the main rigging, on the port side. She had all sail set; one glance at the ill-fated bark satisfied me that she must instantly go down, and that no earthly power could save many of the passengers. The after hatches were obstructed by pieces of broken timber; the main hatch was entirely clear, and appeared to be filled with women and children, vainly endeavoring to get on deck. I should judge that the ladder had been knocked down in the general crash. The water at this time was rushing into the ship like a mill-race. Seeing that the only chance to save any was to lower our boats, I rushed aft, taking off my overcoat and my frock coat as I went along, on my way, and when near the after part of the port paddle box, I perceived that men were already clearing away the quarter boats. I stopped to endeavor to clear away the lifeboat, but being alone, and having nothing but a small knife to cut the lashings, I saw that my efforts would not avail in time. Just as I was abandoning the effort, I perceived a woman and a child, the latter some ten feet from the woman, floating past the paddle box. I instantly jumped down on the grating or sponson, abaft the wheel, crying to the many spectators about the main rigging for a rope; 'for God's sake give me a rope!' but every one seemed stunned and paralyzed by the sudden and awful scene. A man came floating along, alive, and partially sustained by a broken spar. The only rope thrown over, which I should otherwise have got, was thrown to him; he got hold of it, and put the noose over his shoulders, and was hauled up. The first part of this act, for the moment, took off our attention from the two floating and apparently insensible persons before alluded to, so that by the time the man was safe, the others had sunk too far to be reached. As the sails on the mainmast had not been backed, and the wind was on the starboard quarter, the ship fogged a-head and to leeward at the rate of one to one and a half knots. Supposing that the wrecked matter must be to starboard, I jumped on deck and passed immediately over to the starboard paddle-box, as low down on the sponson as I could get, and just in time to see a very stout man drifting along, partly face down, and near the top of the water. Several persons were collected on the rail, about the main shrouds, to whom I called loudly for a rope. One was thrown over, about ten or twenty feet abaft of me. I scrambled quickly along the side, and, seizing the rope, jumped for the drowning man. The rope was rather short, but luckily the ship, not being steadied by the wheels, rolled toward me. I took advantage of this, and got the rope around the man's body, and the end up, and twice passed round its own part, before the ship rolled to port again. As I was with the man, partly under water, and the time very short, this required a great effort. As the ship rolled to port, she jerked us to the side rather rudely. I cried out, 'haul up, haul up;' but it appeared on subsequent examination, that the rope I had used was the main sheet, a four inch rope, and that the upper end was fast by a moused hook to the ship's side, several feet below the gunwale, and at least eight feet below the upper or monkey rail. The effect of all this, and the continued rolling of the steamer, was to drag me and my man out of the water, and again suddenly immerse us. I could do nothing but cry 'haul up,' and endeavor at each roll in the water to shut my mouth in time and try to make the rope more secure, as it gave way a little every time we came out of the water, the man weighing at least 200 and myself 175 pounds when dry, all of which was to be supported by my hands holding two round turns of a short end passed round its own part, and slipping at each ascension. Finally, some hands succeeded in getting hold of our rope, and hauled us up so that my burden and myself were above water or nearly so. At this time I called to one of the party to come down and help me jamb the turns as the man was gradually slipping in consequence of my weight being partially on him. The individual, mistaking my order, put his foot on my hands and on the turns, and bearing down caused the man to slip out and go underboard the second time, apparently quite lifeless. I ordered the rope to be let go, and went again far under, but did not reach the body. Being now nearly exhausted, I thought it time to take care of myself, and took advantage of a boat which came to my relief. I got into her, and took the bow oar, the officer (the fourth mate I think,) putting her head toward the pieces of floating wreck. We soon discovered two persons; the first, I had the pleasure of reaching with a boat-hook; hauled him up on board, and the officer immediately went to work on him, reporting signs of life; the other person sank out of sight while we were getting the first on board. We continued to pull around among the wreck until there appeared no chance of saving any more, and some danger of losing those we had saved, unless proper means were used; it being foggy, and the ship nearly out of sight, we unwillingly gave up the search for more, and returned on board. Several hours elapsed before the man hooked up was brought round so as to speak; the other boat had, in the mean time, picked up a number, and among them the man I had been trying to save. All recovered excepting this last one. He had a wound on his head, and it was generally supposed that he received a stunning blow at the time of the collision. Although it has taken some time to write these details, only one to one-and-a-half minutes elapsed from the time I first jumped on deck until the ship went down. I was on the port sponson less than that time, and on the other side suspended to the man, perhaps altogether three or four minutes more. Had the poor woman exhibited any signs of life, or the child, I could not have resisted the impulse to go after them, without a rope or any support, and, being a poor swimmer, I might have perished, amid the confusion and noise, before any aid could have reached us."

WILLIAM PITT.

Pitt was tall and thin, with a gloomy, sneering expression. His language was cold, his intonation monotonous, his gestures passionless; yet the lucidness, and fluency of his ideas, and his logical reasoning, illuminated by sudden flashes of eloquence, made his abilities something extraordinary. I saw Pitt pretty often, as he walked across St. James's Park, from his house, on his way to King George III., who on his side, had perhaps just arrived from Windsor, after drinking beer from pewter pots with the farmers of the neighborhood; he crossed the ugly court-yard of his ugly palace in a dark carriage, followed by a few horse-guards; this was the master of the kings of Europe, as five or six merchants are the masters of India.

Pitt, in a black coat and brass-hilted sword, with his hat under his arm, went up stairs, two or three steps at a time; on his way he only saw a few idle emegres, and glancing disdainfully at us, passed on with a pale face, and head thrown back. This great financier maintained no order in his own house; he had no regular hours for his meals nor his sleep. Plunged in debt, he paid nothing, and could not make up his mind to add up a bill. A valet managed his household affairs. Ill-dressed, without pleasure, without passion, eager for power alone, he despised honors, and would be nothing but William Pitt. Lord Liverpool took me to dine at his country house in the month of June, 1822, and on his way thither, pointed out to me the small house where died in poverty the son of Lord Chatham, the statesman who brought all Europe into his pay, and distributed with his own hands all the millions of the earth. [Chataubrand.

THE BLACK HOLE OF CALCUTTA.

Then was committed that great crime—memorable for its singular atrocity, memorable for the tremendous retribution by which it was followed. The English captives were left at the mercy of the guards, and the gaurds determined to secure them in the prison of the garrison, a chamber known by the fearful name of the Black Hole. Even for a single European malefactor, that dungeon would, in such a climate, have been too close and narrow. The space was only twenty feet square. The air-holes were small and obstructed. It was the summer solstice—the season when the fierce heat of Bengal can scarcely be rendered tolerable to the natives of England, by lofty halls, and by the constant waving of fans. The number of the prisoners was 146. When they were ordered to enter the cell, they imagined that the soldiers were joking; and being in high spirits on account of the promise of the nabob to spare their lives, they laughed and jested at the absurdity of the notion. They expostulated, the entreated, but in vain. They guards threatened to cut all down who hesitated. The captives were driven into the cell at the point of the sword, and the door was instantly shut and locked upon them.

Nothing in history or fiction—not even the story which Ugulina told in the sea of everlasting ice, after he had wiped his bloody lips on the scalp of his murderer—approaches the horrors which were encountered by the few survivors of that night. They cried for mercy; they strove to burst the door. Holwell, who even in that extremity retained some presence of mind, offered large bribes to the gaolers. But the answer was that nothing could be done without the nabob's orders; that the nabob was asleep, and that he would be angry if anybody woke him. Then the prisoners went mad with despair. They trampled each other down, fought for the places at the windows—fought for the pittance of water with which the cruel mercy of their murderers mocked their agonies—raved, prayed, blasphemed, implored the guards to fire among them. The gaolers, in the mean time, held lights to the bars, and shouted with laughter at the frantic struggles of the victims. At length the tumult died away in low gaspings and moanings. The day broke; the nabob had slept off his debauch, and permitted the door to be opened; but it was some time before the soldiers could make a lane for the survivors, by piling up on each side the heap of corpses on which the burning climate had already begun to do its loathsome work. When, at length, a passage was made, twenty-three ghastly figures, such as their own mothers would not have known, came forth alive. A pit was instantly dug; the dead bodies, a hundred and twenty-three in number, were flung into it promiscuously, and covered up.

When is the letter M masculine? When it makes Ann man. When feminine? When it makes Adam madam.

NEWSPAPERS AND TRADES IN NEW YORK.

Wilson's Business Directory of New York City, for 1849–50, furnishes the following statistics of newspapers and trades :—

There are fourteen Daily Journals published in our City, all in the English tongue, except one small one in German. Three of them are specially Evening papers, and many if not most of the Morning papers publish Evening Editions. Six of them publish Semi-Weekly Editions, and there are three other Semi-Weeklies, one of them in the Spanish tongue. One Tri-Weekly is issued in French. There are seventy-three Weeklies issued here, of which ten are Weekly Editions of Daily Journals. Seven papers are issued every Sunday morning. Four are printed in the German language; the residue in English. Twelve are devoted to Religious Intelligence, three of them being of the Orthodox Congregational or Presbyterian school and the other nine of as many different denominations. Thirteen Monthly and eleven Semi-Monthly periodicals are issued—one Semi-Annually. Total number of Periodicals issued in this City, One Hundred and Twenty-one.

The number of persons engaged in some of the principal branches are as follows :—Architects and builders 123, carpenters 301, masons 40, auctioneers 64, bakers 501, black and whitesmiths 205, bookbinders 52, booksellers 190, boot and shoemakers 1,399, boot and shoe warehouses and stores 155, brokers and bankers 466, butchers 541, clothiers 253, tailors 622, coal dealers 111, confectioners 317, coopers 108, daguerreotypists 60, dentists 134, druggists, importing, wholesale and retail 321, dealers in dry goods 714, dealers in fancy goods 432, furniture makers and dealers 532, grocers and provision dealers 2,824, hardware and cutlery makers and dealers 293, hat and cap makers and dealers 264, dealers in hides and leather 91, hotels 67, jewelers 116, junk dealers 115, lawyers 1,086, lithographers 29, lockmakers 24, locksmiths 58, machinists 75, merchants—general commission 317, forwarding and transportation 77, general 68, importing and commission 54, shipping and commission 23, milliners 274, musical instrument manufacturers 87, painters, house and sign 149, landscape 5, miniature 6, ornamental 36, portrait 56, physicians 641, plumbers 73, porterhouses 1,640, cigar dealers 118, cigar importers 28, cigar makers 150, ship builders 34, silversmiths 35, stationers 53, livery stables 137, straw goods dealers 82, straw goods importers 16, straw hat manufacturers 34, tinsmiths 197, wine and liquor dealers, wholesale 153, wine and liquor importers 79.

A SAD STORY.

The Cincinnati Gazette, of July 19, tells the following story, which it says was received from a source perfectly reliable :—

A few days since there came to the Fourth-street Hospital a family of six persons, husband and wife, two sons and two daughters. The females were all sick—the mother in the last stages of cholera. The resident physician told the father and sons that the wife and mother was dying, and could not be saved. She was, however received, and with the girls cared for as well as the nature of the circumstances would admit. The girls were not very sick—but the father and sons determined to stay and nurse them and the mother. They were told they could do them no good—were already weary with watching, and to preserve their health, had better go away and get at least one night's rest. They were persuaded. On the following morning early, they called and were informed that the mother had died—but the girls were getting better. They were shown into the room where the corpse was lying. The father (a middle aged man) looked at it a few moments, calmly folded his arms, and said, "I have lived long enough in this world—I am ready to die." Efforts were made to cheer him, but to no purpose. He walked back into the yard, paced through it a short time, with his arms folded and his eyes fixed upon the ground, returned to the hospital, and said he was sick. The physician told him he thought not, urged him not to give way to his feelings, and wished him to walk out. He replied, "I am sick, and must lie down." He threw himself upon a bed, his feet and hands immediately began to cramp, and, without purging or vomiting, in a short time he was dead. Soon after the father was attacked, the two boys sunk down in the same way, and it was not long after his death before they were both in the spirit land. The girls are convalescent. This may, in a measure, account for what some have considered contagion in cholera—taking one after another in a family, until they are all gone. The progress of the disease is so rapid, many of the death-bed scenes so heart-rending, that, upon sympathetic minds, not accustomed to such scenes, they must have a powerfully dangerous influence.

LATIN AND DITCHING.

John Adams, the second President of the United States, used to relate the following anecdote :—

"When I was a boy, I had to study the Latin Grammar; but it was dull, and I hated it. My father was anxious to send me to college, and therefore I studied the grammar till I could bear it no longer; and going to my father, I told him I did not like study, and asked for some other employment. It was opposing his wishes, and he was quick in his answer. 'Well, John, if Latin grammar does not suit you, you may try ditching; perhaps that will: my meadow yonder needs a ditch, and you may put by Latin and try that.'

"This seemed a delightful change, and to the meadow I went. But I soon found ditching harder than Latin, and the first forenoon was the longest I ever experienced. That day I ate the bread of labor, and glad was I when night came on. That night I made some comparison between Latin grammar and ditching, but said not a word about it. I dug next forenoon, and wanted to return to Latin at dinner; but it was humiliating, and I could not do it. At night, toil conquered pride; and though it was one of the severest trials I ever had in my life, I told my father that, if he chose, I would go back to Latin grammar. He was glad of it; and if I have since gained any distinction, it has been owing to the two days' labor in that abominable ditch."

AGRICULTURAL.

PRUNING.

Summer pruning is sometimes necessary in order to give form and proper direction to nursery trees, and standard trees may need thinning in order to expose the fruit to light and air. Grape-vines may need thinning, owing to a want of sufficient pruning in the spring or last of fall. But in pruning trees thoroughly, particularly if large limbs are to be cut off, it is best to defer the business till the last of July, August, or the former part of September.

Late in summer, and early in autumn, the bark does not peal as it does early in the summer, when it often starts from the tree, which is injured by going into trees and stepping on limbs with hard shoes. The sap will ooze out of some trees early in summer, which not only injures them generally, but it often causes the wounded part to decay.

But in late pruning, the wood, when the branch is cut off, becomes sound and well seasoned; and though it may not heal over so readily as when cut early in summer or spring, it remains in a healthy state. This is the main consideration. What would it avail a surgeon to heal a wound at the surface, while it was festering at the bottom?

Late in summer, and early in fall, is not only the most favorable season for the benefit of the trees, but it is a convenient and pleasant season for the operation.

REMOVING LARGE STONE.

In 1843, we were clearing a piece of ground of stone by the aid of the drill and powder. One very cold day a fire was built upon a rock, which was, perhaps, 4 feet in diameter, near the wall where we were at work. By means of the heat there were large scales loosened on the top of the rock, which were taken off with a crowbar, and used for filling up the centre of the wall.

Subsequent to this, a fire was built upon the same rock, and sometime after the scales being removed, it was ascertained that the rock was broken through in two different directions, dividing it into four nearly equal parts.

The quarters being left with face sides fitted admirably for laying into wall. From this time henceforth, the drill was dispensed with. Experiment showed that one man could carry a sufficient quantity of wood to break any rock which a farmer might be desirous of removing from his fields.

There is one point which must not be neglected, if success is expected; that is, to keep the rock clear of shells while heating. To do this with facility, the tools required are a sharp iron crowbar, and a pair of large tongs. As soon as any shells are found to have started up, the fire should be removed with the tongs, and the scales taken off with the bar. The object is, that the heat may be applied to the solid rock. The fire should then be replaced with the tongs, and so on until the stone is broken. Throwing on cold water is superfluous. [Cultivator.

SOWING TURNIPS.

The sowing of the flat varieties of the turnip, intended for the kitchen and the feeding of stock during the winter and spring, should be performed in Canada and the northern parts of the United States by the middle of July; but in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, the Southern parts of New York, and in the Western States, the time may be prolonged until the middle of August, and in some places, even unto September. If sown earlier, they are not so tender nor so finely flavored; and if sown later, they will not generally attain a full growth.

It has been proved by long experience in this country, that old sod, well rotted, or newly cleared land, recently burnt over, produces the largest and finest flavored roots. Those who do not possess lands of this description, and design to enter field culture on a large scale, must render their ground as rich as possible, by the addition of manure. An acre of ground will require from 220 to 400 lbs. of Peruvian guano; 15 to 20 bushels of bone dust; 20 to 30 bushels of wood ashes; or from 500 to 1,000 bushels of fine, well-rotted barn-yard manure.

Fruit Trees.—Instead of continuing the old practice of having alternate bearing and barren years for fruit trees, those who cultivate them would do well to note this fact. When young trees first come into bearing, about the time the fruit is setting, if the most of it is taken off, and this continued for a few years in succession, leaving every year about the same quantity on the trees, they will by the time they have become of sufficient size to be profitable, have acquired the habit of bearing every year.

Virtues of Smart Weed.—It is almost a sure remedy in a case of cholic. Steep and drink the same as any other herb tea. In the next place, it is worth $5 per hundred for a stock of cattle, if it is cut and well cured when in full bloom. Give an ox, cow, or horse, one pound per week, during the time they are up to hay, and it will keep their bowels and hide loose. It is an excellent physic. If a horse has one pound a week, there is no danger of his having botts, or worms of any kind; and they will eat it sooner than they will the best of hay.

The Gardener Toad.—The late lamented Rev. Mr. Bennett, of Woburn, was deemed somewhat eccentric, but he often had excellent reasons for his peculiarities. Being one of the most successful and enthusiastic horticulturists, he carefully petted a family of toads in his garden, until he boasted of having seven generations living. The venerable parent was a curiosity. He kept them for their services in devouring bugs and flies, which they did most industriously. Give them a cool and fixed shelter in a corner, and they will pay good rent.

To Dry a Cow of her Milk.—Circumstances sometimes render it necessary to stop the lactescent action in cows; and when this occurs, all that is absolutely required is, to make a liquor by pouring into a fresh rennet bag two quarts of pure well, spring, or rain water; reduce the quantity of the liquor, by boiling briskly, to about one quart, and strain it. Then let it cool to a lukewarm temperature, and give it as a drink to the cow. In forty-eight hours she will be dry. For some days her food should be dry and unsucculent—no water being allowed. [Maine Cultivator.

The Fool and his Money soon Parted.—In the Autumn of 1847, a man named Andrew Loughty, in a fit of drunkeness, left his family in poverty, and enlisted in Col. Stevenson's regiment, and at the close of the war, went to dig gold in California. On the 19th of April last he wrote to his wife, residing in New York, that he had collected a nice little fortune, and had become temperate, and should return in the fall. Soon after writing the above letter, as we learn from the New York Evening Fost, having about $7,000 of the dust in his trunk, and the balance of his wealth on his person, he took passage to this country. On his arrival in New York he abandoned himself to intemperance, and the money so easily acquired was lightly prized. He hired a carriage to carry him to his home, which his golden letter a few hours previous made so happy; be-before he reached it he contrived to spend forty dollars in drink and upon his driver, and on his arrival, the trunk containing his $7,000 was missing, and a large portion of the money he had about his person. His unhappy wife, when she became aware of her husband's improvidence, solicited the aid of a gentleman to whom she was known, and steps were immediately taken to preserve what money had not been wasted, and to recover what had undoubtedly been stolen from him. About $1200 were thus saved, and sent to the mint at Philadelphia. The trunk and its contents probably lost forever. Loughty can give no account whatever of it.

Slave Stealing.—What with the ravages of the Cholera, the incursions of kidnappers, and the efforts of the slaves themselves, assisted by confederates, to escape, slave property at the South is rapidly becoming of a precarious and insecure tenure. Every day's mails bring us fresh accounts of runaways, negro stealing, etc. The latest is a long account which we find in the Helena (Ark.) Shield, of a system of slave stealing which has just come to light in Monroe County, Ark., and in which several residents there, who had hitherto borne high characters, were implicated. Two slaves who disappeared last fall, were sold by these men, and the latter shared the profits with them, and then got them to run away again.

To Remove, Ink Spots from White Clothes.—This must be done before the clothes are washed. Pick some tallow from the bottom of a clean mould candle. Rub it hard on the ink spots, and leave it sticking there in bits, until next day, or longer. Then let the article be washed and boiled; and if it is merely common ink, the stain will entirely disappear. Of course this remedy can only be used for white things, as colored clothes can not be boiled without entirely fading them. We know it to be efficacious. The tallow must be rubbed on quite cold.

VARIETY.

Columbus, in Georgia, has some twelve manufacturing establishments with a capital of $400,000, and a flour mill is about going up with a capital of about $100,000. There are several cotton mills, an iron foundry, a cotton gin factory, manufacturing 18 gins a week, a wool company, &c.

A German paper says that suspension of life caused by prussic acid is only apparent; life is immediately restored by pouring acetate of potash and common salt dissolved in water on the head and spine. In this country rabbits have been at once recovered from the effects of prussic acid by this means.

The federal Common Council of Boston, a few days since, appointed a committee to prepare a letter of condolence to Mrs. Polk, but when it was reported, that sanctimonious body rejected it, alledging that it was too highly charged with Swedenborgian sentiments.

As the late Professor H. was walking near Edinburgh, he met one of those beings usually called fools. "Pray," said the Professor, accosting him, "how long can a person live without brains?" "I dinna ken," replied the fellow, scratching his head; "pray how long have you lived yourself, sir?"

To 196 pounds of flour, the baker adds eleven gallons or 90 pounds of water, two gallons of yeast, and three pounds of salt, making 305 pounds of dough. This is reduced by evaporation during the process of kneading, baking, &c., about 40 pounds, leaving 265 pounds of bread.

One thousand one hundred and thirty-two petitions, signed by 204,204 persons, are now lying on the table of the British House of Commons, asking the government to promote the project for settling national quarrels by arbitration.

"Well, farmer, you told us your woods was a good place for hunting; now we've tramped through it for three hours and found no game." "Just so—well, I calculate, as a general thing, the less game there is, the more hunting you have."

It said that there are 2500 houses for rent in Cincinnati, the tenants having fled from the cholera. It is estimated that the city has lost about 1300 inhabitants from this cause, and four or five times that number by the ravages of the cholera.

Seventy years ago, Mrs. Washington knit stockings for the General, now there are not many ladies in this city who can play that part, and hundreds know not how the apple gets into the dumpling.

An iron water wheel has been constructed at the Union Works, Patterson, N. J., for shipment to Mexico, which is 60 feet in diameter, and weighing 70 tons—one of the largest ever built.

The Drummond Light, made by throwing the united, flame of hydrogen and oxygen gas upon a ball of lime, has been distinctly seen, as a clear, white, vivid light, at a distance exceeding seventy miles.

According to a recent estimate of Professor Allsted, of King's College, London, the total value of the gold mined in all parts of the world is put at £6,500,000, or about $32,500,000, per year.

A slave was arrested on Sunday, in New Orleans, for playing a fiddle in a coffee house, and thereby violating the Sabbath!

Queen Victoria has entered upon the 13th year of her reign. Every child of Queen Victoria costs the Government $500,000 yearly.

Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. KENYON, IRA SAYLES, DANIEL D. PICKET, JONATHAN ALLEN, JAMES MARVIN, DARIUS FORD, DARWIN E. MAXSON;

ASSISTED BY

Miss ABIGAIL A. MAXSON, Mrs. SERENA C. SAYLES, Mrs. MELISSA B. KENYON.

ORRA STILLMAN, Professor of Instrumental Music.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in issuing another Annual Circular, would express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended to it; and they are happy to announce, that the above-named gentlemen have been engaged as a permanent Board of Instruction, by which arrangement the increasing demands of the public can be met most efficiently. Valuable additions have been made to the Library and Apparatus of the Institution, within the past year, and will continue to be made as the good of the School may demand.

Plan of Instruction.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students."

Academic Terms.

The Academic Year for 1849–50 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1849, and ending Thursday, November 22, 1849.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 4, 1849, and ending Thursday, March 14, 1850.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 26, 1850, and ending July 4, 1850.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the students be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified. The regulations of the Institution are then explained, and all arrangements are made for the convenience and accommodation of the students.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from a distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student.

Model Class and Normal School.

This Institution sustains a Model Class, for the particular benefit of those preparing to teach. This Class is under the special supervision of an able and accomplished teacher.

The ages of the scholars attending it, vary from five to ten years; and they are taken promiscuously from the neighborhood.

In the management of this Class, teachers have the opportunity of witnessing the progress made by children under the most approved system of instruction, and can also test their own abilities as teachers.

In addition to teaching in the Model Class, the teachers meet daily during the term, to listen to lectures on modes of teaching and governing a school, the importance and dignity of the teacher's profession, &c..

This department will be open twelve weeks only during the fall term; but as a large amount of extra labor is bestowed upon this class, and extra expense incurred in its management, the tuition will be the same as the regular full term course. Those teachers wishing to remain till the close of the term will have all the facilities for pursuing their studies with advantage, without additional charge.

The public may also be assured, that no pains will be spared to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to become teachers; and that no one will receive a recommendation as a teacher, from the authorities of this Institution, who is not competent to accomplish all the specifications of his recommendation.

A teacher, to be recommended by the authorities of this Institution, must have attended one full course of lectures on the subject of teaching; and, secondly, he must have been engaged in the instruction of the Model Class, and have evinced in it an aptitude to teach, and ability to govern. If the public employ those who go out hence without a recommendation, we do not hold ourselves accountable for failures, and consequent disappointment.

Expenses.

Board, per term,	From $14 50 to $18 00
Room rent, per term,		1 50
Washing, per term,		2 50
Fuel, per term, Spring and Fall, 75c., Winter,		1 50
Tuition, per term,	From $3 50 to 5 00
Lights, per term,		1 50
Incidental Expenses, per term,		25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Music on the Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except the extras above mentioned,) need not exceed eighty five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

N. B. No departure from this requisition need be asked or expected. Parents should not, therefore, send their children by some neighbor, unless authorized to do their business, leaving them thus unprovided for, and, in a manner, uncared for. Experience of years has taught us that this is the only way in which our business can be successfully managed. Besides, when paid in advance, or settled in advance, every Academic charge is fairly understood; and no man will be surprised, at the end of the term, to find a bill exceeding his expectations.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

Rev. N. V. HULL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 26, 1849.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Cressingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st, New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY G. B. UTTER AND T. B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 8. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, AUGUST 9, 1849. WHOLE NO. 268.

The Sabbath Recorder.

MISSIONARY CORRESPONDENCE.

[Concluded.]

As no reply was made to the foregoing for some time, I had supposed that I was not to expect one. But more than four months having elapsed, I received the following kind note, accompanied with another book.

27th March, 1848.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—It seems to me, that the chief, if not the only point of material difference between our views, is as to the question whether or not the time for observing the divinely-appointed Sabbath, as a day of rest from labor and of religious worship and sacred exercises, was changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, under the sanction of inspired men. Watson's statement of the evidences in favor of such a change having been so made, does not appear to have the same power to convince your judgment as it does mine; perhaps the summing up of Bramhall may have more effect in exhibiting the strength of proofs, which are essentially the same as those offered by Watson. Allow me to commend it to your perusal.

My view of the burden of proof may be best expressed by an illustration. For instance, suppose a certain King, in the early part of his reign, to establish a Royal Society, and to enact, amongst other laws, that the members of the said Society shall meet on the morning of a certain day each month to transact its business. Suppose, farther, that some years after this, a very extensive change is made in the character of this Royal Society, its Constitution remodeled, its objects enlarged, and its members admitted on different grounds than had been the case heretofore. Moreover, numerous Branch Societies are established. Another series of years is supposed to pass, and many persons join themselves to this Society, enjoying its privileges and discharging its duties, and amongst others that of meeting each month for the transaction of business. These meetings, however, are now found to be universally held on the evening of the day appointed; and if any one inquires the reason of this diversity, he is told that the change took place at the time of the Great Remodeling, and by competent authority. The same answer is given to him by the office-bearers and members of every one of the many and widely-scattered Branch Societies all over the Kingdom; and, in the custom of meeting in the evening, and not in the morning, they are all agreed.

Now, I cannot but think, that finding things were (and that for many years they had been) in this state, the presumption would be in favor of holding that the designs of the Royal Founders were essentially carried out by the evening meeting; and that the burden of proving the practice of the multitudinous majority to be wrong, would lie upon the advocate of resuming the morning hour.

Now, is not your case like this? And, if it is, how does your own mind dispose of the parallel? Yours very truly,

E. W. SYLE.

To the above I replied as follows:—

MY DEAR BROTHER,—It appears from your note of the 27th ult., that what you presented before in the shape of Bishop Watson's statements, you regarded as arguments ex abundanti, objections to which you do not feel yourself called upon to answer. It appears, also, that you still hold me bound to prove the practice of the majority to be wrong, or else to adopt it.

Supposing your illustration to be a just representation of the facts of the case, I admit that there would be a presumption in favor of the evening hour, which in the first instance would throw the burden of proof upon him who should dispute it. But this general statement is not enough. It must be decided to what extent the burden of proof would rest with such an one. Otherwise there could be no such a thing as a shifting of the burden of proof. If he should produce the records of the Society, which show the pleasure of the King at the time of its organization to have been in favor of the morning hour, and then ask for the record of the change, would the burden of proof then be shifted to the other side, or must he be held to prove that at a remote period a certain event did not take place, or else admit that it did? Are you willing to admit every proposition to be true which you cannot prove to be false? Suppose an individual should affirm, that you had stolen his watch, I think you would be slow to take the burden of proof upon yourself, although conscious of innocence. The presumption would be in your favor, and the onus probandi would rest with the accusing party. So in every case, it seems to me the affirmative is bound to proof. So in the case supposed; when the enactment of the King is shown to have been in favor of the morning hour, there is a presumption in favor of the continuance of that hour, which evidently throws the burden of proof on him who affirms that the hour was changed by the proper authority.

But it seems to me, that your illustration, in order to suit the facts in the case, requires a little filling out. Without attempting to bring it up fully to what the facts would warrant, allow me to suggest a few things which I think should not be overlooked. Let us suppose, that at the time of Remodeling, the King himself being personally present, had declared that it was not his pleasure to do away with the old enactment which fixed the time of the Society's stated meetings, and that whosoever should make an infraction of the law should be called the least in this Royal Society. After a series of years, it is found that the great majority of the Branch Societies hold their stated meetings in the evening instead of the morning. And if any one inquires the reason, he is told by some of the office-bearers and others, that the change took place at the time of the great Remodeling, and by competent authority. But, not satisfied with this, he inquires farther. Others, who are also office-bearers and members, say that the change was brought about very gradually. Others tell him that the old enactment is repealed, and that one time is as suitable as another, only it is very important that all should be agreed in the same time. A few of the Branch Societies are found who steadfastly maintain the morning hour, and who deny that there is any satisfactory evidence of the hour having been changed by competent authority.

Now, although there is a pretty general, though not entire unaminity in favor of the evening hour in practice, yet the grounds upon which that practice is founded are so diverse and conflicting, that this fact of itself is calculated to produce the conviction, that the whole subject of the change in question is involved in the greatest obscurity. The presumption, therefore, arising from the practice of the majority, that the King had authorized the change, could be but slight; and the presumption that he had caused said change to be recorded, would be still less. And what well-ordered Society would allow a change of its stated hour of meeting to pass unrecorded? But suppose this individual should admit a slight presumption in favor of the evening hour, simply and solely because the majority hold it, and then should produce the old enactment that distinctly enjoins the morning hour, and then the record made at the time of the remodeling, which showed the pleasure of the King to be to perpetuate the same arrangement; I ask if in such a case the burden of proof would not be shifted on the other side, with a witness?

Taking the place of the individual supposed, and admitting that there is a presumption in favor of a change of the Sabbath, simply and solely because of the custom of the majority of Christians, I remark, in the first place, that this presumption is weakened by the incongruity of the arguments by which the point is attempted to be sustained. If there were plain and positive proof at hand, all intelligent witnesses who should contend for the same thing, would be likely to produce substantially the same proof. But, on the contrary, there is great diversity even among the intelligent. Some contend that the fourth commandment, with the other precepts of the decalogue, is done away. Others have drawn a comparison between the works of creation and redemption, and, presuming upon their ability to decide which is the greater, have drawn an argument thence in favor of the change of the Sabbath. Others lay the whole stress of their claim upon supposed Apostolic example. Others, admitting that Apostolic example is quite as much against as for the change, rest the argument on certain expressions in the Epistles. Others again, admitting that the Scriptures contain no evidence of the change, claim that the Church has made the change, and that she had a right so to do. Many other positions are taken, too numerous to mention here. Now, if truth is simple, and if error is multiform and complex, I think you will agree with me in the opinion, that the incongruity of the testimony of the several witnesses, all of whom are desirous to establish the same point, goes very far to diminish the strength of the presumption that would otherwise exist in favor of the change in question.

I now proceed to rebut this presumption, be it what it may, with opposite proof, only with a view to the shifting of the onus probandi. And for this purpose I will adduce the enactment contained in the fourth command of the Decalogue. You admit the authority of this command. I beg you to consider the following particulars contained in it:

1st. The injunction to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

2d. The particular day specified—the seventh day, not a seventh day.

3d. Its appropriate title—not the Jewish Sabbath, but the rest-day of the Lord thy God.

4th. The prohibition of labor.

4th. The reason of all this, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth," &c., and rested on the seventh day. I see not how this reason could be used to enforce another day. In other words, if we rest not on the last day of the week, I do not see how we could be said to follow the example of our Creator, which is here held up for our imitation.

6th. The reason why the seventh day was blessed and sanctified in the beginning: "Wherefore the Lord blessed the rest-day and hallowed it." Because He himself had rested on that day from all his works, therefore he blessed and hallowed it; thus constituting his rest-day, a perpetual memorial of his great work of creation, and a standing witness against all Atheism and all Idolatry. But I see not how this memorial is preserved when we cease to remember the rest-day of the Lord our God, and to keep it holy.

7th. The meaning of the expression, "The Lord blessed the rest-day and hallowed it." Was this blessing of the day an empty ceremony, a vain compliment, or did He confer upon the day he blessed something which does not belong to every day? Those who have been long in the habit of secularizing this day, when they have come to remember it to keep it holy, have declared in the most solemn manner, that they have received a great blessing in their souls. Who shall say that this is not the blessing which God has put upon this day, and that the great body of Christians are not depriving themselves of one very valuable means of grace? But whatever there is in this blessing of the seventh day, I see not how it can be transferred to another day without the special act of God.

8th. The time when God blessed the seventh day and hallowed it. At the time when the command was given from Sinai, it was spoken of as in the past. And we are distinctly referred back to the creation of the world, when God gave this, together with the marriage institution, to the whole race. These two, as celestial messengers, came down from heaven, and, lighting upon the heights of Paradise, proposed to extend their benign influences, as it would seem, over all the world, and through all time.

Thus the command seems to contain within itself the elements and notices of its own perpetuity in all its integrity. It seems, in the strongest manner possible, to enjoin the seventh day of the week. And its language is the same now as when first promulgated, with great solemnity, from Sinai's shaking summit. His voice then shook the earth; but when he shall come to make inquisition as to the manner his law has been kept, He will shake, not the earth only, but also heaven.

By admitting the authority of this command, and at the same time claiming that the time has been changed from the seventh to the first day of the week, you virtually say that the command does not now enjoin the seventh day of the week, but the first. But as the presumption is fairly on the side of the obvious meaning of its language, the burden of proof must be as fairly on the side of him who would make it speak what it does not appear to say.

What I have said has been simply with the view to shifting of the burden of proof. If, in doing this, I have shown the impossibility of a change of the day without abrogating the institution and law of the Sabbath, it was only incidental to my main object, which was to show that, although there is a presumption in favor of the first day, which in the first instance throws the burden of proof on him who rejects its claims, yet this presumption may be rebutted by an opposite presumption in favor of the seventh day, which throws back the burden of proof upon him who rejects its claims. Upon the relative strength of these opposite presumptions, I will say nothing. Upon the nature of them, I will simply remark, that while one is grounded on the practice of uninspired men, the other is built on the inspired word of God.

If you should be unwilling to admit that the burden of proof is now thrown upon you, this controversy will probably end here. But if you admit that the onus probandi is now with you, and consequently that the practice of the "multitudinous majority" is wrong, unless the change in question can be proved, then I would be glad to have you show, in the first place, that the "divinely appointed Sabbath" is susceptible of the change in question without being abrogated, and, secondly, that such change has actually been made. Yours truly,

S. CARPENTER.

VISITATIONS OF PESTILENCE.

BY REV. GEO. CROLEY, OF LONDON.

Since the Christian Era, there have been recorded twenty extensive European pestilences, besides others whose devastations have been more local. In the year 265, a pestilence burst upon the Roman Empire, then comprehending the civilized world. It continued for fifteen years, and "raged without interruption, in every province, in every city, and almost every family in the empire. During some of the time, five thousand people died daily in the city of Rome." A reference to the register of Alexandria, shows that "about half of the population of the city had perished; and could we venture to extend the analogy to other provinces, we might suspect that war, pestilence and famine, had consumed in a few years the moiety of the human species."

In the middle of the sixth century, Constantinople, then the capital of the world, was startled by the approach of the plague. From the terror of the time, it is difficult to discover its origin; but it is supposed to have come from Egypt. Its mortality was indescribable. During three months, five, and at length ten thousand persons died each day in Constantinople. Many cities in the East were left vacant; and in several districts of Italy, the harvest and vintage perished on the ground. The disease pursued a double path; it spread to the east over Syria, Persia and India; and penetrated to the west along the coast of Africa, and over the continent of Europe. This pestilence was of such peculiar malignity, that it was not abated by the change of season. In time it vanished, but revived; and "it was not until the calamitous period of fifty-two years, that mankind recovered their health, or the air recovered its salubrious qualities."

"The triple scourge of war, pestilence and famine, afflicted the subjects of Justinian; and his name is disgraced by a visible decrease of the human species, which has never been repaired, in some of the fairest countries of the globe."

Another more memorable pestilence was brought by the commerce of the Levant to Europe in the fourteenth century. In the imperfect narratives of those days of universal distress, the place of its origin, and the degree of its havoc in the east, remained unknown. But its mortality in Europe was felt along the borders of the Mediterranean. From its first appearance in the Levant to its close, it ravaged Europe for more than three years. It was calculated to have destroyed a third part of the population.

In those general devastations, London frequently suffered. But the plague of 1665 has made the greatest impression on the national memory. Though it scarcely passed beyond the limits of the capital, then, perhaps, not a third of its present size, its mortality was vast and almost exterminating. A large part of the population fled into the country; yet from the beginning of June to the end of the year, the deaths exclusively by the plague were calculated at sixty-eight thousand. A large portion of this mortality might probably have been prevented by due precaution, and early employment of medical science. The closeness of the streets, the crowding of the people, and the habitual disregard for ventilation, must have fostered this dreadful disease. But they cannot account for its origin, for its direction or virulence. These were independent of man.

THE SKELETON HAND.

BY JOHN G. DUNN.

Rap tap! Rap tap! at the door of the heart;
  Rap tap, with a loud demand!
Oh, who is it raps at the door of the heart,
Crying, matter and spirit shall surely part—
The one to the dust, for dust thou art,
  The rest to the spirit land?
T'is I! 'tis I, who knocketh without
With a long arm and a knuckle stout—
  'Tis I of the skeleton hand!

Rap tap! Rap tap! I have startled thee up
  In the midst of a misty dream!
Rap tap! Rap tap! I have startled thee up
When thy lips were fresh from the deadly cup,
And thy curses grew louder at every sup—
  And thy orbs in a frenzy gleamed!
For 'tis I! 'tis I. who knocketh without
With a strong arm and a knuckle stout—
  'Tis I of the sickle keen.

Rap tap! Rap tap! on the bony walls!
  What ho! Art ready, within?
Rap tap! Rap tap! on the bony walls;
Rap tap! Rap tap! still louder it falls—
I'll rent thee no longer these carnal halls—
  Thou hast made them a den of sin!
Make ready, make ready! 'tis I. without
With a bony arm and a knuckle stout—
  'Tis I of the skeleton grin.

Rap tap! Rap tap! but a voice of prayer
  Burst forth from the sinful wight!
Rap tap! Rap tap! but a voice of prayer
Went faltering upwards to spare, oh, spare,
For another year—a year to prepare
  For the regions of glory and light;
A year to prepare for him without
With the skeleton arm and knuckle stout—
  For him with the breath of light.

Rap tap no more—a year is given—
  A year of neglect and crime;
Rap tap no more—a year is given
To strive in the field where the righteous have striven
For their spotless robes and a home in heaven.
  But alas! how fleeting is time;
'Tis past and again is heard without
The skeleton arm and the knuckle stout
  Like a wild and deathly chime.

Rap tap! Rap tap, on the bony walls!
  What ho! Art ready, within?
Rap tap! Rap tap, on the bony walls,
Rap tap! Rap tap! like thunder it falls—
I'll rent thee no longer these carnal halls,
  Thou monster of falsehood and sin!
In a tumult of horror the spirit went out—
O'er Avernus with him of the knuckle stout—
  With him of the sickle keen.

WELSH ANECDOTES.

A correspondent of the Watchman and Reflector furnishes some interesting recollections of Welsh character and manners. We clip from his communications the following:—

In their manners they are frank, confiding and blunt, even to rudeness. As to inquisitiveness, they are not a whit behind the Yankees. Their temperament is warm, excitable, easily offended, and many of them as easily and heartily forgive. I remember to have heard my pastor say, that once his uncle declared, when he had been sorely offended, that he never should forgive that man. "Uncle," said he, "do you know what the Bible says?" "No," said he, "what does it say?" "Anger resteth in the bosom of fools." "Does it say so?" asked he. "It certainly does," was the reply. "Well, Thomas," added he, "go instantly and tell the man that I forgive him all. I will not be a fool to please either him or anybody else." But too many there choose rather to be fools than to forgive.

The following shows their hatred of priestly intolerance:—

In those days, marriages could be solemnized only in the Episcopal church. Some zealous priests refused to officiate, if the young people were heathen, i. e., had never been regenerated by sprinkling, and received the sign on their foreheads. Therefore, if the young people were utterly destitute of religious principle, or could be coaxed or terrified, they were first led to the font, to be made the "children of God and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven," before they exchanged their vows before the altar.

In the parish church of Lloullwick, South Wales, the vicar, Rev Mr. Rowlands, knowing that the lady, being the daughter of a Baptist deacon, who lived in the parish, had never been christened, refused to marry her unless she should submit to the ordinance of the church. Her father addressed the priest, and said that the law did not require what he insisted upon. The rector bade him instantly hold his tongue, and immediately brought a suit against him for profaning the holy place with his unconsecrated lips. Though, after many trials, judgement was given against the priest, but not before the deacon, who was a very rich man, had been stripped of every cent. Nineteen years ago last January, I met him at the Baptist chapel in Pont Landysil. He was there begging. The tears flowed down over his manly face as he told his story. You might know that he was not a beggar by profession. "When the lawsuit began," said he, "I owned two extensive farms, and they were fully stocked. I might have made my peace with the parson without costing me much. But I was determined to satisfy myself whether such persecution was legal. The ecclesiastical courts decided against me, and I had to pay ruinous fines. But the suit was carried up to a higher tribunal, and it was at length decided that the priest has no right to make christening a pre-requisite to marriage. But my entire property is gone, and my wife and children have actually suffered this winter from nakedness and hunger."

THE DEAF MOTHER.

The following curious anecdote is related of the Countess of Orkney, who died in 1700, aged 76. Her ladyship was deaf and dumb, and married in 1653 by signs. She lived with her husband, Murrough, first Marquis of Thomond, who was also her first cousin, at his seat, Rostellan, on the harbor of Cork. Shortly after the birth of her first child, the nurse, with considerable astonishment, saw the mother cautiously approach the cradle in which the infant was sleeping, evidently full of some deep design. The countess, having perfectly assured herself that the child really slept, took out a large stone, which she had concealed under her shawl, and to the horror of the nurse, who, like all persons of the lowest order in her country, was fully impressed with an idea of the very peculiar cunning and malignity of the "dumbies," seized it with the intent to fling it down vehemently. Before the nurse could interpose the countess had flung the stone—not, however, at the child, but on the floor, where, of course, it made a great noise. The child immediately awoke and cried. The countess, who had looked with maternal eagerness to the result of her experiment, fell on her knees in a transport of joy. She had discovered that her child possessed the sense which was wanting in herself. She exhibited on many other occasions similar proofs of intelligence, but none so interesting.

FLEEING TO GOD FROM THE PESTILENCE.

IN a day like the present, when the hand of a devouring pestilence presses so heavily upon the people, it may be safely presumed that there is much serious thought among those who are ordinarily far from seriousness. There are fears unuttered; there is deep anxiety, which, while the wicked would not acknowledge it, they are compelled to feel; there is a sense of unfitness to meet and grapple with so dire a foe as cholera; and still there is a determination to hold up against these unpleasant apprehensions, so long as there is any hope; and then it may be, when the crisis approaches, flee to Him whom in prosperity they reject.

Nothing like the near approach of death in any form, so serves to show how dreadfully the wicked trample on the Divine forbearance, and how deliberately they turn back from their apparent seriousness to their former courses, when the cause of their fear is removed.

The following extract from Vincent's book entitled "God's Terrible Voice in the City," illustrates these remarks. Mr. Thomas Vincent was one of the Noncomforist ministers who remained in London during the great plague of 1665, while the ministry of the Established Church sought refuge in the country.

"Ministers," says he "all preaching; and every sermon was unto them as if it were their last. Old Time seemed to stand at the head of the pulpit, with its great scythe, saying, with hoarse voice, 'Work while it is called to-day: at night I will mow thee down.' Grim Death seems to stand at the side of the pulpit, saying, 'Do thou shoot God's arrows, and I will shoot mine.' Now, there is such a vast concourse of people in the churches where these ministers are to be found, that they cannot many times come near the pulpit doors for the press, but are forced to climb over the pews to them; and such a face is now seen in the assemblies, as was seldom seen in London: such eager looks, such open ears, such greedy attention, as if every word would be eaten which dropped from the mouths of the ministers. If you ever saw a drowning man catch at a rope, you may guess how eagerly many people did catch at the word, when they were ready to be overwhelmed by this overflowing scourge, which was passing through the city, when Death was knocking at so many doors, and God was crying aloud by his judgments. Then the people began to open the ear and the heart, which were fast shut and barred before. How did they then hearken as for their lives, as if every sermon were their last; as if Death stood at the door of the church, and would seize upon them so soon as they came forth; as if the arrows which flew so thick in the city, would strike them before they could get to their houses; as if they were immediately to appear before the bar of God, who by his ministers was now speaking to them.

"HOLY RELICS."

I have been reading an old English magazine, and finding in it some curious matters relating to "holy relics," I have made a short extract for the entertainment of your numerous readers.

In the year 359, the Emperor Constantius, out of a presumed and perhaps not inconsistent respect, caused the remains of St. Andrew and St. Luke to be removed from their ancient place of interment to the temple of the twelve apostles, at Constantinople; and from that example, the practice of searching for the bodies of saints and martyrs increased so rapidly, that in the year 386, we find almost the whole of the devotees engaged in that pursuit. Relics, of course, speedily became of considerable value; and as they were all alledged to possess peculiar virtues, no expense or labor was spared to provide such treasures for every public religious foundation. Hence translations innumerable took place of the decayed members of persons reputed saints; and where the entire bodies could not be collected, the pious contented themselves with possessing such parts alone as "Divine Providence chose to bless them with." Without these sacred relics, no establishment could expect to thrive; and so provident had the persons been who labored in their collection, that not a single religious house but could produce one or more of these invaluable remains. Of the number of these pretended relics that have been preserved, the following is only a partial list:—

"A finger of St. Andrew.

A finger of St. John the Baptist.

The thumb of St. Thomas.

A tooth of our Lord.

A rib of our Lord, or of the verbum caro factum, the word made flesh.

The hem of our Lord's garment, which cured the diseased woman.

The seamless coat of our Lord.

A tear which our Lord shed over Lazarus, which was preserved by an angel, who gave it in a phial to Mary Magdalene.

Two handkerchiefs, on which are impressions of our Saviour's face: the one sent by our Lord himself as a present to Agbarus, prince of Edessa; the other given at the time of his crucifixion to a holy woman named Veronica.

The rod of Moses, with which he performed his miracles.

A lock of hair of Mary Magdalene.

A hem of Joseph's garment.

A feather of the Holy Ghost.

A feather of the angel Gabriel.

A finger of a cherubim.

One of the water-pots used at the marriage of Galilee.

The slippers of the antedeluvian Enoch.

The face of a seraphim, with only part of the nose.

The snout of a seraphim, thought to have belonged to the preceding

The coal that broiled St. Lawrence.

The square bucket, lined with red velvet, and the short sword of St. Michael.

A phial of the sweat of St. Michael, when he contended with Satan.

Some of the rays of the star which appeared to the 'Magi,'—

With innumerable others, not quite consistent to be here described.

The miracles wrought by these and such other precious remains, have been enlarged upon by writers whose testimony, aided by the protecting care of the Inquisition, no one durst openly dispute who was not of the 'holy brotherhood;' although it would appear, by the confession of some of these respectable persons, that 'instances have occurred of their failure,' but that they always 'recovered their virture, when,' as Galbert, a monk of Marchiennes informs us, 'they were flogged with rods,' &c. [Cor. Invest.

FILIPPO NERI AND THE STUDENT.

A story is told of a good and pious old man whom the Church of Rome has enrolled among her saints on account of his great holiness. He was living in one of the Italian Universities, when a young man whom he had known as a boy, ran up to him with a face full of delight, and told him that what he had long been wishing above all the things in the world, was at length fulfilled—his parents having just given him leave to study law; and thereupon he had come to the law school at his university on account of his great fame, and meant to spare no pains or labor in getting through his studies as quickly and well as possible. In this way he ran on for a long time; and when at last he came to a stop, the holy man, who had been listening to him with great patience and kindness, said:

"Well, and when you have got through your course of studies, what do you mean to do then?"

"Then I shall take my doctor's degree," answered the young man.

"And then?" asked Filippo Neri again.

"And then," continued the youth, "I shall have a number of difficult and knotty cases to manage, and shall catch people's notice by my eloquence, my zeal, my acuteness, and gain a great reputation."

"And then?" repeated the holy man.

"And then," replied the youth, "why, then, there can't be a question; I shall be promoted to some high office or other; besides, I shall make money and grow rich."

"And then?" repeated Filippo.

"And then," pursued the young lawyer, "and then I shall live comfortably and honorably, in wealth and dignity, and shall be able to look forward quietly to a happy old age."

"And then?"

"And then," said the youth, "then I shall die."

Here Filippo lifted up his voice, and again asked, "And then!" Whereupon the young man made no answer, but cast down his eyes and went away. The last And then? had pierced like a flash of lightning into his soul, and he could not get clear of it. Soon after, he forsook the study of law, and gave himself up to the ministry of Christ, and spent the remainder of his days in goodly words and works.

The question which St. Filippo Neri put to the young lawyer, is one which we should put frequently to ourselves. When we have done all that we are doing, all that we aim at doing, all that we dream of doing, even supposing that all our dreams are accomplished, that every wish of the heart is fulfilled, still we may ask, what will we do then? Whenever we cast our thoughts forward, never let them stop this side of the grave; but when we have followed ourselves thither, and have seen ourselves laid therein, still ask ourselves the searching question, AND WHAT THEN?

WARMTH OF THE SNOW BLANKET.—That the goodness of God pervades creation, is manifest from the fact that what seems to us chilling and cool, becomes, under his dispensations, the means of life and warmth. In the cold winter, in northern climates, he envelops the earth in a mantle of snow, whose pure white is pleasing to the eye, while it nestles like the soft wool upon the bosom of the earth. The Jewish poet remarks:—

"He giveth snow like wool."

The recent experiments of a French physician have shown that snow, to the depth of only four inches, produces nine degrees of heat! This fact will enable us to understand how, in the icy climates of Greenland and Lapland, the inhabitants live comfortably in snow houses.

APPROPRIATE NAMES.—Mr. Sumner, in his recent address before the Peace Society, called the roll of the English steam navy, as an illustration of the infernal spirit of war. The following is the list of names as reported in the New York Independent. It was copied by Mr. Sumner, from the official publications by the British navy:—Acheron, Adder, Alecto, Avenger, Basilisk, Bloodhound, Bulldog, Crocodile, Erebus, Firebrand, Fury, Goliah, Gorgon, Harpy, Hecate, Hound, Jackall, Mastiff, Pluto, Rattlesnake, Revenge, Salamander, Spiteful, Spitfire, Styx, Sulphur, Tartar, Terrible, Terror, Vengeance, Viper, Vixen, Virago, Volcano, Vulture, Warspite, Wildfire, Wolf, Wolverine.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 9, 1849.

Traveling Agent.—Eld. Walter B. Gillett having been engaged to travel a while as Agent for the Sabbath Recorder, will visit most of our churches in the State of New York previous to September 1st. His primary object will be to increase the subscription list of the paper, and to collect what is due for it up to the close of volume 5. He will also take the names of persons who may wish to become members of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, and receive and transmit to the Treasurer any moneys subscribed for the benefit of that Society.

SECTARIANISM OF MISSIONS.

Probably no sect of Christians engaged in foreign missionary operations would be willing to avow that the principal stimulus to their enterprise is a desire to promote the peculiarities of their creed. No matter whether they be Presbyterians or Baptists, Methodists or Episcopalians, that are thus engaged, they are always forward to declare that their principal motive is a desire to rescue the heathen from destruction, and impart to them the hope of eternal life. We give them credit for sincerity in this profession. We sincerely believe that each denomination is strongly actuated by a desire for the salvation of souls, and is as free from sectarian prejudice as could reasonably be expected. Nevertheless, it may not be a useless inquiry, to what extent it is even reasonable that there should be a renunciation of sectarian feeling. The Baptist, for example, casts his eye over the heathen world, beholds them perishing in sin, and his heart burns with desire to do something towards saving them. To sustain missionaries in Burmah, in Africa, in China, in the isles of the sea, he would give of his substance abundantly. But if he is entirely free from sectarian feeling in regard to this matter, why not place his funds at the disposal of some society already engaged in the work, instead of laboring to effect a new organization? For instance, why not throw his offerings into the treasury of the American Board? No doubt the missionaries sent out by that Board, labor very earnestly for the salvation of souls, perhaps as much so as any Baptist missionaries. But the Baptist denomination cannot patronize the American Board. They must have an organization of their own, and their funds must be made to sustain only those who will inculcate Baptist doctrine. Yet this new Baptist organization is got up at very considerable expense. Its Secretaries and Agents, giving their whole time to promote its interests, must be salaried men. Rooms, in which to transact its business, must be secured at a heavy annual cost. Printing presses and other appliances are found necessary. When the whole comes to be summed up, it is found that many thousands of dollars are expended every year in sustaining this new organization, which might be otherwise applied. They might be placed at the disposal of the American Board, and made to sustain a much larger number of missionaries than both of these organizations together can sustain with their present means. What is the reason that the Baptist denomination go to all the additional expense, attended, as the result shows, with an actual diminution of the number of missionaries, if they are not governed by sectarian feeling?

The truth is, it is impossible for honest men to lose sight of sectarianism altogether. If they have adopted the peculiarities of any particular sect, they have done so because the word of God seemed to them to demand it. These peculiarities, therefore, are not the whole, but a necessary part, of their religion, to be indifferent about which, would be rebellion against God. For this reason, the Baptist, while he wishes success to the operations of the American Board, the Presbyterian Board, and all other Boards, as far as they tend to the salvation of souls, and while he may even aid them to a limited extent, considers that the missionaries sent out by them are inculcating a system of theology, which embodies at least one very important error. He considers that this error affects not merely the subjects and mode of baptism, but that it vitiates to some extent the whole system of Christianity;—that, in upholding it, its advocates are obliged to adopt principles of interpretation which, when applied to other parts of divine truth, pervert and wrest them;—and that thus a system of theology is constructed, which is not identical with Christianity, though it may embody a large amount of its saving truth. It is rather Christianity neutralized, diluted, and shorne of its strength. He is sure that if the error were eradicated from their system, and the truth of God substituted in its place, the gospel would be more like what it was in the days of the Apostles—"the power of God." Hence, as a matter of duty to the Lord Jesus Christ, he feels that he must labor to bring about a missionary organization which shall give this important truth—the peculiarity of his creed—to the world. He feels that Christ has particularly called him to this, having given him a light, not that it may be placed under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and that he cannot disregard that call without sinning against God and his own conscience. His missionary operations are, therefore, from the very nature of the case, necessarily sectarian to a certain degree.

Now we are confident that a Baptist, viewing matters in this light, will desire that his denominational peculiarities should be embraced, not only by the heathen, but even by the missionaries of other persuasions. If he is an honest man he cannot feel otherwise. We are therefore obliged to think that missionaries, going out under the patronage of a Baptist organization, and partaking of its spirit, will, when brought into intercourse with other missionaries, of other orders, not omit to do something towards expounding to them the way of God more perfectly.

This will not and ought not to be the main object of their mission; but if it would not be a part of their business, we have mistaken the nature and design of Baptist organizations.

As our first-day Baptist brethren feel in regard to baptism, so do we feel in regard to the Sabbath. Our denominational peculiarity is not the whole, but it is a very necessary part of our religion. It cannot be otherwise, so long as we remember that it is written, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." We wish well to the missionary operations of all other denominations, as far as they labor for God's truth. We bless God for the vast amount of good they have done; we honor them for their zeal; and we frankly confess, that it is nothing to our credit that we are so late in the field, even behind all the rest. But now that God has roused us to duty, we feel that it is a part of our business to restrain, if possible, the further spread of the erroneous doctrine that has been taught the heathen in regard to the Sabbath. If this is not a part of our business, then God has not called us to the missionary work at all; and it is all folly that we have labored to bring about a missionary organization among our own people. We had better have thrown our contributions into the hands of our first-day Baptist brethren, and aided to sustain their missionaries. We had better have looked on quietly, while they were laboring to spread among all nations what we believe to be a corruption of God's law. And if we could thus connive at and even help forward their operations abroad, why not at home also?

But we honestly believe, that the doctrine taught by our first-day brethren in regard to the Sabbath, is a relic of Popery. Indeed, to be plain about it, we believe it to be the joint offspring of Popery and Paganism. We are confident that it is an error, a very great one, and that so long as it is retained in any system of theology, it vitiates, more or less, that whole system, and renders it, so far, a different thing from pure Christianity. We believe that if all missionaries would put away this, together with other errors, the gospel would soon become something like what it was in the days of the Apostles—the mighty power of God. We hope, therefore, that those whom we have sent into the foreign field will not be backward to bring this subject before their first-day brethren. Not that we wish them to make it the chief part of their work; God forbid. But let it at least receive a certain degree of attention. It is time that this wicked corruption of God's law were arrested. The correspondence which is concluded on our first page shows that our missionaries have taken a just view of their duty, though in this case the correspondence was not at all of their own seeking.

NEW YORK CENTRAL COLLEGE.

The Central Association, at its last annual session, appointed a committee of five to correspond with similar committees from the other Associations, with reference to the establishing of a Seventh-day Baptist College. The Central Association likewise instructed said committee to make inquiry of the New York Central College, what advantages Seventh-day Baptist students would enjoy in said institution, and report the result at the next annual meeting. The Western Association took up the subject, and appointed said committee to act in their behalf, and publish the result in the Sabbath Recorder. Being one of said committee, I called on the Trustees of said College, on the 4th inst., at McGrawville, who thought that I had better lay the subject before the College Association, which was to hold a session in the afternoon. Accordingly, I met the Association at 4 o'clock, and presented the subject, which was referred to a committee of three, who presented the following report, which was unanimously adopted:—

Report.

"The New York Central College Association respectfully reply to the inquiry presented by the Central and Western Associations of the Seventh-day Baptist Order, through Bro. Eli S. Bailey, as their respected messenger—That this College is built on the principle of devoting six days in each week to the business of study and labor; and that, in view of the practical difficulties which at present are thought to be involved in the plan of suspending recitation and labor over the space of two successive days in each week, all that we can say at present in reference to the privileges to be enjoyed by those who regard the seventh day as the Sabbath, is, that the college will not infringe upon the conscientious scruples of such students—that they will not be required to labor or study on either the first or the seventh day, and that extra attention will be given to their recitations on Monday of each week. If, hereafter, any arrangement can be affected to second the suggested coöperation, this Association will respectfully address their Seventh-day Baptist brethren on the subject."

I would observe, for the information of those that may not be acquainted with the peculiarities of this college, that it is founded by the Free Mission Baptists; that it is a manual-labor school, and declares, by the third Article of its constitution, "that it shall now and ever hereafter be anti-slavery in its character and influence." Article 20th declares, that it shall be open to both sexes, and all classes, the only requisites for admission being suitable age, a good moral character, and suitable literary improvement. Article 22d declares, that the Bible shall be regarded as a classic and text book by all the instructors and students of the college, and that instruction shall be given in it in our own and in the original languages of the Scriptures, as extensively as practicable.

Eli S. Bailey, one of the Committee.

Brookfield, July 28th, 1849.

NORTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

Walworth, Wis., July 20, 1849.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The Seventh-day Baptist North-Western Association convened at Walworth, Wisconsin, July 11th. The delegation was quite full, and the congregation respectably large. After a sermon by Eld. O. P. Hull, the Association organized by choosing Z. Campbell, Moderator, and H. M. Coon and D. H. Green, Clerks. The business was transacted with harmony. The meeting on Sabbath-day and first-day was quite full and interesting. Agreeable to a resolution, I shall send the Minutes soon, to be published in the Recorder. I will here transcribe the Corresponding Letter for publication.

The Seventh-day Baptist North-Western Association, convened July, 1849, to the sister Associations and General Conference:—

Dear Brethren—We have been permitted to enjoy another anniversary, which we trust has been the occasion of uniting our efforts and increasing our zeal in the great and glorious work of reformation and salvation. We regret that no delegates from sister Associations were present to participate in our deliberations. However, we feel determined, by the grace of God, to press onward, knowing that God is the strength of his people. Indeed, our meeting has been one of great interest, and we humbly hope will result in much good. We have effected the establishment of a Missionary Society for the purpose of supplying the destitute within our own borders with the preaching of the gospel, and to render ourselves more efficient in raising funds to aid in the support of our brethren in China. May there be a general waking up on the subject of missions, and every other good work, until our people become emphatically a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Pray for us.

Harlow M. Coon, Cor. Sec.

MISSIONARY SOCIETY IN WISCONSIN.

At a meeting of Seventh-day Baptists, convened at Walworth, Wis., July 13, 1849, for the purpose of organizing a Society for Missionary Operations, O. P. Hull was called to the Chair, and H. W. Coon chosen Secretary. A Constitution was presented, read, and adopted. The following officers were then appointed for the ensuing year:—H. Clark, President; Abel Bond, Vice President; B. F. Bond, Secretary; J. L. Crumb, Treasurer; A. H. Coon, Director. A Committee of three were chosen as Appraisers—H. W. Coon, O. P. Hull, and N. L. Coon. A Committee of five were chosen as Solicitors—A. Maxson, A. W. Coon, O. P. Hull, R. C. Bond, and J. M. Todd. It was also Resolved, That all missionaries employed by this Society shall be Solicitors. Resolved, That all money designated by the donor for foreign missions be so appropriated. On motion, adjourned to meet with the next Annual Association, at the call of the Chair.

Constitution.

Art. 1st. This Society shall be known by the name and title of the North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society; and its object shall be united exertion to disseminate the Christian Religion and the Scriptures of truth in their original purity, and to promote the salvation of our fellow creatures in the most destitute portions of our own beloved country, and also among the heathen, as far as its funds shall aid in the accomplishment of such an object.

Art. 2d. The Officers of this Society shall consist of a President, Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and one Director, who shall constitute an Executive Board, and a majority of whom shall constitue a quorum to do business.

Art. 3d. It shall be the duty of said Board to ascertain the most eligible fields for missionary labor, to employ one or more missionaries, and fix the salaries of all missionaries they employ, and make a full report to the Society at the time of the sitting of each Quarterly Meeting of said Society, and to take up collections for the benefit of said Society at all such meetings.

Art. 4th. All persons annually contributing to the funds of this Society shall, by virtue thereof, be constituted members of the Society.

Art. 5th. All available property that may be donated to the Society for the above specific object, shall be received by the Executive Board as funds of said Society.

Art. 6th. There shall be an Appraising Committee of three appointed by the Society, whose duty it shall be to appraise all property donated to the Society, and pay all missionaries employed by the Executive Board, and also all necessary contingent expenses, either directly or by their order on the Treasurer, and render an accurate and just account to the Executive Board when called upon.

Art. 7th. No expenses shall be incurred that shall exceed the funds of said Society.

Art. 8th. The Officers of this Society shall be elected annually.

Art. 9th. One or more Solicitors shall be appointed by the Society to solicit and collect funds to aid in carrying out the humane and benevolent objects of this Society.

Art. 10th. This Constitution may be altered or amended by a plurality of votes at any regular meeting of the Society.

Art. 11th. The Annual Meeting of this Society shall be held at the time and place agreed upon at a former Annual Meeting.

B. F. Bond, Secretary.

Prompt Pay.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing from Saratoga, mentions the following incident as having occurred at one of the churches in Saratoga on the previous Sunday evening:—

"Rev. Mr. Locke had just finished his first head, when a man near the door rose and walked down the aisle directly in front of the pulpit, then deliberately and politely handed up in front a bank note to the Rev. speaker, who quietly received it, and went on with his discourse. Who? What? Why? asked excited curiosity in the minds of the puzzled audience. Quite a number, and among them ladies not a few, lingered after the benediction, to obtain a solution of the mystery. It seemed that the man was the son of the late Judge ——, a generous fellow, but accustomed to look too much on the wine when red. He was heard to say to his friends near, 'I like that man's preaching; it's worth the cash down; I don't believe he'll half get paid for it; so here goes a picture for him.' Whereupon he rose, and with a brick in his hat and a bill in his hand he made his way through the wondering congregation to the speaker, cashed over, and quietly returned to his seat.

ANNIVERSARY OF ALFRED ACADEMY.

The Anniversary Exercises of this Institution came off in Prospect Grove on the 12th of July. These exercises indicated a progress worthy of the age, and were calculated to awaken in the bosoms of the multitude who witnessed them, the most laudable enthusiasm, and the most profound respect for literature and religion. The talent displayed, both in composition and oratory would honor any age or any sphere of action. Almost every question of interest had its advocate or its opponent, each evincing a skill in argument, and depth of thought, which older and more renowned might envy. But that which constituted the happiest feature, was the high-toned moral sentiment which pervaded every exercise. Heaven speed the time when this shall be the prominent feature of every system of education, and when all systems not aiming at the development of the moral powers of man, shall be considered, as they surely are, fearful engines for his destruction.

It is estimated, that not less than 3,700 people were in attendance, and the most commendable decorum and order was maintained during the whole day, though the weather was excessively hot. The exercises were enlivened by music of various kinds, performed with an accuracy indicating that this beautiful and healthful science is duly appreciated in Alfred. Piano Music, with accompaniment, was given by Prof. Stillman; Vocal Music by the Academic Class, taught by D. E. Maxson, and the Village Choir, by Seth Merriman. The Andover Brass Band was also in attendance, and acquitted itself with honor. At noon, a bountiful table was spread in the dining hall, and all clergymen and friends of the students invited to partake, after which the annual oration was delivered by Prof. Bixley, of Richburg Academy.

At the close of the exercises, Mr. Jonathan Allen, late of Oberlin College, and Miss Abigail A. Maxson, Preceptress of Alfred Academy, were married by Rev. N. V. Hull. The exercises concluded with prayer by Prof. Kenyon.

The examination of classes was held three days previous, and indicated the adaptation of the mode of instruction here employed to the production of independent scholarship. Thoroughness and self-dependence was the motto of every teacher, as appeared in the recitation of every class.

This Institution, formerly under the proprietorship of two individuals, is now transferred to that of seven, who, by a long identity with it, both as teachers and students, feel that interest in its success which no others can feel, and who, by their long experience and success as teachers, promise to meet the fast increasing demands of this flourishing Institution.

A Lover of Scientific and Religious Progress.

MISSIONS IN OREGON.

The Home Missionary for August contains long extracts from the correspondence of the missionaries on the Pacific coast.

Rev. Horace Lyman, who was sent out to Oregon, but stopped a while at Pueblo de San José, on account of the rush to California, has been directed to proceed according to his original appointment, as it is expected that a large part of the diggers from Oregon will soon return to their homes; and that many others, after becoming weary of the privations and hazard incident to the present condition of California, will settle in the adjoining territory.

At Oregon City, the people have organized themselves into a religious society, and feel much interested in the responsibility of sustaining public worship. The cause of temperance has received a new impulse, and a general application has been made to the retailers to stop the trade in rum, especially as the sale of it to Indians endangers the lives of people. The prospects of an intelligent and orderly community are encouraging. The continued influence of the California fever is working disastrously, in unsettling the minds and plans of people, and weakening the social organization.

One of the missionaries gives the following account of the atmosphere of Oregon:—

"In passing from the Missouri river to Oregon, the traveler cannot fail to observe the positive and increasing clearness and purity of the atmosphere. Objects seen at a distance are found to be of a remove nearly double their apparent distance; the spirit of the traveler becomes unusually buoyant and excitable, and he finds himself and animals possessed of far greater powers of endurance than he had supposed possible. The same brilliantly clear atmosphere smiles benignantly over all Oregon. Objects may be seen with the unaided eye, at the distance of 200 miles; and the eye still reaches off beyond in search of a more distant object upon which to rest."

MISSIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

The ministers sent out to California by the American Home Missionary Society seem to be well received by the people. Mr. Willey, who was sent to Monterey, has commenced preaching, and has also established a school on the New England plan. The people have made provision for his support one year independent of the Society. Mr. Douglass has established himself at Pueblo de San José, where the people resolved to raise $2500 for his support during the first year. They also voted $3000 to build an Academy. But gold-seeking, gambling, and drinking, make terrible inroads upon the people. Speaking of ministers going to California to dig gold, one of the missionaries says:—

"May it not be, that some ministers are coming here, thinking to serve their Master—and to dig gold? We feel very strongly on this point. Some have attempted this; but the influence is bad; every body else digs gold, and nobody could be hired to refrain. Now, the simple fact of a man's refraining from grasping a fortune which lies in this way before him, and devoting himself with simplicity and Godly sincerity to the work of doing good, is calculated to have more influence than the most eloquent preaching sometimes has. There is obviously no danger of a minister's coming to want here, as long as other people have the means of living and he minds his proper business. And we most earnestly hope no minister will come here, without making a solemn covenant with God and his own soul, to know nothing here but Christ and him crucified, and not to meddle with digging gold and speculating in lands. If a class of men should come here and do these things, they will destroy their own power to do good, and cripple that of others."

☞ We copy the following Call from the Christian Contributor. The people who send it forth are said to be of a disposition—(very rare in these days)—to examine for themselves the commonly-received theological dogmas, and to adopt or reject them according as they agree or conflict with the word of God. One of that people, Gerrit Smith, has recently commenced keeping the Sabbath. We happened, the other day, to fall in with the former pastor of the "Church of Peterboro," of whom we inquired what had brought Mr. Smith to adopt this unpopular practice, to which he very frankly replied, "His Bible and his conscience, I suppose." Pretty good authority, thought we; and so long as he and those associated with him follow it, we bid them God speed.

ANTI-SECTARIAN CONVENTION.

To Christians:—It will soon be six years since a portion of the Christians in this community came together, under the name of the "Church of Peterboro." Their only distinctive or peculiar principle is, that all the Christians of a place, be they many or few, be they agreed or disagreed, either in their doctrines or practices, constitute the one Church of such place.

From time to time, the Church of Peterboro hears of individuals in different parts of the country who sympathize with it, and heartily espouse its distinctive and peculiar principle. That it should hear of these with joy is no more than might be expected. For the Church of Peterboro most deeply believes, that nothing short of the success of this principle can suffice to rid the world of the immeasurable evil of sectarianism. Every Church, however pure or reformatory in its spirit, if it stop short of this principle, is a sectarian Church, and contributes to postpone the death of sectarianism.

The Church of Peterboro earnestly desires to look into the faces, and to listen to the voices of those, "that have obtained like precious faith," with itself; and it has accordingly, this day, resolved to call a Convention of such persons, to be held in Peterboro, Wednesday and Thursday the 10th and 11th days of next October. It is believed, that persons from many of the counties of this State, and also from other States, will attend this convention.

Is there not ground to hope, that great good will result from this gathering? Will not the scattered few, who shall thus be brought together, be enabled, under the Divine blessing, to enlighten each other's hearts, and to strengthen each other's hands? Only let them come to the Convention with that preparation, which the grace of God can alone give, and they will have abundant reason to bless Him for the Convention—to bless Him for it, forever and ever.

Peterboro, N. Y., July 15, 1849.

A Step Backward.—A correspondent of the Independent notices a recent meeting of the "Michigan Sabbath Union," and appends the following reflections, which are deserving of consideration, particularly from those who suppose that when men in the East are induced, by the dollar-and-cent argument, to stop their rail-road trains on Sunday, they straightway become consistent Sabbath-keepers. To make men consistent in this matter, their observance of the day must be grounded upon something else than expediency and economy—even upon the law of God, and an enlightened conscience:—

"The facts communicated at this meeting show a great need of effort in this cause. Sabbath desecration has received a great impulse in this State within a few weeks past, from the Central Railroad Company. Their cars now run regularly on the Sabbath. They thus not only desecrate the day themselves, but afford to others the full influence of their example, besides furnishing multitudes with occasions for this wickedness, too tempting to be resisted. This Company is composed chiefly of Eastern men; their influence is therefore the more pernicious here; and they have for their iniquity in this matter the poor apology of being obliged to carry the United States Mail—that Department not requiring service in this State on the Sabbath. Though the acquisition of money is their sole object, we have no doubt they have adopted an unwise policy. Of this we hope they may soon become thoroughly satisfied, and be disposed to keep the Sabbath—especially in view of the exceeding mischief to good morals and virtue, of which their present course is productive."

Associational Communion.—I noticed in a recent number of the Sabbath Recorder, a declaration that the Associations were in the habit of celebrating the Lord's Supper at their annual sessions. The writer labors under a mistake, so far as the Central and Western Associations are concerned. I believe I have attended every session of the Central Association, and do not recollect of their celebrating the Lord's Supper for the last ten years. I have likewise attended several sessions of the Western Association, and do not believe that it is administered there, unless it should happen at a time when the church holds her communion. It is attended then by the church, and the members of the association are only as occasional visitors.

E. S. B.

A Western Sabbath Convention.—One of our exchanges says that at a recent meeting of the General Association of Iowa, a letter was read from a committee of the Baptist Convention, requesting the appointment of a committee "to co-operate with them and with other ecclesiastical bodies, in calling a general convention to secure the better observance of the Christian Sabbath." The violation of the Sabbath by the steamboats on the Western waters, is stated to be one of the greatest obstacles to the progress of religion and morals in that section of the Union.

Fanny Forrester.—Letters from Mrs. Judson have been received by a friend, dated Maulmain, April 21, in which she says:—

"I am decidedly better than I was a month ago, and there is now every prospect of entire recovery. What the intentions of my heavenly Father may be towards me I cannot know, but do think I feel submissive to his will. A long life seems very desirable in a place like this; but the All-wise alone can tell whose life to preserve, and whose to take away."

This announcement, though not entirely relieving the many hearts, saddened by a recent reference in the newspapers to the health of this estimable missionary lady, will prove of great comfort, as showing her perfect resignation to the Divine will, and her full trust in the power of Him in whose hands alone her destiny rests.

Fire and Loss of Life at St. Louis.—About 3 o'clock in the morning of July 29, a fire broke out on the steamer Algoma, just arrived from the Missouri with full freight, which destroyed that vessel, together with the steamers Mary, Phenix, San Francisco, and Dubuque. The San Francisco was also just in from the Missouri, with a full cargo of hemp, tobacco and bacon. The Mary had 500 tons of freight for New Orleans; the Phenix 100 tons for Ohio—principally hemp and lead; the Dubuque had a small freight in for the Upper Mississippi. Four or five were new boats. Five hundred hogs on board the Mary were burned. Nothing was saved on board any of the boats but a few hogsheads of bacon from the Mary. All were burnt to the water's edge, and the hulls of all except the Dubuque have sunk.

Capt. Young of the steamer Algoma, was lost during the conflagration, together with some other persons, including father, mother, and ten children of the same family.

After the fire, a riot was got up between the Irish and the firemen, in the course of which pistols were fired, and several persons badly wounded. The military suppressed the riot, and made several arrests of the rioters.

Indian Outbreaks in Florida.—Outrages have recently been committed upon the whites of Florida by the Indians. In one case they went to a trading store at the mouth of Pease Creek, killed the clerk and another man, wounded several persons, plundered the store and set fire to it, and then decamped with their booty. In another case, they undertook to carry off some negroes, but when they resisted, six or seven negroes were killed on the spot. In consequence of these outrages, many plantations have been abandoned, and the settlements put under military discipline. The Indians are said to have some five or six hundred warriors, and it is believed that they contemplate another desperate war. The Governor of Florida has issued a requisition for a large number of volunteers, and expresses a determination to prosecute a war of removal or extermination.

☞ We clip the following paragraph from the New York Sun of last sixth-day, not so much for the purpose of giving information to our readers, as of showing them that the recent movements attract the attention of others as well as of our people:—

Letters have recently been received in this city, which state that the Rev. William M. Jones, Calvinistic Baptist missionary in Hayti, has become a convert to the views of the Seventh-day Baptists, but continues his labors as heretofore under the patronage of the "Free Mission Society." The Rev. Joseph W. Morton, the only missionary in Hayti of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, has also abandoned his earlier views, and embraced the same sentiment with Mr. Jones, in regard to the Sabbath. Mr. Morton has returned from Port-au-Prince, where he was stationed, and has been suspended from the ministry by the Synod of his denomination, for his rejection of the standards of that Church in this particular.

General Intelligence.

THE NEWS FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on the 3d, with seven days later news from Europe.

In England, the cholera is increasing. During the week before the steamer sailed, there were 339 deaths from that disease in London, being more than double the number of the preceding week. At Bristol, Plymouth, Portsmouth, and along the whole of the south coast, it is raging in a very malignant form. Scotland is generally exempt from it.

The reports from Ireland are more favorable as respects the potato crop. Although disease has appeared in a few fields, it is believed that the general crop is saved. There was a great riot in the County of Down, Ireland, on the 12th of July, the anniversary of the battle of the Boyne. A procession of Orangemen was attacked by a large number of Roman Catholics, armed with pikes and guns. Forty or fifty persons are said to have been killed, mostly of the Catholic party.

From Hungary, there are reports of several conflicts, but it is not easy to say which party is in the ascendant. A crisis in Hungarian affairs is evidently at hand.

The armistice between Prussia and Denmark has been ratified. A suspension of hostilities both by sea and land for six months is agreed to. At the close of this period the armistice, if not to be renewed, is to continue six months. The blockade is raised as soon as the Prussian troops have been moved to the south of Flensburg. The captured vessels with their cargoes are to be restored on both sides.

At Rome, preparations are being made by the French which lead to the impression that the Pope is soon expected to return. It is said to be up-hill business, however. The French are doing all they can, distributing money freely, to get up a cry in his favor, but in vain. The Roman troops, who had agreed in the first instance to do duty conjointly with the French, are all leaving, and the whole force remaining now amounts to less than 1,000 men. Of these, many were anxious to leave, but Gen. Oudinot would not give his consent. The Pope's engineers, having been asked to make a demonstration in his favor, preferred quitting his service. Thirty-nine out of forty-three resigned, and all the rank and file were disbanded. The same occurred in the artillery, all the officers having resigned, with the exception of three captains and a sergeant. The reason given is that the French authorities refused to give them any promise or guaranty as to the protection of the rights of the people.

The Pope's prospects do not seem to have been improved by the success of the French at Rome. The hatred of the Roman people for priestly rule is evidently deeper than ever. The Pope is not willing to go back to Rome on such conditions as the French are suppored to desire. He probably has more confidence in the old aristocratic governments than in the new Republic. Bologne is talked of as the head of his government.

Garibaldi has succeeded in making his escape from the French division, who were put upon a false scent, and he is now on the mountains of Abruzzi. Previous to his departure from Rome, he had secured the amunition and military stores. Another account states that Garibaldi is on the Neapolitan frontier, where he has been joined by another body of fugitive troops, and formed, it is said, a body of 20,000 men.

The besieging operations against Venice have been discontinued in consequence of the fatal prevalence of fever and sickness amongst the Austrian troops, by the excessive heat and hard work.

THE CHOLERA.

The City Inspector of New York reports 678 deaths by cholera last week. The week before there were 692; and the week before that 714. From this it is evident that the epidemic is on the decrease. The number of deaths from other diseases has also decreased for the last two weeks. It is generally believed, that the worst part of the season is past.

At Boston, the cholera has increased considerably within a week. On the 4th, 24 deaths were reported for that day, and 52 for the week.

At Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and St. Louis, the epidemic has so far abated that business is beginning to assnme its usual aspect.

There are several places at the West and South-west, where the cholera continues to rage. At Peru, Ill. it has carried of fifty persons. At La Salle there have been 20 deaths.

A letter from Jackson, Mich., to the Detroit Free Press, tells of the sudden death of eight persons, all in one family. The family consisted of nine persons, and all, save one, (an infant) are dead! The name of the family was Cooper, and those deceased embraced Cooper and his wife, his father and mother, a son and daughter, and two boarders in the house, a brother and sister named Neil. The father and mother of Cooper, who were each about one hundred years of age, had just arrived from the East, on a visit to their son.

No place in the Union has been more sorely afflicted than Sandusky, Ohio. Out of a population of less than 4,000 (or, rather 2,000, for at least one half the population fled) 400 or 500 have died. Latterly the panic has been so general that it has been impossible to obtain either medicine or other assistance for the sick or dying. The physicians of the place have suffered severely. Those who have not fallen, have been worn out. When this fact became known at Cleveland, and other localities, several physicians proceeded to Sandusky, and entered at once upon the fulfillment of their mission of mercy. On Wednesday of last week, the editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer went to the dock on the arrival of the boat from Sandusky, and learned that on Tuesday 37 deaths occurred by Cholera—that the Agent of Fargo's Express, S. Parks, had volunteered to discharge the duties of sexton, and with his cart, in one day, took to their graves 34 persons, and saw them decently buried. The hotels, stores and workshops (except coffin-factories) were all closed. Only about one-fourth the population remained

The Cleveland Herald makes some extracts from a private letter from the Mail Agent at Sandusky, dated July 29, which give a faint idea of the distress and panic there. The writer says:—

"About the time I arrived here, and a short time previous, the cases were two or three a week up to last Sunday. On that day it was violent, and all attacked died, nine in number; Monday, 23; Tuesday, 25; Twelve hours of Wednesday, 18; Thursday, but few cases or deaths, and the disease evidently yielded to the influence of medicine. Friday morning we left with the belief that on our return, last night, we should find but few cases, but on the arrival of Friday night's train at Springfield yesterday morning, we were wofully disappointed. In place of 60, 70, and sometimes a 100 passengers coming back, the car brought but 4 or 5. Many of the passengers and hands who went down on Friday night's train took sick in the cars and were left on the way. As we came up yesterday we learned that three of them had died. There were four respectable married ladies left here in company and went toward Mansfield on the railroad. The husband of one has received a letter from his wife stating that the other three had been taken sick in the cars, were left at a village, and had died.

Singular Incident.—The Cincinnati Globe relates the following: A singular fact was told the other day at Messrs. Livingston & Fargo's office, relative to the accident which occurred on the Mad River Railroad last week. When the express car was overturned, most of the boxes and parcels were broken open and more of less injured. Among the boxes was one directed to a druggist in this city, enclosing a tin box, which also enclosed an antique glass jar from Egypt. This jar contained Otto of Roses, valued at $1,500. The outside wooden box was broken open, and also the tin case, but, strange to say, the glass jar was entirely uninjured, while carefully-secured boxes and parcels around and near were crushed. The owner of the Otto of Roses had been very anxious about its arrival for several days, and when he heard of the accident on the railroad despaired of receiving the precious stuff. On the evening that Messrs. Livingston & Fargo delivered him the jar in safety, he was taken with the Cholera, and died the day after.

Singular Affair.—A few weeks since, a father and son, living in Ross County, by the name of Christy, both of whom were addicted to intemperance, quarreled, and the son beat the father. The father then ordered the son to leave the premises, threatening, if he returned, to kill him. The son did return, and the father, true to his word for once, shot him dead in his tracks. The citizens being afraid to arrest him after the commission of the horrid deed, he left, and went into Clinton County, where he ran at large for two or three weeks, until his daughter, who had witnessed the tragedy, learning his whereabout, followed him into Clinton, went before a magistrate, made oath to the facts, and had her father arrested. At last accounts, he was lying in the Clinton jail, awaiting the arrival of the Sheriff from Ross. This case is certainly without a parallel—a father beaten by his son, a son shot by his father, and the father arrested upon the affidavit of his daughter. [Ohio paper.]

The Collision of the Steamer Worcester and the Brig.—It will be remembered, it has been stated that a collision took place between this steamer and another vessel, about seven miles west from Faulkland Island, two weeks ago last Friday night. We are informed by a gentleman just from that Island, that Captain Kimberly, keeper of the light, says that large pieces of the steamer, fifteen feet long and eighteen inches square, with part of the wheelhouse, came ashore there the next day, together with the whole bowsprit of a herm. brig, and part of her jib boom; and Capt. Kimberly is of opinion, from the state of the wind and the brig's direction, that the vessel must have gone down with every soul on board. Nothing has been heard of her since.

One Way to Commit Suicide.—A man named J. N. Jaques, from Newburyport, Mass., was run over by the cars on the Eastern Railroad, two miles from Newburyport, on Monday, and instantly killed. As the train approached he was seen to turn his head and look toward it several times. But when it was within some 20 feet of him he threw himself on his face directly before the Engine, and was crushed to death in an instant. He was a well-dressed man, about 50 years of age, and no reason was known for the deliberate and melancholy act of self-destruction which he appears to have committed.

Another Way to do the Same Thing.—The Forsyth (Ga.) Bee of the 25th ult. records a suicide of an unusual character. A person by the name of Sutton having, against his wife's remonstrances, purchased a grog-shop at Van Buren, which led him into bad habits, and caused him to resolve upon removing his family to that town, Mrs. Sutton came to the desperate resolution of destroying herself and children rather than comply with his wishes; and, with that view, on the night of the 20th ult., when herself, her two children, and a negro girl, were in the house, she fastened the doors and set it on fire. The oldest child and the negro girl made their escape, but the mother and youngest child perished in the flames.

A China Ship.—A ship designed for the China trade was launched from one of the New York yards last week. She is to be called the Oriental, and commanded by Capt. Nathaniel B. Palmer. She is a noble specimen of naval architecture, of the same class with the Samuel Russel and the Houqua, but of superior dimensions and finish. Her length is 175 feet; breadth of beam, 30 feet; depth of hold, 21 feet; tunnage, 1,050 tuns. She is a two-decked vessel, combining great strength with remarkable beauty. Her hull is of white oak, live oak, locust and cedar. Her floor is white oak. Her cabin, which is finished with uncommon elegance, has eight convenient, airy, and well-lighted state-rooms.

Rail-road Accident.—A frightful accident happened on the railroad between New York and Philadelphia, on the 2d of August. The train from the latter place ran off the track near Princeton, in consequence of the switch being misplaced. The locomotive, with the mail and baggage car, went into the canal, which runs parallel with the road, while the first two cars were completely smashed up, two men killed outright, and seventeen persons seriously wounded.

Family Gathering.—The descendants of Richard Haven, of Lynn, Mass., were to have had a great 'family party' at Framingham, on the 30th ult. Five years ago, there was such a gathering of the family, at which 1,500 were present, and it was then voted to have a second, and, if possible, a more general meeting in 1849. All the Havens, and all connected with them by marriage, or who expect to be so connected, are invited to assemble on the occasion.

SUMMARY.

Two men were drowned near Binghampton, N. Y., on the 29th of July. A young man named George Martin was bathing in the Chemung River, when by some means he seemed to be drowning. The alarm was given, when Mr. Lewis Seymour rushed to his assistance, and in endeavoring to save him lost his own life. The bodies were soon recovered. Mr. Seymour left a wife and six children to mourn his loss.

The Chronotype says that Christopher Robinson, publisher of the Lynn Pioneer, has brought an action for slander against James N. Buffum, laying the damages at $10,000. Mr. Buffum is one of the Garrison Abolitionists, who do not hitch horses with the Pioneer folks. We believe that both of the parties profess to be non-resistants; at any rate, Mr. Robinson once refused to prosecute a man who broke into his store.

The Governor of Maryland has commuted the sentence of William Riston, a colored man, found guilty of murdering Edward Harris, from death to imprisonment for life. When the change was made known to him, he is said to have burst into tears, declaring that he should prefer hanging to imprisonment for life.

A telegraphic dispatch dated New Orleans July 21, says: A gentleman named Morris, arrived yesterday from Black River, on the steamer Dorwell, and committed suicide this morning. He had been gambling the night previous, and lost a large sum of money—all he possessed—and also a gold watch. He blew his brains out before leaving the boat.

A committee of the Canadian Parliament have reported that there is an average emigration to the States of 4,000 French Canadians per annum, making 20,000 in five years. This number, it will also be remembered, is chiefly composed of some of the most active and enterprising young men of the country, many of them mechanics.

The census of the territory of Oregon, taken pursuant to an act of Congress, shows a population of 8,902, of whom 2,509 are voters. The gold-hunting mania has depressed every species of business there, and the publication of the newspapers had been suspended.

The Free Central College, at McGrawville, Cortland County, N. Y. will be opened for the reception of pupils on the first Tuesday in September. It will be open to all persons, without reference to complexion or sex, and conducted on the manual labor system.

The Suspension Bridge at Nashville, Tenn., is to be done on the 1st of April next, cost $100,000. It is to be 460 feet span, 780 feet long, 95 feet above low water mark, and will be held up by 8 wire cables 4 inches in diameter, capable together of sustaining 270,000 tons.

The Board of Canal Commissioners who had under consideration the propriety of changing the line of the Erie Canal through Cayuga Co., before the enlargement was commenced, have decided not to make any change.

The late Miss Abby Hutchinson, now Mrs. Ludlow Patten, lies very ill at the Home Mansion in Milford, N. H., though there are great hopes of her recovery.

The Anti-Renters in Rensselær and Delaware counties, New York, are preparing for the Fall elections. They have resolved that they will support no man for Chief Justice, Justice of the Court of Appeals, or Attorney General, except such as "cannot be bribed by corruption and fraud."

The cholera seems to have diffused itself over the whole west, making its appearance first at places along the water courses, but penetrating with a sure and equal pace to the smallest villages and hamlets in the interior.

A young man was arrested at Cincinnati, for a theft committed at New York, and was lodged in jail to await the requisition of the Governor; before it came, however, he was attacked with Cholera and died.

Charles Lowell, of Ellsworth, Me. had his library totally destroyed on Saturday night last, by a band of rowdies who entered his office for the express purpose.

A young woman is under arrest in Pittsburg, Pa., by the name of Mary C. Stevens, accused of strangling her two new-born babes!

The Mayor of Detroit has ordered the enforcing of the ordinance for closing tippling houses on Sunday, the penalty being $25.

A son of Rev. Mr. Baury came near being drowned in Charles river, at Newton Falls. He was sailing in a tub.

The Maysville Eagle, of July 26, says: "The astounding number of one hundred and ten drunken men were actually counted in our city, on Sunday afternoon last, between 5 and 6 o'clock. They were counted by three gentlemen of our acquaintance, who were seeking for some articles for their sick friends, and could not gain admittance to one or two unlicensed groceries, although there were men drinking and very noisy within. This is a beautiful commentory upon Cholera preventives.

The Pittsburg American speaks of a new counterfeit which has just appeared. It is a $20 note of the Greenwich Bank of the city of New York, dated April 1, 1849. It is on good paper, and remarkably well executed, and not easily distinguished from the genuine. This note came from the West, where it is supposed more have been put in circulation.

A cotton mill, the first established in Northern Ohio, has recently been put in operation at Sandusky. The main building is 130 feet in length, and contains machinery for the manufacture of 2,000 yards of sheetings per day. At present it turns out 800 yards of heavy sheeting, equal to the very best manufactured in New-England.

The barbarous usages of Lower Canada, under color of which unfortunate men have been closely confined for three, six, and sometimes for nine years, because unable to pay all their debts, though convicted of no fraud, has at length been changed. Dwyer, who has not seen the outside of his prison-room for three years, will now be released.

The New Orleans Crescent, in discussing the subject of Peter Pence, takes the ground that the Federal Government which refused to let the United States sail until bonds were given for her, ought to sequester the sums collected in the Catholic Churches for the Pope.

Miss Susan P. Cleveland, aged 25, a daughter of Zimri Cleveland, and Phebe Allen, daughter of George Allen, were drowned off Madeket, Nantucket, on Tuesday of last week, by the upsetting of a boat.

The fine steamer Oregon struck on Beardstown Bar, Illinois River, and sunk. She broke entirely in two, and will prove a total loss. Fortunately, all on board were saved.

There has been a heavy freshet in the Big Miami River. Cornfields, fences, and much valuable property, have been swept away by the back water.

In Boston, on Sunday night, during a serious riot, No. 20 Engine Company was called out, and putting the hose on to a plug near by, gave the word "Play away," and almost instantaneously the water squirted, nearly drowning the original assaulters, and wholly quelling the riot.

A verdict of $18,000 damages has been given against the proprietors of the North Upper Canada stages, for injuries sustained by a Mr. Russel, in consequence of the intoxication of the driver. He was precipitated into the water, which resulted in the loss of his feet and hands.

Mr. Cornelius Lansing, of Watervliet, was found dead in his barn, on the 19th ult., having been shockingly gored by an infuriated bull. His lower jaw was broken, and one side of his body ripped open. Mr. Lansing was a son-in-law of Judge Pearse, of Niskayuna.

The young men of St. Louis have formed themselves into an association for the purpose of taking care of orphans, and relieving the sick and poor.

A hundred and fifty Hollanders, under the lead of the Rev. Dr. Klein, are on their way to this country, to settle in Ottawa county, Michigan.

A female counterfeiter named Margaret O'Conner, who says she is from New-York, has been passing spurious bills on the Eagle Bank of Bristol, R. I., in Boston. She was arrested.

John Knox's (the Scotch Reformer's) house in Edinburgh, being in a dangerous state, has to be torn down. It is proposed to mark the stones, and re ërect it in exactly the same manner.

The Washington papers announce the death of Charles Porter, the body servant of the President, of apoplexy. He was a worthy man, and a great favorite with Gen. Taylor, having been his constant companion through his Florida and Mexican campaigns.

From the 19th to the 29th July, 86 persons died of cholera in Bucks Co., Pa., Alms-House. The disease is now abating. It broke out at Durham Furnance, and, after some ten men had died, the remainder, some 100 in all, quit work and left the place.

The Methodist denomination have for the past year employed two agents in soliciting funds for the endowment of Genesee College, the plan being to change the Seminary at Lima into a college. We understand that about $50,000 has been already subscribed.

A California adventurer writes from Mazatlan: "We all traveled through Mexico without passports, and were treated very well—except that they stole everything from us they could lay their hands on."

A city paper estimates the damage done to the trade and business of New-York by the prevailing epidemic, at ten millions of dollars. Complaints are rife of the almost entire stagnation of business among merchants and tradesmen generally.

Two lads named Nelson Cole and Alexander Gowe, were drowned at the aqueduct near Schenectady a few days since. They were both aged about 9 years.

The colored people of Boston have presented Wm. Lloyd Garrison with a silver pitcher, in testimony of their appreciation of his devotion to the cause of Emancipation.

The Spanish Consul at New Orleans was on trial during the last week for the abduction of the Spanish boy Rey. The evidence against him was very strong.

A fire at Montreal, on the 24th of July, destroyed about forty buildings, and property estimated to be worth $80,000.

There was a fire at Albany, N. Y., on the 30th of July, which destroyed about $50,000 worth of property. C. P. Williams & Co., J. P. Romaine, Ketchum & Co., lumber dealers, were the principal losers.

A whaling ship lately arrived at Nantucket which had been absent only one month less than five years.

Judge Thomas Henry, one of the pioneers of Beaver, Pa., an officer in the last war with Great Britain, editor of the Western Argus at Beaver in 1825, a Judge in 1831, and a member of Congress from 1836 to 1842, died at Beaver on the 20th, aged 68.

The National Common School Convention, which was to take place in Philadelphia, on the 22d of Aug., has been postponed until the 17th of October, on account of the prevalence of cholera throughout the country.

The Washington Republic says that Nathaniel Denby, late temporary navy agent of the United States at Marseilles, in France, is a defaulter to the tune of $155,508 48, and that suit has been commenced against him for that amount.

Three slaves were hung on Friday at Charleston, S. C., for striking an officer of the work-house. The Bumbles of Palmettodom have their dignity strongly fortified.

Jonathan Ketterman, Esq., of Xenia, Ohio, has resigned the office of Justice of Peace on account of the recent change in the Black Laws of that State being opposed to his conscience.

Father Mathew administered the pledge to about 3,000 persons at Boston, on Saturday. Rev. J. Morrill, of Manchester, N. H., while listening to the good father, had his pockets picked of several manuscript sermons.

The report started by the Indianopolis Olive Branch, that William Hamilton, who died of cholera in the Ohio Penitentiary on the 16th day of July, was Littlejohn, the celebrated revivalist, is untrue.

An artificial Sea-Serpent, prepared by some wags at Newport, created a great consternation among the bathers, a few days ago, by its sudden appearance in their midst.

The number of cholera patients treated by the Homeopathy Doctors of St. Louis, up to July 13, was 1,567, of which 51 died.

James M. Summons has been committed for trial at Cincinnati on a charge of poisoning his father's family.

The Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, celebrated the Cholera Fast-Day by a festiv commemoration of West Indian Emancipation.

First-rate coal has been found in Arkansas at the junction of the Petitjean and Arkansas rivers.

The rust is found to be bad among the wheat of Wisconsin.

Three boys were drowned at Hamburgh, S. C., the other day, by the upsetting of a small boat.

The late Free Soil Convention at Senecaville (O.) among other resolutions, passed one asking a change in the Ohio State Constitution, so that all persons, male and female, over the age of twenty-one, might have the right of suffrage.

New York Markets—Monday, Aug. 6.

Ashes—Pots $5 87 a 5 94; Pearls 6 00.

Flour and Meal—Flour, Western and State, 4 62 a 5 06; pure Genesee 5 25 a 5 56. Rye Flour 3 06 a 3 12. Jersey Meal 3 12.

Grain—Genesee Wheat 1 26, Maryland 1 15. Oats 46 a 47. Corn from 57 to 62c.

Provisions—Mess Pork 10 87; Prime 9 06. Butter, 7 a 10c. for Ohio; 10 a 14c. for Western. Cheese 2 a 6½c.

LETTERS.

W. B. Gillett, Daniel Coon, Geo. Thorngate, Andrew Babcock, Maxson Green, Eli Vanhorn, Eli S. Bailey, H. M. Coon, B. F. Bond, Charles Potter (all right.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Adams, N. Y.		Hounsfield, N. Y.
Edward Whitford	$5 00	Wm. Green	$5 00
Silas Maxson	5 00	Elias Frink	5 00
E. W. Whitford	5 00	Harvey Maxson	5 00
S. L. Babcock	5 00
Nathan Saunders	5 00	Verona, N. Y.
Isaac Saunders	5 00	N. H. Satterlee	5 00
Sela Burdick	5 00	W. C. Satterlee	5 00
James G. Green	5 00	John Parmalee	5 00
E. R. Maxson	5 00	H. J. Williams	5 00
Chas. Potter	5 00	D. P. Williams	5 00
N. G. Whitford	5 00	O. M. Williams	5 00
A. M. Whitford	5 00
David Whitford	5 00	Milton, Wis.
		Ezra Goodrich	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

E. Whitford, Adams,	$2 00	to vol. 6	No. 52
E. W. Whitford "	2 00	" 6	" 52
N. G. Whitford "	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. M. Whitford "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Jos. J. Green "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Horace Otis "	1 00	" 6	" 26
Benj. Maxson, Stowell's Corners	2 00	" 6	" 52
E. M. Osgood, Lairdsville,	2 00	" 6	" 52
H. P. Green, Genesee,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Arnold Hiscox, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	" 6	" 52
Sands Palmer "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Peleg Babcock "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Benj. S Brown, Windsor, N. J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
David Evans, New York,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Eli Vanhorn, Lost Creek, Va.	3 00	" 7	" 26
Wm. Bateen, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Wm. Kennedy, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Abel Bond, Clarksburg, Va.	2 00	" 6	" 52
Amos Burdick, 2d, Alfred,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Philip S. Green "	2 00	" 6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

N. Saunders, Adams,	$2 00	to vol. 5	No. 52
Luke Kellog "	2 00	" 5	" 52
S. P. Maxson "	2 00	" 5	" 52
Daniel Main "	50	" 5	" 52
L. R. Green "	50	" 5	" 52
W. K. Green, Watson,	2 00	" 5	" 52
D. P. Williams, New London,	2 00	" 5	" 52
S. P. Marsh, Higginsville,	8 00	" 5	" 52
Geo Thorngate, Dartford, Wis.	2 00	" 5	" 52
Daniel Larkin, Hopkinton, R. I.	2 00	" 5	" 52
Eli Vanhorn, Lost Creek, Va.	1 00	" 5	" 52

Receipts for the Missionary Association.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association acknowledges the receipt of the following sums since his last report in the Recorder:—

From Julia A. Wescot,	f. m. $1 50, h. m. 50,	$2 00
Western Association,	f. m. 85 00, h. m. 8 00,	93 00

[Request to constitute L. Andrus and T. E. Babcock life members for the above.]

Pawcatuck Female Benevolent Society, to constitute Wm. B. Maxson a life member, 25 00

A. D. TITSWORTH, Treasurer.

☞ Moneys for the Missionary Association, which it is desired to have acknowledged in the forthcoming Annual Report should be sent to the Treasurer before the Annual Meeting.

Notice.

The Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Association requests that all communications, intended to aid him in making up the Annual Report, be forwarded to him so that they may be received at least two weeks before the time of the Annual Meeting. Address to the care of Geo. B. Utter. THOS. B. BROWN, Cor. Sec.

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the Session.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution was passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. Passenger Trains Up—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Passenger Trains Down—Leave White House at 5½ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M, Somerville 4¼ A. M., Plainfield 5¾ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. Returning—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

NEW LINE FOR SCHOOLEY'S MOUNTAIN.

Splendid stages will leave for the Mountain on the arrival of the 9 o'clock train from New York at White House. This route has less staging than any other.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Pamphlets containing the necessary information may be had gratis at the office of the Sabbath Recorder.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

Sheriff's Office, New York, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I., Chap. 6, Title 3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. Aug. 9.

Miscellaneous.

YOUTH AND AGE.

[The following beautiful lines originally appeared in the "Etonian," a periodical started about twenty years ago by the boys of Eton College. For truth, tenderness, and melody, they are incomparable.]

I often think each tottering form
That limps alone in life's decline,
Once bore a heart as young, as warm,
As full of idle thoughts as mine;
And each has had its dream of joy,
His own unequal'd pure romance;
Commencing when the blushing boy
First thrills at lovely woman's glance.

And each could tell his tale of youth,
Would think its scenes of love evince
More passion, more unearthly truth,
Than any tale before or since.
Yes! they could tell of tender lays,
At midnight penned in classic shades,
Of days more bright than modern days—
And maids more fair than modern maids.

Of whispers in a willing ear,
Of kisses on a blushing cheek,
Each kiss, each whisper, far too dear,
Our modern lips to give or speak;
Of passions too untimely crossed;
Or passions slighted or betrayed—
Of kindred spirits early lost,
And buds that blossom but to fade.

Of beaming eyes and tresses gay,
Elastic form and noble brow,
And forms that all have passed away,
And left them what we see them now.
And is it thus—is human love,
So very light and frail a thing?
And must youth's brightest visions move
Forever on Time's restless wing?

Must all the eyes that still are bright,
And all the lips that talk of bliss,
And all the forms so fair to sight,
Hereafter only come to this?
Then what are earth's best visions worth,
If we at length must lose them thus?
If all we value most on earth
Ere long must fade away from us?

GOLD DIGGING.

Seth Bryden, who went out to California with a party from Newark, N. J., has had real experience in gold-digging, of which he gives the following account through the Newark Advertiser:—

"We reached the valley of Sutter's Mill at 9 o'clock, A. M. April 15. Put up our tent, packed away our baggage, and about four o'clock went to the diggings below the saw mill with our wash pans, and washed out a few grains of gold. On Monday, the 16th, we went to the diggings, gathered all the information we could from the people we found at work there, and washed out 3 or 3 1-2 dollars worth of gold. On Tuesday, I put the washer together, while the others went to dig and prepare the dirt to wash. In the afternoon we washed out $10 worth, or the weight of an eagle. Wednesday, 17th, Mr. Davenport stayed at the tent while the other five washed all day, and obtained $27 50. Thursday, 18th, all hands together washed out $32 50. Friday, 19th, obtained $61 worth of gold, and on Saturday, 20th, $82 50 worth, having struck a good bed of alluvial dirt, which we had to carry about 90 yards to the water. On Monday, 22d, collected $67; Tuesday, 23d, $63 50; Wednesday, $68 50, Thursday, $56; Friday, $53 50; Saturday, $50. On Sunday we stayed at the tent, washed up, and made a dividend of five ounces of gold to each person, leaving six pennyweights in the treasury. This is not up to what it was represented, being not over $8 per day, and our expenses are enormous. It seems strange, that after all that has been said with regard to this country, no correct idea of it has been conveyed.

When a person arrives at San Francisco, the journey is not half performed—the labor, fatigue and privation then commences. A person may go from San Francisco on the deck of a small vessel, and ride across the prairies in an ox-wagon, but no person would risk riding up and down the mountains to Columa, (Sutter's Saw Mill,) thence fifteen miles to the Spanish bar on the middle branch of the American fork, the nearest mine that yields sufficient to pay for working. A good horse will carry about 100 lbs. across the mountains, at an expense of about fifty cents per pound; from that a person must take his blanket, tools and victuals on his own back and climb his way wherever he goes.

A person commencing to dig, selects his place, clears away a bed of rock and gravel of all sizes and of all depths, from one to six feet, till he comes to a bed of alluvial sand a few inches thick, and sometimes a foot of this contains the gold in greater or less quantities. This is carried to the river and washed, yielding a few pieces, such as I send, in a shovel or pan full. If we strike on the lee side of a rock, or pocket in the rocks, we make a good day's work; but if we strike a place that had no shelter when the gold and yellow sand was washed down, we get nothing.

This is the character of all the mines, as far as I can learn, in the ravine or rivers; and that the gold is universally spread over the country, is acknowledged by all miners, many of whom have made large sums by good luck, saying nothing of hundreds that have not made their expenses. I have seen many returning poor. An Irishman returning from the mines to San Francisco, said he got only $19. I asked him the reason, and he said he could not find a good place. One other man said he never made less than $20 per day, and had made $700 per day, having obtained in all $30,000.

Below the mill where the gold was first discovered there is a bend in the river, which was worn away to the foot of the mountain, some 150 yards from its original bed, which is the place in which we dig for gold. It appears to me that some thousands of years ago some heavy flood brought down the alluvial soil and gold from the mountains. Then other floods have brought rocks of all sizes, from half a ton weight to gravel, and covering and mixing it with timber, &c. Removing this to find the gold, and washing it out, is the heaviest work a man can do. I learn from the miners that not one in one hundred would have come, if the had seen as much as I have, and three out of four that have come would not work at it if the mines were at Bergen.

More of the Same Sort.

A gold-digging correspondent of the Alta Californian furnishes that paper with a sort of journal of his operations, from which we copy a few paragraphs, to give our readers a glimpse of life in California:

I arrived at this place [Stanislaus Diggings] on the 7th of May. It is named in honor of Mr. James, who is an alcalde "as is an alcalde," and dispenses grub and justice to the satisfaction of all. Hundreds were busy in the ravines, washing out the treasures of the gold-laden streams, with various success.

Sunday 8th—The day is delightful, and the scene in this valley is worthy of a painter's skill, or the pen of an enthusiast. The morning was devoted (if devotion can exist in such a state of society) to the trial of a robber named Corrington, who had stolen ten thousand dollars worth of gold from Den and Dent. He was convicted by a jury of twelve, ordered to be stripped, receive a hundred lashes, and be banished from the mines. I should fail in any attempt to give a description of the trial It took place in a large tent, kept as store and hotel by James & Co., and a more motly audience could not be collected—ragged clothes covering lots of gold, and long hair and whiskers, springing from piles of dirt, in faces that perhaps lately adorned the walks of civilized life. The greatest order was observed throughout. I strolled over the hills in the afternoon, prospecting, found small particles of gold in every spot I explored, but nothing of great amount. The miners are remarkably quiet, and each one seems bent on the one grand object.

Sunday, May 13th. I have been hard at work the past week, but met with only tolerable success, half an ounce per diem, though some have digged from three to four ounces, However, they are in the minority, the greater number finding the high stage of water baffles all their toil and skill. Large stories are told of the Mormon and Sullivan's diggings above, but on investigation I find, although some have got out a pound and more, that the proportion of the fortunes is about the same throughout the mines.

Friday, 27th May. News reached here last night of the murder of young Morrison of New York, son of the lawyer of that name. It occurred at Carson's Creek, ten miles from here, where he had an altercation with a German, (Dr. Freund,) who shot him in the groin, severing the femoral artery, and causing death in two hours. Poor Morrison! I saw him on Monday in perfect health; two little days afterward, and he "slept the sleep that knows no waking." Far from his boyhood's home, and its blest associations, the fatal bullet summoned him away, and the cold eyes of strangers watched his ebbing breath. By stranger hands his lowly bed was made, and borne by them to his last resting place, he lies entombed, afar from kindred and from friends.

I have been unusually successful to-day, In a deep shaft which I sunk on high ground, I found an ounce of beautiful and heavy gold, and am now in tent, to avoid the mid-day sun, which in the mines is awful. The "Arroyo" is crowded, and unusual success seems to smile upon all, though they complain of high water. The scene at this point exceeds in life and bustle anything you would conceive. From sunrise to its setting, a continual tide of new comers pours along the road, horse after horse, mule after mule, pack after pack, bestraddled by men and women, of every nation in this quarter of the globe; though the majority are Lower Californians and Sonorians. It seems as if the whole world had mounted and was passing in review before me. Thousands continue further towards the mountains, though many pitch their tents hereabout, off saddle, seize the shovel and the pan, and dive into Mother Earth as though she was a common foe.

April 10. The gold is getting scarce, at any get-at-able depth, though pumps have been in requisition and in operation. Two-thirds of the miners to-day are scarce paying expenses. I have been prospecting with a man from Monterey, who was here last fall, and digged more gold than any one in this vicinity. He told me that he had got out seven pounds before breakfast! and oftener counted his day's work by pounds than ounces. He has long lived in the lower country, where he has a family and snug ranche. He has spent his money as rapidly as he earned it, and is now here toiling for his fortune, impoverished by his liberality, and his total disregard for money. He is well known as Tom Blanco, and is highly esteemed by all who know him. He has no better success than the unsuccessful majority at present.

Monday, 13th May. I have earned to day only $12, and the prospects among the workies are rather disheartening. Three Americans, however, below Jamestown, took out one piece of gold worth $278!! The news flew like wild-fire. Twelve California carts, with four yoke of oxen each, passed this valley last eve, and it was a scene of rural beauty, I have seldom seen surpassed.

Wednesday, 16th. Still digging, with only mediocre success, as are the majority about me. The immigration for the past two days has been less than usual. Now and then, a party appears on its winding way, composed principally of Mexicans, with their lances and red flags. This afternoon the line of march seems to be resumed, and the apparently interminable array is again in motion. One may well ask, "Where do they come from? and what country is likely to be depopulated?" for some parts of the world must be thinning their ranks very rapidly.

A large party from Tepic have been hard at work for several weeks, with rather poor success till yesterday, when they struck a rich vein, yielding the first day 3 lbs., and to-day 2 1-2 lbs. Their woe-begone countenances have assumed a smiling appearance, though they fear their good luck will be of short duration.

California, Prices, &c.

The Star publishes a letter from our late Alms-House Commissioner, Moses G. Leonard, dated at San Francisco, on the 18th June, from which we copy the following particulars:—

New York prices are fully equaled and frequently exceeded for real estate. Rents are exorbitantly high. A gentleman informed me that he was offered $18,000 per annum for his house; its dimensions are 28 by 38, a frame building, two stories high; it stands quite out of the city, and is used for a boarding house; he thought it a fair rent, but did not accept it. A hotel, a firmer building, two stories high, 35 by 60 or 65 feet, with an L. 20 by 60, rents for $100,000 per annum. Many other places rent equally as high.

Building materials of all kinds are excessively high. Lumber is worth from $350 to $400 per M (or thousand feet.)

Bricks $100 per thousand. Many other things were high, but not in the same proportion. Carpenter's wages $12 to $14 per day. Laborers from $6 to $8 per day. Many articles of merchandize are as cheap as in New York. Flour from $5 to $9 per barrel. Beef $8 to $10, at auction has sold much lower. Good Mess Pork now worth $30 per barrel. Rice 6d per lb. Butter 12s or $1 50 cents per lb. Potatoes 1s per lb. Onions 1s each, or $12 50 per hundred. Dried Fruit high and scarce. Wood $6 per cord. Fresh Beef 1s 6d per lb. Mutton $4 per quarter.

There was taken from the mines last year about $4,500,000. Estimated receipts this year, from $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. Fair average per man, one ounce per day; many receive much more, others less, &c. Estimated number of persons now in the mines, 12,000. By computation it will be perceived that a much larger amount than I have named would be realized by this number of persons, each obtaining an ounce per day. But it must be remembered, that only a portion of this number are actually digging gold. Many carrying provisions, and others cooking, and others sick, &c., and not more than half the year is suited to profitable labor in mining. In July and August, it is unhealthy, and the heat is too excessive to be endured. The rainy months are equally unsuited to labor. Yet the amount may exceed somewhat the quantity I have named. I have obtained my information from the most reliable authority. The labor of mining is said to be very fatiguing, requiring the most robust and healthy to endure it.

The climate at San Francisco is very different from what I had supposed. From sunrise till 12 or 1 o'clock it is generally pleasant—thermometer ranging from 60° to 65°. After this it blows a gale; mercury falls to 45° or thereabouts. The winds resemble the north-east winds of New-England and New York in March or April, and produce very similar sensations. Nothwithstanding, it is very healthy; the air is pure and dry. Fresh meat may be preserved a long time in the open air.

California.

We have before us, says the Springfield Republican, a private letter, written by a gentleman of property, now returned from California, which country he had visited in the United States ship Ohio, simply for the purpose of seeing it. The facts which he states, are therefore without either the bias of interest or disappointment. He states that Mr. Ithamar Whiting, formerly of Dedham, Mass., and the two Ranneys, from Chicopee Falls, are in California. The Ranneys he left at the Stanislaus "dry diggings," with a party of fifteen, sick of their speculation, and regretting that they had given up their comfortable situations. The situations they had left were at a factory in Tepic, Mexico. Whiting's income from his factory, at the same place, last year, was $22,000, and yet he left all to dig gold. The writer left him at San Francisco ill, where he probably died. He says that California is the worst "hole of a place" he ever was in, and that thousands of disappointed people were arriving every day. The writer states that he went up to the mines, in company with a gentleman who had expended considerable money in bringing along 15 Indians to assist him, but they did not succeed in getting more than an ounce apiece per day, and that the man was disgusted with the mines, as every decent person is who goes there. These statements, in regard to California, are, without doubt, too true. The sacrifice of home and friends, for gold, does not pay, and particularly is this the case with those who leave good and lucrative situations.

THE ROACH AND THE RED ANT.

In the year 1844, I was on my return voyage from China. We had been six months trading between the different ports in China and Manilla. We had carried two cargoes of dye-wood from Manilla to Shanghai, besides taking everything else that was offered, from bird's nests to bar iron.

In the knots, holes, and decayed pieces of the dyewood, which formed our principal cargo, were secreted immense quantities of vermin, consisting of red ants, scorpions, centipedes, lizards, and last, but not least, a reinforcement of our already large and voracious army of cockroaches, so that by the time our ship was ready for home, she was little better than a sailing entomoligical repository. Scorpions, with their tails erect over their backs, walked about in the most dignified manner imaginable. Centipedes crawled round in the cracks or esconsed themselves between the blankets in the sailor's bunks. Red ants by the million occupied every nook and corner; the bright eyes of the lizards were seen like jewels set in every snug crack; and the cockroaches pervaded everything. No place was sacred from their presence, and nothing came amiss to them in the eating line; all was "grist that came to their hopper." They ate everything in the shape of animal food that came in their way, from our salt beef down to the horn buttons on our jackets; and they seemed most especially to delight in making a meal of the carpenter's toe nails. I have seen him get up in the morning with his toes bleeding at every nail, the consequence of a singular propensity which cockroaches have in a marked degree, that of satisfying their stomachs at all hazards.

The greatest enemy which the cockroach had was the red ant. Two or three of these little indefatigables would steal up behind a large cockroach who was eating, and when he was all engaged, they would spring upon him, generally striking him on the head; and so quickly would they mortally wound him, that he would scarce ever run more than a foot or two before he would fall and die. We often after dinner would amuse ourselves by watching the evolutions of the ants, and noticing the ingenuity, amounting almost to reason, which they displayed in dispatching and disposing of a cockroach.

In order to eye the modus operandi to better advantage, we would entice a good fat specimen into the middle of the steerage floor, by gradually moving some dainty bit before him till we get him in a good position when we would leave him to the tender mercies of the ants militant, who were ever on the watch for the unwary.

The cockroach, knowing his danger, would for a time keep his eyes about him as he ate, and change his position in order to see if any ants were coming too near; but as he became more and more interested in discussing his meal, his vigilance would relax, and then the ants would approach, taking good care to keep directly behind him, or, as the sailors said, "in his wake." Three or four only would approach in this manner, and when close to him they would branch out to get abreast of him, and when within an inch or two, they would give a spring and fasten upon his head, and before he would have time to compose himself to meet the "king of terrors," he was a defunct cockroach. As soon as the deed was done, the hitherto concealed ants would swarm around and drag the yet quivering carcase off to their hole. If the body was too large to be taken into their quarters whole, they would proceed to gnaw off and carry in the wings and legs separately; and if in its dismembered state it offered too great an obstacle, it was quickly cut up and housed piece-meal.

Great quantities of cockroaches must have been destroyed in this way, for the ants were very numerous, and they seemed to be continually engaged in this "knock down and drag out" business. They seldom or never missed a cockroach; but flies, which they attack in the same manner, sometimes were too quick for them.

We wish the ants all manner of good success in their hunts, and should have been pleased to have had them confine their attentions to the insect tribes; but the worst of it was, they used to relish now and then a little sport in the human line, which was not so agreeable to us; and the middle of the steerage floor was sometimes the arena of a brush off and sweep out combat, in which they were sufferers "a few." [Living Age.

EFFECTS OF FEAR.

We have been told that the tooth-ache, or even a fever, is sometimes driven off by the resistance of a strong will. Even death is known to be kept at bay and often conquered by the determination of the patient not to yield to its power. On the other hand, in times of general epidemic, people fall victims to terror no less than the pestilence. The best preventive of Cholera, is to use cold water freely for the body, eat temperately of wholesome food, and make up your mind to die when the time comes. Not many who are as ready to die of Cholera as of any other disease, will ever be attacked. The great reason why so few physicians and nurses suffer from it is that that they see so much of the disease that they do not dread it. The Courier & Enquirer states a case in point:—

A gentleman risiding in Delancy street, one day last week, went to hisshop to attend to his business, leaving his family at home in good health and well provided for. During the morning a woman residing on the opposite side of the street sickened with the cholera, and died in three hours thereafter. During the afternoon the gentleman received a note from his wife, informing him that she had removed to Williamsburgh. Scarcely crediting the story, he proceeded to his house in Delancy-st., and to his astonishment found that every thing had been removed, and the house was empty. His wife had become so alarmed in consequence of a person dying in the neighborhood with the Cholera, that she immediately proceeded to Williamsburgh, and hired another house, and in a few short hours the whole of her furniture was transferred to her new residence. The effect of this upon the mind of the lady, has indeed been most unhappy, as we hear she was taken sick immediately afterward, and has not yet recovered.

BIRDS.

In order to ascertain the strength of their stomachs, Spallanzani had recourse to a great variety of experiments. Tin tubes full of grain were forced into the stomachs of turkeys, and after remaining for twenty-four hours, were found to be broken, compressed and distorted in the most irregular manner. In the space of twenty-four hours, the stomach of a cock broke off the angles of a piece of rough jagged glass, though, on examining the gizzard, no wound or laceration appeared. In a ball of lead were fixed twelve strong needles, with the points projecting out about one-fourth of an inch from the surface. Thus armed, the ball was covered with a case of paper, and forced down the throat of a turkey. The bird retained it a day and a half without manifesting any symptoms of uneasiness, and the points of all the needles were broken off close to the surface of the ball, except two or three, of which the stumps projected a little. The same interesting observer relates, that he fixed twelve small and very sharp lancets in a similar ball of lead, which was given in the same manner to a turkey cock, and left eight hours in the stomach, at the end of which the stomach was opened, but nothing appeared except the naked ball, the lancets having been broken to pieces, and the stomach remaining whole and entire. Hence, we may infer, that stones, so often found in the stomachs of many of the feathered tribes, may powerfully contribute to the pulverization of grain and other hard substances which constitute their food.

LAZY BEAVERS.

It is a curious fact, says our trapper, that among the beavers there are some that are lazy, and will not work at all, either to assist in building lodges or dams, or to cut down wood for their winter stock. The industrious ones beat these idle fellows, and drive them away; sometimes cutting off a part of their tails, and otherwise injuring them. These "Paresseux" are more easily caught in the traps than the others, and the trapper rarely misses them. They only dig a hole from the water running obliquely towards the surface of the ground twenty-five or thirty feet, from which they emerge, when hungry, to obtain food, returning to the same hole with the wood they procure to eat the bark. They never build dams, and are sometimes to the number of five or seven together; all are males. It is not at all improbable that these unfortunate fellows have, as is the case with the males of many species of animals, been engaged in fighting with others of their sex, and after having been conquered and driven away from the lodge, have become idlers from a kind of necessity. The working beavers, on the contrary, associate, males, females and young together. [Audubon.

CLEANING SILK.—The following directions for cleaning silks are by one of the first Parisian dyers. Half a pound of soft soap, a teaspoonful of brandy, and a pint of gin, mix all together; with a sponge, or flannel, spread the mixture on each side of the silk without grasping it; wash it in two or three waters, and iron it on the wrong side; it will then look as good as new.

HOLLAND WINDMILL IN THE WEST.

There is a flourishing Holland Colony in Ottawa county, Mich. named Zealand. They are a strictly temperance community, industrious, good citizens, and emigrated from Zealand, Friesland, and other provinces of Holland. They have engaged an American school teacher, and are fast becoming Americanized. The Grand River Eagle thus describes their milling facilities:

"One of the greatest curiosities in the colony is the great, awkward, and unmanageable concern called the Windmill. This is a monstrous wooden pile, in the form of an octagon tower, large at the base, and drawing to a small compass at the top. It is built of hewn timbers, framed, and is about sixty feet in height. The machinery is of wood, including the gudgeons of the wheel shafts, which are about six or eight inches in diameter, and covered with thin straps of iron. There are two saw frames, one having nine, and the other six saws. These saws are placed as far apart as they intend to make the thickness of the stuff, and the log is sawed up by one passage of the saws through it, from one end to the other, and the boards left with rough edges. The saws are thin and narrow, and very near follow the grain of the timber. The mill is moved by the force of the wind striking against four winding slats, or flappers, covered with canvass, and attached in the centre to a horizontal shaft. They were sawing or attempting to saw while I was there. Occasionally the saws would strike a few times quite lively, then draw a few slower strokes, and then entirely stop—perhaps to start again in half an hour. With a fair wind, they can saw a little, but in a lively gale it is necessary to chain it up. An enterprising individual is now putting up a steam saw mill, which will do a better business."

SOUTHERN CHOLERA ANECDOTE.—The Richmond Republican, in commenting upon the Cholera, remarks, that at least five blacks die to one white, on account of their having less control of their appetites, in addition to their belief that "a man's time is fixed." It relates the following anecdote:—

"What is amusing, even in so serious a matter as an attack of the Cholera, is the uniform pertinacity with which its colored subjects will deny to their medical attendants that they have eaten anything which could make them sick. An eminent physician of our city informed us that, on being called to a negro suddenly attacked with Cholera, he asked him whether he had been eating fruit or vegetables: 'No, sir,' was the reply, 'nothing of the kind.' 'What! have you eaten no apples or cherries?' 'No, no,' said the negro, 'I never eats 'em any time of the year.' The physician administered a vomit, the result of which was the ejection of about a quart of apples—stems, seeds, and all. 'Well,' said the doctor, 'are these not apples?' 'Yes, Sir, they are, that's a fact.' 'Well, how did they get into you if you did not eat them?' 'Please God, massa, I don't know, but I never eat anything of the kind.'

CURIOSITIES OF THE EARTH.—At the city of Modena, in Italy, and about four miles around it, wherever it is dug, whenever the workmen arrive at the distance of sixty-three feet, they come to a bed of chalk, which they bore with an augur five feet deep. They then withdraw from the pit before the augur is removed, and, upon its extraction, the water bursts up from the aperture with great violence, and quickly fills this new-made well, which continues full, and is effected by neither rains nor droughts. At the depth of fourteen feet are found the ruins of an ancient city, paved streets, houses, floors, and pieces of mosaic. Under this is found a soft oozy earth, made up of vegetables; and at twenty-six feet deep large trees entire, such as walnut trees, with the walnut sticking on the stem, and their leaves and branches in a perfect state of preservation. At 28 feet deep a soft chalk is found, mixed with a vast quantity of shells, and this bed is eleven feet deep. Under these, vegetables are found again with leaves and branches of trees as before, and thus alternately chalk and vegetable earth, to the length of sixty-three feet.

BRITISH POST OFFICE REVENUE.—A return, under the new mode of checking accounts and two-cent letter postage, exhibits the following results for the year ending January 5, 1849:—

Gross revenue receipts, after deducting the returns for refused letters, &c. $10,396,840.

Cost of management, (including a payment of $948,640 for conveying mails on railways in former years,) $6,805,762.

Net revenue, (after paying all expenses by sea and land,) $3,539,215.

There is no franking, and each department of the Government pays postage like an individual. In 1848 the Government postage amounted to $550,000.

The Boston Advertiser states that Mr. Lyman, lately deceased, has bequeathed a legacy of $50,000 to the Reform School at Westborough, Mass., of which he was the founder. He has also given $10,000 to the Farm School, of which he had been an active officer for several years, and $10,000 to the Horticultural Society, in whose labors he always took a deep interest.

The Elizabethtown Journal states that on Saturday night several persons were alarmed by a cry of murder, which, upon examination, they found to proceed from an intoxicated man named Souder, who was suffering under the lashes inflicted by four women, residents of the same house with him.

Montreal papers mention that on a recent Sunday the conductors of L'Avenir [i. e. 'The Future'] newspaper were formally excommunicated, and delivered over to satan's custody and safe-keeping for the present, at the Roman Catholic Parish Church.

The Nordlyset says that many emigrants from Norway have lately arrived at Milwaukie and Chicago. "We have heard of some 20 to 25 emigrant ships from the Fatherland which will cross the Atlantic this year with an aggregate of perhaps 2,000 men."

Land Warrants are in good demand, and selling at $130 and $132. The 40 acre warrants are $45. The supply is moderate and mostly in the hands of speculators.

Alfred Academy and Teachers' Seminary.

Board of Instruction.

WM. C. KENYON, IRA SAYLES, DANIEL PICKET, JONATHAN ALLEN, JAMES MARVIN, DARIUS FORD, DARWIN E. MAXSON;

ASSISTED BY

Miss ABIGAIL A. MAXSON, Mrs. SERENA C. SAYLES, Mrs. MELISSA B. KENYON.

ORRA STILLMAN, Professor of Instrumental Music.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in issuing another Annual Circular, would express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal patronage heretofore extended to it; and they are happy to announce, that the above-named gentlemen have been engaged as a permanent Board of Instruction, by which arrangement the increasing demands of the public can be met most efficiently. Valuable additions have been made to the Library and Apparatus of the Institution, within the past year, and will continue to be made as the good of the School may demand.

Plan of Instruction.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students."

Academic Terms.

The Academic Year for 1849–50 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1849, and ending Thursday, November 22, 1849.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 4, 1849, and ending Thursday, March 14, 1850.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 26, 1850, and ending July 4, 1850.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly no student will be admitted for any lengthof time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the students be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified. The regulations of the Institution are then explained, and all arrangements are made for the convenience and accommodation of the students.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from a distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student.

Model Class and Normal School.

This Institution sustains a Model Class, for the particular benefit of those preparing to teach. This Class is under the special supervision of an able and accomplished teacher.

The ages of the scholars attending it, vary from five to ten years; and they are taken promiscuously from the neighborhood.

In the management of this Class, teachers have the opportunity of witnessing the progress made by children under the most approved system of instruction, and can also test their own abilities as teachers.

In addition to teaching in the Model Class, the teachers meet daily during the term, to listen to lectures on modes of teaching and governing a school, the importance and dignity of the teacher's profession, &c.

This department will be open twelve weeks only during the fall term; but as a large amount of extra labor is bestowed upon this class, and extra expense incurred in its management, the tuition will be the same as the regular full term course. Those teachers wishing to remain till the close of the term will have all the facilities for pursuing their studies with advantage, without additional charge.

The public may also be assured, that no pains will be spared to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to become teachers; and that no one will receive a recommendation as a teacher, from the authorities of this Institution, who is not competent to accomplish all the specifications of his recommendation.

A teacher, to be recommended by the authorities of this Institution, must have attended one full course of lectures on the subject of teaching; and, secondly, he must have been engaged in the instruction of the Model Class, and have evinced in it an aptitude to teach, and ability to govern. If the public employ those who go out hence without a recommendation, we do not hold ourselves accountable for failures, and consequent disappointment.

Expenses.

Board, per term,	From $14 50 to $18 00
Room rent, per term,	1 50
Washing, per term,	2 50
Fuel, per term, Spring and Fall, 75c., Winter,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	From $3 50 to 5 00
Lights, per term,	1 50
Incidental Expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Music on the Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except the extras above mentioned,) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

N. B. No departure from this requisition need be asked or expected. Parents should not, therefore, send their children by some neighbor, unless authorized to do their business, leaving them thus unprovided for, and, in a manner, uncared for. Experience of years has taught us that this is the only way in which our business can be successfully managed. Besides, when paid in advance, or settled in advance, every Academic charge is fairly understood; and no man will be surprised, at the end of the term, to find a bill exceeding his expectations.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

Rev. N. V. HULL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

Alfred, June 26, 1849.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Cressingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Socie

AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per y will be charged when payment is delayed till t close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in t paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st, New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 9.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, AUGUST 16, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 269.

The Sabbath Recorder.

FAITH AND WORKS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder :—

In the Recorder of May 3d, I noticed some strictures upon a Report prepared by me, and published January 4th. As the author appeared to think I would do a "kindness to give my meaning in language that could be understood," I propose attempting to do so through your columns.

Faith, then, I understand to be such an assent of the mind, such a belief of the matter presented for its consideration, as moves it to action. Any belief or assent of the mind short of this, is hypothetical—not what the Scriptures denominate faith. Doubt is not faith ; it is unbelief. Faith ensures action ; doubt, uncertainty of action. Men are governed by faith, that is, in their actions and moral feelings. The strength of faith is the measure of action. Strong faith produces strong action, and weak faith weak action or no action all. Faith lays the foundation of hope, confidence, love, joy, &c. These all rise or fall just in proportion as faith is strong or weak. Faith in an error may be as powerful as in a truth. So long as one believes a thing to be, it is to him as though it really were, although the thing does not exist. Faith sets the machinery of mind in motion, and propels human nature onward. Thus faith sustains the relation of a cause to an effect. It must, therefore, have evidence on which to stand, which must always agree with the reason, the understanding, and the judgment.

Taking up the Bible, faith examines the evidence of its authenticity, and, finding it unimpeachable, receives it, and acts accordingly. It examines the claims of Jesus Christ to the Messiahship, and, finding them valid, receives him as such. Placing implicit confidence in his operations and declarations, faith moves at his bidding. Finding all power in heaven and earth given unto him, it knows no fear.

This view of the subject will remove all difficulty about accomplishing whatever faith may require. Faith removes mountains, while unbelief effects nothing. All things are possible to him that believes. Faith, therefore, tries no experiments ; unbelief and doubt tries many. The ram's-horns of faith are equally efficient as battering rams of wood or iron. The power of faith in healing the sick, exceeds the art of medicine ; in raising the dead, it equals Omnipotence. If faith but speak, the mighty deep rolls up its waters, and bares its channel ; if she but pray, the clouds of heaven retire, only to return at her beck. When she bids, the Sun stands still in his course, and the Moon in her orbit. It is said, perhaps, that this is the faith of miracles. Be it so. Faith is faith ; it is not doubt and unbelief. When she believes she acts. All things are possible for faith, because she believes in Omnipotence. When, then, the belief of a subject so impresses the mind as to produce its corresponding action, it is faith : when no such corresponding action is produced, it is unbelief. As all men are affected to by faith, all men must have faith. Therefore, when the Bible says "all men have not faith," it must refer to religious faith.

Some may think I have taken strong ground concerning faith, but if it be scriptural ground, it cannot be too strong. The Scriptures lay great stress on faith. The salvation of the soul hinges on it. He that believes shall be saved. But if the belief of error tends to ruin, (as it most certainly does,) the faith of salvation must be the belief of truth. As all men believe something, and as all men are not saved, it becomes all-important to know what kind of truths, when believed, will secure salvation. I say, secure salvation, for the Scriptures positively declare, that he that believeth shall be saved. Therefore, he that believeth what is required, or included, will be saved. He who believes that, whatever else he disbelieves, will be saved. He who disbelieves that, whatever else he may believe, will be damned. The believing here spoken of is such a faith as produces action, which results in salvation. To say, then, that one may have this faith, and not be saved, is contrary to the Bible.

It is evident, that any belief of the mind that comes short of the faith mentioned, is not faith, in the scriptural sense. To say, then, that one may be a believer in Christ, and not be saved, is not correct, for he that believeth shall be saved. How erroneous the idea, that it matters not what a man believes. The living God has connected evil with the belief of error, and good with the belief of the truth.

Having shown, I think, that faith is a power inducing action, and that the Scriptures speak of it in the same way, I proceed to show how faith results in justification. To justify means to absolve from guilt and merited punishment, also to prove or show one just. Justification is the remission of sins and absolution from guilt and punishment. "What shall I do to be saved ?" said one who believed himself a sinner and wished to be absolved from guilt and punishment. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," was the reply of another, who had received justification bringing peace with God. But how does faith in Christ result in justification ? I answer, as faith in Christ includes a belief of the fact that God so loved the world as to give his son to die for it, and that man was such a sinner as to deserve his displeasure forever, therefore when faith believes these truths, and the truths necessarily connected with them, penitence for sin and love to Him who will pardon, must almost of nececessity spring up in the heart. Hence the gospel is the power of God to salvation to all who believe. Faith in the truth demonstrated by the incarnation, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, will secure repentance and love in all who exercise it. He that believeth shall be saved. If, therefore, faith in those truths will work repentance and love, it necessarily follows, that if the suffering and death of Christ were expiatory in their nature, pardon, including absolution from guilt and punishment, would be extended to all exercising such faith. Faith in Christ, thus working repentance for sin and love to Him who will pardon, roots out from the heart all feeling of desert of favor conferred. Now, as pardon or justification includes absolution from guilt and punishment, it must include the restoration of forfeited blessings. Therefore, as faith in Christ will work repentance and love, and bringing the blessing of pardon and justification in its train, it follows that faith is the procuring cause of justification. Thus one is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. But this does not prove that faith makes void the law. On the contrary, it secures obedience to the law. For, as unbelief led to the violation of the law, faith is the only way of return to it. Perhaps it has been thought that faith was not required under the law. This must be a mistake, for faith in God and the justice of his law would have been necessary to secure obedience. Unbelief broke the law. But the faith of the Gospel differs from the faith of the law, in that it involves the belief of other and newly-revealed truth. The faith of the law was a belief in the rightful authority of God to command, and the justice of what his law imposed. The faith of the Gospel, is in addition, a belief of his so loving the world as to give his Son to die for it as an expiatory sacrifice for its sins. This being a prominent doctrine of the gospel, faith in it must necessarily be continually referred to. As faith in Christ secures salvation, so it secures justification. Men are saved by faith as well as justified by faith. Thus, faith in Christ, in the truth he came to demonstrate, will produce that state of mind requisite to justification or pardon. As all mankind are to be saved by pardon, by the deed of the law no man can be justified ; for if one were to keep the whole law, he would need no pardon ; if he violated in one point only, all the remainig obedience could not obtain pardon, for there can be no works of supererogation in that respect.

Relative to what James says about being justified by works, as being in collision with faith ; Abraham's act in offering Isaac proveed the necessity and strength of his faith. It was faith that moved him to act, for it was by works that his faith was made perfect, or demonstrated. Without faith, his act would never have been performed. Faith without works is dead, does not exist; and the expression, "show me thy faith without thy works," is evidently ironical. To talk of faith without its corresponding action, is sundering what God has joined together. Believing saves ; disbelieving ruins. Yet no faith short of that which produces action is current at the bank of heaven.

S. S. Griswold.

[Concluded next week.]

READ YOUR BIBLE.

Between thirty and forty years ago, there was a lad who had a sister, and this sister was a missionary's wife. She was ready to leave England and go to Africa, and was on her way to London. She passed through the town where he was at school. It was early in the morning, before the boys were up ; but she was going to set sail, and she could not think of passing through without seeing her brother. She knocked at the door of the house, and awoke the servants. They called out, "Robert Noble!" Up he sat in his bed. His sister went to him, and wished him good-bye, and gave him a kiss, and said, "Robert, read your Bible ;" and again, as she parted from him, she said very earnestly, "Now, Robert, read your Bible." She sailed for Africa ; and in six months more she was in heaven, for God took her. But these words of hers, "Robert, read your Bible," sunk into her brother's heart like snow into the ground. He could not shake them out. And sometimes, when that wicked, wilful heart got the master of him, one of his schoolfellows would say, "Noble, you 've forgot what your sister said to you ;" and he would be checked and stopped. Well, at last he did read the Bible ; and the great change, the happy change, was wrought in him also. And he is now, and has been for some time, a missionary, and a laborious and useful missionary, too, in India ; and is engaged in winning souls to Christ. [Selected.

SAND OF THE DESERT IN AN HOUR-GLASS.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

A handful of red sand, from the hot clime
Of Arab deserts brought,
Within this glass becomes the spy of Time,
The minister of Thought.

How many weary centuries has it been
About these deserts blown ?
How many strange vicissitudes been seen,
How many histories known ?

Perhaps the camelsof the Ishmaelite
Trampled and passed it o'er,
When into Egypt, from the patriarch's sight
His favorite son they bore.

Perhaps the feet of Moses, burnt and bare,
Crushed it beneath their tread :
Or Pharaoh's flashing weels into the air
Scattered it as they sped ;

Or Mary, with the Christ of Nazareth
Held close in her caress,
Whose pilgrimage of hope and love and faith
Illumed the wilderness ;

Or Anchorites beneath Engaddi's palms
Pacing the Red Sea beach,
And singing slow their old Armenian psalms
In half-articulate speech ;

Or caravans, that from Bassora's gate
With westward steps depart ;
Or Mecca's pilgrims, confident of Fate,
And resolute in heart ?

These have passed over it, or may have passed ;
Now in this crystal tower
Imprisoned by some curious hand at last,
It counts the passing hour.

And as I gaze these narrow walls expand ;
Before my dreamy eye
Stretches the desert, with its shifting sand,
Its unimpeded sky.

And borne aloft by the sustaining blast,
This little golden thread
Dilates into a column high and vast,
A form of fear and dread.

And onward, and across the setting sun,
Across the boundless plain,
The column and its broader shadow run,
Till thought pursues in vain.

The vision vanishes! These walls again
Shut out the lurid sun,
Shut out the hot, immeasurable plain :
The half hour's sand is run!

THRILLING NARRATIVE.

At a meeting of the New England Anti-Slavery Convention in Boston, recently, a fugitive slave newly named Henry Box Brown came upon the platform by invitation, and related his adventures while escaping from the house of bondage.

Henry was a slave in Virginia. He has, or had, a wife and three children, for whom father made incredible exertions to purchase them, and succeeded in raising $600, the remaining $50 were advanced by his own master, who held a lien upon the wife and children.

After buying his family, Henry rented a house for them, but he soon became involved, as his master claimed the largest portion of his earnings. On returning from his work one day, he found that his wife and children had been seized, sold upon the auction block to the slave trader, and were to be transported out of the State. They were sold for $1,050. After this sad event, his master seized the furniture provided for the slave wife, sold it, and pocketed the proceeds.

Henry remarked with the deepest pathos, that when his wife and children were stolen, his heart was broken. He had learned to sing, to lighten the tedium of his labor and for the gratification of his fellow captives, but now he could not sing. His thoughts were far away in the rice swamps of Carolina, or the cotton plantations of Georgia. His wife was not, and his children were not, and he refused to be comforted. When his master, who observed his despondency, told him he could get another wife, (southern morality!) Brown shook his head ; the wife of his love or none at all.

Thoughts of liberty now began to spring up in his bosom. He had heard of the abolitionists, and determined to escape to them if possible. He became frugal, and saved with more than a miser's eagerness every cent he could lay claim to, until he had amassed a sum sufficient for his purpose. The means provided for his escape were of the most unprecedented character.

With the assistance of a friend, arrangements were made for him to escape in a box, which was to be forwarded to the friends of the slave in Philadelphia, carefully marked as a very valuable package.

The friend who assisted him in this plot, took all his money, about $80, and his clothes, to which Brown could offer no objections, though it left him penniless. Yet with Roman heart he was true to the fixed purpose of his soul, for he was on his way to liberty. The box used for this extraordinary purpose was only three feet one inch in length, two feet wide, and two feet six inches deep. Yet in this diminutive box he was transported from Richmond to Philadelphia, by railroad and steamboat, a distance of three hundred miles, and amid perils so great that the mind shudders when they are contemplated.

On board the steamboat while going up the Potomac, the box was set on end, which placed Brown head downward. How long he remained in this fearful position he does not know, but he mentally resolved to die, if die he must, without making a sign, which might involve who had been assisting him.

The next great peril that he encountered was at the Baltimore depot at Washington. The box was roughly tumbled out of the transportation wagon, and it rolled over two or three times. This the unhappy fugitive thought was bad enough, but he was horror stricken when it was proposed to let the box remain until the next day. In that event he would die. But he bethought him to pray, and while yet praying a superior officer ordered it to be forwarded. When put into the baggage car he was again placed on his head, in which position he remained for the space of an hour. His eyes became swollen nearly out of his head, his veins were filled almost to bursting, and he must soon have died, had not the position been providentially changed.

The box arrived safely at Philadelphia, its destination. The friends who were anxiously waiting for it, were assembled in a room with the door locked. They were afraid to move, they feared the inmate was dead, as he made no noise. At last, one more firm than the rest, rapped on the box, inquiring in a friendly tone, 'Is all right here ?' 'All right!' was the brief response within. The friends were overcome by their emotions, and one of them finding speech exclaimed, 'You are the greatest man in America.'

As for Brown he was happy ; his fatigues were nothing—his sufferings were forgotten ; he breathed the air of liberty ; he was free! That one thought swallowed up all others. After stretching himself for a moment, he breathed forth the gratitude of his soul for freedom, in a song of solemn praise for deliverance.

THE PROPAGANDA.

Among our fellow passengers in the cars from Baltimore to Cumberland, was a young priest, who was returning to his field in the West from the Roman Catholic Council which he had attended as a theologian. No sooner had we entered the cars at the Relay House, than his appearance arrested our attention—as he occupied a solitary seat, he seemed to us, with his book before him, to be engaged in his morning devotions. These finished, and his book laid aside, we perceived that he entered freely into conversation with those who were near him ; and as we occupied a contiguous seat, and had heard him remark that he had spent five years and a half in the Institution of the Propaganda at Rome, we ventured to ask him a number of questions respecting that most celebrated of all the missionary schools in connection with the Roman Church, which he very promptly answered. From his account, the number of pupils is only about one hundred and twenty from all quarters of the world —two or three of whom were Chinese, and about a dozen Americans. The language of the Institution is altogether Latin ; and yet all prepare occasional theses in their native tongues. And indeed, some of the students speak several languages with equal facility. Besides theology, chiefly polemic, the studies seemed to embrace what would be ordinarily regarded as a common college course. The number of the books in the library is about 90,000, consisting, besides [illegible] in the index prohibitorum—or books prohibited from general circulation by the authority of the church. These were kept for reference in the exercises of the Institution, among which was a weekly debate on a theme so arranged, that one student was deputed for the defense of the church, while two were allowed to assail her—the conclusion of the debate being of course in the hands of the Professor, who could speak with authority. These weekly debates, he told us, excited the most intense interest ; and it is by such exercises as these that the priests of that communion are rendered peculiarly expert in their theological tactics—the syllogistic mode of argument being that on which they chiefly depend, and which they learn to wield with great force. But against the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, the weapon is of little avail. Yet it is easy to see how a priest, educated as he has been, and with manners peculiarly bland, can exert an extensive influence over those who are comparatively ignorant of the word of God. [Ed. of Watchman and Observer.

A SINGULAR PROVIDENCE.

A friend of mine was penetrating one of the wildest counties of northern Pennsylvania, attempting to explore its spiritual destitutions, when he was informed of a family far up a rude water course, which he at once determined to visit. The father of the family had settled there to make shingles, which he floated down the stream in the spring floods ; and so completely isolated was he from the neighborhood, that there was no road to his dwelling, save up the bed of the aforesaid stream. With no small difficulty, he reached the residence which he sought.

His surprise can hardly be imagined, when, instead of the half savage and completely ignorant household which he expected to find, he was received by a well ordered and pious family. And still more was he surprised, when he learned the singular manner in which this out-of-the-way settler had been brought to the saving knowledge of the gospel. It was thus :—

A few years previously, a party of gay young men had come from Philadelphia, to hunt deer in the wild glens of that mountain region. One night they passed at the shingle-maker's hut. After tea, one of the number opened his carpet-bag to get a pack of cards to while away the evening ; but, instead of finding the cards which he had placed there, he pulled out a copy of "Doddridge's Rise and Progress," tied up in the same envelop in which he had folded the pack. The change was the work of a kind sister at home, who had looked into the carpet bag, and ventured thus to throw a shield around her brother. He left the book with the family when leaving the next day, not regarding it as worth the room it would take, and went his way. But that despised book was like the ark in the house of the Gittite ; it brought a blessing costly and rich to those souls. It converted, by divine mercy, that household. And there, up under the smoked beam above the chimney-piece, it was kept and cherished, a guardian angel to the poor man's dwelling, which it had changed from a house of sin to a house of prayer. The missionary was well rewarded for his effort to reach that secluded habitation. God had been there, with precious gifts before him, and left the savor of his presence.

[Christian Observer.

THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT.

"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." Exod. 20 : 12.

"Honor thy parents, those that gave thee birth,
And watched in tenderness thine earliest days,
And trained thee up in youth, and loved in all.
Honor, obey, and love them ; it shall fill
Their souls with holy joy, and shall bring down
God's richest blessings on thee ; and in days
To come, thy children, if they shall be given,
Shall honor thee, and fill thy life with peace."

The judicious Hooker used to say, "If I had no other reason and motive for being religious, I would earnestly strive to be so for the sake of my mother, that I might requite her care of me, and cause her widow's heart to sing for joy."

Washington, when a boy, was about going to sea as a midshipman, and his trunk had been taken to the boat, when, as he went to take leave of his mother, he saw the tears bursting from her eyes, and an expression of deep sadness on her countenance. Seeing the distress of his parent, he at once turned to the servant, and said, "Go and tell them to bring back my trunk. I will not go away and break my mother's heart." His mother was struck with the spirit and manner of the decision, and at once said to him, "My son, God has promised to bless the children that honor their parents, and I believe he will bless you."

Philip Henry, while speaking of an undutiful and wicked son in his neighborhood, charged his children to observo the providence of God concerning him. "Perhaps," said he, "I may not live to see it, but do you mark if God does not bring some remarkable judgment upon him in this life, for thus violating the fifth commandment ;" but he himself lived to see it fulfilled soon after, in a very signal providence.

Olympia, the mother of Alexander the Great, was so severe towards him, that his deputy, Antipater, wrote him long letters of complaint against her, to which Alexander returned this answer : "Knowest thou not that one tear of my mother's will blot out a thousand of thy letters of complaint ?"

A youth lamenting the death of an affectionate parent, a friend endeavored to console him by saying he had always conducted towards the departed one with tenderness and respect. "So I thought," said the other, "while my parent was living ; but now I remember with shame and deep sorrow, many instances of disobedience and neglect, for which, alas, it is now too late ever to make any atonement."

"Let all children remember," says Dr. Dwight, "if ever they are weary of labor for his ; if impatient of their commands, that Christ cheerfully obeyed ; if reluctant to provide for their parents, that Christ forgot himself and provided for his mother amid the agonies of the crucifixion. The affectionate language of divine example is, 'Go thou and do likewise.'" [Am. Mess.

TWO INCIDENTS IN THE WAR OF 1812.

"Fortune favors the brave."

A military officer with whom we have long been intimate, relates two incidents connected with Croghan's gallant defense of Fort Stevenson ; one of which affords a strong positive and the other a stronger negative proof of the above adage.

As the British and Indians, in their operations, had violated pledges and the usage of civilized warfare by wantonly murdering their prisoners, the members of Croghan's little band (only 100 strong with a single six-pounder, and surrounded by about 600 British troops and thrice that number of Indians,) had mutually agreed to stand their ground to the last, and sell their lives as dearly as possible.

When all was ready, the British commander sent a messenger, under a flag of truce, to treat for a surrender of the fort. Croghan, pointing to him, as he approached, exclaimed :

"It will not do to let him enter here and see our weakness ; who will volunteer to meet him."

As it was pretty certain that whoever should leave the fort on such a mission would be murdered by the dastard foe, there was a brief pause, when Ensign Shipp replied :

"I will upon one condition."

"What is it ?" asked Croghan.

"Pledge me your word, as an officer and man of honor, that you will keep that gun bearing directly upon me, and that you will fire it off the moment you see me raise my hand."

The pledge was given, and Shipp went forth.

To all the arguments and persuasion of the enemy, his unvarying reply was :—

"I am instructed to say that we defend that Fort."

Soon the Indians began to surround him. One clutched his epaulette, another his sword. Shipp, who was a man of Herculean frame, released himself by a powerful effort, and turning to the enemy coolly said :—

"Sir, I have not put myself under the protection of your truce without knowing your mode of warfare. You see that gun," pointing to their solitary six-pounder, "it is well charged with grape, and I have the solemn pledge of my commander, that it shall be fired at me the instant that I give him the signal. Therefore restrain these men, and respect the law of war, or you shall instantly accompany me to the other world."

This was enough ; Shipp was no more molested ; he returned to his comrades in safety, fought out the desperate action that ensued, and obtained promotion for his bravery.

The other circumstance referred to at the head of this article, was told as follows :—

After the British and Indians had withdrawn, Croghan missed one man (only one) who had belonged to his little band, and all efforts for his discovery were for some time unsuccessful. At length his remains were discovered in the garret of one of the block houses, where he had crept for safety, and was cut in two by a cannon ball.

All the rest, considering their chances of life not worth a thought, had only sought to do their duty, and escaped alive, from perhaps the most desperate fight on record. The only man that was killed happened to be a coward.

NOW!

Standing, a few days since, by the bedside of a man who was sinking in the agonies of Asiatic cholera, he turned his glassy eyes upon me, and said : "A few hours more, a few hours more, to prepare!" Thirty minutes after, I met one of his neighbors hurrying through the street towards the undertaker's. Poor J——— was already in another world. How often had the unhappy man heard from my pulpit, "Now is the accepted time ?" but never had I proclaimed that warning to him so earnestly as he did to me in that dying cry, "A few hours more, a few hours more!" And from a thousand deathbeds comes the same thrilling announcement every day. "Now is the accepted time," echoes in the ear of every living man. To the impenitent man the voice proclaims, Now is the time to make your peace with God. To the minister of Christ it says, Now is the time to press the religion of the gospel on every conscience. To the church members it says, Now is the time for prayer and earnest labor, for, mayhap, the Judge standeth at the door!

"Seek religion now," was the advice of a young man to his brother in the State of M———. The one thus appealed to had been somewhat thoughtful, but strove to parry his convictions [illegible] engaged to attend a dancing-party, and before he set off, he solemnly promised the anxious brother, who was pleading with him, that "as soon as the ball was over he would attend to the salvation of his soul." He went. The saloon was thronged. The lights were blazing. The line was formed for the dance, the first sound of the voil rose on the air. He stepped forware, and reeled, and fell breathless on the floor! His "soul" was in eternity ; his soul was at the bar of God!

Impenitent reader! when and where has God assured you of the morrow ? Who has guarantied to you that the door of mercy shall stand open another day ? [Pres'n.

"DEEP WOUNDS."

When I was about twelve years of age—I remember it as though it were but yesterday—I one day got very angry with an elder [illegible] He had been the best of brothers to me ; but on this occasion, he had refused to gratify my strong desire to have for my own a little book which I had seen him reading. I flew into a violent passion. I called him very bad names ; and, although I can scarcely believe it, and only recollect it with grief and shame, I tore his clothes and tried to bite his arms.

In a few weeks, and before my proud spirit was humble enough to ask his forgiveness, that brother left home never again to return. He went far away among strangers to sicken and to die. I never saw him again. Oh! how often have I wished that I might have been permitted to stand by that brother's death-bed and ask pardon for my foolish passion. Useless wish! Unavailing regret! Even now, at this distance of time, whenever I recall the memory of that brother, and think of his kindness and love, the cup of pleasure is embittered by the dregs of remorse which the remembrance of that angry hour throws into it. Alas! the pangs of remorse gnawing my own spirit even now are far sharper than the teeth with which I would gladly have lacerated my brother's flesh. When I see that brother in my dreams he wears that same look of astonishment and rebuke with which he then looked upon me.

"A wounded spirit who can bear ?" Oh! if children and youth who speak angry words to their parents, and call their brothers hard names, only knew what a fearful burden of "wounded spirits" they are storing up, to press with mountain weight upon them in riper years, they never would suffer an unkind or disrespectful word to pass their lips.

HOW TO CATCH AN EXPRESSION.

Looking at the remarkably fine portrait of Commodore Perry, in the Governor's Room, City Hall, executed by Jarvis, recalls to Major Noah an anecdote of that celebrated artist, which we do not remember to have seen published.

When the Commodore came to take his first and second sitting, he appeared to be drooping and downcast, laboring under some depression of mind, which deprived him of all animation. The artist, with pallet in hand, looked at the Commodore in every direction, not knowing where to begin. He paused, looked, laid down his pallet, took it up again, and appeared to be unable to commence. Finally, starting up violently, he seized a chair, and assumed a threatening position. The Commodore jumped up and asked the meaning of this violence.

"I intend to kill you," said the painter with a furious look. The Commodore started back, his eyes flashing fire, his whole countenance animated, and put himself in a defensive attitude. "There, that will do," said Jarvis, coolly ; "just the expression I wanted. Sit down and let me begin."

The Commodore saw at once into the feint, smiled and sat down, and we have from the pencil of Jarvis, one of the finest portraits ever painted.

Conversion in Old Age.—The late Rev. Dr. Bedell, of Philadelphia, in a sermon to young men, stated that he had been a minister over twenty years, and yet he could not remember more than three persons over fifty years of age who had ever asked the momentous question, "What must I do to be saved ?"

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 16, 1849.

COMMEMORATIVE INSTITUTIONS.

That it seems like striking hands with infidels, and giving countenance to idolaters, to set about destoying an institution which was established for the very purpose of bearing witness against atheism and idolatry, is a thought which, probably, never entered the mind of one in a thousand of those who reject the Bible Sabbath. It is perfectly startling to them, when first suggested. Various are the methods by which they seek to repel the objection. When Mr. Parkinson discussed the subject with Elder Maxson, he assumed that the first day of the week was emphatically the creation-day; it being the day in which "God created (bara) the heavens and the earth," that is, the substance of them, "out of nothing." "Not any thing was afterwards produced out of nothing, and therefore not, strictly speaking, created; all that followed was formation out of materials created on the first day, and is expressed by another word—the word asah, made, fitted, finished. See Gen. 2: 3, 5: 1. The first day, therefore, on the first week of time, was emphatically the creation-day." Sab. Discussion, p. 251. This being about as ingenious a method of meeting the difficulty as we have seen, we will give it a little attention.

It is true that the word creation, taken in its most rigid acception, denotes the production of something out of nothing; and that all the matter of which the things of the world were formed, was brought into existence on the first day. "Not any thing was afterwards produced out of nothing." But it seems to have been overlooked by Mr. Parkinson, that the design of the Sabbath was as much to commemorate the formation of the worlds, as the creation of the chaotic mass [illegible] more so. That the first day of the week would serve to commemorate the creation of the chaotic mass, is freely admitted; but if any one thinks that the commemoration of such a work would speak much for the glory of Jehovah, he is welcome to the honor of his opinion. We do not wonder that he should feel it necessaray, for the honor of his God, to join the commemoration of some other event with it; nor do we wonder that he should think the work of redemption vastly greater, and far more worthy to be had in remembrance. But God never designed that the work of heaping up chaos should be commemorated by his creatures. Before he calls upon any to be "glad through his work, and to triumph in the works of his hands," he will make his work in all respects worthy of such [illegible] heaven, the sea, and all things therein, worthy of their highest praise, by bringing forth the whole in a finished state,—by adapting every thing to useful ends,—by preparing everything for the comfort of man,—and by stamping goodness and love upon all. He will bring forth every thing "very good," (Gen. 1: 31;) then will it declare his glory. How would the Sabbath serve as a testimony against atheism, if that which it commemorates were not a work displaying skill—contrivance—adaptation to use? An atheist is silenced, and his cavils confuted, by showing him that the world, and the things that are in it, evince as much contrivance, design, and adaptation, as the mechanism of a watch, or the fabrication of a steam-engine; which we should be precluded from showing, if we could appeal to nothing but chaotic matter as the work of God. It is evident, therefore, that the Sabbath does not commemorate the work of creation in such a way as to speak forth God's glory, unless it commemorates it as a finished work.

But on what day of the week can the work of creation be commemorated as a finished work? Certainly, on no other than the seventh. Man was not made until the sixth day; and as he was the last of God's works, so the Sabbath began as soon as man was made. For, as the term means rest, it must of necessity have commenced as soon as the Creator rested, or ceased from making any thing more. Now, because God's works were not finished until the close of the sixth day, creation could not be contemplated as a completed work until the seventh day—the day of rest—began. It was from this point that God looked back, "and saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Hence there is no other day upon which we can commemorate creation as a perfected work, but the day of God's rest in its weekly return. But will any one say that the day of God's rest is commemorated by a Sunday celebration? Who would be so foolish as to say, that the anniversary of American Independence might be fitly commemorated by a Christmas festivity? The idea, therefore, that in observing the first day of the week there is a virtual commemoration of the work of creation, is absurd. And we venture the prediction, that the time is not distant, when the mighty efforts that are now made to bring men to sanctify it, under the pretence that it is the Sabbath day, will be considered supremely ridiculous.

ONE EFFECT OF THE CHOLERA.—The Albany Knickerbocker says that in that city, every Sunday afternoon and evening, the street preachers discourse to crowds of boatmen and citizens upon the bridge leading to the pier. They receive universal attention from their auditors. Where once jibes and jeers were heard, now all is silent.

ENCROACHMENTS OF SLAVERY.

Nearly every day brings to light some new instance of the encroachment of slavery on the rights of northern freemen. The latest and most flagrant we have seen, occurred in South Carolina. It seems that a native of South Carolina, himself formerly a slaveholder, has written an able series of letters, showing the influence of slavery upon white non-slaveholders, and the gloomy prospects now before that class. A highly respectable citizen of Indiana, named John M. Barret, being about to travel through the upper part of South Carolina, was requested to drop parcels of these printed letters into certain post offices, addressed to various citizens of the State. Whether Mr. Barrett knew the contents of these parcels, does not appear. But, on suspicion that he did, and that he was circulating incendiary matter, he has been arrested, and is now confined in the jail at Spartanburg. One of the South Carolina papers says that "the charge under which he was arrested is punishable by twelve months' imprisonment and one thousand dollars fine. But he may be indicted under the arrest for any crime of which the State Attorney may think himself able by competent testimony to convict the prisoner. There is more than a possibility that Barrett may be indicted for an offense, the penalty of which is death, without benefit of clergy; and, assuredly, if convicted, all the abolitionists in the United States cannot save him." Various expedients have been resorted to, to obtain evidence against Mr. Barrett, such as ransacking the post-office, and bringing the post-master into Court as a witness. Thus far, however, no real proof of guilt has been found. Still his case is a sad one, and there is much reason to fear that he will never escape from the clutches of the devouring monster.

Another case, not exactly similar to the above, but sufficiently so to illustrate the spirit of slavery, and show how little regard it has for the rights of northern freemen, has recently occurred, and is thus recorded by the Yorkville (South Carolina) Miscellany :—

"We would caution the South to beware of GEORGE G. STEPHENSON, of New York, a traveling agent for the sale of Brandreth's Pills, who was called upon by the Committee of Safety of this District, which stated to him that the dangers which at present threaten the peculiar domestic institutions of the South made it necessary that all strangers (especially those from the North) should be examined, and his business, &c., ascertained. He immediately arose and denounced the proceeding as oppressive and ungentlemanly, and declared himself an uncompromising opponent of slavery from this time forward. On examinig his papers, a letter to him was discovered, in which mention was made of a new Richmond corps [illegible] some five or six persons, giving only the initials of the names, and alluding to the difficulties and dangers they had to encounter, and putting up a prayer for their success. He attempted to explain this as having relation to establishing agencies for the sale of pills, which may or may not have been true. He was warned to leave our village on the next morning. We understand that the agency for the sale of these pills in this place was given up, and they were returned to him."

WISCONSIN ASSOCIATION.

The Wisconsin Seventh-day Baptist Association convened with the church at Walworth, July 11, 1849. The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. O. P. Hull, from 2 Corinthians 8: 12. After the sermon, the Association was called to order by the Recording Secretary, when Z. CAMPBELL was chosen Moderater, and H. W. COON and H. D. GREEN, Secretaries.

The following delegates were present and took their seats: Albion—O. P. Hull, P. C. Burdick; Milton—Z. Campbell, S. Coon, J. Bond, N. L. Coon, B. F. Bond, Abel Bond; Walworth—H. M. Coon, A. Maxson, H. D. Green, W. S. Clark, M. D. Clark, I. C. Heritage, J. R. Maxson, N. L. Basset.

The letters from the churches were then read, from which the following statistics are collected:

Albion—O. P. Hull, minister; James Weed, deacon; Stephen Maxson, clerk. Added 7, deceased, 1, total 90.

Milton—Z. Campbell, minister; Jonathan Bond and W. P. Stillman, deacons; B. F. Bond, clerk. Added 9, de ceased 1, rejected 1, total 21.

Walworth—A. Maxson and Wm. S. Clark, deacons; N. L. Basset, clerk. Rejected 3, total 21.

Committees were appointed on the State of Religion, on Missions, on Preaching, on Tract Operations, on Resolutions, and to write a Circular Letter.

The permanent officers of the Association were chosen as follows:—P. C. Burdick, Recording Secretary; H. M. Coon, Corresponding Secretary; A. Maxson, Treasurer.

Eld. Daniel Babcock was appointed delegate to the next General Conference at Rhode Island, and was instructed to present a request from the Association to become a member of the Conference.

The Committee on Tract Operations made report, that they regard the press as second only to the gospel ministry as a medium for the dissemination of light and truth; and that they look upon the distribution of tracts as a very important means of calling attention to the claims of God's law, and the nature and perpetuity of his holy Sabbath. In order to secure a supply of tracts from the Sabbath Tract Society, they recommend the appointment of some one in each church, to solicit funds to purchase tracts for gratuitous distribution. They also suggest the propriety of establishing a sort of depot within the bounds of the Association, to afford greater facilities. Stillman Coon was appointed agent of tract operations; and B. F. Bond of Milton, J. H. Potter of Albion, and Henry Clark of Walworth, a Committee to solicit funds.

The Committee on Missions recommended the formation of a Missionary Society, the Constitution and officers of which have already been published in the Recorder.

The Committee on the State of Religion reported, that, "from the communications from the churches, and other sources, it appears, that religion is far from being in as flourishing a condition as it is our privilege and duty to have it—many of the duties devolving on Christians, both public and private, being by some neglected, or not so zealously attended to as they should be; that the existing state of things calls loudly upon us, as individuals and churches, to humble ourselves before God, to arise and shake ourselves from the dust, and to implore forgiveness and the descent of the Holy Spirit for a revival of pure and undefiled religion."

The first article of the Constitution was so amended as to make the name of the Association, the "The North-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association."

Eld. Stillman Coon was appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse at the next meeting of the Association; Eld Z. Campbell, alternate.

The following resolutions were passed:—

Resolved, That S. Coon, J. M. Todd, and Thomas Coon, be appointed a committee to mature a plan of Sabbath School Operations, and present the same to the several churches and societies for action.

Resolved, That we look upon the Sabbath Reform among the missionaries of Hayti, and the general commotion and inquiry that pervade the Christian world at the present time, as demanding of us humility and a more determined effort to set on high the Sabbath of the Bible.

The Association adjourned to meet with the church at Milton, on the fifth day of the week before the first Sabbath in July, 1850, at 10 o'clock A. M.

N. L. BASSET, }
H. M. COON, } Committee.

BUSINESS FOR THE CONFERENCE.

In a recess during the Anniversary exercises of the Seventh-Day Baptist Missionary Association, held at New Market, N. J., in Sept., 1848, the delegates from the Western, Central and Eastern Seventh-Day Baptist Associations, convened and organized by electing Eld. Eli S. Bailey, Moderator, and Eld. Samuel Davison, Secretary. The object of the meeting was stated to be to adopt measures to bring before the members of the next General Conference, at its session to be held in Hopkinton, R. I., in Sept. 1849, such subjects as may be considered important for their consideration and decision. On motion, Thomas B. Stillman, Lucius Crandall, and David Dunn, were appointed a Committee to Sabbath Recorder some time previous to the sitting of the General Conference.

The Committe above named would respectfully submit the following subjects as, in their opinion, claiming the attention, deliberation and action of the General Conference:—

1. The Sabbath—when it begins and ends, and how we should remember and keep it holy. The Committee think that here will be found a topic of high importance, and which it becomes us prayerfully now again to investigate in the light of God's word. They are convinced, also, that so long as there is any want of uniformity among us on these points, the Conference should continue to declare its sense in regard to them, and counsel, advise and exhort as to the requirements of God's truth and our duty in these particulars. As a people, we shall never be prepared to execute our commission, except we present an unbroken and invulnerable phalanx of Sabbath-keepers and Sabbath-defenders.

2. Slavery.—The Conference should never suffer its Minutes to issue from the press without a clear and unequivocal averment of its views of the sin of slavery, both in the abstract and in the concrete.

3. Secret Societies.—Though there are but few of our people members of any such societies, yet, as some are, and others here and there may be induced to join them, (who, in all probability would not if they knew that the denomination seriously disapproved such a course,) therefore it is believed that the Conference should let all its members know what view it entertains on that head, and what it wishes of its members pertaining thereto, that is, what advice it has to give in respeet to holding membership in such societies.

4. The Publishing Society.—As this Society proposes to take upon itself the character and to exercise the functions of a denominational institution, and as it has been organized in the interim of the Conference, as a matter of course the Conference should examine the Constitution of the Society, and say whether the organization does or does not meet its approbation; and, if it does, in so far that the Conference can recognize and commend it as the proper organization to issue our denominational publications, (and do such other printing and publishing as may be compatible therewith,) this Committee think it very important that the Conference should do so; for the Publishing Society would not be properly empowered to speak and act for or in the name of the denomination, unless the Conference could recognize it as the agent of the denomination for that purpose, which no doubt the Conference will readily do.

5. Publications.—As the literature of a people is both the exponent of their views and character, it would (in the judgment of the Committee) be well for the Conference to express its wishes concerning this subject, and recommend (if it sees fit) to our Publishing Society, the republication of any of the works of early Sabbatarian writers, or the procuring of any new works for publication, such as it may please to indicate.

6. Education.—This is always an important subject, and with our denomination at this time especially so. The question whether we shall have a College and Theological Seminary is now under investigation among those engaged in educational pursuits, and many others also are thinking of the question. It would seem very appropriate for the Conference to give an expression touching the question, as it respects the desirableness of having such an institution and what farther in relation to the subject it may be thought requisite to take up.

T. B. STILLMAN, }
LUCIUS CRANDALL, } Committee.
DAVID DUNN, }

ANOTHER VICTIM.

GENESEE, August 6, 1849.

Died, at Frankfort, Ky., on the 7th ult., of cholera, Mr. CHESTER FAIRBANK, aged 60 years. Mr. Fairbank left his residence in Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., early in the spring, to secure if possible the liberation of his son, Calvin Fairbank, from the Penitentiarr, in which he had been confined four and a half years on the charge of abducting slaves in connection with Miss Delia A. Webster. The friends of freedom will rejoice to learn, that the untiring efforts of the aged father for the liberation of his son, have been successful. Gov. Crittenden agreed to pardon him on condition that certain prominent men in Lexington would unite in a petition for his liberation. The day before his death, the anxious and devoted father returned with the requisite names, with the fullest confidence that in the month of August he would witness the liberation of his son. His great anxiety and untiring labors, together with exposure in traveling, undoubtedly made him an easy prey to the pestilence. He died among strangers, a victim to the insatiable, cruel demands of slavery. And his son, who communicated the intelligence from the cell of his prison to his mother, brothers, and sisters here, informs them, that he died reconciled and happy, and now undoubtedly lives in heaven. He had been an acceptable member of the Methodist Church twenty years. J. B.

TERMS OF COMMUNION.

"In our last we promised to look into the Bible for some light on the subjects and principles embraced in our Terms of Communion. One thing, now involving deep interest to the church, we think we discover neglect of a divine ordinance does not abolish it. Nor does it matter how long the neglect may continue, the duty remains binding, and its obligations unimpaired. Another thing we read in the Bible: many divine institutions have been long neglected, and yet, when again observed, the neglect was neither offered or received as an excuse for continuing in the neglect. The longer the neglect, the greater the sin, and the louder the call for reformation."

The above is copied from the "Covenanter," the organ of the Reformed Presbyterian church. It is possible the writer may not have had the Sabbath in his eye when he penned the remarks; but we see no good reason for such partiality in the application of general principles. Will our brother please include the institution of the Sabbath, and join us in the reformation so mucn needed. SABBATARIAN.

A STUDIOUS BAPTIST MINISTER.—The Watchman and Observer, speaking of the importance of studious habits to ministers, adduces, among other examples, the case of Rev. Abner W. Clopton, a Baptist, whom our young brethren in the ministry would do well to imitate. It says of him:—

"He was a man of much learning, and of such ministerial earnestness, that it was commonly said that he preached at least three hundred and sixty-five sermons in a year. It was summer time, and I observed that after an early breakfast, he would take his saddle-bags and retire into the shade of the woods for about three hours. For this purpose he always carried a volume or two of solid reading; and at that time he was making a second forest-perusal of Dwight's Theology. By such decision and self-denial, some men counteract all the dissipating tendency of itinerancy, while they are enjoying its unspeakable advantages. But it is to be observed, that such self-control is seldom found, except in those who have been previously subjected to most rigorous scholastic training."

A GREAT TRUTH BEAUTIFULLY EXPRESSED.—At a recent dedication of a new school-house in Boston, Mayor Quincy, after stating that $200,000 had just been expended by the city authorities, in the erection of school-houses, said:—

"If but once in a century, a little being should be sent into the world of the most delicate and beautiful structure, and we were told that a wonderful principle pervaded every part of it, capable of unlimited expansion and happiness—capable of being associated with angels and becoming the friend of God, or, if it should receive a wrong bias, growing up in enmity against him and incurring everlasting misery, would any expense of education which would contribute to save from such misery, and elevate to such happiness, be too much? But instead of one such little being, twenty-five thousand are now intrusted to the care of the 'city fathers,' and their education in this world will determine their future destiny—of companionship with angels, or with the degraded, wretched enemies of God."

THE EFFECT OF CHARCOAL ON FLOWERS.

The following extract cannot fail to be interesting to the botanist and the chemist, as well as to every lady who has a rose-bush in her garden, or a flower-pot in her parlor. It is from the Paris "Horticultural Review" of July last, translated by Judge Meigs of New York, for the Farmer's Club of the American Institute. The experiments described were made by Robert Beraud, who says:—

"About a year ago I made a bargain for a rose-bush of magnificent growth and full of buds. I waited for them to blow, and expected roses worthy of such a noble plant, and of the praises bestowed upon it by the vender. At length, when it bloomed, all my hopes were blasted. The flowers were of a faded color, and I discovered that I had only a middling multiflora, stale enough. I therefore resolved to sacrifice it to some experiments which I had in view. My attention had been captivated with the effects of charcoal as stated in some English publication. I then covered the earth in the pot, in which my rose-bush was, about half an inch deep, with pulverized charcoal! Some days after, I was astonished to see the roses which bloomed of as fine lively rose-color as I could wish! I determined to repeat the experiment; and, therefore, when the rose-bush had done flowering, I took off all the charcoal and put fresh earth about the roots. You may conceive that I awaited for the next spring impatiently, to see the result of this experiment. When it bloomed, the roses were, as at first, pale and discolored; but by applying charcoal as before, the roses soon resumed their rosy red color. I tried the powdered charcoal likewise in large quantities upon my petunias, and found that both the white and the violet flowers were equally sensible to its action. It always gave great vigor to the red or violet colors of the flowers, and the white petunias become veines with red or violet tints; the violets become covered with irregular spots of an almost black tint. Many persons who admire them thought that they were new varieties from the seed. Yellow flowers are (as I have proved) insensible to the influence of the charcoal."

A PRAIRIE FUNERAL.

On the vast prairies that stretch towards the Rocky Mountains, scenes of melancholy interest often occur. Annexed is an incident given in the diary of Mr. George Gibbs, an American author of some note, who is now on his way to the Pacific coast. He left Fort Leavenworth on the 8th of May, in company with the regiment of mounted riflemen, for Oregon. The Journal of Commerce publishes his diary for that month. To the California emigrants, whom he meets in great numbers on the prairies, he predicts much distress.

"To-day we lost a soldier by cholera, the second only since our march commenced. He was a private named Caldwell, a man of [illegible] his officers. His funeral took place in the evening, after retreat. I followed the procession to the spot selected for his grave, the head of a small ravine in the rear of the camp, and shaded by large cotton-wood trees. He was buried in his blanket, the camp furnishing no material for a coffin. The burial service was read over him by one officer, the dust and ashes scattered, and the first shovelful of earth thrown in by another, and as the last rays of the sun glanced athwart the turf, the crack of the rifle paid him the soldier's tribute. The band struck up a lively air, as it returned, and he was left in that wild solitude without even the silent companionship of other dead around him. Never had the gloom of death struck me more forcibly. There is a consolation in lying down to one's last sleep amidst kindred and friends, or even where some eye shall now and then light upon the sod that covers us; but to lie there, with the howl of the wolf, or the prairie wind alone to break the silence that broods over this green waste, is death indeed. A pretty child, the daughter of an officer, had stood by my side, looking curiously on. She now pulled my hand, and we turned away to pick the flowers that grew around us, and I forgot in their freshness the blight that another day would bring to them also."

DEATH AMONG THE OVERLAND EMIGRANTS.—The Buffalo Commercial publishes the following letter from a party of emigrants which left that city for California. The letter came by the mail of the steamer Algoma, which was burned at St. Louis, and when it reached Buffalo it was a good deal charred. The ravages of the Cholera among the Buffalonians are melancholy. The deceased were among the most respectable citizens of that thriving place:—

CAMP BUFFALO, AT FORT LARAMIE, June 26, 1848, }
2 o'clock A. M.—my watch. }

MY DEAR W.—I hardly know how to write to you in this case, for it is a time of trouble. On the 21st of this month, Dr. Gilbert McBeth, who came with us from home as our physician, was taken sick with Cholera, and after a short sickness of twelve hours died. This made all our party feel very sad. This is not all; on the morning of the 23d, Mr. A. Hayden and H. O. Hayes were taken sick of the same disease; Mr. Hayden died on the 24th at 4 o'clock A. M.; Mr. Hayes died the same morning at half-past 8 o'clock. This was and is a sad time in our little camp. On the morning of the 24th, after we had got Mr. Hayden and Mr. Hayes all ready to be buried, Col. John J. Fay was taken sick, and died yesterday morning at 4 o'clock.

We have counseled together and made up our minds that it will not answer to return, and of course must go on. We are now getting up into the high country, where the air will be more healthy, and I think what is left of our little party (eight) will be in good health hereafter; but God only knows.

Rev. Mr. Magoon of Cincinnati has accepted an invitation from the Baptist Church in Oliver-st. N. Y., to become their pastor for a limited period. He will commence his labors about the first of September.

A SLAVE OF GOLD.—What won't avarice do? Near this village, says the Detroit (Michigan) Bulletin, is the homestead of a rich farmer, who counts his nine hundred acres, about all under cultivation, with fine buildings. He has his package of bonds and mortgages, for loans to his poorer friends. All competence is supplied. He is a hard worker, and his children are "well to do" by their own industry. The California gold fever has seized him. His sixty-five years of toil for lucre have not satisfied his thirst for gain. He has sold his last year's crop for over 6,000 dollars, converted it into yellow boys, and started with his team for the valley of the Sacramento, leaving all his endearments in this world, for the hope of adding to his already perplexing pile of dollars.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER IN ENGLAND.—The British Banner, the organ of the English Congregationalists, has been in existence eighteen months, and has acquired an immense circulation. Its expenses for that time have been sixty thousand dollars. Its average weekly circulation exceeds the foremost of the nineteen principal London weekly journals, and is exceeded by none except the Sunday papers. And only one of the dailies, that is, the Times, issues a larger caily number than it does weekly.

NEW CHURCH HISTORY.—At the request of the Hudson River Baptist Association, Rev. Wm. R. Williams, of New York, has undertaken to prepare a new and complete History of the Christian Church. Mr. Williams is said to be well qualified for the task thus imposed upon him, and high expectations are raised by the announcement that he has acceded to the request of the Association.

HUDSON RIVER ASSOCIATION.—The Hudson River Baptist Association now numbers 65 churches, 78 ordained ministers, 16 licentiates, and 12,486 members. At a recent meeting of the Association, held at Troy, it was determined to divide the body. A meeting for the purpose is to be held at Poughkeepsie, on the Tuesday after the third Sunday in October next.

ENGLAND AIDING MAHOMMEDANISM.—The Emperor of Morocco having solicited from the English government the means of conveying two of his sons and suite to Mecca on a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Mussulman prophet, the Admirality have acceded to his request, and have commissioned the Growler steam sloop, at Davenport, for the purpose.

MOVEMENTS OF THE PRESIDENT.—President Taylor is now on his Northern Tour. He proposes first to visit the great iron and coal regions of Pennsylvania; then proceed to Boston, where he expects to arrive about the first of Septnmber; thence he goes to Syracuse to attend the great Agricultural Fair; afterward he will visit New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, on his way to Washington.

On Sunday last, while at Harrisburg, Pa., the President had a severe attack of diarrhea, rendering it doubtful whether he would be able to proceed on his tour. On Monday, however, he was much better, and started for Carlisle.

On Monday the President was again taken with vomiting, while receiving his friends at the Court-House in Carlisle. He had improved considerably, however, before the next morning, and intended to proceed on his tour.

HON. ALBERT GALLATIN died at the residence of his son-in-law, nuar New York, on Sunday last, aged 89 years. He was originally from Switzerland, and graduated at a Geneva University. After coming to this country, he was a professor in Harvard College; then a member of tne Pennsylvania Legislature; then of the United States Senate; afterwards Secretary of the Treasury, Ambassador to France, Minister to England, &c.

HON. HENRY CLAY is at Saratoga Springs, very unwell. He had been improving until Friday last, when he was taken seriously ill in consequence of over-exertion. Since then he hat recruited a little, but is still quite feeble. He is said to be strongly predisposed to cholera.

THE CHOLERA is declining in New York. The City Inspector reports that during the week which ended July 11, there were 423 deaths by cholera, against 678 of the previous week, showing a decrease of 255. The number of deaths last week was 1,[illegible], against 1,278 of the preceding week, making a decrease of 278. In many other places, in different parts of the country, a great decrease of cholera is reported, while in very few places if any is it increasing. At St. Louis the disease is said not to exist as an epidemic.

THE ELECTIONS.—Returns have been received from some of the elections held this month. The editor of the New York tribune says that "the Whig Party has almost certainly lost the ascendancy in the next House of Representatives." The struggle in Kentucky, which was intimately connected with the anti-slavery agitation, resulted disastrously to that interest.

A GREAT FIRE occurred at Prattsburg on the night of August 11, which destroyed nearly half of the village. Thirty-eight stores, groceries and saloons, and one hotel, are in ruins. The loss is estimated at three hundred thousand dollars.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamship America, seven days later news from Europe has been received —London dates to July 27th, Paris 26th, Rome 23d, Vienna 20th.

The cholera has become alarmingly prevalent in England. By the official reports, which, it is said, do not give one half the actual cases, there were 678 deaths in London, against 339 the week previous. In Liverpool the rate of mortality is greater by 100 per cent than during the rage of fever in 1847; the deaths by cholera having been 640, against 463 the previous week, and 197 in the corresponding week last year. The fatal effect of the disease has been somewhat abated along the southern coast.

At Rome, under the military rule of Gen. Oudinot, order and general tranquility prevails. All public acts are rendered in the name of the Pope. His Holiness still continues at Gaeta, but beyond the fact that he will remain there until after the accouchment of the Queen of Naples, nothing seem known. It is said that he will afterward proceed to Rome in the full and unrestricted possession of both temporal and spiritual authority, and that the Priesthood around him, having learned nothing from their past misfortunes, resolutely refuse all concession to the popular party. It is not stated how the French army is to be paid, but it is reported that Russia has agreed to lend His Holiness 10,000,000 without interest,—the principal to be paid at the rate of half a million annually.

Hungary is at present the point of principal interest in Europe. The accounts from that country are very indefinite, often conflicting, and altogether unsatisfactory. All agree, however, that a desperate and bloody struggle is going on between the Hungarians on the one hand, and the Austrians, aided by the Russians, on the other. In a contest so desultory, so determined, so deadly, —a war of bands and tribes quite as much as of disciplined armies—the aggregate of bloodshed and desolation must be appalling, but the ranks of the Hungarians are filled as fast as thinned, and their national spirit seems thus far to rise as their peril becomes more imminent and terrible. If they can stand the present drain on their resources, their life-blood, for a few months longer, it is thought that they will gain their independence, and never again be brought under by Austria. To enable our readers better to understand the case, we copy from the Tribune the following account of the first campaign of the struggle between Hungary and Austria :—

The first campaign of the present struggle opened early last winter with the invasion of Hungary on all sides by the armies of Austria, commanded in chief by Windischgratz, who penetrated into the heart of Hungary, took its chief city (Pesth) without a shot, and advanced nearly or quite to Theiss. While Windischgratz with the main Austrian army thus advanced from Vienna and Presburgh on the West, Jellachich, at the head of a large force of Croats and borderers from the Austrian Military colonies on the Turkish frontier, operated eastwardly from Croatia, capturing or investing the Hungarian strongholds on the Drave and lower Danube. The Austrians were signally beaten and driven out of the country. When the smoke had cleared away at the close, the Hungarian banner waved in triumph over Pesth, and the strong citadel of Buda on the opposite bank of the Danube was closely invested by the Hungarians under Gorgey, and finally carried by storm. It had thus been decided by fair fighting, that Austria had not the force to master and subdue Hungary. But the Russian Autocrat now cast his ponderous sword into the scale. He made common cause with the young Austrian Emperor, alledging that the spectacle of a successful rebellion in Hungary, conducted in good part by Poles, imminently endangered the quiet and stability of his own rule in Poland. Putting half a million soldiers in motion, he invaded Hungary on three sides, and by not less than five distinct armies.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamer Oregon, which left San Francisco on the 2d of July, arrived at Panama on the 28th. From one of her passengers, who came to New Orleans by the steamer Falcon, the following information respecting California and the Gold Mines was obtained :—

The health of San Francisco is good, and the residents of the towns much more orderly and quiet than could have been anticipated.

The gambling-houses are all closed on the Sunday, and labor of every kind is suspended, although worth from ten to fifteen dollars per day.

Four churches have been already built, and another is daily expected to arrive.

The suburbs of the city wear the appearance of the "tented field," and San Francisco that of a beleaguered town, there being at least two thousand cloth tents, large and small, belonging to companies and individuals in the vicinity of it.

The most respectable Americans reside in the city, and there are rarely any difficulties except such as occasionally arise between the immigrants and the natives.

The market has been completely overstocked with goods. Clothing sells for less than in the States.

There were fifty or sixty cargoes of goods remaining unsold in San Francisco.

Houses and lumber are very high and scarce. A house about forty feet long by twenty feet wide, worth in the States $400, would readily sell there for $2,500. The expense of putting it up would be full $700.

The merchants at San Francisco were generally doing a fine business. They charge 10 per ct. commission for selling and guarding the merchandize consigned to them.

On the 1st of August a convention was to have been held, at which delegates were to be chosen, to form a Territorial Government, when it is intended to apply for admission into the Union.

There is a City Government already established and in operation.

At the mines Lynch law was supreme. When a man is caught stealing, a jury is chosen, the evidence heard, and should he be convicted, he is immediately flogged and driven away from the mines.

The health of the persons working at the mines has been very bad. Fever and chills have prevailed to a great extent.

There were about one hundred vessels lying at San Francisco, entirely deserted by their crews.

Sailors were very scarce, and wages were from $100 to $200 per month. Nearly every sailor that arrives here runs away to the mines and works a while, but soon returns to San Francisco, to take a spree and spend his money.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT AT TRENTON FALLS.

The Utica Gazette gives the following account of the death of Mr. Edward Bryan and his sister, of Utica, by drowning at Trenton Falls :—

The party consisted of six persons, who left the city Wednesday afternoon, started soon after breakfast next morning, to go up the Falls, and proceeded together as far as the refreshment house at the High Fall. Mr. Bryan and his sister left the others, and went on to see the remaining falls. They went as far as is usual for visiters to go, in safety; passing the Mill Dam Fall, the Suydam Fall, or rapid, the shower Baths and Jacob's Well, objects which will be readily recalled by those familiar with the place. It will be remembered that not far above the "Well," the path terminates abruptly in a flat rock, nearly on a level with the stream, which is here still and deep. This is the usual place for stopping. The stream comes round a perpendicular promontory, along which no path appears. But those who are tempted to get round this point, to see what is beyond, find there are steps at irregular intervals, in the side of the rock, and ten or twelve feet above the water, by which they can pass. At the distance of one or two hundred feet further on, another similar passage occurs, a little less difficult, as the rock is here slightly shelving. It was at the foot of this, as we understand, that the body of Mr. Bryan was found, in water from 25 to 30 feet deep. It was said that there were marks upon the rock of a person's having slipped down, and this caused a search to be immediately made at this point. From contusions on Mr. Bryan's face, it is supposed that he fell and struck his head, so as to stun him, before going into the water, as had, he reached the water without injury, he could, if a swimmer, have made a landing below. His sister was found near the foot of the rocky point first described. Her body bore no marks of injury. Whether they fell together, and she floated thus far down, or whether he was lost in attempting to rescue her, or whether they were apart, and she lost her perilous hold on seeing him pitch from the upper precipice, are questions which must remain forever unsolved. Beyond these passages the route presents no dangerous places.

It lacked a little of 10 A. M., when Mr. B. and his sister left their companions, and the watch upon Miss Bryan was found stopped at a few minutes of 11 A. M.

CHOLERA INCIDENTS.

The Dayton (Ohio) Journal of the 1st inst. relates the following sad story :—

A family near West Charleston, Miami Co., were last week attacked with Cholera. First the father died, then three of the children and the mother were taken, a boy of 13 being the only one remaining in health. The sick children all died on Tuesday; and during that night, with the three dead bodies lying in the room, the boy alone and unaided faithfully watched and nursed his mother! On the next day some neighbors came in, gave decent burial to the deceased, and were compelled, so noxious and offensive was the room in which the woman lay, to remove her for the time out of doors to the shade of a tree near by. The boy was taken to Tippecanoe by some friends, and remained there for a few days, was seized with Cholera, and died after a short illness. The mother is recovering—but the noble hearted boy who so faithfully watched with her during that fearful night has gone to his reward.

The Albany Knickerbocker of the 6th says :—

A few days since a man had a severe attack of the epidemic, and was sent to the hospital, where he died. His wife and two children were sent to the Alms House, where they were advised to stay until they recovered their health, but the woman left, taking her children with her, on the death of her husband. A day or two since the people residing in the house heard groans in her room and sent for Mr. Peacock. He immediately proceeded to the house and found an infant, one year old, dead in the cradle, the mother was lying dead upon a couch of rags in one corner of the room, and by the side of the dead mother lay a little girl about two years or two years and a half old, nearly naked and unwell. The people in the house refused to assist in dressing the child, and the officer, after getting some clothes, took it in his arms and carried it to the Poor-master's office, whence it was taken to the Alms House, and was cured by the physician.

Uncertainty of Life.—A Cleveland paper, in its advertising columns, cont ains the following notice :—

THEATER.

To commence with the amusing petite comedy of MY FELLOW CLERK; Tactic, Mr. W. Wharam; Juliet, Mrs. Donavan.

Under the editorial head we find the following :—

Sudden Death.—Mr. W. Wharam, who was announced for a part in the Theater this evening, died suddenly this afternoon at the Franklin House.

We have heard of another instance which occurred in Sandusky city. Mr. Park, while engaged as Sexton pro tem. employed some Germans as grave-diggers. One them, had finished a grave—was taken with the Cholera, and died in a few hours, and was buied in the grave he had prepared. [Buffalo Com.

Melancholy Cholera Dispensations.—In the cars from Buffalo, which reached this city at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, was a party from Natchez, two of whom, Mr. Cochran and Mr. Shippy, were indisposed, we learn, when they left Buffalo. When they reached Albany the illness of both gentlemen had assumed a cholera character.

Mr. Shippy was taken to a hotel, where at 5 o'clock he was visited by Dr. Staats, who prescribed cholera remedies. After the Doctor left, the patient obtained a tub of cold water in which he sat some time, and then wrapped up in wet blankets. He died at 12 o'clock.

Mr. Cochran started with his son and daughter, and servant, for a hotel, but losing their way, (as there were no porters at the railroad station,) they wandered about until they found a watchman who guided them to their lodgings. Though very ill, Mr. C. did not call a physician until 7 o'clock, after which every possible effort was made to save him, and in the evening hopes were entertained that he would recover, as the cholera was checked, but it left him too much exhausted to rally, and a few minutes before 1 o'clock this morning he expired.

Mr. Cochran was connected at Natchez with the house of Brown, Brothers & Co.

[Alb. Eve. Jour.

Premature Burials.—We are assured that the following is true in every particular :

A poor man residing in the upper part of the city, left home at the usual hour, some days since, to perform his daily labor; and, on returning in the afternoon, found that his wife had been seized with cholera during the forenoon, and conveyed to the hospital on Thirteenth street. He immediately went there, and as he entered the place, six coffins were carried out to be conveyed to Potter's Field. The poor fellow proceeded to the room and inquired for his wife, when he was informed that she was dead, and that one of the coffins he had passed contained her body, but which of them they could not tell, as no marks are placed upon them to distinguish one from the other. The man, in an agony of grief, started in pursuit of the conveyance, and accompanied it to Potter's Field, when he pleaded so hard to be permitted to look once more upon the face of his wife, that permission was given, and the coffins were opened. When the body of the woman was exposed, he seized it frantically in his arms, and pressed it fondly to his bosom. For a moment he fancied he felt the beating of her heart, and seizing her wrist he exclaimed, "My God, she lives!" At that moment the woman opened her eyes and recognized her husband; she was conveyed home and is now quite recovered. If the story is true—and our informant affirms that it is—what a frightful reflection it conjures up, that perhaps others, bearing only the semblance of death, have been prematurely hurried to the grave. [Eve. Mirror.

Valuable Emigrants.—The N. Y. Sun says that a few weeks since, a company of forty-five very wealthy Hollanders arrived in this city on their way to the Great West. A number of them have already started for Freeport, Michigan, and the rest are to leave to-day or to-morrow. Among them are four gentlemen who were made members of the order of the Golden Lion by the King of Holland, in return for distinguished public services. Rev. Dr. Bouton, who arrived seven or eight days since in the ship Emerald, still remains in the city with his family. He has not yet determined where he will settle. Letters have been received from Holland, which state that agents are now on their way to this country to select lands for very large companies, which will leave the provinces of Gelderland, Zealand, North-Holland and Friesland this Fall.

SUMMARY.

The Boston Atlas says that on Monday evening an attempt was made to throw the 9'oclock train of Dedham cars off the track, on the plain, by placing a couple of telegraph poles across the track. The gatekeeper noticed two men place the poles, procured assistance, removed the poles before the cars reached the spot, gave chase for the villains, and captured them.

The Detroit Free Press, of August 4, says: "A citizen who has never been willing to admit that vegetables are unwholesome, tried the experiment of eating part of a cucumber on Thursday. He was seen going for a physician soon afterward, with his hands clasped about his abdomen."

The powder mill of Mr. Joshua Johnson, Swamp Creek, in the vicinity of Sunpytown, Marlborough township, Montgomery County, Pa., blew up on Thursday last, and two men engaged in the mill were dreadfully burned. The names of these unfortunate persons are John Shaid and Daniel Moser. They both died.

Four boys died very suddenly in a brickyard, near Newburg, on Tuesday. They were very much exhausted by labor in the sun, drank copiously of ice-water, and were all corpses in fifteen minutes thereafter.

The Whig State Central Committee of New York has called a State Convention for the nomination of the various State Officers to be elected in November. The Convention is to meet at Syracuse on the 26th day of September.

The following is said to be a correct estimate of the number of slaves in the following countries: United States, 3,095,000; Brazil, 3,250,000; South American Republics, 140,000; African settlements, 30,000; total 7,500,000.

Ex-President Van Buren is about visiting the water-cure establishment at Brattleboro, to attend his son Martin, who visits it in quest of health.

Dexter Ballou, the first cotton manufacturer in Woonsocket, R. I., died in that village a few days since, at the age of 61 years.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has sent Frederick Douglass 100 Bibles for distribution to the poor colored people.

Hon. Joshua Mathiot, ex-Member of Congress from Ohio, died at Newark, (O.) on the 30th ult. He was on his way to a State Convention of the Sons of Temperance, of which body he was chief officer.

The name of the post-office at Union Ellery, Chautauque Co., has been changed to Ellery. The old Ellery P. O. is now called West Ellery.

An Irish family residing in Mott-st. N. Y., was recently called upon to pay the last sad offices to a father who had fallen a victim to Cholera. As usual with the Irish, the night before burial was appropriated to what is termed "waking" the corpse; that is, the friends of the deceased were invited to the house, and when there were plentifully supplied with spirituous liquors. The party altogether amounted to ten, and before twelve hours had elapsed three of them were dead, having been attacked by Cholera in its worst form.

A destructive Tornado passed over Trumbull county, Ohio, on the 24th ult. Many fruit and ornamental trees were destroyed, fences thrown down, and houses unroofed. Rev. Mr. Dubois was riding. He left his carriage and prostrated himself on the ground, thus escaping injury. His carriage was broken in pieces. A Mrs. Baldwin, of Milton, was seriously injured.

A New-York gentleman, passing from Springfield, Mass., to his home, lost in the cars a package of Cabot Bank bills, amounting to $1,000. It was picked up by Mr. A. G. Ruby, one of the brakemen, and placed with the agent of the Road at New-Haven for restoration to the owner. The latter called for it the next day, and gave $100 of the sum to Mr. Ruby, as a reward for his faithful honesty. Good all round.

The Buffalo Commercial says that on Saturday night the steamer Troy and the schooner Acorn came in collision near the West-Sister. The Troy struck the Acorn amidship, and she sunk immediately with all on board except the crew, who barely had time to get on board the Troy. The Acorn was loaded with flour and oil-cake and hoop-poles.

The twentieth Anniversary of the American Institute of Instruction was to be held at Montpelier, Vt., on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of August. Lectures or Addresses, followed by dicussions, were expected from Bishop Hopkins, Presidents Lord and Labardee, Professors Shed and Sanborn, Rev. D. Sears, and other distinguished educators. All persons interested were invited to be present, and participate in the exercises and hospitalities of the occasion.

Jones C. Lamphere, a Swamscott (Mass.) fisherman, discovered floating upon the water near the beach in Swamscott, a huge turtle, dead, and a hole in his body made by a bullet. Its total weight was 600 lbs.; length from nose to end of tail 8½ feet; width between his fore flippers across the back 7 feet 4 inches; length of shell 6 feet; width 3½.

Linus B. Comins, Esq. of Roxbury, who is on a visit to New-Bedford, caught a shark in the harbor of that place a day or two since which measured eight feet six inches in length, and weighed 205 lbs. The united efforts of three men were required to haul the prize into the boat.

There is a youth named Andrew H. Brand, living on Green river, near Rumsey, in Davis county, Ky., who is a "perfect monster" in size; being only fifteen years old, five feet three inches high, and measuring six feet in circumference around the waist, three feet six inches around the thigh, two feet six inches around the calf of the leg, two feet two inches around the arm, and weighing five hundred pounds.

In the Atlantic States generally, the wheat crop turns out large and excellent. In the Southern part of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, the crop is represented as a failure. From Michigan, Wisconsin, and Northern Illinois, the reports are highly favorable. The corn crop in all parts of the country is said to promise well.

A great German festival was held in Cincinnati, Ohio, on a Sunday in June, when it was stated by a daily paper, over 9,000 bottles of sour wine were drank. Over one hundred of those who took part in these excesses died in less than ten days.

Hon. A. B. Longstreet has been elected President of the Mississippi University, the "Board of Directors" having declared that office vacant on account of the absence, without leave, of the former incumbent.

A man whipped his female slave the other day at Glasgow, Mo., so that she died in consequence. A coroner's jury was call- who brought in a verdict that "the woman died of apoplexy brought on by excitement."

Elisha Smith killed James Nanery at Rockland on the 17th July last by shooting him. Smith, who was over 70 years of age and was in liquor at the time, gave himself up and was committed.

Charles Ellet, a distinguished civil engineer, says that the navigation of the Ohio River may be made permanent throughout the year for boats drawing five feet of water, by the construction of reservoirs that would not cost over $600,000.

The mansion house of Hon. Daniel Webster, in Franklin, N. H., was broken open on Saturday the 4th inst., and a considerable amount of property stolen, including one bed, various articles of bedding, one silver wine-cooler, silver spoons, &c.

G. G. Dennis, Esq., of Portsmouth, R. I., has made several very valuable improvements in the manufacture of Iron, one of which he has disposed of for $50,000.

Father Mathew obtained 2,000 pledges in the church in Moon-st. Boston, on Wednesday. The Boston Journal says the whole number of pledges obtained by him since he came to the city, is not far from 17,000.

We learn from the Western papers, that while the rust has done great injury to the Wheat crop, the sort of wheat known as the Mediterranean, has, for the most part, if not wholly, escaped.

Edward Bryan and his sister Eliza were drowned at Trenton Falls, recently, in attempting to pass a dangerous point at that place. They were taken to Utica for interment.

Mr. Israel Titus, the newly-appointed post-master of Toledo, (O.) died of cholera on the 28th ult., two days before the commencement of his services.

Eight paper mills at Newton Lower Falls, Mass., have stopped operations for want of water power, the streams having fallen so low in consequence of the drouth.

A gentleman recently from Vermont, says that the Potato crop is suffering very severely in that State from the drouth.

A Middletown (Conn.) paper says that a married lady of that city, who had been very low with the dysentery, for several days, was supposed to have died, and a coffin was spoken for by the husband; but on his returning to the house, signs of life were discovered, and after using restoratives, she regained her consciousness, so as to be able to speak. Hope is entertained that she will recover.

M. E. T. Paca, a very skillful and successful farmer of Queen Anne's county, on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, sent to Baltimore a cargo of Zimmerman wheat, measuring 980 bushels, which by weight amounted to 984 09 bushels—weighing 64½ lbs. per bushel. He is now growing a lot of corn which gives a prospect of 125 bushels per acre.

It is rumored that the Pope does not mean to resume his residence at Rome, but at Bologna. This city has water communication with Venice, is surrounded by a wall, has twelve gates. The population numbers 70,000. In 1796 Napoleon captured the city and drove away the papal authorities; now, his nephew restores them.

The Charlotte (N. C.) Journal states that gold bullion to the amount of $223,251 38 has been deposited in the Branch Mint of that place from January 1 to June 1, 1849—an increase of $31,544 17 over the amount received for the same time last year. The Mint coined in the half year $189,405.

A New Hamyshire writer has ascertained that there are in that State 298 members of the legal profession, or about one to every 200 legal voters in the State—221 of whom hold public offices, Senators, Legislators, &c.

In the record of deaths in the Portsmouth Journal of July 21, embracing of course the accounts of mortality in the surrounding region, there are 36 names, of which 16 were of the age of 60 and upwards; two were each 102; there were four between 80 and 100; 10 between 30 and 60; and only 4 children, all under 5.

The New Hampshire Legislature, at its recent session, provided that after the second Tuesday in March next, the day of the State election, no license shall be granted for the sale of liquors, except for medicinal or mechanical purposes.

New Orleans had a population of 102,000, in 1840; now she has probably over 150,000. The exports during the year 1842 amounted to $28,405,149, and the imports were $8,033,590. For the year ending June, 1848, the exports were $40,971,361, and the imports $9,290,439.

The Philadelphia North American asserts, that the "solid progress" of Philadelphia exceeds that of New York, and as a proof cites the fact, that there are more buildings erected annually in the former than in the latter city.

The Emperor of Russia has offered a reward of 40,000 rubles ($27,000,) to whoever shall capture Gen. Bem, the Pole.

During the last six months, 87,443 emigrants have sailed from the port of Liverpool. The number for the corresponding period of 1848, was 82,980.

A reward of one thousand dollars is offered for the conviction of the party through whose malice the dreadful accident occurred on the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad.

An addition of $5000 has just been made to the funds of Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass, by the munificence of its founder.

New York Markets—Monday, Aug. 13.

Ashes—Pots $5 87 a 5 94; Pearls 6 00.

Flour and Meal—The lower grades of Flour have advanced, common State and mixed Western selling at 5 25 a 5 31, straight State and Michigan 5 31 a 5 37, pure Genesee 5 37 a 5 50. Rye Flour is in demand at 3 12 a 3 18. Corn Meal 3 12 a 3 25.

Grain—Wheat is in fair demand, but prime is scarce; a lot of prime Ohio sold at 1 14. Rye is dull at 59c. Oats are in good demand at 37c. for Jersey, and 43 a 44c. for Canal. Corn, western mixed 61 a 63c.; round and flat yellow 63c.

Provisions—Ohio Pork 10 75 for Mess, and 8 94 a 9 00 for Prime. Beef 13 50 a 14 00 for Mess, 12 00 for Prime. Butter is in good demand at 7 a 11c. for Ohio, and 10 a 16c. for Western tub. Cheese is scarce and saleable at 2 a 7c.

MARRIED,

At Nile, Allegany Co., N. Y., August 2d, 1849, by Eld. James Bailey, Mr. Edwin W. Thrall, of Pittsburg, Pa., to Miss Jennette R. Clarke, of the former place.

At Leonardsville, N. Y., August 2d, by Eld. Eli S. Bailey, M. Wells Crumb to Hannah A. West.

At Brooklyn, N. J., August 8th, by Eld. Lucius Crandall, Henry B. Lewis to Sarah Ann Randolph.

DIED,

In Wirt, Allegany Co., N. Y., after a short illness, Mary C. Day, wife of George Day, in the 28th year of her age. She has left a husband and two small children to mourn their loss.

In Verona, N. Y., on the 30th of July, at the residence of her grandfather Caleb Green, Sophrona Green, daughter of Alva Green, of Adams, N. Y., aged 14 years Her death was sudden, supposed to have been caused by inflammation of the brain. c. c.

LETTERS.

Eli S. Bailey, Jonathan F. Randolph, Geo. Tomlinson, James Bailey, E. P. Larkin, A. A. Coon, H. M. Case, D. Dunn, C. Chester, B. W. Rogers, E. Church, A. S. Davis, S. S. Griswold, L. Crandall, C. T. Champlin, E. Babcock.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

John Davis, Shiloh, N. J.,	5 00
Charles Bright, " "	5 00
John S. Bacon, " "	5 00
Reuben Davis, Carltown, N. J.,	5 00
Ercurious S. Woodruff, "	5 00
Dr. Geo. Tomlinson, Roadstown, N. J.,	5 00
Clark Rogers, New York,	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

I. S. Dunn, New Market, N. J.	$2 00	to vol. 6	No. 52
L. Titsworth, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. Dunham, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
G. Tomlinson, Roadstown, N. J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. S. Davis, Philadelphia, Pa.	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. W. Langworthy, Hopkinton, R. I	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. Church, Marshall, Mich.	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. F. Randolph, New Salem, Va.	2 00	" 7	" 6
Jesse F. Randolph, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Wm. F. Randolph, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
P. F. Randolph, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Joseph Jeffrey, Wetunian, Va.	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. C. Potter, Durhamville,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Clark Rogers, New York,	2 00	" 6	" 52
M. B. Danelson, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. S. Meekins,	50	" 6	" 20

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Notice.

A session of the Executive Committee of the Eastern Association, will be held at Hopkinton, R. I., during the anniversary week of the Missionary and Tract Societies and the General Conference.

SHERMAN S. GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.
Hopkinton, R. I., August 8, 1849.

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed S preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the ession.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution wa passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. Passenger Trains Up—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Passenger Trains Down—Leave White House at 5¼ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M, Somerville 4½ A. M., Plainfield 5¼ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. Returning—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

NEW LINE FOR SCHOOLEY'S MOUNTAIN.

Splendid stages will leave for the Mountain on the arrival of the 9 o'clock train from New York at White House. This route has less staging than any other.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Pamphlets containing the necessary information may be had gratis at the office of the Sabbath Recorder.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

Sheriff's Office, New York, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I. Chap. 6, Title 3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. Aug. 9.

Miscellaneous.

THE FOUNTAIN.

BY RICHARD S. WILLIS.

Deep within a quiet valley,
Burst a fountain forth to light—
Burst, and sprang instinctive upward,
For its source was on the height.
But its bright and eager waters
Left not far their crystal track;
Bonds invisible detained them,
And they fell exhausted back.

On that fountain's rosy margin,
Still, at eve, I sat reclined,
Listened to the fountain's music,
Wished I might its chain unbind!
Thought, though hands unseen extending
Still drew back its silver rain,
Airy arms would soon receive it—
Soon as cloud 't would mount again.

In my bosom's quiet valley,
Bursts the fount of life its sod—
Bursts, and strives instinctive upward,
For its lofty source is God.
But that striving spirit fountain
Gains not far its upward track,
Bonds invisible detain it—
Oft it sinks exhausted back!

On that fountain's crystal margin
Sits a spirit, still reclined,
Radiant now with silver pinion,
But a soul, from earth refined!
Still that gentle spirit watches,
Waits till mine shall rend its chain,
While its pinions, half unfolding,
Lure me still the height to gain.

DR. COX ON CHOLERA.

In remedies for cholera the newspaper press has for some time been very prolific, while comparatively little has been said touching its pathology. The following sensible article can therefore hardly fail of being acceptable to our readers :—

Among the many publications concerning cholera lately issued from the press, we have seen none, in our judgment, more deserving of public attention than an unpretending little pamphlet of Dr. A. L. Cox. It presents in a brief space, and in a plain, lucid style, a theory of the disease, marked by great simplicity and common sense, and prescribes for its cure in accordance therewith.

The diarrhœa, which is commonly but wrongly deemed a premonitory symptom of cholera, Dr. Cox declares is the disease itself in its incipient stages. Whenever this symptom manifests itself, cholera is actually and actively present in the system. Diarrhœa, therefore, is regarded as the grand and ruling feature of the disease, and upon its proper treatment depend all the succeeding symptoms as well as the final result. The common cholera of the country commences in the stomach, with pain and nausea, violen vomiting and then copious discharges, first of the usual fecal matter, and then of bile, with violent pain in the smaller intestines. In the epidemic or Asiatic cholera, on the contrary, neither nausea nor pain is first manifest. The patient is first attacked with looseness, without pain, then come thinner dejections, large fluid passages; and finally pure fluid, of a marked character, in large quantities, with great violence, yet often without pain or nausea. There is therefore a clear distinction between the two diseases. The following is presented by the Doctor as a statement of symptoms observed during the prevalence of the disease in this city in 1832 and 1834 :—

'Usually a diarrhœa, unaccompanied with pain, and hence often unnoticed, or rather disregarded, came on, varying in its duration, according to its activity, from a few hours to several days, until it had entirely cleansed the intestines of their usual fecal contents, and then the 'rice water passages' were observed. At this time the fluid discharged became more profuse. The debility of the patient was greater, but often, even after the loss of a gallon of this fluid, the patient seemed indifferent, and fearless of results, not having experienced the least pain. It is true that at this moment he was in reality on the verge of collapse. But he would entertain no apprehensions of danger, and as his experience seemed so entirely different from the symptoms he had heard as characterizing the disease, he could not persuade himself that he was in danger. Here we may see the evil of making the fatal distinction between 'premonitory symptoms,' and the disease itself. Under such circumstances, he would naturally conclude that he had not the cholera. He neither vomits nor feels pain, he feels well, and at any rate has only the 'premonitory symptoms.' In a short time another discharge happens—it is more violent—it passes with a furious effort—it is irresistible—he feels less vigorous, makes an effort to assure his strength—determines that he will not give up; but soon a slight nausea, and an attempt to vomit, take place—sometimes the quantity is small—it may be what he has taken into his stomach last, or it may be pure water—or else a very copious discharge of the same clear fluid as passes from the bowels. Cramps now suddenly develop themselves. His eye sinks rapidly into its orbit. It would seem that the whole mass of fat in which that organ is imbedded had by magic been removed. The ball itself has lost its lustre. It appears no longer to be an orb of brilliant beauty, full of energy, life and intelligence, it is revealed as a sack not filled with fluid; its lustre and expression fly. The eye seems, in fact, as sunk into the orbit, so that the orbit looks like an augurhole in the head. The alae nasi are compressed together. The nose is pinched—the lips are contracted—the hue of the face is first leaden, then livid, then of a dark, deep, bluish color. The skin, looks soaked, or sodden, or parboiled. The abdomen contracts, and almost disappears; the abdominal muscles seem to cling to the spine and posterior walls of their cavity, as if they had no contents, so that, in some instances, the diameter of the abdomen in the direction from before backward, seems to be not more than two inches. The skin of the finger ends is corrugated as if long soaked in hot water, like that of a washerwoman. The surface of the body is cold. The pulse becomes frequent and small, and ultimately stops beating. The respiration continues with effort, and the ribs heave. The cramps subside, but the heart stops its action entirely, so that no pulsation can be heard, even by the ear closely pressed to the chest of the patient; yet respiration continues laborious, and the breath is icy cold. Deep coma comes on, and, in children, the eyes are turned up, and in them strabismus and symptoms like phrenitis come on. At any rate, at this period there is generally in their cases considerable cerebral disturbance. The patient is tormented with thirst, and complains of burning heat of his surface, while that surface feels like ice to the nurse. The pupils of the eyes are usually contracted to the minutest point. Death is the next symptom.

'In all this series of symptoms, it is impossible to recognize anything but the act of dying as the consequence of the terrible depletion produced by previous discharges from the bowels.'

The original symptom here, is nothing more than a discharge of fluid in immense quantities from the bowels—a copious hemorrhage, in other words, of the fluid parts of the circulating blood-vessels of the intestines, seems to be proved by the fact that the bodies of persons who have died of the cholera, without partial relief from treatment and drinks, present the peculiarity of being without fluid—nothing remains but the thick parts of the blood—clots in the larger, and dark grumous blood in the smaller vessels.

Cholera, therefore, the Dr. regards as simply a sudden, violent discharge of the fluid of the blood. And this theory explains every symptom of the disease. The exhaustion which follows is precisely similar to that induced by loss of blood, except the difference in the color of the skin; and that is explained by the fact that the water of the blood, instead of the red blood, is discharged. Nausea attends both hemorrhages. Cramps always manifest themselves in case of death from loss of blood. The sudden reduction of the bulk of the body is ascribed to the same cause—the loss of its fluids. The same thing accounts fully for the coldness of the surface, as well as for the burning heat of which the patient complains.

The collapse of the whole body, the sinking of the eye, the shriveling of the fingers, and the pinched appearance of the features, all bear testimony to the fact that the blood-vessels have lost their fluid contents. So also of all the other symptoms.

Having thus set forth what he deems the theory of the disease, he makes it the basis of the proper treatment.

The first thing essential during the prevalence of the disorder, is to economize the vital energy, which is always impaired by the presence of the epidemic. All exhausting labor, or exercises of any kind which cause loss of strength, is a serious exciting cause of cholera, and should be avoided. During cholera, therefore, all persons should spare their energies as much as possible; and in case of an attack, the patient should maintain perfect repose in a horizontal position.

The next object is immediately to arrest the purging, by the administration of opium and other medcines; and this the Doctor thinks should be done rather by injections than by swallowing. Ice, mutton broth, light but astringent food, should also be used. No purgatives whatever, of any kind, or to any extent, should be employed. The diarrhœa must be stopped, and it cannot be stopped too soon. Proper drinks in copious quantities should also be administered.

This is a brief outline of the pathology and treatment of this disease presented by Doctor Cox in the pamphlet referred to. He presents a great variety of facts, drawn from his own prefessional experience, to sustain them, and embodies also, though in a condensed form, a great deal of valuable and interesting information upon the subject.

He closes his treatise with the following directions for treatment, which we copy in full :—

In order to serve as some guide in the absence of a physician, it will be well to recapitulate, and divide the disease into its several stages, briefly stating the several treatments of each.

1. First we have what might be considered strictly the incipient stage. This stage is often unnoticed, or perhaps does not always occur, but it most generally happens, and is characterized by loss of appetite, nausea, slight disturbance in the bowels, feebleness of the muscles, and languor. Here the remedy is :—

1st. Rest in the horizontal position if possible.

2d. The use of cordials, such as eight drops of spirits of camphor, or a table spoonful of brandy and water, as a medicine only, and not to be retained afterwards as a diet drink, and great care to avoid all irregularities of temperature.

II. Then the stage of diarrhea comes on, without pain, and is marked by its insidiousness only. The remedies are—

1st. Rest on the back.

2d. The use of suppository of opium, consisting of one grain, which is calculated only for the beginning of the diarrhea, and this is often sufficient to arrest the disorder without further activity in the treatment.

3d. In addition the patient should use camphor or brandy as before directed, ether, ammonia, or other cordials.

III. The next stage may be regarded as the advanced period of the diarrhea, when the fecal contents of the bowels having passed off, there is simply the discharge of rice-water. This is the immediate precursor of collapse. The remedy here must be more potent than in the former cases.

1st. Rest in the horizontal posture.

2d. An injection of from two to four teaspoonfuls of laudanum, to be instantly repeated if the first does not remain. This frequently closes the bowels for a period of from three to five days. If at this moment, before collapse takes place, you can succeed in arresting the discharge from the bowels, the patient is safe. If not, he will assuredly die.

3d. The cordials are then of importance. Brandy and camphor are all important, but nothing without opium can be relied on.

IV. When collapse has taken place, the same indications of treatment remain, but in a degree more urgent. The same treatment in larger quantities must be used. They will often be successful, probably always, provided coagulation of the blood has not taken place. But in this case there is no possibility of recovery.

If the patient will implicitly obey these principal directions, there is positively no need to fear the pestilence, otherwise so fatal. The diarrhea is easily checked. Of this it is well to be afraid, even when unattended with pain. In its tendency it is fatal; but it is, perhaps, one of the easiest possible diseases to cure if it be subjected to proper and timely treatment.

BE PREPARED.

The following account of the experience of one of the editors of the Independent, shows the importance of being in readiness in case of an attack from the cholera :—

A week ago last Sabbath, the writer was seized in the night with marked symptoms of Cholera—sudden and griping pains in the abdomen, violent and copious purging, extreme prostration, a convulsive tremor, followed by a cold and clammy sweat—all sensation of warmth departing from the surface—nausea, and a constant tendency to discharges from the bowels. He had no "premonitory symptoms," and had retired feeling quite well. He slept alone, but was prepared for such an attack with remedies which had been tested in other cases. To arrest the diarrhea he took a pill consisting of two or three grains of opium and from four to six grains of acetate of lead (recommended by Dr. J. P. Batchelder of this city.) Repeated doses of strong tincture of camphor were taken undiluted upon sugar, to keep up the vitality of the system. Extra clothing was put on, and the horizontal position retained. It is the opinion of the physician who afterwards had charge of the case, that but for the prompt use of these remedies, the patient would soon have been in a state of collapse; as it is, the debilitating influence of the attack will be felt for weeks. An hour's waiting for medicine or a physician, would have changed the whole aspect of the case.

That same night a young man who slept alone in a store down town, was attacked in much the same way, but had no remedies at hand. After the first purging he fainted; when he came to, he crawled to the street door and called for the police, but when help came, he was so far gone that he sank hopelessly, and died in a few hours. We entreat our readers, who are in any way exposed to cholera influences, to be always prepared for a sudden attack. Have some remedy at hand; about your person by day, at your bedside by night.

So far as the first case above can be traced to predisposing causes, it is a caution against over-exertion. The subject was prudent in his diet, regular in his habits, calm and cheerful in his temperament, and remarkably well. But after a week of mental application, he preached three times on the Sabbath, walking four miles in going and returning, to make an exchange for part of the day. He felt no unusual fatigue, but perhaps Cholera was the sequel. At all events he will not try it again this summer.

THE SIMPLON ROAD.

This broad military road, constructed at a vast expense across the Alps, by the direction of Napoleon, to open a communication between France and Italy, although it is said by recent travelers to be much out of repair, and, indeed, impassible in some places, will remain for ages, a monument of the genius of that extraordinary man. The following is a description of this work, which is the admiration of every traveler :—

The highest part of the road is upward of a mile above the level of the sea. It is forty-five miles in extent, and passes on the extreme declivity of ridges, over awful chasms and foaming torrents, and through prodigious masses of rock. The road is so constructed that the slope nowhere exceeds two and a half inches in six feet, and carriages can descend without locking the wheels at any place. There are six galleries cut through the solid rock, the greatest of which is 600 feet long, 27 wide, and 30 high, with three wide openings through its sides to admit light. Thirty men were employed night and day, being relieved every eight hours by as many others, for eighteen months, in effecting this gallery. On the lower side of the road there is a wall laid with stone and mortar, with posts ten feet high, erected at intervals, to distinguish the road from the precipice, when the whole is covered with snow. The quantity of masonry on this wall and the abutments is immense. The road passes over 264 bridges. Fourteen stone houses are built at certain intervals across the mountains, the occupants of which are bound to keep their stoves heated night and day, in cold weather, and a room ready for travelers; the Catholics have small oratories on the route, containing each a small crucifix, where they stop and perform their devotions; and near the top is a convent of monks. On the Italian side of the mountain is the villiage of Simplon, with twenty houses and cottages, where the poor remain in summer to feed their goats, which are found in every part of the Alps, some of them of great height.

LADIES IN CALIFORNIA.

A gentleman who made the trip to California via the Isthmus, writes an interesting account of his travels to a relative in Salem, which is published in the Register. We give the closing part of his letter, dated Monterey, April 22 :—

SABBATH.—All very still now in Monterey. Men at the mines. There is good society here—Mr. Botts and family (brother of Hon. John M. Botts, of Va.,) Gen. Reily and family; Capt. Wescott and family; Maj. Canby and family; Mr. Larkin and family; Mr. Little and do.; others. There are several pianos in town, and next to nobody to play. We do not go to the mines to preach, because of the enormous expenses of living there—$8 or more a day—and because people are scattered and moving. No service can be obtained of any sort, without the greatest difficulty. Ladies have the worst of it. Mrs. B. never did any work in Virginia, among troops of servants, but now she does all, and is obliged to do all her work, I think, including washing. Very good—when she saw she must do it, she doffed all ceremony, and does it nobly, and is none the worse for it yet. So Mrs. C., a woman of complete education and refinement—she can do no other way, and she grows fat on it. Mrs. W. is a beautiful woman, and was brought up in luxury at home, by an uncle. She brought out hired servants, and they had not done the first house cleaning, to move in, after they arrived, before they announced their intention to leave at once. Well, Mrs. W. cried awhile about it, and her husband offered $20 per month to the maid; but it was no inducement, and away she went, and Mrs. W. has cleaned her own house, and is "well to do" yet.

MARKS OF A GOOD WORKING OX.

Mr. Asa G. Sheldon, of Williamstown, who has great experience in cattle, particularly in working oxen, and is regarded as the best authority, gives the following :—

Long head, broad and oval between the eyes; the eyes full, keen, and pleasant. Such marks denote ability to receive instructions and readiness to obey. The short-faced ox starts quick at the whip, and soon forgets it. The black ox is inclined to run away. An ox with very large horns near the head is apt to be lazy, and he cannot endure the heat well.

Forward legs straight; toes straight forward; hoof broad, not picked; the distance short between the ankle and knees. These properties enable an ox to travel on pavement and hard ground. If the ox toes out, the strain comes on the inside claw, and when traveling on a hard road, he will be lame at the joint between the hoof and the hair. When the toes turn out the knees bend in. An ox with crooked knees is apt to become lame by holding heavy loads down hill.

Breast full; straight on the back; round ribs, projecting out as wide as the hip bones. These are indications of strength and a good constitution. [Monthly Visitor.

GARIBALDI ONCE LIVED IN CINCINNATI.—It may not be uninteresting, says the Cincinnati Commercial, to know that Garibaldi, the leader of the insurrectionists at Rome, once kept a public-house on Sixth-st., between Plum and Western Row, in this city. His house was for some time one of the stopping places of the celebrated Charles Hammond, as editorials from his pen will show, as any man who has a file or who read his paper may see. He kept liquor, but his eatables and familiar yet gentlemanly converse formed the principal attactions for Hammond. Many a time, our old citizens inform us, did the veteran editor refer to Garibaldi as the prince of good eating and good company. From Garibaldi's industry and good management in this city he made money, and when he left for Italy he remarked that his $25,000 cash that he amassed would make him as wealthy in Rome as Griffin Taylor and others of great wealth, &c., were considered here. At the time he left our city quite a large meeting of respectable persons congregated at his house, and the proceedings of the meeting were published in the city papers of 1838. A grand supper was prepared and partaken of, toasts drank, &c. A friend of ours, from whom we obtain this information, remembers a remark of Garibaldi at the time. He said : "Before long there will be a revolution in Europe, and I wish to have a hand in it." By the late foreign news it will have been observed that his name has figured largely.

A CAREFUL "AULD WIFE."—During the height of the fire on Monday morning, says the Albany Journal, a woman was seen sitting near a fence, out of danger, surrounded by a few articles of furniture and two fat pigs. She appeared perfectly unconcerned in regard to the progress of the fire, and was absorbed in scratching the backs of her pigs with a hoop-pole. They were evidently gratified with this affectionate attention of their mistress, for they paid no heed to the bustle around them. When asked by a neighbor what had become of her little children, she replied that she had n't seen them for an hour or two, but she had no doubt they could take care of themselves, while she felt it to be her duty to watch over that part of the family which had n't equal intelligence. It is gratifying to know that the whole family—mother, children and porkers—were united and comfortably quartered before night-fall.

COMBE ON THE DURATION OF HUMAN LIFE.—The published reports of the mortality in Edinburgh and Leith for 1846 show, that the mean average age at death of the

Gentry and Professional men was	43½ years.
Merchants, master tradesmen, clerks &c.	36½
Artisans, laborers, servants, &c.	27½

Skilled artisans and domestic servants, when prudent and economical, live as comfortably and as long as their masters : and the low rate of life in the third class is occasioned, to a great extent, by the premature death of the unintelligent and reckless laborers and vagrants who constitute the pauper population.

GRAVE-STONES FOR CALIFORNIA.—The Boston Transcript tells the following : One of those persevering spirits called Yankees, a resident on the Island of Nantucket, being fully pesuaded that 'the Fever' would soon depopulate the place, has put his stock of mable and slate on board a schooner bound for the gold region; and stones, which were intended for some of the old inhabitants, beginning "Sacred to the memory of," &c. &c.. have actually been shipped from that once populons island, to mark the last resting-place of many of its inhabitants in the Dorado of the present time. What will be the next article of speculation?

CONSOLATION.—A passenger on board the ship Regulus, of Boston, states that they had on board their vessel a thin and feeble member of their company, who had been sea-sick all the way out to the line. One day this man went to the doctor, and in a sad, supplicating tone, accosted him with—

"Doctor, can you tell me what I shall be good for when I get to San Francisco, if I keep on this way!"

"Tell you? To be sure I can. You are just the man we want to begin a grave-yard with."

STRANGE COINCIDENCE.—On Wednesday, 4th of July, about noon, Deacon Joel Hatch, of Marshfield Mass., was found dead in his barn yard by a person sent to call him to dinner. On Thursday morning, Deacon Joseph Clift, of the same town, was also found dead in his bed. Mr. Hatch was aged 68, and Mr. Clift 82 years. They have both been deacons in the same church 39 years, having been invested with that office at the same time in the church of Rev. Mr. Leonard in 1810. They were men of exemplary life and unblemished character.

EARLY TOMATOES.—"While the fruit remains green," says a recent writer on the management of Tomatoes, "I have much accelerated the ripening by removing the large leaves from the dense bunches of fruit, and placing white boards behind them."

TO CORRECT SOURNESS IN MILK, CREAM AND BREAD.—It is not generally known, that the sourness of Milk and Cream may be immediately corrected by the addition of a small quantity of the common carbonate of magnesia, in powder. Half a tea spoonful (about equal to four grains) may be added to a pint of milk or cream, if only slightly sour; a larger quantity in proportion to the degree of sourness.

From two to three grains may be added to every pound of flour to prevent sourness in bread, so injurious to some constitutions.

Carbonate of soda is sometimes employed for the same purpose, but it communicates a very unpleasant flavor to the bread, and in the case of milk or cream, is worse than the disease. [Scientific American.

AGRICULTURAL MACHINE.—The Memphis Enquirer notices a wheat-cutting machine invented by S. S. Rembert. The machine is drawn by a single horse, and cuts, threshes, fans and bags the wheat as the horse moves on, and this whether the ground be level and free from stumps or not. The machine only cuts off the head of the wheat, leaving the straw to be plowed under. It is not stated what area of wheat land the machine will cut in a day. It is said to leave much less wheat for the glean er than the wheat-cradle.

BAD WATER.—We are certain that the lime water of the Western rivers is the moving cause of the fatal epidemic now prevailing in that section of the country. They have had the cholera severely in Camden, opposite Philadelphia, and the editor of the Camden (N. J.) Democrat, who has had the cholera, attributes the prevalence of the disease in that village to the bad quality of the water. He says—'If any of our citizens will take a tumbler of this hydrant water, and sprinkle some pulverized alum in it, and then examine it with a powerful microscope, they will discover myriads of animalculæ, dead, and in a decomposing condition.'

TO KEEP CIDER SWEET.—After your cider is well raked, suspend in the cask a bag containing one pint of pulverized charcoal; this will keep it perfectly free from any intoxicating qualities for a year. Those trying it, will find this receipt worth the price of a year's subscription to a newspaper.

VARIETY.

Nine hundred crow scalps were sent to the Levy Court of Queen Ann's County, Md., a short time since, by a gentleman from Kent Island; the bounty of six cents each amounting to upwards of $50. The farmers of Kent Island manage to catch crows in the following way. They first obtain a live crow, and pin him down on his back to the ground. His cries attract other crows to the spot, when he seizes them with his bill and claws, and they are then taken and killed.

A letter to the St. Louis Repulican states that new discoveries of mineral ore (lead) have been made in Washington County, Missouri. At Galloway, the firm of Adams and Brackenride were taking out from two to three hundred pounds a day, and Mr. John Owens, Jr., had dug 10,000 pounds in eighteen days from another mine. The mineral is found in caves and channels, but mostly in caves, under the hard rock.

A grocer in Clinton County, New York, sold a drunkard a pint of new rum, "according to law," and made two cents clear profit. The drunkard, while under the influence of this liquor, shot his son-in-law; and his apprehension, confinement in jail, execution, &c., cost the County more than $1000! which temperance men had to earn by the sweat of their brows.

Holland is more heavily incumbered with debt than any other country in Europe, and probably in the world. The population of Holland is 3,000,000—500,000 greater than that of the State of New York, and her public debt has already reached the enormous and frightful sum of $650,000,000—or $240 of indebtedness to every man, woman and child in the kingdom.

There are, in the single city of Liverpool, England, 65,000 adults who never enter a place of worship for religious instruction; 12,000 who cannot read; 14,000 families who are wholly destitute of the printed word of God, and 25,000 who attend no school, and whose mental and moral culture is as unattended to as that of the brutes.

An Irish girl applied to her overseer for leave of absence on St. Patrick's day. He informed her that he did not know how to spare her, as he had no one to take her place. "And sure," said she, "I must go out; for ain't St. Patrick as good a man as the Fourth of July?" The reason was satisfactory, and leave was granted, of course.

Dr. Parr and Lord Erskine are said to have been the vainest men of their time. At dinner, some years since, Dr. Parr, in ecstacy with the conversational powers of Lord E., called out to him: "My Lord, I mean to write your epitaph." "Dr. Parr," replied the noble lawyer, "it's a temptation to commit suicide."

There are twenty thousand males and one thousand females in London, employed as drapers' assistants. They are occupied seventeen hours in twenty-four. Only half an hour is allowed them for all the meals of the day, and they are not allowed to sit for a single moment, except when eating.

If you want the milk of human kindness thickened into the cream of benevolence, or the cream of benevolence transferred into the butter of beatitude, all you have to do is to fly around and do good. As Dobbs very justly says, there is more sunshine in one act of kindness than in all July.

The keeper of a grog establishment in Georgia, has made known by advertisement, that he will not, in future, sell any spirituous liquor to temperance men, unless they should bring a written permission from their wives.

La Democratic Pacifique says that a memoir of Fenelon, in his own hand writing, has been discovered among some old papers in the Douai Museum, by the librarian, M. Duthillœul. It is now in the press.

A fellow found guilty of burglary before Justice Day, in Ireland, observed, "that his fate was singular, as he lost by Day what he got by Night."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Union Academy.

THE second or Fall Term of the Union Academy will commence on the 13th of August, 1849, under the charge of—

E. P. LARKIN, Principal,
Rev. G. M. LANGWORTHY, Lecturer on Moral Science.
Wm. S. GREEN, Assistant.
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress,
Miss AMANDA M. CRANDALL, Teacher of Piano.

During the Fall Term of each year, a TEACHERS' CLASS will be organized, for the purpose of more thoroughly preparing Common School teachers for their responsible, but too long neglected avocation. A Course of Lectures will be delivered before the Class upon the various modes of teaching and governing Common Schools; and during the Term, the Class will be critically examined and instructed in those branches which they are expected to teach. Every effort will be made to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to teach; and no individual can receive a recommendation from the Faculty of this Institution, who is not thoroughly qualified to fulfill all the specifications of his recommendation.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the School:—

First—Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this School.

Second—Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his religious denomination.

Third—The exercises of the Institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth—No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the Institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This Institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county-seat, and twelve miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

Terms:

Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per Term. Piano music $10 00 extra. Incidental expenses 25 cents per Term. Settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

The Winter Term of the first year will commence the first Monday in December.

The Spring Term will commence the third Monday in March, 1850.

The Second Academic Year will be divided as follows:—The first Term will commence the first Monday in August; the second Term will commence the third Monday in November; the third Term will commence the second Monday in March, 1851. Each Term will continue fourteen weeks.

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.

Officers.

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.
Vice Pres. NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.
Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.
Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.
Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.
Co-Trustees, GEORGE GREENMAN, of Mystic, Ct.
JOHN D. TITSWORTH, of Plainfield, N. J.
WM. M. ROGERS, of Brooklyn, L. I.
ISAAC D. TITSWORTH, of Shiloh, N. J.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to
GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 10.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, AUGUST 23, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 270.

The Sabbath Recorder.

FAITH AND WORKS.

[Concluded.]

Having thus briefly examined the subject of faith and works, I proceed more minutely to examine the teachings of the Apostle James, to see whether any discrepancy exists between him and his brother Paul.

Paul declares that Abraham was justified by his faith, and James asks if he was not justified by works, and mentions the offering up of Isaac as the justifying act. James also refers to Rahab's reception of the messengers as an act securing justification. Now, it must not be forgotten, that one of the particular acts of faith connected with Abraham's justification, was crediting the prophetic declaration relative to the future birth of Isaac: "He believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness." This act of faith, whereby he was justified, was long before the work of justification mentioned by James—probably not less than thirty-six years. Therefore he was justified by faith; this cannot be denied. And I understand James to refer to the act of offering Isaac, as a declarative justification. Abraham's willingness to return his son to that God who gave him, justified or proved his faith. Thus his faith was made perfect, complete, and demonstrated to all. It was Abraham's faith that produced this justifying act or work. His faith wrought his work, was causative of it. He showed his faith by his works. His refusal to comply with the divine requsition, would have been evidence of his unbelief. The same exposition may be given respecting Rahab. Thus I consider that perfect harmony exists between these two Apostles. And, farther, I understand them to take the same view of faith and works, that I have given, viz., faith the antecedent, work the consequent; faith the cause, work the effect. For, adds James, "as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

Says Beza:—

"It is one thing to say, The faith which is without works is dead, and another to say that faith is dead without works, as if faith derived its life and power from works, which is not less absurd than if one should say, that the body is dead without sense and motion, as if sense and motion were the cause of life; when we should say, that the body which is without sense or motion is dead?"

Sense and motion being the effect of life, can never be its primeval cause, although, after life exists, they may by their action increase its activity. So works, being the effect of faith, can never be its original cause, although they may by their action, in the perception and investigation of evidence, or in giving babit by their demonstrable production of what faith has already caused, much increase the power of faith.

Not only is the doctrine of justification by faith theologically true, but it is equally so philosophically. The doctrine of justification by faith takes for granted the fact that man is a sinner. Now no after life of holiness can justify the sinner for his former acts of sin. For, however holy one may be, he can never perform more than present duty—no work of supererogation. Therefore, as justification includes pardon of past sin, and as one can never do more than present duty, it follows of necessity that works, however good, or however many their number, can only justify the present moment, and can never justify the past. Mercy, in the form of forgiveness, can only pardon or justify the ungodly. Nor can even repentance, however deep, atone for, or justify past transgression. Blot from the memory of man the fact that God will pardon, and the gloom of midnight settles upon our race.

Till God in human flesh I see,
  My thoughts no comfort find;
The holy, just, and sacred Three
  Are terrors to my mind.

But if Immanuel's face appear,
  My hope, my joy begin;
His name forbids my slavish fear,
  His grace removes my sin.

It is only by faith in the revealed fact, that God will pardon him who believes in Jesus Christ, that the sinner can ever find pardon or justification; and it is only by faith in Jesus Christ, that God has ever promised to pardon or justify. There is no other name given under heaven among men, but that of Jesus Christ, whereby men can be saved. The belief, then, of this revealed fact, not only brings a sense of pardon to the penitent soul, but it is to all intents and purposes the only way that God is pleased to justify the sinner. Not only so, but faith in a pardoning God, and a belief that we are among the pardoned, touches the heart of the penitent with a live coal from the altar of love, kindles the glowing spark into a flame, subdues the selfish passions of the heart, and consecrates the redeemed one to the service of his Redeemer. In all the ardor of warm gratitude, the ransomed ones exclaim, Henceforth we live not unto ourselves but unto Him who hath loved us, and washed us in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto God. With her eye on the Author, faith takes her stand by the throne of God, and receives her mandate from Jehovah. As the legate of Heaven, she enunciates the voice of the Almighty; as the subject of the King of kings and Lord of lords, she moves with a power almost omnipotent. With one hand she lays hold of the throne of God; with the other, she draws up humanity to that lofty seat, and by beholding the glory of the Lord, she transforms her subjects into the same image. May such faith be ours. S. S. GRISWOLD.

HOPKINTON, R. I., July 26, 1849.

The following letter from Father Ventura, a Roman Catholic priest, is worth volumes of the prophetic comments of the European press upon Roman affairs:—

EFFECT OF THE BOMBARDMENT OF ROME UPON ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

It is with fearful and bleeding heart that I now address you. Even as I write the French are bombarding Rome, destroying its monuments, raking its people with grapeshot; blood flows freely on every side; ruins are heaped upon ruins, and God alone knows the issue of this lamentable conflict. Some fear that if the French enter Rome by assault the people will be led in their rage to murder the priests and recluses. In such a case, what a glorious victory would the French obtain! What a fine restoration of Papal Sovereignty would she effect! History teaches us, that in general, restorations effected by force are not durable, and that thrones raised upon dead bodies and blood are fated to be overthrown by yet more violent convulsions. Of all the expedients for the restoration of the Pope discussed at Gaeta, they have chosen the most deplorable.

But what most distresses the heart of every Catholic is that this restoration, supposing it to be effected, without firmly establishing the power of the Prince, will wound and perhaps destroy the authority of the Pontiff. The cannon now working destruction in the walls of Rome, is as steadily destroying the Catholic faith in the hearts of the Romans. I have already told you what fearful impressions the * "Confetti di Pio Nono mandati a suoi figli" have produced upon the Roman people; what hatred they have excited against the priests. But all this is nothing to the rage which the sight of the French bombs has awakened against the church, even against the Catholic religion. As most of the bombs have fallen in the suburbs, ruining the houses and wounding the families of the poor people, it is particularly those of the suburbs, that portion of the Roman people formerly the most devotedly Catholic, who now curse the Pope and the clergy, in whose name they see these horrors committed.

I am far from believing that Pius IX. wishes these things, or that he even knows of them. I know that he is kept in such a state isolation, that the truth in these matters cannot reach him; everything is perverted before he receives it. I know that the poor Pope, surrounded by wicked or imbecile men, sentenced as it were to the depths of a citadel, is well nigh a prisoner, and very little master of himself. I know that they take advantage of the feebleness of his character, of the tenderness of his conscience, of his state of nervous excitement, which subjects him to whatever influences or impressions his courtiers please.

But what I know and believe, the Roman people do not know nor believe. The people know only what they see and suffer. They see that the Austrains, with a prelate of the Pope, Monsignor Benini, in the midst of them, ravage the Legations, bombard cities, levy enormous contributions upon the most peaceable citizens, exile and shoot the most ardent patriots, and re-establish every where clerical tyranny. They see that the Pope has launched against the Roman State, as against some wild beast, four great powers, armed with all means of destruction; and they will listen to nothing; they rise against the Pope and the church in that very name, and in defense of those very interests by which the Pope declares it his duty to reconquer forcibly his temporal power. Mr. Harcourt, in a letter dated Gaeta, writes, "Reason and charity are banished alike from Rome and Gaeta." In those few words we have the history of the last seven months. The excesses of Rome, which no one pretends to justify, although to a certain degree necessary in times of revolution, have been surpassed by the excesses of Gaeta. Not a word of peace, of reason, of pardon. Not a promise to maintain public liberty, such as we had a right to expect from a Pope, and especially from the mouth of Pius IX., has come forth from that rampart of absolutism, that rendezvous of folly and wickedness, combined to smother the sentiment of charity and love in the amiable heart of Pius IX.

I have just read the last address of the Pope to the Cardinals. What impudence! what folly to have put into the mouth of the Holy Father pompous eulogies of Austria and the King of Naples; the greatest enemies of the independence of Italy, whose very name horrifies every Italian! What impudence to have made the Pope say that he himself appealed to the powers to reinstate him on the throne which he himself abandoned! It was to say, "I intend to wage against my own people that war which the year before I declared I would not wage against Croats and Austrians, the oppressors of Italy." Even the women raise this reproach against him; and now, in witnessing the effects of this savage war of four powers against one little State, in seeing their husbands and children killed and wounded, you cannot conceive the rage of the women, the violent sentiments to which they give way, the cries of fury they vent upon the Pope, Cardinals, and Priests, en masse. From this you may well conclude that the people have abjured the churches. They will neither confess, nor communicate, nor assist at mass, nor hear the word of God. One cannot now preach at Rome for want of hearers. No one wishes any thing at the hands of the priests, or any thing priestly.

To me Pius IX. is still and ever the Vicar of Jesus Christ; the head of the visible church; the master, the teacher, the infallible interpreter of the rule of faith and practice. The weakness, the faults even of the man, cannot make me forget in him the high prerogatives of the Pontiff. But can the people comprehend this? Can the people rise to, and abide by these theological distinctions? Alas! To the minds of the people the crimes and cruelties of the man are the crimes and cruelties of the priest; the faults of the king are the faults of the Pope; the infamies of politics, the effects of the doctrines of religion.

My friends endeavor to conceal from me what is said and done in this deplorable scene at Rome. They would spare me the grief which such things must necessarily cause me. But in spite of their care, I learn that the whole youth of Rome, and all men of intelligence, reason thus:—"The Pope means to reign over us by force. He claims for the church, that is, for the priests, the sovereignity which belongs only to the people, and he believes, he says, indeed, that it is his duty to act thus, because we are Catholics, and because Rome is the centre of Catholicism. Very well: what is to hinder us, then, from becoming Protestants if necessary, and then what political right can he have over us? For is it not horrible to think of, that because we are Catholics, and sons of the church, we must be mastered by the church, abjure our rights, receive from the liberality of the priests as a concession, what is due in justice, and be condemned to the lot of the most miserable of people?"

I find these sentiments have become more common than is generally supposed; they have penetrated even into the hearts of the women. Thus twenty years of Apostolic labor which I have endured, to attach the Roman people to the church, are sacrificed in a few days! Behold what I have foreseen and predicted in all my letters, come to pass! And even beyond my worst forebodings! Protestantism is, in fact, now planted among a portion of this good and religious Roman people; and, horrible to tell, this has been brought about by the priests themselves, by the miserable politics into which they have led the Pope. Ah! my dear friend! the idea of a Bishop who rains grape-shot upon his diocese—of a shepherd who cuts the throat of his sheep—of a father who devotes his children to death—of a Pope who means to reign, to impose himself upon 3,000,000 of Christians by force—who means to establish his throne upon ruin, corpses, and blood! This idea, I say, is so strange, so contrary to the letter and spirit of the gospel, that there is no conscience which does not revolt at it—no faith that can bear against it—no heart which does not groan at it—no tongue which is not moved by it to cursing, aye! even to blasphemy! Ah! better, a thousand times better, have lost the temporal power, the whole world if necessary, than to have given such a scandal to his people!

Oh! if Pius IX. had been left to himself—had he only been able to act according to the dictates of his own heart. In the first place, he would never have left Rome; or if driven to that he never would have left the Roman States. He would have gone to Bologna, or to Ancona, or Civita Vecchia, where he would have been received as a messenger of heaven. There he would never have rejected the deputation sent by the city of Rome; thence he would never have launched that excommunication which has driven from the Constituente all men of timorous conscience—all his friends. Counseled to provoke the armed interference of the powers, he would have answered: "What is but indifferent in a Prince, is scandalous for a Pope. It never shall be said that Pius IX. made war upon his own people. I will never recover by force, what I can possess only in love. I will never consent that any one shed for me a drop of the blood of my children. Exile, a thousand times exile, and for life even, rather than appeal to the bayonet and cannon, which, I in subjecting my people to me, deprive me of their love, and repel them from the church and religion." Oh! if Pius IX. had but held this language! Had he but thus addressed himself to the Roman people, they would have risen en masse—they would have sought out the Pontiff—they would have brought him back in triumph—they would have been happy to live under such a Prince. It was the surest, the most effective means of creating and establishing a reaction. But this appeal to war, the presence and the horrors of combat, instead of producing a reaction, have enfeebled, disarmed, annihilated it. Even those who were formerly for the Pope, now deem it just and honorable to answer war with war. They have repudiated Pius IX. as King, and begin now to renounce him as Pontiff.

It is probable that Rome will fall under this attack of the French. How resist France? It is possible that the Pope may enter Rome bearing a sword instead of the cross, preceded by soldiers, as if Rome were Mecca, and the gospel the Koran. But he will never reign again over the hearts of the Romans. In this respect his reign is destroyed, finished for ever. He will be Pope but to a small number of the faithful. The immense majority will remain, in fact, Protestants. They will practice no more the Roman Catholic Religion, so great will be their hatred of the priesthood. Our preaching will be of no effect. It will be impossible for us to cause the Catholic church to be loved, or even tolerated by a people who will have been taught to hate and despise it in a chief imposed upon them by force, and in a clergy dependent upon this chief. It will be impossible for us to persuade them that the Catholic religion is the mother, the instructress, the guardian of the liberty of the people, and the guarantee of their happiness. Those best arguments, those most in vogue to-day, those which are alone relished by the people, the arguments of facts, by which for two thousand years we made religion to triumph over the most rebellious minds, and the hardest hearts, those arguments are forever taken from us. Our ministers will become sterile, and we shall be hooted and despised where we are not pursued and massacred. The French, in this fratricidal war, have left upon history one of those bloody pages which humanity and religion must expiate through long ages.

---

* "The sweetmeats sent by Pius IX. to his children;" a motto written upon the cannon balls of the French, which were borne about the city in processions.

PARTING WORDS.

WRITTEN BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

"Praise God when I am gone."

I saw a dying maiden,
  As on her couch she lay,
Spring's early flowers beside her,
  And the birds upon the spray—
The birds, whose warbled melodies
  Fell richly on her ear,
Prelusive of that angel choir
  She was so soon to hear.

The joys of youth were round her,
  Love made her pathway fair;
And hope, from cold reality,
  Had felt no blight of care.
Yet from each fond allurement,
  She calmly turned away,
And spoke of praise, to those who mourn'd
  Her premature decay.

List! list! her pale lip moveth,
  Bow down to catch its tone,
Faint as the breeze that stirs the flowers,
  "Praise God when I am gone."
Yea, praise Him for her spotless life,
  In meek submission blest,
And for the beauty of its close,
  So like a cradle-rest.

And though the wintry hearth-stone,
  The vine-encircled door,
And all the cherished haunts of home,
  Must know her never more;
Yet, as a sacred signet-ring,
  'Grave ye that parting tone
Deep on the tablet of the soul—
  "Praise God when I am gone."

PAYING AN OLD DEBT.

A merchant, very extensively engaged in commerce, and located upon the Long Wharf, Boston, died Feb. 18, 1806, at the age of 75, intestate. His eldest son administered upon the estate. This old gentleman used pleasantly to say, that for many years, he had fed a very large number of the Catholics, on the shores of the Mediterranean, during Lent, referring to his very extensive connection with the fishing business. In his day he was certainly well known; and to the present time is well remembered by some of the "old ones down along shore," from Gurnet's Nose to Race Point. Among his papers, a package of very considerable size, was found after his death carefully tied up, and labeled as follows: "Notes, due-bills, and accounts against sundry persons, down along shore. Some of these may be got by suit or severe dunning. But the people are poor; most of them have had fishermen's luck. My children will do as they think best. Perhaps they will think with me, that it is better to burn this package entire."

"About a month," said my informant, "after our father died, the sons met together, and, after some general remarks, our elder brother, the administrator, produced this package, of whose existence we were already apprised, read the superscription, and asked what course should be taken in regard to it. Another brother, a few years younger than the eldest, a man of strong, impulsive temperament, unable, at the moment, to express his feelings by words, while he brushed the tears from his eyes with one hand, by a spasmodic jerk of the other, towards the fire-place, indicated his wish to have the package put into the flames. It was suggested, by another of our number, that it might be well, first, to make a list of the debtors' names, and of the dates, and amounts, that we might be enabled, as the intended discharge was for all, to inform such as might offer payment, that their debts were forgiven. On the following day, we again assembled—the list had been prepared—and all the notes, due-bills, and accounts, whose amount, including interest, exceeded thirty-two thousand dollars, were committed to the flames.

"It was about four months after our father's death," continued my informant, "in the month of June, that, as I was sitting in my eldest brother's counting-room, waiting for an opportunity to speak with him, there came in a hard-favored little old man, who looked as if time and rough weather had been to windward of him for seventy years. He asked if my brother was not the executor. He replied that he was administrator, as our father died intestate. 'Well,' said the stranger, 'I've come up from the Cape to pay a debt I owed the old gentleman.' My brother," continued my informant, "requested him to take a seat, being at the moment engaged with other persons at the desk.

The old man sat down, and, putting on his glasses, drew out a very ancient leather pocket book, and began to count over his money. When he had done—and there was quite a parcel of bank notes—as he sat, waiting his turn, slowly twisting his thumbs, with his old gray meditative eyes upon the floor, he sighed; and I knew that the money, as the phrase runs, came hard—and secretly wished that the old man's name might be found upon the forgiven list. My brother was soon at leisure, and asked him the common questions—his name, &c. The original debt was four hundred and forty dollars—it had stood a long time, and, with the interest, amounted to a sum between seven and eight hundred. My brother went to his desk, and, after examining the forgiven list attentively, a sudden smile lighted up his countenance, and told him the truth at a glance—the old man's name was there! My brother quietly took a chair by his side, and a conversation ensued between them which I shall never forget. 'Your note is outlawed,' said my brother; 'it was dated twelve years a o, payable in two years; there is no witness, and no interest has ever been paid; you are not bound to pay this note; we cannot recover the amount.' 'Sir,' said the old man, 'I wish to pay it. It is the only heavy debt I have in the world. It may be outlawed here, but I have no child, and my old woman and I hope we have made our peace with God, and wish to do so with man. I should like to pay it,' and he laid his bank notes before my brother, requesting him to count them over. 'I cannot take this money,' said my brother. The old man became alarmed. 'I have cast simple interest for twelve years and a little over,' said the old man. 'I will pay compound interest if you say so. That ought to have been paid long ago, but your father, sir, was very indulgent—he knew I'd been unlucky, and told me not to worry about it.'

My brother then set the whole matter plainly before him, and, taking the bank bills, returned them to the old man's pocket-book, telling him that, although our father left no formal will, he had recommended to his children to destroy certain notes, due-bills, and other evidences of debt, and release those who might be legally bound to pay them. For a moment the worthy old man appeared to be stupefied. After he had collected himself, and wiped a few tears from his eyes, he stated that, from the time he had heard of our father's death, he had raked and scraped, and pinched and spared, to get the money together, for the payment of this debt. 'About ten days ago,' said he, 'I had made up the sum within twenty dollars. My wife knew how much the payment of this debt lay upon my spirits, and advised me to sell a cow, and make up the difference and get the heavy burthen off my spirits. I did so—and now what will my old woman say! I must get back to the Cape and tell her this good news. She'll probably say over the very words she said when she put her hand on my shoulder as we parted—'I have never seen the righteous man forsaken nor his seed begging bread.' After a hearty shake of the hand, and a blessing upon our old father's memory, he went upon his way rejoicing.

After a short silence—taking his pencil and making a cast—'There,' said my brother, 'your part of the amount would be so much—contrive a plan to convey to me your share of the pleasure, derived from this operation, and the money is at your service.'"

Such is the simple tale, which I have told as it was told to me. [Evening Transcript.

SELF-TRAINING.

The late Sir T. F. Buxton had great faith in the self-training power of men. He thus expresses himself:—

"I am very sure that a young man may be very much what he pleases. In my own case it was so. I left school, where I had [illegible] fourteen. I spent the next year at home, learning to hunt and shoot. Then it was that the prospect of going to College opened upon me.

* * * * * * *

I made my resolutions, and I acted up to them. I gave up all desultory reading—I never read a novel or a newspaper—I gave up shooting. During the five years I was in Ireland, I had the liberty of going when I pleased to a capital shooting place. I never went but twice. In short, I considered every hour as precious, and I made everything bend to my determination not to be behind any of my companions; and thus I speedily passed from one species of character to another. I had been a boy fond of pleasure and idleness, reading only books of unprofitable entertainment; I became speedily a youth of steady habits of application, and irresistible resolution. I soon gained the ground I had lost, and found those things which were difficult and almost impossible to my idleness, easy enough to my industry; and much of my happiness and all of my prosperity in life have resulted from the change I made at your age. It all rests with yourself. If you seriously resolve to be energetic and industrious, depend upon it you will, for your whole life, have reason to rejoice that you were wise enough to form and to act upon that determination."

A reviewer adds:—

"No man ought to be convinced by any thing short of assiduous and long-continued labors, issuing in absolute failure, that he is not meant to do much for the honor of God and the good of mankind."

A STRIKING ILLUSTRATION.

A company of individuals united themselves together in a mutual benefit association. The Blacksmith comes and says, "Gentlemen, I wish to become a member of your association." "Well, what can you do?" "Oh, I can shoe your horses, iron your carraiges, and make all kinds of iron implements." "Very well, come in, Mr. Blacksmith." The Mason applies for admission into the society. "And what can you do, Mr. Mason?" "Oh, I can build your barns and houses, and stables and bridges." "Very well, come in, we can't do without you." Along comes the Shoe-maker, and says, "I wish to become a member of your society." "Well, and what can you do?" "I can make shoes and boots for you." "Come in, Mr. Shoe-maker, we must have you."

So, in turn, apply all the different trades and professions, till lastly an individual comes and wants to become a member. "And what are you?" "I am a Rum-seller." "A Rum-seller!—and what can you do?" "I can build jails, and prisons, and poor-houses." "And is that all?" "No, I can fill them; I can fill your jails with criminals, your prisons with convicts, and your poor-houses with paupers." "And what else can you do?" "I can bring the grey hairs of the aged to the grave with sorrow; I can break the heart of the wife, and blast the prospects of the friends of talent, and fill your land with more than the plagues of Egypt." "Is that all you can do?" [illegible] heavens!" cries the rum-seller, "is [illegible] enough?" [Poughkeepsie Bla[illegible]

MAGNIFICENT RUINS OF APAMIA.

In a recent publication, Mr. Thompson, American Missionary in Syria, described a ruined city not mentioned by any other traveler. Syria has been the seat of many different nations, which have in turn built great cities, which have again been destroyed in some violent political or commercial revolution. The renowned city of Damascus yet remains undestroyed, the oldest city in the world. All the others are in ruins. Mr. Thompson was proceeding from Aleppo to Mount Lebanon, when he explored the magnificent ruins of Apamia. He says:—

"Started at sunset for Apamia, and in five hours reached Kulat Seijer, where I left my tent, and rested two hours. Crossing the Orontes, and riding rapidly for three and a half hours, I reached the ruins just as the sun rose. These remains are more dilapidated than those of El Bara, but are more grand and classic. The walls of the city are in most places gone, and the houses are all prostrate. At the north-west corner, however, there is an excellent specimen of the wall standing, and portions of the houses are to be seen in many places. The north gate is almost perfect, but it is choked up by an incredible mass of hewn stones which belonged to the adjacent towers. The grand avenue extends from this to the south gate, in a direct line, more than a mile long. The avenue is one hundred and twenty-three feet wide, and throughout its entire length it was lined by a row of columns on either side. The columns are of the Corinthian order and very beautiful. The shaft is twenty-two feet and the cornice three feet four inches, making the whole height about thirty feet. They stood only six and a half feet, and are stretched from gate to gate, one of the longest and most august colonnades in the world. Including the recesses, of which there were several, the whole number of columns must have been eighteen hundred. Between the colonnades and the houses, were side-walks twenty-four feet wide; the diameter of the columns was three feet, and the centre was sixty-nine feet wide.

Tho streets appeared to cross at right angles and at regular intervals. There were colonnades and numerous groups of columns in different places, which point out the sites of churches, temples, palaces, markets, and other public edifices. About the middle of the grand avenue is a statue of Bacchus, in front of the building on the east side of the street. It has been intentionally defaced, but the right hand holds a wand, and the left still grasps a vine, whose luxuriant leaves and clusters are woven into a canopy to shield his head from the burning sun. Near this the columns are peculiar, having at the base a conflute with a square rib between the flutes, while the upper half is a bold, straight, concave flute. Some distance farther on is a large column in the centre of the avenue; but the details of the wonderful avenue are too complicated for my pen or page.

One wanders from square to square, amazed at the amount and variety of the architecture, until the bewildered mind ceases to note particulars. The gates (if the northern one is an example) were truly magnificent. With difficulty I climbed to the top, over a prodigious accumulation of ruins; from this station obtained a perfect view of the ground plot of this once splendid city. It is now an utter ruin—not one house has been spared.

The Lord hath stretched over it the line of Samaria, and the plummet of Ahab, and hath wiped it as a man wipeth a dish, turning it upside down."

COUNSEL TO BOYS.

Be brisk, energetic, and prompt. The world is full of boys, and men too, who drawl through life, and never decide on any thing for themselves, but just draggle one leg after the other, and let things take their own way. Such people are the dull stuff of the earth. They hardly deserve as much credit as the wooden trees, for the trees do all they can, in merely growing, and bearing only leaves and seeds. But these poor, drawling, dragging boys, do not turn their capacities to profit half as far as they might be turned; they are unprofitable, like a rainy day in harvest time.

Now the brisk, energetic boy will be continually awake, not merely with his bodily eyes, but with his mind and attention, during the hours of business. After he learns what he has to do, he will take a pride in doing it punctually and well, and would be ashamed to be told what he ought to do without telling. The drawling boy loses in five minutes the most important advice; the prompt, wide awake boy never has to be taught twice, but strains hard to make himself up to the mark, as far as possible, out of his own energies. Third-rate boys a[illegible] ways depending on others; but [illegible] boys depend upon themselves, [illegible] the teaching, just enough to [illegible] done, they ask no furthe[illegible] Besides, it is a gl[illegible] get this noble [illegible] and energ[illegible] dred of th[illegible] can hard[illegible] ing to[illegible] the b[illegible] and [illegible] all [illegible] wh[illegible] h[illegible] b[illegible]

[illegible] strict, in the [illegible] on the last day of
[illegible] also to be elected for said
[illegible] rt of Common Pleas, in the place
[illegible] Superior Court, in the place of Aaron
[illegible] embers of Assembly;
[illegible] in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;
[illegible] and County Clerk, in the place of James Con-
[illegible] oner, in the place of William A. Walters;
[illegible] whose terms of service will expire on the last day
[illegible] mber next.
[illegible] Electors throughout the State are also to vote
[illegible] against the adoption of an act entitled "An act
[illegible] blishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed
[illegible] ch 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,
CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, July 21, 1849.

[illegible] he above is published pursuant to the notice of the [illegible] etary of State and the requirements of the Statute [illegible] such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, [illegible]

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I., Chap. 6, Title 3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. Aug 8

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 23, 1849.

CREATION AND REDEMPTION.

Those who wish to justify their disregard of the Bible Sabbath, and their observance of the first day of the week instead, are apt to dwell, with a good deal of earnestness, upon the comparative magnitude of the work of redemption with that of creation. Redemption is, in their opinion, a far greater work than creation, and therefore more worthy to be commemorated by a Sabbath of rest. It is, of course, always taken for granted in this argument, that the work of redemption was finished on the first day of the week by the resurrection of Christ.

It is most surprising, that an argument which has been confuted a thousand times, will yet be brought up, again and again, as though it were unanswerable. It must be, we think, that our opponents do not trouble themselves to notice what is said against them. Why, then, should we say any thing more? It is indeed most discouraging. Nevertheless, we shall continue to speak, for to this work God has called us. This argument, though it is made up of a series of unfounded assumptions, is urged by our opponents with as much assurance as if every line of it were demonstration. We say, it is made up of assumptions. Not one proposition is there in it, from beginning to end, that is not an unauthorized assumption, if we except the naked historical fact, that Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week.

Will those who maintain that redemption is a far greater work than creation, be so good as to inform us just what they mean by the proposition?

1. Do they mean that it is greater in extent? This can not be; for redemption is accomplished upon created objects only. And, according to the good Book, vast numbers will fail of being redeemed at all. "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, which leadeth to destruction; and many there be which go in thereat." Matt. 7:13. But even if the doctrine of Universalism should prove true, it can be no more extensive than creation.

2. Do they mean, that it required a greater exertion of divine power to redeem mankind than to create the world? How often has that figment of a poet's brain,—

> "'T were great to speak a world from naught,
> 'T were greater to redeem;"—

been quoted in this connection. It is evident that the power which redeems mankind is nothing less than infinite. It is equally evident, that the power which created the world was infinite. If both were infinite, and nothing short of infinite, is it not folly to [illegible] than the other?

"Aye," says the objector, "but when God redeemed the world, it cost the blood of his only-begotten Son; but when he created the universe, he merely 'spake and it was done.'" But this argument—if argument it may be called—amounts only to this, that in the work of redemption there was, besides the exertion of divine power, the intervention of human sufferings. It does not prove that the divine power displayed was any greater than that which was displayed in the work of creation. We say, that there was the intervention of human sufferings; for it is generally conceded that the divine nature did not suffer. Now, if the divine nature did not suffer, it is quite out of place to urge the sufferings of Christ as evidence that there was a greater exertion of divine power in the work of redemption, than in the work of creation. As for the power requisite to sustain the humanity of Christ under his sufferings, no one can suppose it to have been greater than what was requisite to create the world; nor can any one reasonably suppose that "his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead," was any more mighty than that which "spoke a world from naught."

3. Do they mean, that the final results of redemption will be greater, and more to the glory of God, than the work of creation? But who can tell whether they will be or not? Is this the only world of intelligent beings that God ever brought into existence? Who can estimate the amount of glory which will accrue to God from his creatures at last, when they shall all be gathered from all parts of the universe before him? But even admitting that the final results of redemption will be more to God's glory than the work [illegible]ation, is it any reason for instituting a [illegible] before those results are accomthat men have a greater [illegible]demption than they true this may it is not true

not true of
[illegible]e good
[illegible]mption
e in-rea-ause
[illegible]om
[illegible]ts
[illegible]t
[illegible]e,

deep as is the interest which believers have in it, because put in actual possession of the liberty wherewith Christ makes free, is not a work of such interest to those who are the servants of sin, as that they ought to commemorate it by a festive institution. Yet the advocates of Sunday say to unbelievers, as well as to believers, "This is the Lord's day; let us rejoice and be glad in it." We think unbelievers would better wait until they have some good reason to rejoice and be glad.

5. Do they mean, that the work of redemption makes a stronger impression upon their minds than the work of creation does? However true this may be with regard to true believers, it can not be affirmed of all men. Upon the unrenewed, the work of redemption makes but a very faint impression. They are a thousand times more enraptured with the contemplation of nature's works. Their devotional feelings—as far as they are capable of [illegible]feelings—are more easily excited, and [illegible] in the contemplation of God as the Creator, than they ever do in the contemplation of the Redeemer. Yet the unrenewed are earnestly exhorted to keep the first day of the week holy, and that too upon the ground of the work of redemption, as if they were as susceptible of being impressed by such an argument as the most devout Christian!

But even admitting that the work of redemption made a stronger impression upon all minds than the work of creation, it would be very illogical thence to infer that it is in reality a greater work. As well might one argue that his restoration from sickness to health was a greater work than the bringing him into existence in the first place. He who is near the gates of death, and is thence brought up by the healing skill of the physician, is very strongly impressed by the circumstance, and perhaps retains a vivid recollection of it all his life. His birth makes no such impression, and he was unconscious of it when it took place. Yet was he "fearfully and wonderfully made," and the "breathing into his nostrils of the breath of life," whereby he was made "a living soul," was as much a display of almighty power, as the redemption of his body from sickness. The redemption of man is his restoration from moral sickness to spiritual health. The subject of it is strongly and vividly impressed, and feels like making it a matter of praise, not only for the remainder of his life, but through all eternity. But surely it does not thence follow that it is the greatest of all works; though it may be, for aught we know. Far be it from us to say that it is not. We do not pretend to be wise on this point. We only say that the fact of its making a stronger impression upon the mind than the work of creation, does not prove it to be greater.

Or, what do our opponents mean, when they say that redemption is a work vastly greater than creation? Will they please tell us? *

FREE SCHOOLS.

At the election in November next, the voters of the State of New York will be called upon to say whether the free-school system shall be extended throughout the commonwealth. Many errors and defects, we know, are alledged against that system; still, after looking at them all, we are convinced that the good immeasurably preponderates over the evil, and here we are decidedly in favor of the free schools. To the general diffusion of knowledge among the people we are indebted for our free institutions, and upon it we must rely for their perpetuation and improvement. Most heartily, therefore, do we second and support a movement which is designed to secure instruction to all, without money and without price.

Strange as it may seem, this measure is likely to meet with very formidable opposition. In a recent number of the Roman Catholic Journal of this city, we find a long article upon the subject, in which the project is represented as oppressive, unconstitutional, irreligious, and impious. The idea of the writer seems to be, that schooling is not desirable without religion—that the State has no business to teach religion—that, therefore, no good can come from free schools supported by the State. According to his theory, the only way to provide for an education worth having, would be to set up schools for each denomination, or, at least, schools for teaching the doctrines of his own denomination. From such views, we of course dissent. We believe that children of the various religious persuasions—Jews, Catholics, Pedo-Baptists, and Baptists—may come together to learn to read, write, and cipher—in short, to pursue all those studies which are necessary to make them good and useful citizens—without being either irreligious or impious. No doubt most parents would prefer to have their children taught by those in whose religious views they could coincide. But this privilege can not always nor even generally be enjoyed. There are very few localities in this State where sectarian schools, sufficient to meet the wants of the people, could be maintained. The effect of the prevalence of the rigid and narrow views to which we have alluded, would be to break up a large part of the schools now in existence, and leave the children to grow up without either mental or religious training. When the question comes [illegible] between having schools free to all classes, [illegible]o schools at all, we trust the good sense [illegible] majority will lead them to decide in [illegible]he schools.

FREE PRESS IN TURKEY.

The surest indications of growing freedom, in a country hitherto enslaved, are those springing from a free press. Below is a paragraph taken from a letter written in Constantinople, and published in an English paper. It is probable that the Grand Vizier's promise to punish "the miserable editors," was a mere Turkish evasion of Russian insolence. The Czar's efforts to suppress freedom of the press in Turkey will sooner or later recoil upon himself.

The cabinet of St. Petersburg express their anger at every step which the Turks make in civilization. The Turkish Government is well aware that a free press is one of the most powerful instruments which can be employed in the regeneration of a country. There are in Constantinople at present two Turkish and two French papers. All four are paid by the Porte, for it would be impossible for the proprietor of a newspaper in Turkey to find a sufficient number of subscribers to pay the expenses of his establishment, and obtain some little remuneration beside. As far as regards the Turkish Government, these newspapers are as free in the expression of their opinions as is any paper in London or Paris. The only restrictions under which they labor, are inflicted upon them by the foreign embassies. But there is no embassy which exerts so severe a censorship over them as the Russian. At the best times the Journals contain little or no news, and are mostly filled with verbose speculations upon the resources of Turkey, and the future glory and power which the fates have in reserve for the Ottoman empire. The other day, however, the two papers written in French, published some news from Hungary, brought by the Austrian courier. These articles alluded to a recent victory obtained by the Hungarians over the Russian troops. The susceptibility of M. de Titoff, the Russian Ambassador, was roused. Surrounded by a body of attaches, he sought the presence of the grand vizier, who promised to punish the miserable editors, and with this assurance the Russian Ambassador and his suite dashed out of the house.

MORALS AND RELIGION IN CALIFORNIA.

The Newark Daily Advertiser has a letter from Rev. T. Dwight Hunt, one of the missionaries sent out from this country to California. He gives some graphic pictures of California morals, manners and prospects. Under date of San Francisco, Ju[illegible], he speaks as follows of the morals of [illegible]people:—

"Contracts are nothing in this land of liberty and gold. Companies bound together by the most solemn ties at home, have hitherto dissolved almost instantly on landing. Men of irreproachable character at home and elsewhere, have often here violated their faith, and given themselves up to the guidance of personal interest. Mining companies have thus far proved a failure. A man who gets his two ounces a day is loth to share with an unsuccessful partner who gets only his ounce or half-ounce. Things are as they are—not as they should be—in this and in almost every other important respect. We see here, if anywhere in the world, the rank growth 'of the root of all evil,' and the abundant and bitter fruit whose poison worketh death in so many souls."

In relation to house-keeping, Mr. Dwight presents the following facts, which show any thing but than an encouraging state of affairs:—

"Mrs. H. arrived here from the Islands on the 4th inst. As I anticipated, the native servant whom she brought with her, under a written contract to remain, has gone to the mines. In Honolulu I paid him $10 per month, he finding himself. Here I paid him $50 per month and found him in everything. So we have no servant, and our experience is not peculiar in this this particular. Our native man did our cooking and washing, and found our wood on the neighboring hills. This was a great saving, but now I must pay $100 per month for wood and washing alone. If we eat or drink or wear anything, we must live beyond our income, for rent, wood and washing are equal to my whole salary—say $200 or more per month. Yet I have no fear that I shall suffer. I never have wanted anything I have needed, for me or mine, and I never expect to want while I am at work in the Lord's vineyard. 'Trust in the Lord and do good, and thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.' And that promise includes wife and children, and mine among the rest."

Of the religious efforts and prospects at San Francisco, Mr. Hunt speaks as follows:—

"What of Zion? Those who love her are increasing. Every day lands among us those who love her walls and gates, and those whose early inquiries are for her welfare. But the ratio of the worldly and vicious to the good is manifold. Still we know that the righteous, if true soldiers, are bold as a lion; one chasing a thousand, and two putting ten thousand to flight. Therefore we hail every pious man as a real accession to our strength, forgetting the ten worldly and wicked who crowd in with him.

Brother Williams (Old School) has commenced separate meetings in the morning and afternoon at the court-room. Our good Baptist brother Wheeler, holds separate meetings morning and evening, at a private house. The Catholics have lately commenced operations. Still my house is filled to overflowing, by which I feel encouraged. An Episcopal service commences next Sunday at a public house, under Rev. Mr. Clark, who came out in the Panama. The Episcopal missionary on his way, has not arrived yet. The Methodists are yet in the background. Rev. Mr. Roberts, however, has recently come down from Oregon to prepare the way for two missionaries who are on their way from the States. He will soon organize here. Brother Wheeler, too, is about to organize a Baptist church. Thus laborers are passing into the field. May the Lord build his own Zion, working by whom he will work."

Rev. L. Baraga, Missionary at the Auce, arrived at the Saut last week, on his way to Detroit, to superintend the printing of his Indian Dictionary and other works.

Ecclesiastical Lawsuit.—The Christian Observer contains the details of a lawsuit recently adjucated in South Carolina, which shows how much trouble a little money will make, when its possession and use is conditional upon maintaining certain ecclesiastical relations. It seems that upon the disruption in 1837, the Charleston Union Presbytery, after a variety of steps, finally declared itself disconnected from the Synod of South Carolina, and has ever since remained alone. The Church on St. John's Island, of which Dr. White is pastor, declared itself independent of Presbyteries. The Synod refused to consider the act of the Presbytery valid, and so recognized the small minority that adhered to the "basis" of 1837, to be the Presbytery; whereupon a minority in the church on St. John's Island brought suit for the church-funds, on the ground that they were the church, as adhering to the Presbytery. The old Presbytery refused to recognize the withdrawal of the St. John's Island church, and the church rescinded their resolution and resumed their relation to the Presbytery. In 1845, the Bench of Chancellors decided against the church, on the ground that by casting off the Presbytery they had "forfeited their Presbyterian character." But the Court of Appeals have at last decided that the rescinding of the resolution of withdrawal has cured the difficulty, and "that the church, being in connection with the Charleston Union Presbytery, is entitled to the funds."

Cumberland Presbyterians.—This body of people, says the Independent, arose in Kentucky, after the great revivals in the early part of this century. They are Presbyterian in discipline, and Anti-Calvinistic in doctrine, but not Unitarians. In 1822 they had 46 ordained ministers, and that year added 2,718 members. In 1827, the ministers had increased to 114, and 4,000 conversions were reckoned. In 1829 they formed a General Assembly. In 1834, they had 9 Synods, 39 Presbyteries, 300 ministers, 50,000 members. The members doubled in the following 10 years. At their General Assembly held in May last, they reported 19 Synods, 70 Presbyteries, 4 weekly papers, one monthly, a Missionary Board, 3 Colleges, a church in Philadelphia, in Cincinnati, in St. Louis, and a Synod in Western Pennsylvania. Five ministers have gone to Oregon. Cumberland University and Cumberland College are about to create an endowment fund to establish, in connection with each institution, a Theological School.

The Jews in Russia.—A Russo-Polish Jew, who has recently arrived in England, informs the editor of the Jewish Chronicle, that the Emperor of Russia has recently ordered prayers to be read in the synagogues for a successful issue of the Russian campaign in Hungary. According to the Jewish custom, the psalms are chaunted on such occasions. "Indeed," said the informant, "we did read psalms, and wept and cried, and, from the inmost recesses of our hearts, invoked salvation from Heaven, not, however, for the defeat of the Hungarians, because we deeply sympathize with those brave men, but for our own redemption from Russian slavery and tyranny." This Russian Jew is one of the hundreds who now emigrate with their wives and families to England and other parts for the purpose of proceeding to the United States of America, their present condition under the Russian government being insupportable.

Triumph of Puseyism.—Dr. Philpots, the militant Bishop of Exeter, England, has just attained a triumph over one of his clergy. Rev. Mr. Gorham, on being presented by the Lord Chancellor with the living of Bam ford Speke, in the diocese of Exeter, was refused institution by the prelate, on account of unsoundness in doctrinals. He took proceedings against the Bishop in the Arches Court. Sir. H. J. Twist, the Judge, gave the cause against the plaintiff, on the ground that the Church of England clearly held the doctrine of Baptismal Generation, and that Mr. Gorham as crearly did not. The case is exciting much attention among the theological people.

The Jews in Hungary.—Some time ago, says the Jewish Chronicle, Kossuth presented himself in the synagogue of Grosswardien, to thank the Jews for their devotion to the national cause. He asked pardon of the people of Israel for the persecutions of the past time, and concluded his address by a solemn promise that, in future, the Jews should enjoy the same rights as the other inhabitants of Hungary.

Return of Missionaries.—Rev. Mr. Youngblood, one of the American missionaries to Borneo, has returned to this country together with his family. Rev. Mr. Steel, who was his co-laborer in Borneo, is on his way home on account of ill health. Rev. Mr. Thompson, of the Syrian Mission, is on his way home in the ship Denmark, from London. He left Messrs. Calhoon, Whiting, Forrester, and others, at the Syrian Mission—all well.

The Baptists in Georgia.—The Griffin Whig has the Minutes of the 29th Anniversary of the Association, held at Athens, May 18. It contains the following particulars: Number of Associations, 56; number of churches in Georgia, 1,105; number of church members in do., 67,067; baptized last year, 5,732; gain of Convention Associations, 3,187; gain to Convention, 5,239; loss of Anti-Mission Associations, 322; gain of "Neutral" Associations, 1,183; gain of United Baptist Associations, 111; total gain in the State, 4,150; number of Ordained Ministers, 583; number of Licentiates, 292

Imploring the Virgin.—The Montreal Gazette of July 25th says that on Sunday afternoon previous, after Vespers, the Roman Catholic population had a solemn procession in honor of the Virgin Mary, the object being to procure her intercession for the cessation of the cholera, which is raging in that city. The collection, it is said, was immense, from fifteen to twenty thousand being present. The procession, in double file, was two hours in passing a given point. A statue of the Virgin Mary was borne in the procession, and there were also choristers, banners, music, &c.

Conference of German Christians.—Several months ago, a meeting of "above five hundred brethren" was held in Luther's Church, at Whittenberg, to consult about and devise means for a closer union of evangelical men throughout Germany. The President of that Conference, in concurrence with a special committee, has issued a call for another meeting, to be held at the same place on the 11th and 12th of September. The following topics are proposed for consideration:—

"1. The organization of congregations. 2. The preservation of Christian schools. 3. The conduct of Christians, especially the clergy, with respect to political affairs. 4. How is the Christian Church to judge the principle of the State in its tendency to become unchristianized? What position is she to maintain? 5. A testimony against the principle of that union which dispenses with a confession of faith in its maintenance. The introduction of an Evangelical Almanac will perhaps be also discussed."

Architecture and Methodism.—The costly church recently erected in Boston by the Unitarian Society under the charge of Rev. Mr. Robbins, has been purchased by two Methodist Societies. One of the Boston papers, in alluding to the circumstance, says:—

"We can hardly realize that the humble Methodists, who have always manifested so much zeal for the conversion of sinners, and so little about the architectural beauty of their religious temples, are now able and willing to occupy a house of worship so expensively constructed that the wealthy Unitarians had to abandon it. Is the stern simplicity of the Methodists to be succeeded by a rage for extravagant churches?"

A City Burial Place.—The Journal of Commerce gives the following account of the way things are done at the Potter's Field, near New York, where the bodies of two thousand victims of Cholera have been buried since the ravages of that disease commenced. How different from the quiet resting places of the dead in the country:—

"A trench about seven feet wide is dug, varying in depth from 12 to 15 feet, as the surface of the under strata of rock happens to vary. The coffins are then packed in, as compactly as possible; some in a perpendicular and some in a horizontal position, as convenience may suit, and lime sprinkled in the intervening spaces to hasten decomposition. The pile generally extends a foot or two above the level of the ground, and is covered with two or three feet of earth brought on with wheelbarrows. Of course it is the favorite bivouac of numberless rats, whose depredations, by burrowing, &c., are liable at times to expose portions of the coffins. But a great improvement has taken place in the condition of the grounds within a day or two, and such a depth of earth placed above the coffins as to render such abuses less frequent."

The Great Peace Convention is now in session at Paris. A letter from Mr. Edmund Fry, published in the Christian Citizen, gives the following plan of proceedings for the English and American delegations:—

"The delegates are all to assemble in London on Monday the 20th of August, and we shall have a sort of social meeting that evening, for the purpose of mutual introductions, and to settle the regulations for the journey, and to announce the programme for the proceedings of the Congress. The party will start by special train, early on the morning of the 21st, and will reach Paris that evening via Folkestone and Boulogne. There will most likely be something in the shape of a jubilee reception at Boulogne, to welcome us to France. The business of Congress will probably occupy the remaining four days of the week, and on Monday, the 27th, the friends of Peace will give a grand soiree in the largest hall that can be obtained in Paris. The bulk of the party will return to London on Tuesday the 28th; but arrangements will be made for those who may wish to remain a few days longer in Paris, to return to London by any train within three weeks, without extra charge."

Time's Ravages.—The N. Y. Observer says that the Rev. Dr. Spring, of the Brick Presbyterian church, opposite the Park, is now the oldest pastor in New-York. Sunday, the 5th inst., was the thirty-ninth anniversary of his ministerial labors; and on that occasion, he preached with his usual energy a discourse of some historical interest. "During these thirty-nine years," he remarked, "the ministers and officers of the churches who then welcomed the speaker to his field of labor, have passed away. There remains not a member of the Presbytery, nor a minister of the Gospel of any denomination in our city, who was in the ministry when I first commenced my labors. Of the elders and deacons of this church who at that time were living, not one remains."

INVASION OF CUBA.

The Washington Republic says that information has been for some time in possession of the Government, to the effect, that bodies of men were in course of being levied and drilled in New Orleans, New York, and other cities of the Union; that money to a considerable amount has been contributed; that arms have been provided and arrangements made on a large scale with a view to some military expedition. Their movements have been conducted with great secresy, and the object of the enterprise has been concealed even from the individuals who have embarked in it. Sufficient evidence, however, has been obtained, to satisfy the President that the design of the expedition is an invasion of Cuba, and that the intervention of the Executive was necessary to preserve our neutral obligations, and to keep unsullied the honor of the American people. Accordingly, he has issued the following Proclamation.

There is reason to believe that an armed expedition is about to be fitted out in the United States with an intention to invade the Island of Cuba, or some of the provinces of Mexico; the best information which the Executive has been able to obtain points to the Island of Cuba as the object of this expedition. It is the duty of the Government to observe the faith of treaties, and to prevent any aggression by our citizens upon the territories of friendly nations.

I have therefore thought it necessary and proper to issue this proclamation to warn all citizens of the United States who shall connect themselves with an enterprise so grossly in violation of our treaty obligations, that they will thereby subject themselves to the heavy penalty denounced against them by our acts of Congress, and will forfeit their claims to the protection of their country. No such persons must expect the interference of this Government in any form in their behalf, no matter to what extremities they may be reduced in consequence of their conduct.

An enterprise to invade the territories of a friendly nation, set on foot and prosecuted within the limits of the United States, is in the highest degree criminal, as tending to endanger the peace, and compromise the honor of this nation, and therefore I expect all good citizens, as they regard our national reputation, as they respect their own laws, and the laws of nations, as they value the blessings of peace and the welfare of their country, to discourage and prevent, by all lawful means, any such enterprise, and I call upon every officer of this Government, civil or military, to use all efforts in his power to arrest for trial and punishment, every such offender against the laws providing for the performance of our sacred obligations to friendly powers.

Given under my hand, the eleventh day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine, and the seventy-fourth of the Independence of the United States. Z. TAYLOR.

J. M. Clayton, Secretary of State.

Union and Harmony Convention.—A Convention, or rather two Conventions, were held at Rome, Oneida County, last week, for the purpose of securing, if possible, a reünion of the Democratic party of New York. The "Free Soil" and "Hunker" parties were each represented by a long list of delegates from every part of the State. After holding separate sessions for three days, and communicating with each other repeatedly by committees, the Conventions could not agree upon the terms of union, and of course had to adjourn without accomplishing the object for which they assembled. The Free-Soilers would not give up the positions they had assumed relative to the extension of slavery and the power of Congress over it. The Hunkers, on the other hand, would not consent to make the free-soil doctrines a political test.

The Cholera seems to be gradually decreasing throughout the country. At Philadelphia on the 17th, there were five cases and one death; on the 19th, no case nor death. At Buffalo, on the 17th, 22 cases and 13 deaths. At Albany, on the same day 6 deaths. At Boston 9 deaths on the 17th, and 20 on the 18th. In Providence, on the same day, five deaths.

In New York, there were 389 deaths by cholera in the week ending Aug. 18th. The following summary of reports by the City Inspector, will show the progress of the disease in New York from its first appearance:—

Deaths in the week ending	June 2	29
	" 9	121
	" 16	145
	" 23	152
	" 30	286
	July 7	317
	" 17	484
	" 21	714
	" 28	692
	Aug. 4	678
	" 11	423
	" 18	389
	Total,	4,429.

Death of a Baptist Minister and Wife by Cholera.—The Western Christian Journal announces the death of Rev. W. Cox and wife, of Milford, under the following circumstances:—They were, on the forenoon of the same day, visiting the sick. Sister C. was seized with cholera, between eleven and twelve o'clock; she was carried home, all the assistance procured that could be, but she died at six o'clock in the evening. Eld. Cox was seized about four o'clock the same day, while waiting upon his wife, and died about ten in the evening. They were buried side by side in the same grave, on the next day, in presence of a large and weeping assembly. The deceased both bore their sufferings with patience, approached their end with calm submission, and died in glorious triumph.

News from our Missionaries.—The last steamer brought overland letters from our Missionaries in China, dated in May. They were then in good health, and more than ever encouraged in their work. The letters will be published soon.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamer Hibernia, which arrived at Boston on Thursday last, European dates one week later have been received.

From England, we learn that the session of Parliament closed on the first day of August. The Queen has gone to visit Ireland. The cholera is rather on the increase. During the week previous to the steamer's sailing there were 793 deaths from cholera in London; for the two days previous, the deaths were 114 and 119.

In France, nothing of special importance is transpiring. The President had been on a tour to the south, but was expected to return to Paris in time to attend a grand review of the army on the 15th of August. There seems every prospect of a most abundant harvast throughout France. In some of the departments the wheat is already cut under the most favorable circumstances.

At Rome, things remain as at last advices. The French have restored the government of the Pope, but the Pope himself does not seem inclined to return to the Vatican on the conditions proposed. He has, however, issued an address to the inhabitants of the Roman territories, in which he promises to appoint a Commission which will direct the Government of the State. Meanwhile, a spirit-stirring proclamation has been addressed to the Romans by Mazzini, in which he recommends them to endure, with constancy and firmness, the calamity of foreign intervention which smites them at present, and not to give way to discouragement. He calls upon the muncipalities to repeat, with firmness, that they adhere voluntarily to the Republican form and to the abolition of the temporal power of the Pope, and that they consider every Government illegal which has not been freely approved by the people, and he reminds them that it is impossible to imprison a whole nation.

The struggle between the Hungarians and the Austrians is still going on. The Hungarians continue successful. They have defeated and outmaneuvered the enemy, placed the Austrians in peril, and cut off the Russians from the base of operations. The three great generals are now in communication with each other, and ready to act together if necessary. Their respective positions are rendered secure by the nature of the country, while there is nothing to prevent their emerging from their fastnesses when occasion presents itself. The whole population serve them with heart and hand, bring them food, horses, and intelligence of the enemy's movements.

The enthusiasm of the Magyars increases daily. The ecclesiastics cause to be carried before them a colossal red sword, a red cross, and a large flag, with the inscription, "Death to the Russians and Austrians!" on it, in black letters. These processions greatly excite the people. The seat of the Magyar Government is at Szekozard and Baja, in a steamboat, which ascends or descends the river as circumstances may require, and which is provided with cannon for its defense.

Advices from Constantinople state that an army of 80,000 men is ordered to assemble on the Hungarian frontier to protect the Turkish territory and to disarm any who may be driven across the frontier.

A traveler from St. Petersburg, Russia, states that a conspiracy has been discovered in that capital, and that the Privy Councillor Piotros Zinsk was at the head of it; 280 persons had been arrested. Gens. d'armes, with warrants of arrest, have been sent to Moscow and other places. The intentions of the conspirators were to dethrone the reigning dynasty and to proclaim a Republic. A Provisional Government was already formed. The conspiracy had ramifications all over the Empire, and many officials had joined in it. Attempts were also made to seduce the Imperial Guard, many of whom had been arrested. A secrerary of Count Orloff, who managed to gain the confidence of the Chiefs, divulged the secret.

The ex-King of Sardinia, Charles Albert, died, after intense suffering, on the 28th of July. His body was embalmed, and placed in the cathedral, to await the arrival of a steamer appointed to take his remains to Genoa. On his death becoming known, the church-bells of Oporto were tolled, minute-guns were fired, and the public offices were ordered to be closed for three days. A general mourning was likewise directed, to last for eight days, as an additional mark of respect to the deceased.

Riot and Sacrilege.—Some respectable Jewish people, finding New-York City too crowded for the purposes of burial, recently ~~purchased a tract of land for that~~ purpose near East-New York, L. I., and consequently have proceeded, as was their right, to inter there. On Thursday afternoon, however, some Dutch Catholic inhabitants of East New-York expressed a determination not to allow the Israelites to bury there, and, as a funeral was expected there that afternoon, large numbers of those ignorant men congregated for the purpose of preventing the exercise of the burial rights, if necessary by force. Accordingly, when the corpse arrived, they commenced the war with stones, dirt, muskets, clubs, and other missiles, driving the persons assembled away, injuring many of the Jewish persuasion very severely. The upshot of the whole affair was that the aggressive party vanquished the enemy, and compelled them to bury the corpse at Cypress Hills. Now this affair is an outrage upon the established usages, laws and institutions of our free and enlightened country; and such a high-handed measure on the part of the rioters should be met by the authorities with a determination to allow the full extent of the law to those engaged in it. The Constitution of the United States rightly permits the free tolerance of all religions, and as such is the case, the injured parties in this transaction have the unquestionable right to invoke the protection of the highest authorities. It may not generally be known, but the rites of burial among the Jews are considered of the utmost importance and consequence, their religious laws strictly enforcing decent and proper interment. As in this instance no real offense was given by the Israelites, the crime resting upon the rioters is still more increased. [Tribune.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY ABOUT PEAT.

A discovery has been made in Ireland which is likely to be more important than the discovery of gold in California will be to the United States of America. According to a statement by the O'Gorman Mahon, the peat or "turf" of the Irish bogs is capable of being converted by a cheap and simple process, into a variety of matters of the utmost value. One-fourth of Ireland is bog; therefore, one-fourth of Ireland is composed, on the showing of chemistry and The O'Gorman Mahon, of the carbon of ammonia, soda, vinegar, naptha, candles, camphene oil, common oil, gas and ashes. Only think of 50 square miles of candles lying under the feet for the picking up, the ocean of oil of that dimensions, or the volume of gas—to say nothing of the vinegar.

The interest of this discussion was derived from the fact that Lord Ashley bore testimony to the integrity of the patentee—a Mr. Owen. It is a discovery which, if it be truly represented, must open in the United Kingdom mines of wealth worth a thousand Californias—mines of wealth having these extraordinary properties, that all the cost of exploring them will be clear gain to the people, while the place from which the treasure is to be withdrawn will be enriched by its removal.

Lord Ashley's statement of the amount of valuable materials into which 100 tuns of peat was convertible—100 tuns of peat, which cost £8, and the labor of converting it about £8 more, contained:—

Carbon of ammonia	2,602 lbs	value	£32 10 2
Soda	2,118 lbs		8 16 6
Vinegar	600 lbs		7 10 0
Naptha	30 gals		7 10 0
Candles	600 lbs		17 10 0
Camphene oil	600 lbs		5 10 0
Common oil	800 lbs		3 6 8
Gas			8 0 0
Ashes			1 13 4
Total,			£91 16 8

Mr Owen, he said, had tried this experiment not merely on 100 tuns, but on thousands of tuns of peat during the whole of the last twelve months. He had expended his capital on it and received his remuneration, and was ready to stake his character and fortune on the issue. He (Lord Ashley) wished to add, that after the peat was cleared away the the soil beneath was found fruitful beyond all description, because it was absolutely saturated with ammonia; and consequently not only would the country be enriched by the conversion of the peat into valuable materials, but the soil itself would afterwards be found in a far more cultivatable condition.

Loss of a Mail Steamer.—The mail steamer Kestrel, one of the fine new steamers recently built in Scotland, for the purpose of carrying the mails between Halifax and Newfoundland, was lost at St. Shott's, N. F., in a thick fog, on Sunday night, the 22d ult.

The passengers and crew, by great exertions, saved themselves by means of a rope, to which a handspike had been tied, and thrown between some projecting rocks, where it held fast, and by climbing the rope thus fastened, they succeeded in gaining the top of the rocks. Three of the passengers, Mr. and Mrs. Brian, with Mrs. Snook and two seamen, left the vessel shortly after she struck, in one of the boats, and after beating about all night exposed to much danger, they landed on the following morning in an exhausted state. The mail-bags were fortunately rescued, and immediately forwarded to St. John.

A New Question for the Judges.—A gentleman has commenced a suit for assault and battety and false imprisonment against the proprietors of one of the opposition evening boats, between New-York and Albany. The facts are as follcws:—The boat advertised to carry passengers for 25 cents to Albany, and land at intermediate places. The plaintiff bought a ticket for Albany, but wishing to land at Poughkeepsie, he attempted to do so, offering at the same time his ticket. He was stopped and told he must pay 25 cents more. He refused to do it, and was carried to Albany, where he was obliged to remain 24 hours, as it was Sunday.

An Afflicted Place.—The Pittsburg Gazette of the 17th, says: There were 38 cases of Cholera in Birmingham yesterday. The greatest consternation prevails. Whole families have been carried off, and a great number of the inhabitants are leaving the town. The disease is still confined to the small spot where it broke out, in the neighborhood of several slaughter houses, and if it proceeds much further, there will be no person left for it to attack. Ten of the cases have died, and from 10 to 15 others are in the state of collapse. Four have been attacked in one family, and none of them were expected to survive when we left. The state of affairs in this locality beggars description.

Death from Fright.—The following cause of death was reported at the interment office, Boston. It appears that some days ago, a boy, named Joseph Kennedy, six years of age, while sitting in the kitchen at home, received a severe shock of fright from a cat, which had been shut out, suddenly leaping through a pane of glass into the room, shivering the glass. The boy immediately sickened and died, and, as the physician pronounced, solely from the effects of the shock.

Travel Cheapened.—A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press gives the following to show the great difference in the present expense of travel compared with what it was 12 years since. In 1837, the fare from Chicago to Troy was $74 50.

Stage fare from Chicago to Detroit		$26 75
" " "	Detroit to Buffalo	22 50
" " "	Buffalo to Troy	15 25

The present fare by steamboat and railroad between Albany and Chicago is about $17.

The College of Physicians, Montreal, an incorporated body, with special privileges, is prosecuting apothecaries and others for practicing physic without a license. An apothecary must not, as it appears, give advice to a customer calling for a dose of medicine, or he will be fined $20!

Home for the Friendless.—This excellent institution, which is now in successful operation in the new building in East Thirtieth Street, between Fourth and Madison Avenues, N. Y., has had its resources largely drawn upon by the number of children made parentless and helpless by the cholera. There are at present, besides 20 adults, 70 orphan children enjoying the benefits of this home. Among them are seven or eight entire families of from two to six each. These orphans are adopted into Christian families when good opportunities present, and their prospects for the future are sometimes made very flattering. A morning paper says a young girl who was taken into the institution from the street, where she was accustomed to sell loco-foco matches, was received as a daughter by a wealthy gentleman residing in North Stonington, Conn., and will be the heiress of a large property. Another, a mere lad, who had recently arrived in this country from Ireland, where he was employed in the coal mines, is now with a wealthy farmer in New-Jersey, and promises to be a respectable and useful man. A third, who was found in circumstances of great misery, lying on a filthy cot beside the body of its dead mother, in a low hovel, is now the adopted daughter of a Mrs. Elliot, of Williamsburg, and is very much esteemed by all of a large circle of relatives. These are a few of almost numberless instances, where children have been raised from degradation to respectability, and put in the way of becoming valuable members of the community, who, but for the existence of this Society, would in all probability have been vagrants. [N. Y. Rec.

Accident on the Sabbath.—Levi Cook, a colored laborer, was killed, and three white plasterers were badly wounded, while engaged in plastering the interior of a brick house in Camden, N. J., on Saturday afternoon. This accident was caused by the prostration of the building, owing to the bad construction of the foundation. The Coroner of Camden returned a verdict that the accident occurred in consequence of shameful neglect on the part of the workmen who built the cellar wall.

SUMMARY.

The ship Sheridan, Capt. Cornish, which arrived at Quarantine last week from Liverpool, lost on the voyage 31 of her steerage passengers and seamen by Cholera. The Cholera broke out among the crew on the 7th of August. For the first eight days, from 8 to 10 new cases and from 3 to 5 deaths occurred daily. For eight days in succession, out of 22 seamen, only 4 could be mustered on a watch; 80 cases and 31 deaths have occurred since the ship sailed.

The Southern Christian Advocate says that Rev. Dr. Bascom, a distinguished clergyman of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is recovering from an attack of Cholera, which lasted twenty-one days, and during which he was twice supposed to be beyond recovery. On the 30th of July he was able to walk about his chamber, but is so much prostrated that his physicians have prohibited him any mental labor.

The company formed in Boston for the purpose of raising the relics of the British brig Plumper, are likely to be successful. They have been to work but a short time, and have already obtained quite an amount of specie, together with sundry other valuable articles. The Plumper was lost near Point Lepreaux, during the last war with Great Britain, and contained specie to the amount of $175,000, for the purpose of paying off soldiers.

Since the Camden and Amboy, and Philadelphia and New Brunswick Railroads have been used, now seventeen years, more than 5,000,000 passengers have been transported upon them. During that time the deaths from collisions or the cars running off the track have not exceeded ten, and the injuries to persons who did not die in consequence thereof, have not exceeded fifty.

The body of a little son of Mr. Washington Alexander, of Woodstock, Va., was found recently in the woods within a few miles of his house, having starved to death. By the side of the emaciated remains of the little sufferer, was found, also dead, a faithful dog which had accompanied him in his wanderings.

Lydia Allen, sister of the late gallant Commodore McDonough, died in the Almshouse of Newcastle county, Del., on the 31st ult., of Cholera. She was a native of that county, and had been confined in the Almshouse during a period of more than twenty years, as a lunatic.

Hon. Stephen Longfellow, father of the poet, died at his residence in Portland, Me., on Thursday evening, 2d inst., at the age of 73 years. Mr. Longfellow was a distinguished lawyer, a Federalist of the old school, and a member of the Hartford Convention. He was a member of Congress some twenty-five years ago.

Several of the Portuguese Refugees, under the care of the Protestant Union, have suffered from Cholera. Only one has died, and the rest are doing well. The man who died fell a victim, as we are told, to his love of baked beans and vinegar—too strong a diet for Cholera time.

It will be seen from the following return, of mortality in Cincinnati, for the seven weeks ending 6th inst., that during that brief period nearly a twentieth of the whole population died. Deaths from all causes, 568, 940, 2,022, 950, 512, 285, 211; total 4,488.

A female owner of human beings visited Newburyport a few days since with what she calls "a piece of property." The Union says the "property" has become more partial to liberty than slavery, and hence the Virginia "lady" "has been deprived of her services."

The Bangor Whig says that intelligence has been received that the brig Belfast, Capt. Jordan, has been sold at California for $40,000. The brig was ten years old, cost $8,000, and is about 200 tons. The captain was retained at $600 a month.

A gentleman from Racine Co. Wis., says that the Cholera has raged with considerable severity in the Norwegian settlements in that county; some 40 deaths having occurred from that disease in the town of Norway. The disease there, as elsewhere, seems to be abating rapidly.

Counterfeit 5s on the New Haven Bank—a very close imitation of the genuine—have made their appearance. Vignette, a spread eagle, ships, &c., a miniature picture of the "first Sabbath in Quinnipiack" on the right end. In the counterfeit the head of the eagle is quite indistinct, while in the genuine it is plain. The ship, too, on the left of the eagle, is faint in the counterfeit. Those which we have seen were dated Oct. 4, 1847, as are also a large portion of the genuine fives.

Nine States hold their elections the present month; Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Iowa, Texas, Missouri, and North Carolina, and Rhode Island, to fill a vacancy in Congress. Missouri is to elect the Legislature which will decide as to Col. Benton's return to the Senate.

Mrs. Ann Northrop, upwards of 80 years of age, a few days since walked from her residence in Milford, Ct., to the house of a friend in Humphreyville, and returned again the same day, having walked a distance of twenty-six miles, besides knitting, during her visit to the "Ville," two or three inches in length of a stocking!

The Mayor of Boston has attempted to mediate between the tailors, now on a strike, and their employers. His reason for interfering is, that if the quarrel is not settled, many families will become dependent on the public.

Augustus Littlejohn, the celebrated temperance lecturer, has recently been addressing the people of Eagleville, Waukeesha county, Wisconsin, on the virtues of temperance; he has also lectured at Rochester, Troy, and Waterford, in the same State.

Mr. R. Hunt, at the Royal Institution, London, states that a friend of his has succeeded in obtaining a minute though weighable portion of gold from a quantity of the petals of the blue violet.

A female college is about to be established in Cincinnati. The Gazette says that a large and beautiful edifice has been erected for the purpose on Pleasant Hill, a most delightful and healthy position.

A lad, son of Rev. Dr. Dwight of Portland, about 12 years of age, had his thigh broken in two places, and was otherwise injured, at a Sunday-school pic-nic at North Yarmouth, Me., on Wednesday.

Omnibus fare has been reduced in Philadelphia from six to three cents, in consequence of the establishment of a new line by some of the drivers formerly in the employ of the old.

[illegible]n Croghan, proprietor of the Mammo[illegible]ave, Kentucky, is deceased. Under his will the houses and grounds are to be kept open for visitors.

The value of the real and personal estate of New-Bedford, as per Assessors' books, is $17,237,000. A division of property would give each householder a handsome fortune.

The number of acres of public lands sold at Milwaukie in July was 5,420 for cash and 12,025 for land warrants.

The Hudson river was so low at Castleton, on the 31st ult., that fifty steamboats, barges and other vessels were unable to get along.

Three little girls were drowned at Boston, Aug. 13. They were tilted from a pile of boards, and fell into the river.

Ex-President Martin Van Buren, accompanied by his son and niece, are at present at Brattleboro, Vermont.

St. Croix County, Wisconsin, has been organized. Willow River is the county seat.

The cholera first made its appearance in Chicago on the 28th of April. The total number of deaths up to August 3, was 495.

The total number of deaths by Cholera at Sandusky, from July 9 to August 7, was 300—averaging over 17 per day.

The present fare through from New Orleans is $5 to Mobile, $10 to Montgomery, $26 to Charleston, $20 to Baltimore, $3 to Philadelphia, and $4 to New York—total $96.

General Avezzana, the late Minister of War at Rome, has arrived in New York. Preparations are making by the Italians to give to the patriotic General a national banquet.

Mr. Wise, a Virginia farmer, has recently succeeded in covering the heads of several gentlemen of Richmond, some of whom had been bald for many years. He causes the new hair to appear in from four to nine days.

A letter from South Rapid, dated July 27, states that a half-breed Indian set fire to the store of Mr. Rice. The store contained a large quantity of goods, and fifty kegs of gunpowder. The building was blown completely to atoms, and every thing destroyed.

Doctor Newton, of Cincinnati, cut out the eye and removed the eyelids of a patient who was under the influence of chloroform when the operation was performed, and felt no pain.

The Connecticut river is said to be lower this season than it has been, except once, in a period of 130 years. The exception was in 1816, when it was ten inches lower.

There is a white robin in possession of Wm. Rea, of Cambridge, Md. It was taken from a nest in which the other fledglings were of the natural color.

A drunken man named Eisenbise, killed a man named Wright, at Lewiston, Pa., on the 7th inst. A reward of $50 is offered for his apprehension.

Upwards of eight hundred persons are annually destroyed by the accidents incident to the working of the mines of England.

Captain Dan Drake Henrie whose hairbreadth escapes from the Mexicans, when taken prisoner with C. M. Clay, and others, who was the theme of admiration, died recently at the Hospital of the Sisters of Charity in St. Louis.

A tornado passed over a portion of Jefferson County, Va., on the 10th inst.

Mrs. Alexander Hamilton has become a permanent resident at Washington, and has taken a house on Capital Hill. She is in her 92d year, has seen every President inaugurated, and retains a vivid remembrance of the past, and a lively interest in all the moral and political questions of the day.

The Lake Superior News, of Aug. 6, gives the following as the amount of copper shipped from that port this season: "Cliff Mine, 424 tons, 1,224 lbs.; Copper Falls, 100 tons, 939 lbs.; Lac La Belle, 11 tons, 89 lbs.; Minnesota Co. 10 tons, 1,140 lbs.

A late fire in Cleveland destroyed a costly Episcopal Church, called St. Paul's, three dwellings, and two barns. The ravages of the fire were permitted to extend by the firemen getting into several quarrels, and stopping their apparatus to settle them.

One day last week, says the London Standard of Freedom, some idle, mischievous thieves, closed the valve and stole the spindles of the tank to the spring that supplies Bristol with water, which for a whole day left the inhabitants without water.

A block of granite was lately blown out at the Dartmoor works, in England, the length of which was 30 feet, breadth 23 feet, height 24 feet; cubical contents 16,560 feet, and it weighs no less than 1380 tons.

The Banffshire Journal mentions a lad of thirteen, named John Livingstone, of Sunderland, as preaching sermons, and conducting a regular service, and states that he preached his first sermon at 6½ years of age.

Tomatoes are said to be wholesome, cholera or no cholera. They are good for the blood.

New York Markets—Monday, Aug. 20.

Ashes—Steady at $6 for both kinds.

Flour and Meal—Flour has advanced within a week; common State and mixed Western sells at 5 44 a 5 50; strait State and favorite Western 5 50 a 5 75; pure Genesee 5 50 a 5 69. Meal is scarce, Jersey sold for 3 31 a 3 47. Rye Flour 3 18 a 3 31.

Grain—Wheat is held firmly; 95 a 1 05 for Upper Lake; 1 10 a 1 16 for Ohio; and 1 25 a 1 30 for pure Genesee. Rye 61c. Oats 30 a 40c for Canal, and 35 for Jersey. Corn 63 a 64c for yellow, 62 a 63 for mixed.

Provisions—Pork 9 00 for prime, 10 75 for mess. Beef 13 50 a 14 00 for mess and prime. Butter 7 a 11c for Ohio, 10 a 14c for Western. Cheese 2 a 7c.

Wool is inactive, the manufacturers holding back in consequence of the relative prices of the raw material and the manufactured article. Common bags 28c; ¾ blood 38c; Merino 35c; Saxony 39c. The market has an upward tendency. Lambs pulled, for which there is a regular and steady demand, sells at 27 a 29c.

DIED,

In Hartsville, Allegany Co., N. Y., August 9th, Wid. Hannah Cornwell, mother of Eld. Hiram Cornwell, in the 82d year of her age. This mother in Israel—for such she was—was a member of the First-day Baptist Church in Hartsville, and has no doubt exchanged a world of suffering for one of joy and peace. In this life she was most deeply afflicted, not having been able to walk for the last thirty years, and having been wholly bereft of her eyesight for more than thirty-five years. Yet all this she bore with true Christian patience. "Blessed" indeed are such dead "that die in the Lord."

N. V. H.

At his residence in Piscataway, N. J., on the evening of the 16th inst, at 8 o'clock, of Cholera, Deacon Lewis Titsworth, aged 76 years on the 7th of May last. Notwithstanding he had been somewhat indisposed for a few days, Deacon Titsworth took his place and asked a blessing at the table in the morning, ate a light breakfast, went out about his premises, and returned to his house about 8 o'clock. Feeling more unwell, he laid down, and was soon discovered by his wife and family to be in a spasm and unable to help himself. In spite of all that could be done for him from that time he sunk rapidly into the arms of death. When, however, it was seen by the family, that he was dangerously ill, one of his daughters inquired of him as to the state of his mind in view of his sickness and the prospect of death. He deliberately informed her, that he felt calm, without fear, and resigned. He soon became unable to talk much, but further expressed his resignation to others who inquired how he felt. He had his reason, and after his speech was gone, as long as his state of mind could be ascertained by signs, it appeared to continue calm; and he died quietly and peacefully. The subject of this notice had been a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in the town where he resided fifty years last April; and upwards of forty years a prominent acting Deacon in said church. His life and valuable services in the Church and in behalf of the cause of God simultaneously terminated; that is, he was in actual service until he was commanded away from his toil. But besides the Church, he has left a widow, the mother of ten children, who are all now living, and heads of familiesand a large circle of other relations, to sorrow midst comforts and the pleasures of hope.

L. C.

In Otselic, Chenango Co., N. Y., of consumption, Ann Eliza, daughter of Henry and Glycera Tallett, aged 7 years and 5 months.

"I take these little lambs, said he,
And lay them on my breast;
Protection they shall find in me,
In me be ever blest."

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Genesee—		Richburg—
J. A. Langworthy	$5 00	Wm. M. Truman	$5 00
Joel Crandall	5 00
Jared Maxson	5 00	Alfred—
Palermo Lackey	5 00	Elisha Potter	10 00
Geo. Potter, Jr.	5 00	N. V. Hull	5 00
Fanny Gibbs	5 00	Silas Stillman	5 00
Geo. Irish	5 00	Geo. W. Allen	5.00
Alonzo Coon	5 00
David E. Bliss	5 00	New York—
Joseph Boss	5 00	E. G. Champlin	5 00
Ezekiel Crandall	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

D. E. Maxson, Alfred,	$2 00	to vol. 6	No. 52
Luke Green, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
David Rose, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Isaac Fenner, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Silas Stillman, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
David Stillman, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Nathan Lanphear, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. R. Hartshorn, "	2 00	" 7	" 6
M. Burdick, Independence,	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. C. Burdick, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. C. Green, "	2 00	" 7	" 6
N. S. Ennis, Little Genesee,	2 00	" 7	" 6
G. G. Hamilton, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Ezekiel Crandall, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Alfred Barber, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Jos. Boss, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
S. P. Crandall, Nile,	50	" 6	" 13
B. Babcock, Friendship,	1 00	" 6	" 26
J. B. Cottrell, Richburg,	2 00	" 6	" 52
Jos. Maxson, Bolivar,	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. I. Crandall, Portville,	50	" 6	" 13
S. B. Main, "	50	" 6	" 13
A. B. Crandall, "	50	" 6	" 26
E. P. Crandall, West Genesee,	2 00	" 6	" 52
D. Babcock, Rock Prairie, Wis.	2 00	" 6	" 52
Wm. Dunn, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. M. Titsworth, "	2 00	" 6	" 52
K. Burdick, Dundaff, Pa.,	50	" 6	" 13
L. G. Baldwin, Milton, Wis.,	2 00	" 7	" 13
John Russell,	1 00	" 6	" 33

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

A. R. Bennett, Lowell,	$3 00	to vol. 5	No. 52
K. Burdick, Pa.	50	" 5	" 52
Elisha Potter, Alfred,	50	" 5	" 52
D. E. Maxson, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
Nathan Williams, "	5 00	" 3	" 52
E. Johnson, Nile,	2 00	" 5	" 52
Avery Lanphear, "	1 50	" 5	" 52
S. P. Crandall, "	50	" 5	" 52
Silas Burdick, Portville,	1 00	" 5	" 52
Wm. S. Coon, "	1 50	" 5	" 52
R. Coon's est., West Genesee,	8 00	" 4	" 52
Wid. R. Coon, "	2 00	" 5	" 52
C. M. Crandall, "	1 00	" 5	" 52
E. C. Green, Ceres, Pa.	3 00	" 5	" 52

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.

Officers.

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.

Vice Pres.
NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.

Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.
Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.
Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.

Co-Trustees,
George Greenman, of Mystic, Ct.
John D. Titsworth, of Plainfield N. J
Wm. M. Rogers, of Brooklyn, L. I.
Isaac D. Titsworth, of Shiloh, N. J.

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed to preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the session.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution was passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad; a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, staterooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. Passenger Trains Up—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Passenger Trains Down—Leave White House at 5½ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M., Somerville 4¼ A. M., Plainfield 5½ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. Returning—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

NEW LINE FOR SCHOOLEY'S MOUNTAIN.

Splendid stages will leave for the Mountain on the arrival of the 9 o'clock train from New York at White House. This route has less staging than any other.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, Albany, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled, "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

Sheriff's Office, New York, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, [illegible]

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the [illegible] and then hand in their bills for advertising the [illegible] that they may be laid before the Board of [illegible] and passed for payment. See Revised [illegible] Chap. 6, Title3, Article 3, Part I., Page [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

GOLD DIGGING, &c.

The recent arrival from California brought lots of letters, extracts from which are plenty in all tbe papers. We copy a few paragraphs from the Tribune, as samples.

From a Letter of J. J. G.

Almost every adventurer is disappointed, upon his arrival at the "diggins," to learn that to dig is to dig. There is gold enough among the tributaries of the San Joaquin and Sacramento, but multitudes have thrown up the pick-axe in disgust, for labor is irksome and the heat intolerable. Fevers of various forms prevail upon all the rivers and streams. I would advise those who embark for California with the intention of mining, to come provided with nine lives a man, and each life a temperate one. Good teams are worth from $600 to $1,000, at Sutter's, and transportation to the mines, from 60 to 70 cents per lb. Flour worth $4 to $6 per bbl. here. Fresh beef 15 cents per lb. Prime Pork $14 per bbl. Prices of articles of subsistence at the mines are about double the prices here. Lots in this city (San Francisco,) are selling at $500 per foot; ground rents are enormous, and a house as large as one of those diminutive edifices erected in the States for the purpose of smoking hams for one farm house, will rent from $500 to $600 per month. Cargoes are discharged and landed for $10 a ton. A single trunk cannot be stored for less than $3 a month. $80,000 a year has been offered for the use of one room, and refused. San Francisco is the Paradise of gamblers; hundreds of thousands are staked and lost and won every day.

From a Letter of J. H. K.

Statements have gone to the States, ere this, confirming the rumors rife on my leaving New York, of the richness of the mines and their exhaustless resources; but from my short experience I cannot add my conviction to those wild and exaggerated reports. Undoubtedly there are immense resources of gold in the valley and tributaries of the San Joaquin (San Wakeen) and Sacramento, but it requires the most severe labor to extract any large quantity. Much, too, depends upon luck. A man may stumble on a mass sufficient to enrich him for life; but these cases are of very rare occurrence, and the general average of miners is half an ounce per day for each man.

Villages are springing up in every part of the mines, and gambling and trading constitute the business. The Americans are becoming very jealous of the foreigners working the mines, and you will undoubtedly hear of serious difficulties between them. The mines to a new comer present a scene of busy life, of which the world has never before offered a parallel. Such a motly group was never before congregated. Casting aside all distinctions, each individual applies every energy to the task, upheaves the stones and soil, seeming to enjoy the labor which has ever been considered repulsive and degrading. You may see the pale and cadaverous clerk of our cities, toiling beside the hardy Western pioneer; the ship captain and common sailor; army officers and common soldiers; professional Bodway bloods, and professional Water-st. loafers; the grey-haired man, and the juvenile adventurer; the Southern slave-holder beside the swarthy African, now his equal; the scholar and law expounder, beside the wild and naked savage; the representative of every South American nation on the Pacific coast; the repulsive Mexican Peon, and the demi-savage of the Sandwich Islands—all congregated here to worship one common idol, GOLD. To such as believe that the Creator designed man for nobler aims, for a more exalted purpose than that of a mere gold-getting animal, this world's convention of gold worshipers furnishes profitable food for contemplation —to reflect upon the causes which have conspired to tear men from their homes, friends, and the industrial pursuits of life, to plunge into this steeple-chase for gold, to the sacrifice of every comfort of social life, the jeopardy of health, and the banishment from all the endearing associations which render life desirable or even tolerable.

San Francisco is a God-forsaken place, nearly given over to gamblers, professional idlers and tipplers. They seem "a band of outcasts, met in brotherhood of woe." Daily arrivals of fancy and sporting men, pugilists, genteel loafers and abandoned women from the States, are rapidly swelling their ranks.

DANIEL BOON'S COURTSHIP.

In the immediate neighborhood of his father's new settlement, on the river Yadkin, another adventurer, named Bryan, soon made his appearance, and planted himself upon a beautiful spot, washed on one side by a lovely mountain stream, near which had been the favorite hunting ground of the youngsportsman. On a certain evening, Boon engaged a friend to meet him at that spot, for the purpose of "fire hunt." In this wild sport, one of the parties usually rides through the forest, with a pine torch borne on high, which shedding a glaring light through the gloomy precincts, so dazzles the eyes of the deers, that the other party, who is on foot, shoots the game between the eyes, while the bewildered animal is staring at the blaze. Boon's companion was to bear the torch, and accordingly appeared on the field, and commenced the usual round.

They had not proceeded far, when Boon gave the concerted signal to keep the light stationary. The horseman obeyed, and waited in momentary expectation of hearing the sharp and fatal report of his friend's rifle. Not hearing it, however, he turned his horse to ascertain the cause of the unwonted delay, when he saw his friend drop his rifle, and set off in pursuit of some shadowy object, over bush and briar, fence and field.

When Boon gave the signal to his friend, he indeed saw the flame of the torch reflected by a pair of brilliant eyes, and he immediately cocked his gun and brought it to his eye; but instead of standing stupified at the light, to be shot at, the supposed fawn wheeled precipitately and fled. During this unusual movement, Boon caught a glimpse of the flowing folds of a petticoat, dropped his rifle, and made chase after his game. So intense had been his interest in the pursuit, that he was little less surprised than his new neighbor, Mr. Bryan, when he found himself standing in the doorway, having driven the object of his chase into the paternal arms.

Boon's embarrassment and surprise may easily be imagined, when he saw the consternation of her father, and the panting terror of his beautiful daughter, who had scarcely turned her sixteenth summer, and whose lustrous ringlets were flying about her face, neck, and palpitating bosom, in the richest contrast of light and shade.

Strange as it may appear in our hearty backwoodsman, he became agitated in his turn; with all the stern and rugged qualities of his nature, he was taken captive by a maiden's charms. And what was no less strange, the blushing Hope, who had run into her father's arms, declaring that she was pursed by a panther, now perceived that he was not such a frightful animal as her first impression in the dark had led her to suppose.

Indeed, Boon was at that time just in the first flush of youthful vigor, his person straight, and well-proportioned, and the whole appearance of the man presenting such a hero to the eye of the unsophisticated girl, as her imagination was likely to create in that remote and secluded scene; in short, they loved naturally, and Miss Rebecca Bryan, in a very short time, became Mrs. Boon.

A VIGOROUS RACE.

Within the limits of the Hudson Bay Company, there resides a class of men who, ground down by the tyranny of that huge monopoly, seek to place themselves under the protection of the United States. These men are usually known as the Red River half-breeds. They are generally speaking of mixed Indian, English, Scotch or French blood. Brought up from earliest youth to feel that their subsistence will depend upon their skill as horsemen and hunters, they accustom themselves to every exercise and privation which can tend to harden their muscles and prepare them for their vocation. As a matter of course, the whole body of these hunters are capital horsemen, and amazingly expert in the use of fire-arms. Depending entirely upon the Hudson Bay Company for ammunition and arms, they must submit to any and all the arbitrary rules imposed upon them, and they are heartily tired of these exactions.

Twice each year, these hunters, four or five hundred in number, start for the American territories, after the buffalo, with from a thousand to twelve hundred carts, drawn by horses or oxen, which are driven by the women and children. The men are governed by fixed rules while at the hunt, which must not be infringed under severe penalties. They all leave the camp together, with the exception of a few who are left as a guard; and when a cerne or surround of buffalo has taken place, the women and children are sent for to assist in butchering, and drying the meat of the slain animals. Each cart will contain the pemican (or dried meat, pounded and melted tallow poured over it,) of ten buffaloes; so that the slaughter of these animals may be estimated at upward of twenty thousand annually. The meat thus prepared is purchased at a small price by the Hudson Bay Company, and is used to provision the inland trading posts. Attempt has on one occasion been made to prevent the incursions of these people within our boundaries, but without effect. Many of these mixed bloods desire now to remove to Pembina, which is on the American side of the line, and settle there, if permission can be obtained from our government. They would constitute a formidable and efficient defense to our northern frontier in case of Indian disturbances, as they are much feared by all the different tribes. The British settlement at Red River in the vicinity of Fort Gary numbers about five thousand souls.

INTERESTING AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENTS.

Some recent experiments in wheat and flour go to prove that both contain water, and that the quantity is more in cold countries than in warm. In Alsaco, from 16 to 20 per cent. In England, from 14 to 17 per cent. In the United States, from 12 to 14 per cent. In Africa and Sicily, from 9 to 11 per cent. This accounts for the fact that the same weight of Southern flour yields more bread than the Northern. English wheat yields 13 pounds more to the quarter than the Scotch. Alabama flour, it is said, yields 20 per cent. more than Cincinnati. And in general, American flour, according to the authority of one of the most extensive London bakers, absorbs 8 or 10 per cent. more of its own weight of water, in being made into bread than the English. The warmer the country the more is the water dried out of the grain before it ripens, and hence when made into bread, it absorbs more water again, and is therefore more valuable. Professor Beck has written a report to the Patent Office, in which he shows that the presence of water unfits these articles for preservation. The books of a single inspector in New-York city showed that in 1847 he inspected 218,579 barrels sour and musty flour. In his opinion the loss on these was $250,000. Every year the total loss in the United States from moisture in wheat and flour, is estimated at from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000! To remedy this great evil, the grain should be well ripened before harvesting, and well dried before being stored in a good granary. Kiln drying is preferable. The mode of ascertaining the amount of water is this: Take a small sample, say 5 ounces, and weigh it carefully. Put it in a dry vessel, which should be heated by boiling water. After six or seven hours weigh it carefully, until it loses no more weight. Its loss of weight shows the original amount of water.

Beauties of Gold Hunting.—A gold digger on the Sacramento writes to his friends, June 4, 1849, a letter, part of which was communicated to the Tribune, from which we extract the following;—"I enjoy excellent health, ahd weigh more than I ever did before, though I never did such hard day's work as since I have been in California—taking, for instance, on one's back 60 lbs., and travelling over hills hundreds of feet high, and so steep that the traveler has to crawl on hands and feet, the thermometer being 98° to 100°. We went fifteen miles a day. Our diet is substantial—cakes of batter and baked in fat pork; grease and salt pork, which relishes very well here after a hard day's work, though I would not have looked at it at home. Pork costs $1 75 per lb., sugar 50c., flour 35c., beans 40c., rice 40., pilot bread $1. But a man will not starve in these diggins; if he will but work, or take his pan, fill it with earth, and wash it out, he can get bread and necessaries to sustain life."

"LIVE THEM DOWN."

Brother, art thou poor and lowly,
Toiling, drudging, day by day,
Journeying painfully and slowly
On thy dark and desert way?
Pause not, though the proud ones frown;
Shrink not, fear not; live them down!

Though to Vice thou shalt not pander,
Though to Virtue thou shalt kneel,
Yet thou shalt escape not Slander—
Jibe and lie thy soul must feel.
Jest of witling, curse of clown,
Heed not either; live them down!

A FRIENDLESS WOMAN.

The following account of an unfortunate and friendless German woman, is given by at St. Louis papers of a recent date:—

At the quarantine ground there is a pitiable, yet curious case of insanity, and one which demands the interference of some one. The person alluded to is a woman, apparently about 30 years of age. She goes by the name of Catharine, and when she can be kept still long enough to say anything rational, gives her name as Catharine Weber. We have made several efforts to gather her history from her, but have always failed, possibly because we have had to use an interpreter, and she talks rapidly, and frequently incoherently. The most rational story is, that she is from Germany, a sister of Adam Weber, a watchmaker, who, she says, left her in the mountains of Pennsylvania. She is a harmless creature and might be said to be more idiotic than crazy. She roams over all the ground, visiting the sick, and seems to have a very correct idea of those who are going to die. A few minutes before death occurs, she is there, stands by them, and when they die she is very officious in closing their eyes, laying their bodies out and fixing their limbs in proper position. This done, she goes out and from the shrubs she weaves a wreath, which she insists upon being placed on the corpse. She sees it placed in the coffin, and is particularly captious and nice to see that the lid is fitted down right: then follows to the grave as chief mourner. At the grave she has another wreath to lay on the coffin; this deposited (and the men all yield to her fancies,) she waits until the grave is filled, and then for a full hour she stands on or by the grave chanting hymns and songs. She sings with a good clear voice. She is up nearly all hours of the night and day; and whenever a boat arrives or departs, she stands upon the river bank chanting her songs. She is mild, always engaged in some work, either sweeping the ground or making tea or something for the sick.

ENVELOPES.

Under the cheap postage system, envelopes have become things of common use. The North American gives an account of the process through which the paper passes before it is converted into its destined form. The daily manufacture in one establishment at Philadelphia is said to be immense. The process is as follows:—

A pile of paper is first laid under the cutting press, and the flat forms of the envolope are cut out at once. These are then taken to the folding machine, which is one of the most singularly constructed and beautiful pieces of mechanism we have ever seen. It requires but one person to feed it, and performs all the rest of the operations itself; for the paper being placed in a fixed position, is seized by nippers and drawn forward to a bed, where it is held firmly by an overhanging plate of metal, which covers just so much as marks the size intended to be made, leaving the parts to be folded over loose. The sides are then, by means of plates advancing towards each other, folded over, and as they retire, a roller covered with gum, passes under the surface of a double curved piece of brass, which instantly falls upon the paper, and as it rises, another plate turns over the outside fold, while, at the same time, a roller presses on it, and causes adhesion. This being done, the bed on which the envelope rests falls to an inclined position; and, being caught between rollers, the finished article is passed through a trough into a receiving basket. The only remaining labor is to gather the envelopes up and sort them into packages of twenty-five each. The whole is done with great rapidity, and so various and contrary are the motions of the machine, that it appears almost to be, in some degree, sentient.

FXTRAORDINARY COMBAT.

Capt. Rockfort of the British and Irish Company's screw vessel "Rose," arrived in Dublin on Monday sennight, from London, and reported having on his passage fallen in with a whale of huge dimensions, on Sunday morning at two o'clock, seven miles S. W. of the Lizard. The monster of the deep was suffering severely at the time in an encounter with two well-known enemies of his tribe—a sword-fish and a tresher. These formidable creatures generally go together through the waters, and are reputed to be joined in a league of unrelenting enmity against the cetaceous animals. Captain Rochforth and his crew saw the combat for about three-quarters of an hour; but being obliged to continue their voyage homewards, they had to forego the pleasure of witnessing the struggle to its close, and of taking in tow to Dublin the body of the vanquished whale, for of its being eventually worsted in the affray there was no doubt. The sword-fish was seen once driving his tremendous weapon into the belly of his victim, as he turned on his side in agony. The thresher fastened on his back, and gave him terrific blows, which were heard at a distance with great distictness. The latter not having any power to strike in the water, it was the instinctive policy of the sword-fish to make an attack from below, this causing the whale to rise above the surface, which he did at times to a remarkable height; the other assailant, which was about twenty feet long, then dealt out his blows unsparingly, with all the force of his lengthy frame. Between them, their victim must have suffered extremely; he spouted blood to an enormous height, and crimsoned the sea all around to a considerable distance. Being within two hundred yards of the ship, towards which the whale appeared to make for protection, the conflict was clearly visible to all on board, who regretted it was not permitted them to wait the issue, and carry off the prize. [Dublin Evening Mail.

Singular Incident.—A few days since, says the Albany Express, the Rev. Dr. Kennedy, of this city, embarked on board one of our North River steamers, of the night line, for New York. Before leaving home, his physician, Dr. Hun, gave him a specific for the cholera. In the course of the evening, our divine was introduced to the Captain of the steamer as Dr. Kennedy, of Albany, and, very naturally, was taken by him to be a physician. The passengers retired to their berths and were resting as comfortably as travelers generally do on board of steamboats, when Dr. Kennedy was awakened by the Captain, who informed him that one of the passengers was very ill with the cholera, and that he did not know of any physician on board but himself. The Dr. replied that he was not a physician, but a clergyman—but remembering his cholera specific, he immediately dressed himself and proceeded to the state-room of the sick man. He administered his remedy, and by assiduous rubbing, with the application of hot brandy, succeeded, after a while, in restoring the circulation and relieving his patient, who was well enough when the boat arrived at New York to go on shore. The gentleman, thus fortunately cured, was Robert Dunlop, Esq., the wealthy brewer of Watervliet, and on his return to Albany, he called upon Dr. K., thanked him for his attention, which he had assured him had saved his life, and presented him with a "fee" of $250.

War among the Birds.—A large owl was recently captured by Mr. William King, of Rochester, N. Y., in a most singular manner. The window of one of the rooms of his house was open, and a small child was in bed alone in the room, just before dark. The child beginning to cry, some one went into the room to quiet it, and discovered the owl standing on one of the bed-posts; and in and near the window were a considerable number of robins and other small birds, which had evidently driven his owlship into his present confinement, and were guarding the window to prevent the escape of their enemy. Mr. King was called, and having shut the window, went into the room and caught and caged the bird, which he still has in his possession.

A Long Speaking-Trumpet.—Mr. Wistlaw, a Civil Engineer, at London, has just made a gutta-percha speaking-trumpet, three-quarters of a mile long. Mr. Wistlaw has given the name of telakouphanon to his new instrument. By speaking in a very low tone at one end of it, the voice is heard in a loud tone at the other extremity. Thus a conversation may be kept up between two persons at a great distance from each other, without its being heard by intermediate people. To call the attention of the one with whom the conversation is to be held, a whistle is introduced at the end of the instrument, and the sound in passing through the tube acquires the power of a trombone. At the last session of the British Association, Mr. Wistlaw presented the Society with a Telakouphanon ninety feet long.

The Oldest Woman in the World.—The Savannah Republican notices the death of Laurania Thower, who died in Scriven county, aged, as near as known, one hundred and thirty-three years! She removed from Virginia to Georgia before the revolutionary war. All her children were born before the revolution. Her youngest daughter is between seventy and eighty years old. She has grandchildren quite aged, and great-grandchildren over thirty. She always enjoyed good health; her sight was perfect until within a few years, and her mind and memory good. She must have been the oldest woman in the world.

Burke Defeated.—Burke arose in the House with some papers in his hand, upon which he intended to make a motion, when a rough-hewn member started up and exclaimed, "Mr. Speaker, I hope the honorable member does not intend to read that large bundle of papers, and to bore us with a long speech in the bargain." Mr. Burke was so suffocated with rage as to lose all utterance, and absolutely ran out of the house; upon which George Selwyne remarked, it was the only time he had seen the fable realized—"A lion put to flight by the braying of an ass."

"In the midst of Life we are in Death."—Two young ladies of Brooklyn, L. I., beautiful and accomplished—Mary Louisa and Virginia Star, one 19 and the other 21 years of age—were engaged to be married on Monday last. On the Saturday night previous, both went to Hoboken, and there imprudently partook of ice cream, and strawberries, and other fruits. The hour appointed for the wedding found them cold in death, with the bridal garments for a winding sheet.

Force of Intemperate Habits.—The Brooklyn Eagle mentions the case of an intemperate man, residing near the corner of Jackson and Navy streets, who on Sunday morning awoke from a debauch, with a burning desire for more "liquor." His wife had only six cents, out of which the poor woman had purchased a head of cabbage for the family dinner. In her temporary absence he seized it, under the plea that his wife had erred in purchasing it, obtained from the grocer who sold it the price paid for it, with which he fed his debasing appetite, leaving his family without their meal. Such is intemperance.

An Incident.—The Boston Transcript of the 31st ult., gives the following incident, and one that we fear is by no means uncom- "An Irishman in a state of 'intensified inebriety,' was found in Congress street this afternoon. He was so helplessly tipsy, that several pails of water were emptied on him before he gave any sign of animation. In his pocket was found a document which has been placed in our hands. It is a bona fide certificate from Father Mathew, of an administration of the temperance pledge. It bears date this very day, and is numbered 5,720,288.

Judge Kelly, of Philadelphia, in a case where the father of an illegitimate child instituted a suit to recover possession of the same from its grandfather, who had charge of him for some time, decided against the claim of the parent, and that the grandfather, by reason of his care of the boy for a period of nine years, had the best claim to him.

Do Kingbirds eat Working Bees?—The kingbird has been regarded as one of the greatest enemies of the apiarian, in some situations, from the fact, that it is a devourer of bees. Wilson, the ornithologist, suggested that the bird only picked out the drones, and never injured the working bees. Some close observers have come to the same conclusion. One writer states that to test the matter, he killed a number of the birds, and though he found many drones in their gizzards, he could find no working bees in them. What has been the observation of others?

Utility of Nettles.—The Medical Times says it is a singular fact, that steel dipped in the juice of the nettle becomes flexible. Dr. Thompson, who has made the medical properties of our wild plants his peculiar study, states that lint dipped in nettle juice and put up the nostril, has been known to stay the bleeding of the nose, when all other remedies have failed—and adds, that fourteen or fifteen of the seeds ground into powder, and taken daily, will cure the swelling in the neck, known by the name of goitre, without in any way injuring the general habits.

Bones for Manure.—Place the bones together in a heap, and moisten them with ashes and water, covering closely with muck, manure, or common garden mould. If this be done in a warm room, or in the open air in summer, or in the centre of a bed of horse or other fermenting manure, they will soon dissolve, and be in a fit state for application to the crops after mixing with mould, so as to absorb their moisture.

Singular Phenomenon.—The Baton Rouge (La.) Advocate states that, recently, fire was discovered issuing from the ground, in the lower part of that town, and that for the space of twenty or thirty feet square, it appeared to be in a state of entire combustion. A sulphurous smell arose from it, and water, though freely applied, did not extinguish it. Ashes were at last used with success, but subsequent examination showed very little, if any, trace on the ground of the action of the fire.

VARIETY.

In England they grow grass on the line of railways to prevent the dust rising on the passage of the cars. A London journal announces that hay-making was in full operation on the line between Exeter and Crediton. We understand that the reason this protection from dust is not resorted to in America is, that the roads are so imperfectly constructed that it is necessary to keep men daily traversing the line, whereby the grass is killed.

One of the most comical sights to superior beings, must be to see two human creatures, with elaborate speech and gesture, making each other exquisitively uncomfortable from civility; the one pressing what he is most anxious the other should not accept, and the other accepting only from the fear of giving offense by refusal.

The London correspondent of the National Intelligencer says: "The way English ladies live in the open air, the daily fatigue they endure, and the pleasure they find in it, would astonish some of the delicate dames near you; not more, however, than the healthy feelings and good looks they reap from it would."

Lately in Edinburg, a barouche, containing a tipsy party, driven by a tipsy driver, came against a tipsy man and knocked him over. One of the wheels of the vehicle went over one of the man's legs, and snapped it asunder. Luckily the leg was a wooden one, so that its owner was entirely free from pain.

Owls are not only harmless, but they are of infinite service to mankind. Hunting chiefly by night, when almost all young birds are safe in their resting places, they prey principally, if not entirely, on mice and rats, which are then abroad in all directions plundering the farmer's produce.

A country divino, who was opposed to the use of violins in church, having been overruled by his flock, commenced the services of the Sunday following with, "You may fiddle and sing the first three verses of the 40th Psalm."

The Cincinnati Gazette gives the result of a squirrel hunt lately by eight gentlemen, four on a side. They were gone but a few hours over a day, and returned with four hundred and thirty-four heads of the animals.

It is said that a celebrated English duchess, on being told that she must be bled or she would die, assumed the usual prerogative of her sex, and replied, "I won't be bled; and I won't die;" and she did n't!

An eminent and witty prelate was once asked if he did not think that such an one followed his conscience. "Yes, (said his Grace,) I think he does follow it, as a man does a horse in a gig; he drives it first!"

Wire-work is often being successfully substituted for wood laths in the ceilings of houses and public buildings. The wire is either galvanized or immersed in a chemical preparation, which prevents it from corrosion.

Mr. Gough tells a story of a tavern keeper by the name of A. S. Camp. The painter, in painting his sign, left out the points, so that it read, Tavern kept by A SCAMP.

Sylvester Robinson, of East Haven, Ct., died very suddenly on Thursday last. He dropped dead near his barn. Verdict of coroner's jury: "died from intemperance."

A grey eagle, measuring from wing to wing, 7 feet 5 inches, was shot upon the "Sharp Mountain," a few days ago, by Mr. Isaac Hein, of Albany township, Berks Co., Pa, at a distance of 240 yards.

In a country like England animals increase the laboring and productive powers of man to four and a half times what man could perform alone.

The Postmaster General has been honored with an LL. D. by the College of Burlington.

The Cholera at Cincinnati is said to have attacked the horses and swine, many of which have died of that disease.

A fellow who keeps a gymnasium out West, advertises to teach shooting and the use of the bowie knife—gratis!

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to

George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 11. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, AUGUST 30, 1849. WHOLE NO. 271.

FAMILIAR TALK ABOUT POVERTY;

For the Children who read the Sabbath Recorder.

This morning I asked one of my little friends, a bright boy, and a very good one too, if he would attend the Sabbath School to-day. "I guess not," he replied, and hung down his head. "Why not? do you not like to study the Bible?" said I. "Yes; but I guess I shall not go to meeting to-day." The reason, he said, was that he had no clothes fit to wear. I talked with him a little while, and came directly to my room and wrote this, so that a great many little children may know what one of their number thinks about remaining at home from church and Sabbath School, because his clothes are not quite as nice as those of some others.

It may be a very good thing for you, my dear children, that God has not given you the nicest of clothes; for then you might be prouder then you now are, and do as I saw a very wicked boy do the other day, who had a very nice cap, a new coat, vest, and pants, and polished boots. This wicked boy put his thumb to his nose and called names after some poor ragged children, whose drunken father would not let them go to any school. How bad they felt! Yet it was fun for him. You say, perhaps, that you never did so. I am glad of it, and am sure he never would have done so if he had ever been as ragged as they were. How much better it is to be poor and ragged, than rich and wicked!

Do you not recollect the story of Lazarus and the rich man, as it is told in the Bible. Doubtless you have often heard the minister say, that poverty is sometimes a blessing. Now you see that it is, for it may keep you from being proud and wicked. Christ said, one day, as he was preaching to his disciples, "Take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed, for your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added to you." These precious truths, my little friends, I learned a long time ago at the Sabbath School, with patch ed pants and a coarse shirt on. My clothes were quite clean, it is true, for my dear mother, who, I hope, is now in heaven, took great pains to make us appear as becoming as she could.

The parents of Jesus Christ were very poor; yet Jesus went with them to the great meetings of the Jews, and when but ten years old stood up and argued with the priests and lawyers because they were so wicked.

The feeling that would keep you from meeting and Sabbath School, because your clothes are not nice enough, I fear is wicked pride. God knows it, and does not let you have the nicest of clothes till you humble your pride, and learn to wear plain clothes. Then, if you are industrious and prudent, perhaps you will be blessed with an abundance of property, with which you may do much good in the world. So you see that it is all for the best in the long run. This is what Christ meant when he said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." It will never do, my children, to hang down your heads and stay from Sabbath School because your clothes are plain. No; cheer up, and do something, and be somebody in the world. God created you in his image, as well as the rich man's son. Besides, you are better off, in many respects, than he, being free from temptations to sin to which he is exposed. How often do the children of the rich become poor drunkards and gamblers, using profane language, just because they can have money and time to spend in folly and sin whenever they choose. I now recollect that a great many great and good men were the children of very poor parents, and no doubt wore patched clothes, and perhaps ragged clothes; but they never would have become so great and good, had their foolish pride kept them from church, for fear that some senseless person would laugh at them.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

BIBLE READING AND NOVEL READING.

My mind has of late been deeply impressed with the importance of Christians living more devoted to the cause which they profess to love, and of their daily reading God's holy word, and seeking by prayer to obtain a clear understanding of its precepts. Great is the benefit of having a good knowledge of this inspired Book, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. Although from early life taught the necessity of this, I have never felt its importance as now. From what danger will it not shield the humble child of God, who loves and obeys its precepts. Surely it will be a lamp to his feet and a light to his path; and he who studies it will ever be ready to say with the Psalmist, "I will delight myself in thy statutes; I will not forget thy word." But I have been grieved with some of God's professing children, to see their almost entire neglect of the Sacred Book, and the substitution for it of works of fiction or some other light reading. Praise be to God who has broken the chain of one captive who had been for years a slave to the practice. I will not undertake to enumerate its baneful effects, but I would ask the Christian what good he derives from such reading? Do you feel more of the love of God in your hearts, more heavenly minded, more anxious for the salvation of perishing sinners? Does it impart that food which the Christian needs to strengthen him on his way? Does it draw the mind from earth to heaven? I ask these questions because I have seen many who profess to be the children of God, take up the Bible, shuffle its sacred pages a while, perhaps read a chapter as a matter of duty, and then throw it carelessly by, and take up a novel, and pass the Sabbath in reading it. May the Lord have mercy on such Christians, and may he kindle a fire in their hearts which will burn up all the corruption thus implanted there, and which will purify them, and make them ready for the reception of his word in its place.

Well do I recollect, when but a child, of hearing a Christian mother relate with great interest, to a young lady who sat by, a story she had been reading. Her little daughter, who was but nine years of age, listened with fixed attention, and when her mother concluded, she said she must read those books, they were so interesting. Her mother replied, that she was entirely to young to read such books. But she persisted, and read them, though the work occupied three large volumes. Thus was the foundation for novel reading laid by a Christian mother. Fathers and mothers in Israel, do you wish your children to be faithful in the vineyard of the Lord? Then instil into their hearts while young the necessity of a close attention to God's holy word, and tell them of the sin of all light reading, which the Christian should never touch, and you will have cause to praise God for the early conversion of your children, and for their strict adherence to his requirements.

A BELIEVER.

HUMAN SACRIFICES IN GOOMSOR.

Mr. Winslow, in the Missionary Herald, presents a frightful picture of human guilt and degradation in Goomsor, a district which lies partly in the presidency of Madras, and partly in that of Bengal. Much has been accomplished in India by the Christian religion, particularly in mitigating the horrors of heathenism; but the reader will see that there are some "dark places" still, which may be emphatically called "the habitations of cruelty."

You are doubtless aware that the inhabitants of Goomsor, called Khonds, have from time immemorial offered human sacrifices, after a very singular and cruel manner. The oblation is made to the "earth goddess," their principal deity. They have also a sun god, a moon god, a god of arms, a god of hunting, a god of births, a god of small pox, a hill god, a rain god, a god of fountains, a god of rivers, a god of tanks, and villiage gods; but the earth goddess is the central object of worship, the most affecting exhibition of which is in the form of human sacrifices.

The earth goddess appears to be worshiped under two distinct characters, not often seperately considered, however; namely, that of the supreme power, and that which presides over the productive energies of nature. In the former character, she is said to be worshiped in one case only; that is when a tribe engages in war, its enemies being of another race. Her name is then invoked, and vows of sacrifices, in case of success, are made. Her nature is purely malevolent; but she does not interfere with other deities in their respective spheres.

As presiding over the operations of nature, or as the energizing principle, her supposed attributes are the reflected image of the wants and fears of an agricultural population, in an elementary or uncivilized state. She rules the order of the seasons; sends the periodical rain; gives fecundity to the soil; as also health or sickness to the people. On her depends the preservation of the patriarchal houses and the safety of flocks and herds. She has no fixed corporeal shape; and she is worshiped neither in any temple nor under any symbol or image. In common with inferior divinities, however, she may assume temporarily any form, as that of a tiger, for purposes of wrath. She is propitiated by sacrifices both of men and animals.

Human sacrifices are either public or private. Of the former, every farm should receive, at seed time and ingathering, a portion of the flesh and blood of a victim; and according as the prospect of a crop varies, it should have some intervening oblations. A sacrifice is also required in case of sickness among men and animals, and also in the event of the destruction of the latter by wild beasts. If the "abbaya," or priest, is visited with sickness in his family, the failure of his crops, or the loss of his stock, the same thing must be done; as his prosperity is an index of the disposition of the goddess towards the people over whom he presides.

The more private sacrifices are offered in case of any extraordinary calamity, indicating the anger of the goddess towards a particular house; as when a child, watching a flock, is carried off by a tiger. If a human sacrifice cannot then be obtained, a goat is led to the place of sacrifice, and its ear is cut off and cast bleeding upon the ground, as a pledge to be redeemed with human blood at the appointed time within the year.

By recent publications, in connection with a report of the agency which has been employed by the government for more than seven years to put a stop to their sacrifices, it appears that in a small section of the country, three or four hundred innocent victims are annually torn in pieces in this horrid rite. Several hundred have from time to time been rescued. On one occasion, one hundred and twenty-four victims, valued at ten or twelve thousand rupees, were voluntarily given up to the agent. And in one year one hundred and forty-two were saved, and were afterwards variously distributed; some having been left with the missionaries in Orissa, some having been brought to Madras, whom I saw, and some females having been given in marriage to Khond chiefs.

SOW BESIDE ALL WATERS.

The following incident from the Missionary Herald, is interesting in itself, and contains withal a valuable lesson for every Christian. It occurs in a letter from Constantinople, from that veteran missionary, Mr. Goodell; and relates, as will be seen, to the infant church at Nicomedia, the very spot where the last and most terrible persecution of the Christians by the Imperial power—known in history as the Tenth, under Diocletian—was ordered and commenced:—

"I was at Nicomedia with Commodore Porter, seventeen years ago, and spent one night and part of a day there; but I did not become acquainted with a single individual, and I had very little opportunity of saying any thing to any one on spiritual subjects. But I left for the priest, who showed us the church, an Armeno-Turkish Testament, which I had recently prepared at Malta; and to our guides and others I gave a few tracts in the same language. These, so far as appears, were read without profit by the individuals who first received them; but they passed into other hands, and were read with deep attention, and became, under God, the means of awakening such a spirit of earnest inquiry after truth and salvation, as no persecution has been able to hold in check. 'And thus,' I remarked at the communion table, 'the seed which was sown in so much weakness, has sprung up; and my eyes are this day permitted to see the fruit. And instead of now going, as in former visits, to see the ruined temples and the palace of the Emperor Diocletian, I come into this beautiful garden of the Lord, to regale myself with the buds and blossoms and fruits of these trees of righteousness.' I told them that I felt greatly encouraged by what I had seen to resolve that hereafter, wherever I went, I would 'sow beside all waters;' and that I hoped my present visit to them would be attended with as great a blessing as the former; though there was no probability that I should live seventeen years to come and know the result."

A CONVERTED BRAHMIN.

The following anecdote was related in London, at the late anniversary of the London Missionary Society, by Rev. A. Sutton, missionary of the Orissa Mission:—

A friend of mine some time ago was traveling in the wilds of Orissa. As he pursued his way he came in sight of an officer's tent. The officer seeing he was a European invited him to dinner. He accepted the invitation, and after the repast the officer said, "Mr Wilkinson, you have come out here to try and convert the Hindoos?" "Yes, that is my object;" answered my friend. "And a pretty wild goose chase," rejoined the officer, "you will make of it. You don't know these fellows so well as I do." "Oh, sir, I think I myself know something about them already." "Ah, but you have not had to deal with them as I have. If you had been accustomed to the command of a company of Sepoys, you would soon find out their duplicity and faithlessness." Mr. Wilkinson assured him he had made some converts whose earnestness and sincerity were beyond all question or suspicion. "Oh!" said the officer, "I should like to examine them." "Your wish can soon be gratified, for here is one of them coming up the avenue. Gunga," continued Mr. Wilkinson, addressing the native who entered, "here is a gentleman who wishes to examine you as to your Christianity." "What right has he to examine me?" inquired Gunga; "and does he mean to do so in anger or in ridicule?" "So," said the officer, "you have turned Christian?" "Yes." "How did you get your living before you turned Christian?" Gunga was astonished. His pride was also hurt. "I am a Brahmin," and he threw back his robe over his shoulders and exhibiting a mark that attested that fact. He could not conceive how such a question could be asked of him, raising so obvious an appearance to his disparagement. The officer, somewhat abashed, asked how he had felt before he had became a Christian, and he replied, "I felt that I myself, like all my countrymen, was in miserable darkness. I longed for the truth, but I could not find it. At length I heard that the light of truth was to be found on the Padre side, and thither I instantly repaired to light my own taper at the source. I found what I sought for, and I carried my candle to the bazaars and public places, that I might communicate the same light to others." As he went on, the officer admitted to Mr. Wilkinson that this was indeed something which he had not expected to hear. A tear stood in his eye as he spoke. He had found in a Hindoo a true believer; and he was preparing to retire to indulge in his own meditations, when Gunga said, "I should like now to examine you. Are you a Christian? Are you indeed a Christian?" This was an arrow to the officer's heart, and the question, asked in Christian simplicity, became the means of his conversion.

LET US GIVE THANKS.

BY ELIZA COOK.

Let us give thanks, with grateful soul,
To Him who sendeth all;
To Him who bids the planets roll,
And sees a "sparrow fall."
Though grief and tears may dim our joys,
And care and strife arrest,
'Tis man, too often, that alloys
The lot his Maker blest;
While sunshine lights the boundless sky,
And dew-drops feed the sod—
While stars and rainbows live on high—
Let us give thanks to God.

We till the earth in labor's health,
We plant the acorn cup;
The fields are crowned with golden wealth,
The green tree springeth up;
The sweet, eternal waters gush
From fountain and from vale;
The vineyards blush, with purple flush,
The yellow hop-leaves trail;
And while the harvest flings its gold,
And cowslips deck the sod—
While limpid streams are clear and cold,
Let us give thanks to God.

The flower yields its odor breath,
As gentle winds go past;
The grasshopper that lurks beneath
Chirps merrily and fast;
The ring dove coos upon the spray,
The larks full anthems pour;
The bees start with a jocund lay,
The waves sing on the shore;
Hosannas fill the wood and wild,
Where human step ne'er trod;
And nature, like an unweaned child,
Smiles on its parent God.

Say, brothers, shall the bird and bloom
Thus teach, and teach in vain?
Shall all the love-rays that illume,
Be lost in clouds of pain?
Shall hearts be dead and visions blind
To all that mercy deals?
Shall soul and reason fail to find
The shrine where instinct kneels?
Ah, no!—while glory lights the sky,
And beauty paints the sod—
While stars and rainbows live on high,
Let us give thanks to God.

THE NEWPORT BURIAL-PLACE.

A correspondent of the Independent, who has recently been on a visit to Newport, R. I., gives the following account of its ancient burial-place:—

At the further end, and upon the highest ground, is the monument erected to the memory of the gallant Perry. It is an obelisk, resting upon a quadrangular base, bearing an inscription on each of its four sides: "Oliver Hazard Perry, at the age of 27 years, achieved the victory on Lake Erie, September, 1813. He was born at South Kingston, R. I., August 23, 1785, and died at Port Spain, Trinidad, August 23, 1819, aged 34 years. His remains were conveyed to his native land in a ship of war, according to a resolution of Congress, and were here interred, December 4, 1826." The monument was erected by the State of Rhode Island. I had gone through the new grave yard before I perceived that it lay beside another, from which it was separated by a close board fence. A swinging gate admitted me, and I found myself at once in the ancient burying ground, and surrounded by the monuments of by-gone generations. To my astonishment, however, the inscriptions were as legible, and the stones as clean and free from moss, as if they had just come from the stone-cutter's. There were no reclining stones, none partly sunken or fallen—all were in their places, upright and regular. The mystery was soon solved; for just beyond me was a man with water and sand and a scrubbing-brush, cleaning a slab, and retouching the letters. A little beyond him was another, smoothing down a tabular sandstone, in which the inscription stone had been placed, but out of which it had fallen. It was a novel and most gratifying spectacle. A whole community expending a reverent and filial care upon the resting places of their dead, rescuing them from unseemly neglect, and deepening the inscriptions, that future generations may read them! The utmost pains had been taken to repair the monuments of some whose names had become extinct, and whose only memorial on earth was that which marked their lowly graves. How honorable to a community is such a regard to the dead! Why has it never been done before? Why should the example not be imitated? One of the workmen informed me, that the town had appropriated $600 for that purpose; two seasons had been spent in the work, and the labor of still another would be required. He said that much interest had been taken by the community in the progress of the work; interesting inscriptions had been raised above the surface of the ground, and some fallen ones had been restored to light. Of the latter was the following:

"Here doth Simon Parrott lye,
Whose wrongs did for justice cry,
But none could have;
And now the grave
Keeps him from injurie."

He died 1713, aged 84 years, and what his injuries were, excited considerable curiosity and research; but to no purpose. My informant, the civil and intelligent workman I have alluded to, says that his mother, years ago, used to accompany an aged woman in search of this stone, and he thinks that she, perhaps, might have shed some light upon the subject of his "wrongs." As it is, they are hidden, like his memory, in forgetfulness. The most ancient inscription, thus far discovered, bears the date of 1660. One of the most interesting stones, for its uncouth appearance and lettering, bears the date of 1687, and the name of "one of the first beginners of a church of Christ, observing of the 7th day Sabbath of the Lord in New England." A tablet in memory of a master of arts, who deceased in 1751, has inscribed upon it the following Latin distich:—

"Mors mortis morti mortem nisi morte dedisset, Aeternae vitae Janua clausa foret."

The literal rendering is, "Unless the death of death to death death had given by death, the door of Eternal life would be closed." The only merit of the stanza consists, I suppose, in its declension of the noun Mors, and suggests the suspicion that the deceased was a master of a Latin School. The conceit may please by its ingenuity, but a just taste would hardly take pleasure in it among the grave and solemn reflections of a burying ground. I cannot conclude, although I have drawn out my letter beyond its usual length, without expressing the hope that the commendable example of Newport will be followed in other ancient towns.

THE SHEIK AND THE FRANK.

The success of Layard in his excavations at Ninevah, we have already referred to. It appears that he was closely watched by the people around. They were at a loss to understand his reason for spending so much money in digging out a lot of stones. We were much amused with the remarks of a worthy Arab Sheik, whose people had been employed by him in removing some of the gigantic monuments of the buried Ninevah:

"There is surely no God but God, and Mahammed is his prophet. In the name of the Most High, tell me, O Bey," (addressing Mr. Layard,) "what are you going to do with those stones. So many thousands of purses spent upon such things! Can it be, as you say, that your people learn wisdom from them; or is it, as his reverence the Cadi declares, that they are to go to the palace of your Queen, who, with the rest of the unbelievers, worship these idols? As for wisdom, these figures will not teach you to make any better knives, or scissors, or chintzes; and it is in the making of those articles that the English show their wisdom. But God is great! Here are stones which have been buried ever since the time of the holy Noah,—peace be with him! Perhaps they were under ground before the Deluge. I have lived on these lands for years. My father, and the father of my father, pitched their tents here before me; but they never heard of these figures. For twelve hundred years have the true believers (and, praise be to God! all true wisdom is with them alone) been settled in this country, and none of them ever heard of a palace under ground. Neither did they who went before them. But lo! here comes a Frank from many days' journey off, and he walks up to the very place, and he takes a stick [the Sheik illustrated his description with the point of his spear] and makes a line here, and makes a line there. Here, says he, is the palace; there, says he, is the gate; and he shows us what has been all our lives beneath our feet, without our having known any thing about it. Wonderful! wonderful! Is it by books, is it by magic, or is it by your prophet, that you have learned these things? Speak, O Bey; tell me the secret of wisdom."

KEEP THE LOAF UNDER YOUR OWN ARM.

A TRUE STORY.

The following is copied from a New York paper printed in the year 1776, and is related as a fact. Similar cases often occur in these days, that a parent, having given his all into the hands of his children, is obliged to spend the remainder of his days in poverty and want.

At this time there is living in Harlem an old man who relates the following story of himself. He was possessed of a pretty good farm, with slaves and every thing necessary for a farmer at Harlem, and had but one child, a son, who, marrying, it was agreed that the young couple should live in the house with him, as he was a widower. Things went on exceedingly well for some time, when his son proposed to him that he should make over to him his estate, promising to build a new house, and otherwise improve the farm. The father, through persuasion, gave him a deed of gift of it, and every thing belonging thereto.

After a few years, as the father grew old, he grew a little fretful and dissatisfied, while the son, thinking he had nothing more to expect from him, forgot his filial duty, and used him as bad as one of his servants. The old man was no longer to eat his meals at the same table with him and his wife, but obliged to eat his meals in the chimney corner, and continually otherwise ill-treated by them. The old man ate his victuals daily from a wooden bowl his son had made for him. His grand-son saw his father make this bowl, and set about making just such another; being asked by his father what he made it for, he answered, "for you to eat in when you are as old as grandfather." Although this ought to have turned his heart, and made him reflect, that as he dealt by his father, he might expect to be dealt with by his children when he grew old, it had no effect upon him; and the ill-usage of the old man was carried to such a height that he could no longer bear it, but left the house and went to a relation and neighbor of his, declaring that if his friend could not help him get his farm back again, he should be obliged to come and live with him.

His friend answered, that he might come and live with him, and, if he would follow his directions, he would help him to his estate again. "Go," said he, "take that bag of dollars, carry it into your room at your son's, shut it up well in your chest, and about the time you expect they will call you down to dinner, shut your door, and have all your dollars spread on a table in the middle of the room. When they call you, make a noise with them by sweeping them from the table into the bag again."

The old man did as he was desired; his daughter-in-law came up to call him to dinner, and finding the door shut, she had the curiosity to peep through the key-hole, saw the bag of dollars, and the old man sweeping them off the table. Surprised at it, she told her husband, but he would not believe it. The next day, the old man again counted his dollars, and packed up something in paper like paper money. His son went up to call him down, and was surprised at seeing what his wife had told him. They took notice of it to the old man, but when he came down, insisted on his sitting at the table with them, and behaved uncommonly civil towards him.

The old man related to his friend what he had done, who gave him directions what to do if his son asked him for the money.

After a few days, the old man having been very busy in counting out his money again, his son asked him what money that was he had been counting.

"Only some money I have received for the discharge of one of the bonds I had standing out. I expect more in a few days, and I fear I shall be obliged to take Mr. A——'s farm, upon which I have a mortgage, as he is not able to raise the money, and if the farm is sold, it will not fetch as much as will discharge the mortgage."

After a few days the son told the father that he intended to build a house on the farm, and would be glad if his father would let him have that money.

"Yes, child, all that I have is coming to you; I intend giving you the bond and mortgage I have; but then, I think it will be best to have it put alltogether in a new gift. I will get neighbor L—— to call here and draw a new one."

Accordingly his friend and cousin, who had devised the measure, came to the house, and the son gave the father the deed, that another might be drawn of it. When the old man had got the instrument into his hand, in the presence of his friend, he broke off the seal, and committed the writing to the fire, saying:

"Burn! cursed instrument of my folly and misery! and you, my children, as this estate is all my own again, you must remove immediately, unless you will be content to be my tenants. I have now learned that it is best for a parent to hold the loaf under his own arm—and that one father can better maintain ten children, than ten children can a father."

A GOOD WIFE.

The Rev. William Jay, of Bath, (Eng.) on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination, gave his wife the following noble compliment: Being presented by the ladies of his congregation with a purse containing £650, after a few remarks, he turned to Mrs. Jay, and said, "I take this purse, and present it to you, madam—to you, madam, who have always kept my purse, and therefore it is that it has been so well kept. Consider it as entirely sacred—for your pleasure, your use, your service, your comfort. I feel this to be unexpected by you, but it is perfectly deserved. Mr. Chairman and Christian friends, I am sure there is not one here but would acquiesce in this, if he knew the value of this female, as a wife, for more than fifty years. I must mention the obligation the public are under to her (if I be abled to serve my generation,) and how much she has raised her sex in my estimation; how much my church and congregation owe to her watchings over their pastor's health whom she has cheered under all his trials, and reminded of his duties, while she animated him in their performance: how often she has wiped the evening dews from his forehead, and freed him from interruptions and embarrassments, that he might be free for his work. How much, also, do my family owe to her; and reason have they to call her blessed! She is, too, the mother of another mother in America, who has reared thirteen children, all of whom are walking with her in the way everlasting."

PROV. xxxi. 10, 12, 28—"Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that she shall have no need of spoil. She will do him good and not evil, all the days of her life. Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

THE LITTLENESS OF THE EARTH.

The universe at large would suffer as little in its splendor and variety by the destruction of our planet, as the magnificence of a forest would suffer by the fall of a single leaf. The leaf quivers on the branch which supports it. It lies at the mercy of the slightest accident. A breath of wind from the stem, and it lights on the stream of water that passes underneath. In a moment of time, the life which we know by the microscope it teems with, is extinguished; and an occurrence so insignificant in the eye of man, and in the scale of his observation, carries it unto the myriads which people this leaf, an event as terrible and decisive as the destruction of the world. Now, in the grand scale of the universe, we, the occupiers of this ball, which performs its little among the suns and systems which astronomy has unfolded—we feel the same littleness and the same insecurity. We differ from the leaf only in this circumstance, that it would require the operation of greater elements to destroy us.

[Chalmers.

LIFE OF A SINNER.

Seven years in childhood's sport and play, 7
Seven years in school from day to day, 14
Seven years at trade or college life, 21
Seven years to find a place and wife, 28
Seven years to pleasure's follies given, 35
Seven years by business hardly driven, 42
Seven years for fame a wild goose chase, 49
Seven years for wealth a bootless race, 56
Seven years in hoarding for your heir, 63
Seven years in weakness spent and care, 70
Then die and go—you know not where!

TOKEN OF FAITH.—I revisited Greenwood Cemetery a few days ago, and found many new monuments, one of which particularly interested me, from the cheerful simplicity of its epitaph. The body of a mother and child rested beneath the marble, and on it were inscribed the words—"Is it well with thee? Is it well with the child? And she answered, It is well." 2 Kings iv. 26. This gives pleasant indication of real faith in immortality; like the Moravians, who never inscribe on their tombs the day when a man was born and when he died, but simply "the day he came hither and the day he went home."

[Mrs. Child.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, August 30, 1849.

THE "SABBATH MANUAL."

A worthy minister of the gospel, whose mind has been much exercised upon the Sabbath question, writes as follows:—

"I have, during the summer, paid considerable attention to the subject of the Sabbath; and I frankly confess, that I do not find it easy to satisfy myself, that our position is a right one. I have endeavored to examine every thing which has come in my way. I have examined many writers on both sides, but, most of all, the Bible. Sometimes I feel that I shall never rest easy without embracing the seventh-day principle; but before taking any public stand in the cause, I wish to feel that every difficulty is cleared away. Here, then, let me ask you, have you noticed the argument of Rev. Justin Edwards, D. D., in a small work called the Sabbath Manual, published by the American Tract Society, 150 Nassua street, N. Y., from page 82 to the end? Particularly what he says upon the different manner in which our Savior treated the Sabbath after his resurrection, from what he did before; and also the different practice of the disciples after the resurrection; before that observing the Jewish Sabbath, but not afterward; but invariably meeting on the first day of the week, from the day of his resurrection. But more particularly, have you noticed what he affirms respecting the declarations of the earliest historians upon the matter? The question with me is, Upon what ground do these early historians make such declarations? I wish it was in my power to know for myself what they do state, and on what ground they do it. I have not access to these writers; and, if I had, I do not know how I could reconcile all they say upon the subject with the Bible. That there was a change of the day designed, and that it took place at the time of the resurrection, and yet not a word said on the subject by Him who justly claims to be Lord of the Sabbath—this, I confess, is hard to get over."

We do not wonder that it should surprise our brother, "that there was a change of the day designed, and that it took place at the time of the resurrection, and yet not a word said on the subject by Him who justly claims to be Lord of the Sabbath." Truly, this is "hard to get over."

As to a review of what Doctor Edwards has offered in the "Sabbath Manual," page 82 to the end, comprising the whole of the second part of the work, it is out of the question in a short article, such as we are obliged to write at this time. Perhaps we shall be able, at some subsequent period, to do so at length. For the present, we content ourselves with a remark in reference to the historical testimony which he professes to adduce for the observance of the first day of the week. The first which meets our eye is a quotation from Mosheim, vol 1. p 45:—

"In the first century, all Christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week, on which the Saviour arose from lic worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the church in Jerusalem, was founded upon the express cemmandment of the apostles, who themselves consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose; and it was observed universally, as appears from the united testimony of the most credible writers. The seventh day was also observed as a festival, not by Christians in general, but by such churches as were principally composed of Jewish converts.

If Mosheim meant to declare—as it is probable that he did—that it was the weekly custom of Christians to set apart Sunday for public worship, we venture the assertion that he had not a particle of authority for the declaration. It may be considered very hazardous in us to make this assertion, but we are willing to abide the issue. Mosheim did not live in the first century, and of course he had no other knowledge on the subject than what he derived from authors who had gone before him—authors who may still be consulted by those who have opportunity. Who, then, are the authors that furnish the testimony on this subject? and what is the nature of their testimony? The authors are those who lived and wrote during the progress of that famous controversy about the Passover, which so long agitated the churches of Asia and the western Roman Empire. It is from their writings that we gather the earliest testimony concerning the observance of the first day of the week. And such is the nature of their testimony, that it is not easy to determine whether they allude to the Sunday observance as the constant weekly practice of the churches throughout the year, or whether they simply have reference to an annual observance of it during the Passover festival. If it could be established, by clear and indubitable evidence, that those writers spoke of a constant weekly custom of the churches, their testimony would be worth somewhat more than it is. It is, however, all of an ambiguous kind. Yet upon this ambiguous kind of evidence do Mosheim, Doctor Edwards, and all others who advocate the claims of the first day of the week, rest their faith. But even allowing that the custom of observing the first day of the week was a weekly one, what does it prove? Does it prove what Docter Edwards would wish to prove by it—that the day was regarded by the early Christians as the Sabbath? By no means. It proves nothing more than that the day was considered as a religious festival, between which and the Sabbath there is a very important distinction.

Mosheim, however, asserts, in the quotation before us, "that the seventh day was also observed as a festival," &c. He does not say that the first day was not observed as a festival, yet he seems willing to create the impression, that all the sanctity originally belonging to the seventh day was now transferred to the first, and that the seventh day possessed no higher character than that of a festival. And it is evident, that Doctor Edwards wishes to avail himself of the authority of Mosheim, to give currency to this delusion. Yet Mosheim must have known, that all the ancient writers, who speak of the first day of the week, speak of it only as a festival. Not the smallest hint do they give of its being regarded as a day of rest from secular business, any farther than during the hours of public worship. And if our memory serves us correctly—we have not time now to make the references—Mosheim has himself given, in other parts of his work, quotations from those writers which go to establish our position most conclusively. We say, therefore, that the quotation which Doctor E. gives from Mosheim is calculated to deceive; and, knowing what we do of the Jesuitism of this same Doctor E., we believe that he is quite willing that the people should be deceived.

But notwithstanding Mosheim's assertion, "that in the first century all Christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week for public worship," and notwithstanding Doctor E.'s endorsement of the same, the "Sabbath Manual" is not able to quote any writer earlier than Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 101. Of course this brings us to the second century. Well, what does Ignatius say? The quotation given in the Manual, we have good reason to believe, is a garbled one. It does not fairly represent the views of Ignatius. It is as follows: "Let us (Christians) no more sabbatize, but let us keep the Lord's day." We do not know where the author of the Manual picked up this quotation; but, for the benefit of those who are likely to be misled by it, we give the following from this celebrated father, which establishes more clearly his view of the connection between the Sabbath and the Lord's day: "Let us not keep the Sabbath in a Jewish manner, as if we took delight in idleness; for the Scriptures hold, that he who will not work should not eat; but let us keep it in a spiritual manner, in the study of the law, and in the contemplation of the works of God; and after we have kept the Sabbath, let every one that loveth Christ keep the Lord's day festival." Does this look like setting aside the Sabbath, and having its place substituted by another day? On the contrary, it proves very clearly, that Ignatius would have the Sabbath celebrated as such, and that he did not regard the Lord's day as setting aside the Sabbath. It proves that he regarded the Sunday simply as a festival. And if we would keep in mind the proper distinction between a Sabbath and a festival, all these passages of the early Christian writers could be easily explained, without the necessity of supposing that the Sabbath had been superseded by another day.

The testimony of the early fathers does indeed prove that the first day of the week was observed by the churches. But it does not satisfactorily prove, that it was observed every week throughout the year. Still less does it prove, that the observance of it rested upon Divine authority. There is not the least gleam of intimation that it was any thing more than a voluntary practice of the churches, notwithstanding Mosheim's assertion that "this pious custom was founded upon the express appointment of the Apostles."

But it subsequently grew into a weekly custom; and with the growth of this custom there sprung up a notion that there was some sort of apostolic authority for it. Coming down to the close of the second century, and to the beginning of the third, we find several writers giving testimony to the observance of the first day in their time, and even to its weekly observance. Yet they do not, any more than those who had gone before them, intimate that the day was observed as a Sabbath. Beza declares, "that hitherto the people had not abstained from labors, only while they were assembled in the congregation; there being no such duty enjoined amongst them, neither in the times of the Apostles, nor afterwards for many years, until the Emperors had embraced the Gospel, and therewith published their edicts to enforce men to it." (Heylin's Hist. Sab.) Which proves, that for the first three centuries the Sunday was not considered as a Sabbath, nor as possessing any higher character than that of a church festival.

But we are extending our remarks beyond what we designed. We take leave of the subject for the present by remarking, that it is a pitful artifice in the advocates of the Sunday observance, to seek to create the impression that in the first ages of the church it was considered as the Sabbath, when they cannot but know better, if they would take the least pains to inform themselves.

Baptist Education Society and Madison University.—We are informed, says the Oswego Times, that the injunction prohibiting the removal of the above institution from Hamilton, has been vacated by Judge Allen, upon the ground that the plaintiffs were not parties to the contract under which it is claimed the Education Society located its Seminary in that place, and did not show themselves entitled to maintain their action. The motion being thus disposed of upon tecnical grounds, the merits of the controversy are not affected by the decision. But the dissolution of the injunction does not secure the removal, as the new Board just elected are adverse to the measure, and have already passed a resolution permanently locating the institution at Hamilton.

FATHER VENTURA.

We have already given the substance of Father Ventura's remarkable letter in regard to the prospects of Papacy in Rome. The following extract from "The Genius of Italy," by the Rev. Robert Turnbull, who traveled through that beautiful country before it was involved in revolutionary struggles, will be read with interest by those who have perused the letter:—

"In connection with Gioberti, the name of Father Ventura, the distinguished Theatine preacher, and especial favorite of the Pope, presents itself. At the present time, this Abbate is one of the most popular men in Italy. As a preacher he is unrivaled in that country. Of a warm southern temperament and glowing imagination, he agitates the people like a tribune of ancient Rome. In this respect he strikingly resembles Lacordaire, the celebrated Dominican preacher of Paris. Of a dark complexion, well formed and expressive features, lofty forehead and burning eyes, with a complete mastery of impassioned and popular eloquence, he takes captive the senses and imaginations of his hearers. His voice is clear and energetic, thrilling and vibrating, like the shrill tones of a trumpet; his gesture vehement and impassioned; and his language clear, full and fiery, like a torrent of burning lava, from the crater of Vesuvius. With something of the energy and enthusiasm of Peter the Hermit, this eloquent monk has thrown himself into the grand movement of Italian liberalism, extols to the skies Pope Pius the Ninth, and proclaims the avatar of a new Catholic freedom. In a word, he has adopted the views of Gioberti, and urges the union of papal sovereignty with national reform. 'Pius Ninth,' he says in one of his discources, 'has reconciled obedience and authority, freedom and order, reason and faith, the world and the church.' On this ground, he adds, 'the Pope has assured to the See of Rome unlimited conquests, unequalled glory.'"

A PICTURE OF POPERY DRAWN BY A PAPIST.

In the Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register of last week, we find a leading article, headed "The Romans and the French," in which the editor undertakes to show that there is a very striking contrast between the conduct of the Romans and that of the French in connection with the restoration of the Pope. The French, he represents as having carried themselves most nobly throughout. To him, "the conduct of the French soldiers at Rome seems to be one of those beautiful passages in history, which are never truly written, but are left as a precious inheritance by those who are engaged in them, to cheer in after days the family circles of their friends by their pleasant recital." But, alas! how different the conduct of the Romans! Of them he says:—

"We confess it goes very hard with us to sympathize with the laudations bestowed upon the Roman inhabitants by the French Catholic papers since the joyful reception of the French troops into the capital. There is no doubt that the Romans are rejoiced to be rid of Garibaldi and his reign of terror. The peace, quiet, and enjoyment of the city of Rome was lost to them. They, even they, felt mean at seeing to what their supineness had brought them and their religion. This made them very uneasy of course; and then, too, they were in hourly dread, each of them, of having his or her throat taken possession of and cut by these fraternal ruffians—and to Italian nerves there was assuredly enough in the idea of this to make them chatter with fear while under the durance, and make joyful grimaces when the French came and drove the ugly men that frightened them away. But the idea of a national sentiment of honor; of shame at their late subjugation, and gratitude at being delivered from the dishonor of it; is what we do not give the Romans credit for possessing. They may think that it is very fine to have the Pope in Rome—a confused notion about liberty to attend High Mass, mixed up with the remembrance of picking up the coppers that some noble has flung to them in the street, burning rush lights in the window, and eating an extra amount of maccaroni;—but for a national manliness of sentiment, a human sentiment of their rights and their true glory, and a steady devotion and sacrifice of themselves for the defense of their altars and their laws, we must look to other latitudes." * * * * *

"The rejoicings of such a people as these Romans at the coming of the French, or the reïnstatement of the Pope's authority, affects us with disgust. The best we can say of them is, that they are babies, and babies should keep quiet on public occasions."

These are hard sayings, surely, for so zealous a Catholic as the editor of the Freeman's Journal to put forth concerning the people of Rome. Of their truth we are not prepared to speak very confidently. We think, however, that the editor in question, who claims to be pretty well informed in such matters, could have no motive for representing the Romans as worse than they really are, and for this reason we are inclined to believe what he says. But what an idea do his representations give of the influence of popery! Here are people who have long enjoyed the personal ministrations and watch-care of Christ's vicegerent the Pope, and who, therefore, may justly be regarded as the handiwork of popery. And what are they? According to the showing of one of their most zealous defenders, they are people without "the idea of a national sentiment of honor," who have "no national manliness of sentiment," and no disposition to "sacrifice themselves for the defense of their altars and their laws." Such are the subjects of the Pope who are favored to reside at Rome. What a commentary upon his administration! Even the soldiers of infidel and rationalistic France are so much superior to them, that a papist can not contrast the two classes without lauding the French and denouncing the Romans. Is it not time that a tree which brings forth such fruit were cut down and cast into the fire?

CAUSE OF THE CHOLERA.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As different writers have given their views respecting the cause of the cholera, the writer of this will also give his humble opinion. It appears to be "because" the "inhabitants" of the earth have broken the law of God—have changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week since the New Testament was written. That this change has taken place since the days af the apostles, any reader may see who is not blind. The New Testament calls the seventh day of the week the "Sabbath," more than fifty times and never once calls the first day of the week the Sabbath. But now ministers, and editors, and others, call the first day of the week the "Sabbath" continually, and never once call the seventh day of the week the Sabbath! Here, then, is a change of the ordinance of "the Sabbath," so plain that a child may see it. But what saysthe prophet? See Isaiah 20th chapter—

"Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with the master; as with the maid, so with the mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him. The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled; for the Lord hath spoken this word. The earth mourneth and fadeth away; the world languisheth and fadeth away; the haughty people of the earth do languish; the earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof." [Why?—what is all this for?] "Because they (the inhabitants) have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate; therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left." . . . . . "In the city is left desolation, and the gate is smitten with destruction."

Thus will the judgments of the Lord continue and increase, until there shall be "few men left;" and in the city there shall be "desolation and destruction," until the inhabitants repent of such great wickedness. This agrees also with what God promised by his servant David, when speaking of Christians, called Christ's "children." In Psalm 38: 39, he says:—"If his [Christ's] children forsake my [God's] law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my statutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes." And who can say, that these threatenings are not now being fulfilled upon professing Christians, who make void the commandment of God, to keep their own tradition. This wicked "change" of the Sabbath by the "man of sin," i. e. by the papal power, is also foretold by Daniel. See Daniel 7: 25, and 8: 12; also Ezek. 22: 26. "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned my holy things; they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shown difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my Sabbath, and I am profaned among them." See the judgment threatened in verse 31.

Now, my brethren, what right have you to call a day "the Sabbath," which the New Testament never calls the Sabbath? Or what right have you to call a day "the Lord's day," which neither our Creator, nor Christ, the "Lord of the Sabbath," ever called "my holy day." Is this right? Is this honest in the sight of God? Is it the truth as taught by Christ and the apostles? Why not rest the seventh day, "according to the commandment"? Luke 23: 26. And why not call the seventh day "the Sabbath," according to the true language of the New Testament?

A Writer.

THE POPE IN A PUZZLE.

Pius IX., says the Independent, has had a trouble befall him in addition to his political calamities. He has been called upon to decide—indeed, he is apparently driven into a corner from which all preceding Popes have contrived to keep clear, and now he must decide the question so long controverted in former days—Whether the Virgin Mary was born free from Original Sin? In a document dated Gaeta. February 3, 1849, he asks the faithful all over the world to unite in prayers, or "to use a special office of the Conception of the Virgin," that he may render a right decree. To show the momentous importance of the question, he tells them:—

"We confide, above all, in this hope, that the blessed Virgin, who has been raised, by the greatness of her merits, above all the choirs of angels, to the throne of God; who has bruised the head of the ancient serpent; and who, placed between Christ and the Church, full of grace and mildness, has always snatched Christian people from the greatest calamities. For you know, perfectly well, venerable brethren, that the foundation of our confidence is in the thrice Holy Virgin, for it is in her that God has placed the fullness of all good; so that if there is in us any hope, if there is any favor; if there is any salvation, we know that it is from her that we receive it; for such is the pleasure of Him who has willed that we should have all through Mary."

Collections for the Pope.—The Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register has a list of "contributions for the Holy Father, so far as officially reported to the Most Rev. Archbishop of Baltimore," amounting to more than eighteen thousand dollars, of which $6,000 was from the Diocese of New York, $2,831 from Philadelphia, $2,063 from Baltimore, $2,100 from New Orleans, $1,300 from Cincinnati, $1,200 from Albany.

A Prophecy from Rome.—A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce has brought into notice a remarkable prediction, which, he says, was lately found in Rome, in the Library of the Augustinian Convent. It is printed in a work entitled, "De Fluctibus misticis navis: authore Ridolpho Gelthier; Augustae, 1675." The prophecy is on page 150, and runs thus:—

"Before the middle of the nineteenth century, seditions will be excited every where in Europe; Republics will arise; Kings will be put to death; together with the nobilities and ecclesiastics; and religionists will desert their convents. Famine, pestilence, and earthquakes, will spread desolation over many cities. Rome will lose her sceptre by the invasion of false philosophers. The Pope will be made a captive by his own people, and the Church of God will be placed under tribute, divested of its temporal possessions. In a short time there will be no Pope. A prince from the north will overrun Europe with a great army, destroy the Republics, and exterminate all rebels. His sword, wielded by God, will vigorously defend the Church of Christ, uphold the orthodox faith, and subdue the Mohammedan power. A new pastor, the final one, will come by a heavenly sign, from the shore, in simplicity of heart and in the doctrine of Christ, and peace will be restored to the world."

Tomatoes.—Dr. Bailey, editor of the National Era, whose skill and judgment are as excellent in medical matters as in political, scouts the idea that tomatoes ought to be avoided in time of cholera. If properly cooked, "nothing more wholesome can be eaten," in moderation, of course. He is also of opinion, that good, ripe apples and peaches, eaten at proper times, and not in excess, are not unwholesome. He says:

"People seem to think, however, that they can take fruit at any time, even when the stomach is heavily engaged with the disposition of an ample meal. They cram themselves with apples or peaches just when the notion seizes them, and then, if decomposition should take the place of digestion, and the over-tasked stomach get rid of the indigested mass by throwing it off upon the bowels, thereby occasioning diarrhea, they blame God's gifts, instead of their own folly in abusing them. It was not the apple that did the mischief, it was the eating of it at the wrong time. There is a time to eat apples, and there is a time to let them alone. Either make fruit a part of a meal, using it as a dessert, or, take it after the stomach has completed the process of digestion, and has nothing else to do than to make a good report of whatever new subject may be referred to it. By the way, we noticed in a list of very wholesome meats lately recommended by a medical man, the item of veal. Viler stuff cannot be taken upon a weak stomach. No meat is so apt to produce diarrhea in persons in the least degree disposed to irregularity in their evacuations."

Controversy among the Jews.—For some years past, says the Philadelphia North American, an animated controversy has been going on among the Jews in the United States relative to the observance or neglect of ancient ceremonials; and the "Occident," an able periodical in this city, edited by Rev. Mr. Leeser, has contained many communications on the subject. In New York and Charleston, it has been especially warm, and progressed so far that synagogues have been erected by each party. The difference consists in the fact that a portion of the sect desire to secure freedom of action as to the matter of keeping open their stores on Saturday, and the eating of prohibited meat at coffee-houses. The opposition party demand a strict conformity with all the requisitions of the Jewish creed, and an observance of the forms and ceremonials of the Jewish worship.

Rev. I. J. Roberts.—The Southern Baptist, speaking of the return of this missionary from China, and of his arrival at Charleston, where he preached on the 5th inst., says: "Elder R. revisits his native land, after years of arduous toil as a missionary, with the consent of the Board. He will spend a few days in this State, and attend some of our Associations, after which he will visit the West and his native State, Mississippi, and then return to China, to prosecute the work of preaching to the heathen the unsearchable riches of Christ, to which he has consecrated his life. Brother R. speaks encouragingly of the prospect of planting successfully the Gospel in that vast empire."

Death of the Rev. Austin Dickinson.—This gentleman, so long known to the Christian public as the projector and editor of the National Preacher; as the originator of several important educational enterprises, and as the correspondent of various leading journals over the signature of "A. D.," died on the 15th inst., at the house of his brother, Rev. Baxter Dickinson, D. D., in this city, of bilious diarrhea, aged 58 years. He was the principal founder of Mayville College, Tenn. In 1823, he established the "Family Visitor," in Richmond, Va., one of the earliest religious newspapers in this country, which is still published at Philadelphia, under the title of the "Christian Observer." At a critical period in the history of Amherst College, he was instrumental in procuring the funds requisite for placing that institution on a permanent foundation, and aided essentially in obtaining its charter. For the last five years, he has been chiefly occupied in promoting the circulation of religious and missionary intelligence through the secular press, in which labor he has been greatly aided by his intelligent and accomplished lady. He has also been an efficient advocate of cheap postage, and has contributed much to mould public sentiment aright on that subject. Hundreds and thousands have read his condensed paragraphs, containing religious sentiment or fact, without knowing the source from which they came. Few men have exerted a wider or happier influence on their race, though it has been silent and noiseless. His end was peace.

English Baptists.—The eighteenth annual meeting of the ministers and representatives of the General Baptist Churches (open communion) forming the New Concection, was held in Archdeacon-lane Chapel, Leicester, on Tuesday, June 26, 1849. Rev. Amos Sutton, returned missionary from Orissa, was appointed Chairman, and Rev. W. Underwood, of Paddington, Secretary. Sermons were preached by Rev. John Stevenson, and Rev. R. Kenny. The subject of the circular letter for next year is, "The Importance of Sunday Schools to the extension of Christ's Kingdom; and the best means of increasing their usefulness." The Rev. W. Underwood, of London, to write it. The Association appointed a number of delegates to the approaching Peace Congress, in Paris. The statistics for the year show a small decrease in the number of members.

A New Work.—We learn from the Congregationalist, that Rev. J. L. Merrick, of Amherst, formerly a missionary in Persia, is about to publish, from the press of Phillips and Sampson, a translation which he made while in Persia of a Mohammedan work on the Life and Religion of Mohammed. It gives the Sheah or Persian views on the subject, and contains many stories and traditions not generally known to our literature, as well as illustrative of the distinction between the two great sects of that faith.

Revivals.—At St. George, Maine, forty were recently baptized and added to the First and Second Baptist Churches. Thirty-one were lately baptized at Waterboro', Me. On the 16th of June, thirty were baptized at East Tisbury, (Martha's Vineyard,) Mass. Fourteen have been baptized within a short time at Brookline, Mass., as the result of the religious interest there. Fourteen have been baptized lately at Mendon, N. Y. At Prattsburg, Steuben Co., N. Y., thirty-two were baptized recently; and at Saratoga, N. Y., fifteen were baptized. Forty have been baptized within a short time at the Baptist Church at Parkers-burg, Chester Co., Pa.

Episcopacy in Ireland.—The Archbishop of Armagh receives £12,000 per annum, the Bishop of Clogher receives £10,000, and the Bishop of Derry £8,000 annually. In this calculation, no reference is made to the enormous amount of church lands, glebes and other property, possessed by the clergy, averaging about 770,304 acres. The number of benefices possessed by the Irish Church is 1,643, and between 2,207 clergymen is divided annually the sum of £680,000. The ministers in many instances preach to empty seats, and with difficulty obtain their subsistence by the help of bayonets, producing twice as many riots as conversions. So says the Christian Chronicle.

London Poverty.—Lord Ashley, in his speech on the Reformation of Juvenile Offenders, July 24, mentioned that the majority of the poor women who availed themselves of the public work-houses, brought only six or seven articles each as the whole family stock. And in numberless cases the persons employed at the work-houses were fain to lend these poor women a gown to wear while they washed their only garment, in which they had come.

Mendi Mission, Africa.—We understand that John S. Brooks, and his wife, Fidelia Coburn Brooks, have left the Mount Hope Mission School, C. W., and offered their services to the Executive Committee of the American Missionary Association, with the request that they be appointed to the Mendi Mission. The result of their application has not transpired.

Hon. and Rev. Baptist W. Noel.—The last steamer brings intelligence that the author of the admirable "Essay on the Union of Church and State," has united himself with the Baptists, been rebaptized, and become a minister of a congregation in Gray's Inn Road, London.

Pawcatuck Church.—At a recent meeting of the Pawcatuck Seventh-day Baptist church, it was resolved to erase from the list of members the names of all persons who do not hereafter communicate with the church, by letter or otherwise, as often as once in two years.

J. Maxson, Jr., Church Clerk.

The European American, is the title of a weekly paper just started in this city to disseminate European intelligence and discuss European affairs. It advocates very earnestly the reformatory movements now going on in Europe, and will undoubtedly do much to create sympathy for those movements. Published at No. 7 Spruce-street.

The Cholera appears to be gradually decreasing in New York, as well as in most of the other cities of this country. The City Inspector reports 233 deaths by Cholera last week, which is a decrease of 156 on the preceding week. The following table shows the gradual decrease in the general mortality, as well as in Cholera, from the highest point, on the 21st July, to the present time:

Week ending	Total deaths.	Deaths by Chol.
July 14	991	484
" 21	1409	714
" 29	1352	692
Aug. 4	1273	678
" 11	1011	[illegible]
" 18	968	[illegible]
" 25	749	[illegible]

General Intelligence.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamer Canada, with one week later intelligence from Europe, arrived at New York on the 25th inst.

From Hungary, we have rumors of a victory obtained by Bem over the Austrian and Russian army 60,000 strong, a great slaughter of Imperialists, and many prisoners taken. There is also a rumor that the Hungarians have taken Raab, where they found a large amount of stores. Concerning the whole matter, however, there is much confusion.

From Rome, the latest intelligence is to the 20th ult. at which time nothing final had been decided on; all things remained in exactly the same state, so far as the papal government is concerned, as they were on the day General Oudinot entered Rome. The commissioners named by the Pope had arrived at Rome, and commenced proceedings by dissolving the whole of the Roman army—even the troops which had remained faithful to the Pope. It is said that another Commander of the French forces has been appointed in place of Gen. Oudinot, he being recalled on account of his inability to work in harmony with the Pope, who has always looked upon him with suspicion.

The English papers chronicle the progress of the Queen in Ireland, and attendant proceedings, at great length. The Cholera continues constantly on the increase. The deaths in the London district which, by last weeks advices were 783, reached 926. There were 578 cases on Wednesday and 253 deaths. On Thursday, 559 cases and 241 deaths. In Manchester and the neighborhood some additional cases are reported, but the manufacturing districts up to this time have been happily spared from the scourge. Bristol seems to be greatly improving. At Plymouth and along the south-west coast the epidemic seems still to prevail to a very alarming degree. In Wales the mortality has been very considerable, but the South-east coast has generally escaped the visitation. During the last few days the heat of the weather has been excessive.

Mr. Denison, a London banker, and M. P. for Surrey, died the other day, aged 80. His personal estate consists of $10,000,000 in gold, his real estates in Yorkshire and Surrey are worth $3,000,000 more. Nearly all this he has settled upon a Lord of the name of Albert Conyngham.

Madame Lebrun, who was known her for attachment to Queen Marie Antoinette, has just died at Dinan, aged 106. She was in possession of her faculties to the last. She has left four children the eldest of whom is a son, aged 78.

CHINESE ITEMS.

The Philadelphia North American has files of Hong Kong papers to May 25th, from the following interesting items are collected :—

Some defalcations of imperial officers, which occurred some years back, have been made up in a style which is worthy of attention. One of these Chinese defaulters was a Mantchoo mandarin, who made way with nine millions of taels from the public treasury. A great portion of this has been made up by laying the responsibility upon all the defaulter's relatives, and it will be continued to all his descendants, until the amount is paid in full.

The British forces from Hong Kong, with their light armed cruisers, have been making serious work among the native pirates who infest the Chinese seas. They have taken several piratical junks, and some fifty of the pirates, who will, no doubt, be tried and executed.

The papers contain nothing new relative to the difficulties between the British and Chinese about the opening of the ports. The Emperor is of opinion, that the British must have some sinister object in view, as they seem so anxious to get free access to his cities; and in this he is not wrong. Contrary to expectation, the people of Canton are remarkably quiet, and conduct themselves with courtesy and kindness to foreigners. The Mail says that they seem anxious to forget past differences. The literary and educated classes of Canton had addressed a long letter to the British Envoy, which speaks of the will of the people as being the direction of Heaven and the Emperor, regarding both native and foreigner as children of one common family, and calls upon the British, as they reverence the religion of Jesus, and pay the highest honors to the Supreme being, to pay respect "to the divine principle of right." It states the number of armed and drilled volunteers ready for service in the province of Canton as over 200,000.

The Emperor has directed that hereafter sacrifices of fowls, pork, etc., be offered to the artillery, to give greater efficacy to them and propitiate the spirit that is in them. The cannon are now cast on foreign models.

Great riots having occurred in one of the provinces of the Empire, in which thousands of combatants were engaged, and cannon used, the Government kept entirely aloof, and directed that the clans should not be interfered with, but permitted to kill each other if they liked, so long as they killed no one else.

There has been a great flood in the Yang-tee-King River, which inundated five provinces. Whole villages were destroyed, thousands of lives lost, and great numbers of vessels wrecked.

The Mail gives an account of an attack made upon the British cutter Emma, by a Chinese opium smuggler, in which an American named Widdifield, who was on board the Emma, was severely wounded by a fire-ball. He went into the hold, and throwing himself upon his face, remained quiet until the Chinese began to scuttle the vessel, when he jumped overboard, and swam ashore. He was conveyed to Canton.

Hon. Ex-Chancellor Walworth and others passed up Lake Champlain, on the 3d inst. from their visit of inspection of the projected ship canal from the St. Lawrence river to Lake Champlain, and are about to report favorably of that work.

Adventures of an Escaped Convict.

In May last, a convict named Phillips escaped from the Massachusetts State Prison in rather a comic manner. He represented to the Warden and another officer, that he knew where a large amount of money was buried, and that he would conduct them to it if they desired. Accordingly they went with him to a lonely spot which he pointed out, and commenced digging. When they had dug a pretty deep hole, Phillips managed to get out, and commenced shoveling the dirt back upon his keepers. He succeeded in burying them enough to escape while they were working out. Last week he was retaken at Boston and placed in prison again to serve out the remaining eight years of his sentence. The Boston Times gives the following acconnt of his adventures :—

In the first place, with regard to the maneuver by which he escaped from the Warden, he had no notion at all of leading the party to the true spot—his sole idea was to effect his escape. Leaving them as nimbly as possible, he wended his way through thick woods, and at the end of three days came to one of the huts of the Indian settlement, (where he was once reported to have been seen,) feet so blistered that he could hardly walk, and stomach which had taken no food since his departure. Being without money, he pulled a new black silk handkerchief from his neck, and gave it to an Indian woman for bread.

Stopping in that region for a day or two, he took a circuitous route for "down east," arrived in Portsmouth, N. H., and there took passage in a craft bound for Bath, at which latter place he arrived at the expiration of two weeks from the time of leaving the "gold region." Here he shipped on board a fishing smack. He had continued in the fishing business ever since, until last week, when on Saturday he arrived here direct from Bath, in view of ascertaining the whereabouts of his wife, and seeing her, without being detected by the authorities, and then again to depart. "But," said he, "you've got me now—my plans for an upright, respectable future life are defeated, and I and my family are ruined."

Meeting of Tailors and Semstresses in Boston.

The Journeymen Tailors on a strike for higher wages met in large numbers on Tuesday evening of last week, in Faneuil Hall, filling the hall below, while the galleries were filled with ladies, mostly, we presume, interested in the same trade. The chair was occupied by Mr. Trask, and addresses were made by Mr. Flemming, Mr. Horace Seaver, and Mr. A. F. Treanor.

Mr. Fleming showed a variety of garments manufactured for the large "ready made" establishments, and stated the miserably low prices which are paid for making them, as well as the prices at which they are sold. Only twenty cents are paid for making vests which sell for from $1 75 to $2 50; seven cents for pants and over-alls sold for from 75 cents to $1, and seven cents for shirts that sell for $1 50! The lowness of the wages compared with the work that ought to be done on these garments is certainly appalling, and if the workmen do not suffer, the purchasers surely must.

Several sums were announced as having been contributed to aid the strike. The stone-cutters had given $40, the printers $25, and the tailors of Woonsocket $50.

Mr. Horace Seaver read a series of resolutions prepared for the meeting by the United Committee, and addressed the meeting eloquently and at considerable length in support of them. The resolutions propose a union of all the workmen in the trade for the assertion of their rights, and particularly coöperative unions to secure them, by rendering the operatives independent of the capitalists. [Chronotype.

The New-York State Agricultural Society.

The Society has selected the City of Syracuse for its Annual Show, on the 11th, 12th and 13th of September next. The grounds selected are on a fine elevation north of the city, about half a mile from the Syracuse House, and command a delightful view of the Lake, the city, and surrounding country. Twenty one acres are to be enclosed, including within them a beautiful grove of six acres, in which a plentiful supply of water is found for the cattle. Visitors will be well accommodated.

The premium list for competition amounts to $6,000, and includes every department of industry. The rail-road companies, with their usual liberality, will convey stock and articles for exhibition free, and visitors for half price. The grounds will be opened to the judges and the members of the Society on Tuesday the 11th. On Wednesday visitors generally will be admitted, and the exhibition will continue open on Thursday. Prof. F. W. Johnson, of the Durham University, England, a distinguished Agricultural Chemist, will deliver the Annual Address, on Thursday, on the show grounds. The President and Vice-President of the United States, the Governor of this State, and the Governors of several other States, have signified their intention to be present.

On Friday, the 14th of September, the Pomological Convention will commence its sessions, and there can be little doubt but that the exhibition of fruits, &c., will obtain unqualified approbation. The deliberations of the Convention will embrace many subjects of great importance, and the results are expected to exert a favorable influence upon American Horticulture.

ACCIDENTAL HOMICIDE.—An instance of this kind occurred at Williamsburgh on the 20th inst. The facts are as follows: It appears from the evidence of the principal witnesses at the Coroner's inquest, that the deceased, whose name is John Brophy, and one Patrick Roach, were playing and skylarking together, not, it appeared to the witnesses, as though any unkind feelings existed between them, but rather from a love of fun and frolic. In the course of a tussel which they had, Brophy tripped Patrick by the heels, and immediately ran away, when Patrick picked up a large billet of wood and threw it after deceased, which striking him in the back, between the shoulders, produced instant death. The unfortunate man did not speak after he was struck. The Jury rendered a verdict that the deceased came to his death by an accidental blow from the hands of Patrick Roach.

FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS.—The Louisville Courier of the 14th inst. contains extracts from a letter received in that city from a French gentleman in command of a California company, dated Fort Laramie, June 16, detailing the particulars of a fight with the Indians. The writer thus describes the battle :—

"About the break of day we discovered the Indians advancing upon us. Their number was very great. They yelled and came directly upon us. You may imagine how I felt. There were some who wished to save themselves, but I obliged them to remain, and gave orders that they should barricade themselves behind the wagons, from which they could fire with their guns, and not to lose courage. The firing commenced on both sides, and every discharge of ours brought down its man. For half an hour we kept them at bay: but, notwithstanding, they continued to close in with us more and more, and we could not hold out against their numbers. We were obliged to abandon our ground, but not until we had killed some 100 Indians. We had 13 killed and 9 wounded, of whom 6 were so dangerously that they could not follow us. Two fell at my side; and I had my hat pierced by a bullet which grazed my hair. Finally, we loosened, each one, a mule, and took to flight toward Fort Laramie, 200 miles distant, leaving to the Indians everything beside."

KIDNAPPERS CONVICTED.—The Westchester, (Pa.) Village Record publishes a sketch of the trial and conviction of Amos McFarland and Solomon Staites, on the charge of kidnapping a colored boy. The outrage was committed in the vicinity of Downington. The principal witness in the case was the boy who was kidnapped, a stout, hearty-looking fellow, apparently about fifteen years old. The boy was an apprentice of Wm. Evans, of that village, and had been coaxed off by the defendants, on pretence of getting him a better place in Philadelphia or Baltimore. He was taken to the former city in the cars, kept there several days, and thence he was sent, as he supposed, to Wilmington; but on his arrival he was taken to a gloomy building and fastened up. This building proved to be a slave establishment in Baltimore. The story of the boy led to the restoration of his liberty, and to the punishment of the parties implicated in the abstraction. McFarlan, one of the parties convicted, is a young man, who had some advantages; he has only been a few years married, and within a year or two kept one of the principal hotels at Downington. His coadjutor was a colored man of 25 or 30 years of age. Both were convicted, and the former was sentenced to six years, and the latter was sentenced to five years in the penitentiary, and $500 fine.

A CASE OF KIDNAPPING.—An outrageous case of kidnapping came to light in Baltimore on Thursday last. A colored man named Albert, who had run away from his owner, a Mrs. Hays of Cecil county, Md., was kidnapped on Wednesday by officer McCreery of Elkton, Md., in Chester County, Pa., and brought on to Baltimore and lodged in Wilson's slave prison. Albert ran away four years since, and during that period has been employed by a Quaker gentleman, Mr. George Martin of Chester County, Pa., acting in the capacity of a free man. His whereabouts being ascertained, he was stealthily kidnapped and torn away to endure again the worst of bondage; to be sold to the slave-traders of the Southern States, and unless purchased by philanthropic friends will, ere long, be in Louisiana. Mr. Martin, his former employer, followed on with a view of obtaining his release by some means, but no sooner had he touched the free soil of Baltimore than he was arrested at the instance of the slave-dealers, and suit instituted against him to recover $1,000 alledged to be due as damages for Albert's services and detention for the four years.

WHALING NEAR HOME.—Two whales were captured on the 23d inst., near the Ocean House, Shrewsbury Inlet, at mid-day. They were seen in the Narrows in the morning by the captain and passengers on board the steam-boat Confidence, and by 11 o'clock were perceived by a pleasure party near the horse-shoe within Sandy Hook, who gave immediate notice, which called out all the boats on the shores on either side. At 12 o'clock they were joined by other boats from the Ocean House and the Highland House, which drove them up toward the Ocean House, where, by 500 spectators on the shore and afloat, a very exciting scene was witnessed. Capt. Skenk succeeded in harpooning the large one, (about 30 feet long) and was towed with great rapidity about the channel, first in one direction and then in another, by his harpoon line, fast to the whale by the fluke, the smaller female keeping company with her male companion. When a short distance from the dock at the Ocean House, one of the fishermen suceeded in driving a harpoon into her, and in beaching her in shoal water, a little beyond the House, where she was killed with knives by the fishermen near. Capt. Skenk, however, had more work with the other, though accompanied and assisted by the many boats that were out, filled with ladies, who on this occasion went a whaling voyage with the gentlemen.

FEMALE SAILOR.—A letter received in Nantucket from our Consul at Paita, states that the ship Christopher Mitchell, of that port, touched at Paita on the 6th of July, to land a female who shipped at Nantucket as a green hand, under the name of Geo. Johnson; but who, upon her sex being known, gave her real name as Ann Johnson, daughter of George Johnson, living in Rochester, N. Y,, at 22 Oak street, a shoemaker by trade. Her appearance is said to be that of a good-looking boy of about 16 or 17 years. She did her duty cheerfully, going aloft to take in sail in the heaviest weather and has taken her regular mast-heads and helms all the voyage.

The circus company of Welch, Delavan & Co., who are traveling in Ohio, lost three members in three days. They went to Eaton to perform on the 21st of July, but only opened in the evening; there one of their number died. At a small town where they stopped to water their horses, the next day, another sickened and died in two hours, and at Dayton, on the day following, they left another, who has since died.

EXPLOSION AT CINCINNATI.—The boiler in the foundry of Pollock & Jones, Cincinnati, exploded on the 18th inst. The force of the explosion lifted the boiler from its bed and removed it to the distance of some thirty feet, and the heavy iron shaft of the engine was driven through the foundry into the street. The walls and roof of the building were blown into a complete wreck, and the fragments scattered widely in every direction. There were some fifteen or twenty hands in the foundry at the time of the accident, but no one was hurt. The engineer was just going up the steps to the engine, which for room's sake was placed on the top of the boiler, when the hissing from the valve caused him to spring suddenly to one side, and though covered with rubbish he escaped uninjured. For a half square all around there was a perfect shower of brick-bats; several persons were struck by them, but none seriously injured, that we have heard of. A half brick was blown over the 3 story brick back of the foundry and across a street striking on the breast a gentleman who was standing in his door, with force enough to stagger him. The noise of the explosion shook the houses for a square around.

MYSTERIOUS MOVEMENT IN NEW ORLEANS.—The papers in New Orleans are silent about a movement that is going on in that city, which has, if we are correctly informed, the appearance of a military movement against some neighboring country, and is, for this reason, contrary to our laws. It is stated to us that a company of fifteen hundred men is being enrolled in that city, who are to serve for twelve months, and to be paid one thousand dollars each for the year. They are told that they are to fight, but have not been informed against whom their warfare is to be directed. It is said that half a million of dollars are on deposit in the Canal Bank to use in the enterprise. Nearly the full complement of men has been obtained, and it is probable that developments will soon be made as to the design of the expedition. [Missouri Republican.

VISITORS TO NEW YORK.—Dr. Geer, the Heath Physician, has issued an address to the merchants and others who wish to visit New York, assuring them that the danger has greatly disappeared. In the 1st, 2d, and 3d wards, comprising the chief business part of the city, there were from the 11th to the 18th of August, only 10 deaths, in the 4th ward 35, of which 30 were at the William-street hospital, and all originated in other wards; and in the 5th, 12. The first three wards have a population of over 30,000.

SUMMARY.

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin has been shown what purports to be a $5 note of the Farmer's Bank of Mount Holly, N. J. There is no resemblance between the spurious note and the genuine notes of the Bank, except in the signatures of the officers, which are well imitated. The general style of the plate differs from the genuine, and the engraving is poorly executed. There is one peculiarity in the spurious note by which it may at once be detected. In the imprint, beneath the President's signature, the N in New York is reversed, thus—N. A glance at this will at once reveal the cheat.

The terminus of the Panama and Chagres Rail-road, on the Pacific side, will be a mile or two north-west of the city of Panama, from which point it is proposed to run a pier of two or three miles in length, to an island in the bay, where will be the depot for the steamers to and from San Francisco. The water in the bay is not of sufficient depth to admit of any other course.

At the commencement of Middlebury College, on the 25th ult., there was a novelty among the speakers. The Latin salutatory was delivered by a colored youth, and he acquitted himself well. He subsequently appeared upon the stage and delivered an oration in English. The Princeton Record says that, as a speaker, a writer, or a thinker, he would not suffer in comparison with his classmates.

Mr. Walsh, in a recent letter from Paris, says: "The Paris Court of Appeals has decided that the condition not to marry, attached to a legacy, is contrary to the freedom of marriage, and must, therefore, be held as if not written." So it appears that the French Supreme Judges concur in the opinion of Judge Lewis, which was reversed by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

A correspondent of the New York Courier says in a late letter, that "nearly every person, including government officers, whose letters to the United States created this gold excitement, were deeply interested in land speculations here, and are now reaping golden harvest by the rise of Real Estate."

By the schr. Eglantine, dates from Port au Prince to Aug. 2, were received at Boston, which state that another expedition against St. Domingo was talked of, but not probable to take place. President Solouque had shot two of his Generals for alledged political intrigues. The execution took place in a public square, on a Sunday, the President's Guard firing the volley.

Aspinwall & Co., will have in operation by the 1st of October next, three small steamers, on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, to run from San Francisco to the Gold Regions at the head waters of each.

The railway depot of the Boston and Albany Railroad, at Greenbush, is one of the largest in the country, being eight hundred feet in length, 100 in width, and covering two acres. It cost $140,000.

In 1835, only 13 years ago, there were not 5,000 white inhabitants between Lake Michigan and the Pacific ocean. Now there are nearly 1,000,000.

Rev. Wm. C. Brown is on his way to Stillwater, Minnesota Territory, under the patronage of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society.

The Pittsfied Sun, on the 26th July issued the first number of its fiftieth volume, the present senior editor having commenced it fifty years ago.

The Detroit Free Press says that John Thompson, Esq., arrived in that city in thirteen days from Liverpool.

This year is the thousandth anniversary of the birth of King Alfred, at Wantage, in Berkshire. It is said that a committee of English and American gentlemen is about to meet, to organize a "grand national jubilee," at Wantage, in honor of the Anglo-Saxon hero.

The Iceland Cod-fishery this year has been very successful. A smack lately arrived in the Thames with 19,000 cod on board, and reported that one of the French smacks on the coast of Iceland had taken as many as 50,000 head.

The Indiana Journal says, that Messrs. Watts and Gormon, candidates for Congress in the 6th district of that State, had a fight on the 8th inst, in which Gormon was dangerously wounded by Watts, with a knife.

Two new Post Offices were recently established, as follows: "Bem, Green county, Wis.," and "Kossuth, Washington county, Me.," with a view to perpetuate, as far as possible, the names of the brave and victorious actors in the Hungarian war.

It may not be understood by all, that transient papers dropped into the Post-office are not forwarded unless the postage be prepaid. This is in accordance with the office regulations; and to avoid disappointment, those who wish to send papers to their friends should bear it in mind.

Every pound weight of cochineal contains seventy thousand insects boiled to death; so that the annual sacrifice of insect life, to procure our scarlet and crimson dyes, amounts to about forty millions of these small members of creation.

The Rockville (Md.) Journal states that six negroes, belonging to E. R. Griffith, Mr. Warfield, and some others, left their owners on Saturday night week, and have not been taken—they are doubtless making for a free State. The Journal very much fears that Abolitionists are at work in their midst.

New York Markets—Monday, Aug. 27.

Ashes—Pots $6 12; Pearls 6 18.

Flour and Meal—Flour is in good demand at 5 44 a 5 56 for State and Western, and 5 62 a 5 75 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 37. Jersey Meal 2 44.

Grain—Wheat is dull; a lot of new Genesee brought 1 28; red Virginia 1 10. Corn is heavy, and prices a little lower, being from 59 to 62c. Rye 62c. Oats 37 a 41c.

Provisions—Pork, prime 8 75, mess 10 75. Beef, prime 11 50, mess 13 50 a 14 00. Butter has declined 1 cent per lb., 9 a 11c. for Ohio, 11 a 14c. for State. Cheese 2 a 7c.

Wool—The sales for three or four days past reach 150,000 lbs. at 28c. for common and half blood, 34c. for half and three-quarter blood, 36 a 37½c. for full blood, and 38 a 40c. for Saxony. The sales show an improving market

MARRIED.

In New York, on the 23d inst., by Eld. Geo. B. Utter, Mr. HENRY C. MAXSON to Miss ELLEN DOWNING, all of New York.

On the 16th inst., at the house of Wm. H. Redfield, by G. Babcock, Esq., Mr. DANIEL NEWCOMB, of Madison, Wis., to FANNY WILLIAMS, of Darien, N. Y.

At Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., July 3, 1849, by E. Saunders, Esq., Mr. HAZARD W. TITUS, of Niagara, to Miss CATHARINE CLARK, of the former place.

DIED.

In Lincklaen, N. Y., May 19, of a chronic disease of the head, MATTEW STILLMAN, in the 34th year of his age. He was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church, and leaves a wife and two children to mourn their loss. W. B. G.

In New York, on the 19th inst., an infant son of Dr. J. D. B. and Caroline B. Stillman.

LETTERS.

Wm. H. Black, Wm. M. Jones, Gerrit Smith, W. B. Gillett, E. P. R. Hoag, I. D. Titsworth, Ellis A. Davis, W. C. Kenyon, B. W. Rogers, K. C. Barker, J. C. West, John Parmalee.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society :—

Rhode Island—H. S. Berry, Josiah W. Langworthy, Thomas P. Lanphear, Thomas R. Green, $25 each; Joseph Potter, Thomas W. Potter, $7 50 each; N. F. Chipman, J. S. Champlin, Elijah Champlin, Alfred Clarke, David Langworthy, Franklin Cottrell, Oliver Langworthy, Christopher C. Lewis, Jr., Sands Palmer, Lester Crandall, Daniel Coon, Wm. Potter, H. W. Stillman, S. P. Stillman, A. Stillman, M. Stillman, Jonathan Maxson, Jonathan Maxson, Jr., Charles Maxson, John S. Champlin, Franklin Babcock, Peleg Clarke, Benjamin Green, Hiram Arnold, Asa Woodmancy, Samuel Crandall, Simon Kenyon, N. H. Langworthy, G. P. Barber, George Gavitt, Asher M. Babcock, Wm. Haynes, W. Ellery Maxson, Benjamin Bentley, Calvert B. Cottrell, John B. Bradford, Nathan Babcock, Alpheus A. Burdick, Wanton A. Whitford, Benjamin F. Langworthy, $5 each.

Shiloh, N. J.—Jeremiah B. Davis, Ellis A. Davis, Gilbert M Randolph, Enoch J. Davis, Reuben J. Ayers, Phineas A. Bowen, $5 each.

DeRuyter—Joshua Clarke $25; Matthew Wells, Jr., $10; Alex. Campbell, Ira Spencer, J. R. Irish, Annis Coon, Benjamin S. Burdick, Daniel C. Burdick, R. G. Burdick, Phineas C. Burdick, E. S. Colgrove, $5 each.

Scott—A. L Whiting, G. W. Maxson, $5 each.

Nile—E. Lanphear $5, J. Allen & R. W. Utter $2 50.

Richburg—Wm. M. Truman $5.

Wirt—Joel Kenyon $5.

Preston—Mary C. Truman $5.

Syracuse—Randolph Titsworth $5.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder :—

V. Hull Scott	$2 00	to vol. 6	No. 52
Paul Clark "	2 00	" 6	" 52
C. S. Potter "	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. G. Lewis "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. Barber, 3d "	2 00	" 6	" 52
A. D. C. Barber "	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. Hubbard "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Amelia Green "	2 00	" 6	" 52
H. C. Hubbard "	1 00	" 6	" 26
P. Knight Little York	2 00	" 6	" 52
Eli S Colgrove DeRuyter	2 00	" 6	" 52
Daniel C. Burdick Lincklaen	4 50	" —	" —
Wm. G. Crandall "	40	" 6	" 10
Jared Stillman "	40	" 6	" 10
Wm. E. Burdick "	40	" 6	" 10
E. Lanphear Nile	2 00	" 6	" 52
Joseph Allen "	2 00	" 6	" 52
N. K. Brown "	1 00	" 6	" 26
A. C. Stannard "	50	" 6	" 13
Joel Kenyon Wirt	1 00	" 6	" 52
Mary C. Truman Preston	2 00	" 6	" 52
O. Holcomb "	2 00	" 7	" 10
H. A. Maxson "	1 00	" 6	" 36
Russell Maxson "	2 00	" 6	" 52
Gerrit Smith Peterboro	4 00	" 7	" 52
A. G. Burdick Durhamville	2 00	" 6	" 52
J. C. West Shiloh N J	2 00	" 7	" 9
J. S. Bacon "	2 00	" 6	" 52
R. Dunham Plainfield N J	2 00	" 6	" 52
B. F. Langworthy Stonington Ct	2 00	" 6	" 52
K. C. Barker Newport R I	2 00	" 6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

J. D. Randolph Scott	$5 00	to vol. 3	No. 26
Thos. Maxson DeRuyter	3 00	" 5	" 52
S. B. Cardner "	2 00	" 5	" 52
C. A. Stillman "	1 00	" 5	" 52
T. Clark, Friendship	2 00	" 5	" 52
B. F. Robbins "	1 50	" 5	" 52
N. N. Brown Nile	1 00	" 5	" 52
A. C. Stannard "	75	" 5	" 52

Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society.

Officers.

President—LUCIUS CRANDALL, of Plainfield, N. J.

Vice Pres.
- NATHAN V. HULL, of Alfred, N. Y.
- J. A. LANGWORTHY, of Genesee, N. Y.
- MATT. WELLS, Jr., of DeRuyter, N. Y.
- CHARLES POTTER, of Adams, N. Y.
- J. B. MAXSON, of Stephentown, N. Y.

Cor. Sec.—GEORGE B. UTTER, of New York.

Rec. Sec.—THOMAS B. STILLMAN, of New York.

Treas.—BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Williamsburg, L. I.

Co-Trustees,
- GEORGE GREENMAN, of Mystic, Ct.
- JOHN D. TITSWORTH, of Plainfield N. J.
- WM. M. ROGERS, of Brooklyn, L. I.
- ISAAC D. TITSWORTH, of Shiloh, N. J.

Our Anniversaries.

The Missionary Association

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will hold its Seventh Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the first day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M. Eld. Lucius Crandall is appointed S preach a Missionary Discourse at the opening of the ession.

The Tract Society.

The American Sabbath Tract Society will hold its Sixth Anniversary with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the second day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849, at 10 o'clock A. M.

The General Conference.

The Forty-third Meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference will be held with the First Church in Hopkinton, R. I., commencing on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849. Eld. Nathan V. Hull is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse; Eld. Lucius Crandall alternate. At the last meeting of the Conference, a resolution wa passed recommending its continuance triennially as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination, and that each church be respectfully invited, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. PASSENGER TRAINS UP—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. PASSENGER TRAINS DOWN—Leave White House at 5¼ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¼ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¼ A. M., Somerville 4½ A. M., Plainfield 5½ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. RETURNING—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

NEW LINE FOR SCHOOLEY'S MOUNTAIN.

Splendid stages will leave for the Mountain on the arrival of the 9 o'clock train from New York at White House. This route has less staging than any other.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, ALBANY, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the [illegible] and then hand in their bills for advertising [illegible] that they may be laid before the Board of [illegible] and passed for payment. See Revised [illegible], Vol. I. Chap. 6, Title3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

THE PLAIN OF BENGAL.

Of the provinces which had been subject to the house of Tamerlane, the wealthiest was Bengal. No part of India possessed such natural advantages, both for agriculture and commerce. The Ganges, rushing through a hundred channels to the sea, has formed a vast plain of rich mould, which even under the tropical sky rivals the verdure of an England April. The rice-fields yield an increase such as is elsewhere unknown. Spices, sugar, vegetable oils, are produced with marvelous exuberance. The river affords an inexhaustible supply of fish. The desolate islands along the sea-coast, overgrown by noxious vegetation, and swarming with deer and tigers, supply the cultivated districts with abundance of salt. The great stream which fertilizes the soil, is at the same time the chief highway of Eastern commerce. On its banks, and on those of its tributary waters, are the wealthiest marts, the most splendid capitals, and the most sacred shrines of India. The tyranny of man had for ages struggled in vain against the overflowing bounty of nature. In spite of the Mussulman despot, and of the Maharatta free-booter, Bengal was known through the East as the Garden of Eden, as the rich kingdom. Its population multiplied exceedingly. Distant provinces were nourished from the overflowing of its granaries; and the noble ladies of London and Paris were clothed in the delicate produce of its looms. The race by whom this rich tract was peopled, enervated by a soft climate, and accustomed to peaceful avocations, bore the same relation to other Asiatics which the Asiatics generally bear to the bold and energetic children of Europe. The Castilians have a proverb, that in Valencia the earth is water, and the men women; and the description is at least equally applicable to the vast plain of the lower Ganges. Whatever the Bengalee does, he does languidly. His favorite pursuits are sedentary. He shrinks from bold exertion; and though vocable in dispute, and singularly pertinacious in the war of chicane, he seldom engages in a personal conflict, and scarcely ever enlists as a soldier. We doubt whether there be a hundred Bengalees in the whole army of the East India Company. There never, perhaps, existed a people so thoroughly fitted, by nature and habit, for a foreign yoke.

From the Eastport (Me) Sentinel.

THE BRIG 'PLUMPER.'

Some interest has recently been manifested by the adventures of a company of 'divers' on the spot where the Brig Plumper was wrecked; a quantity—we know not how much—of money and other metals has been excavated, some of which we have seen. Among them, beside the silver dollars, which are covered with gray rust, we have seen grape-shot and bullets, the brass mountings of the scabbards of side-arms, leather sheaths, &c. The company which has brought these things to light, is partly made up of three or four Irishmen who several years ago were employed by the English Government, and it is said that from the wreck of one English ship on the coast of Ireland, they succeeded in bringing up nineteen tons of treasure. Their apparatus is of India rubber, consisting of a 'Jacket' which covers the divers, and in which, being supplied by air forced by an engine through tubes, they can remain on the bottom half an hour with comparative ease. The company finally came to this country, and in the Fall of 1847, during their excursion, fell in with the wreck of the 'Plumper.' But little was done at that time, and now, after being sold out or united to a company from Boston, another attempt has been made to secure the wave-hidden treasures—with what success we are unable to say; only we are sure that a few of the dollars have arrived in town.

As this affair has awakened some interest in the matter, we have taken some pains to gather from Captain Simpson—(a man 74 years of age, who now resides at "Mowatt's Harbor," about 8 miles east of this place)—who was Pilot of the ill-fated vessel, a few facts concerning her disaster, which may not prove uninteresting.

The 'Plumper' was a 14 gun Brig in his Majesty Geo. IV.'s service, and was stationed about Halifax, N. S. On the 5th Dec. 1812—the year in which our last war with England broke out—the 'Plumper,' under command of Lieut. Com. James Bray, sailed from Halifax, for St. John's, N. B., having on board at least £74,000 in specie, in boxes, which had been placed on board of her for the payment of His Majesty's troops. Wind and weather kept her about Yarmouth for several days, when she entered the 'Grand Passage;' a severe snow-storm came on, and the pilot deemed it prudent to haul the vessel to the wind, and lay to for the night. About 3 o'clock the next morning, the pilot discovered that instead of following his instructions, the commander had presumptuously kept her away, and had gained a considerable distance to the northward; he immediately told the master that he would have the vessel ashore—and it was but a few moments before they discovered breakers within a few rods ahead of them—this spot was between what is called 'Dipper Harbor' and Point Leprau, about 44 miles from this place, in a north-easterly direction. The brig struck near the bows, and then swung with a crash alongside an almost perpendicular cliff, some 70 or 80 feet in hight. Captain Simpson saved himself by leaping upon the try-sail or main boom, which swung toward the shore, and dropping on to the rocks—many others attempting to follow him, were precipitated into the surf and perished among the rocks, the boom suddenly giving way. The Plumper had on board 74 souls, including two women—a Mrs. Tye, and the wife of the surgeon, who, with Messrs. Graves, Cunningham, and Tye, were passengers—44 of whom were lost. The vessel was a total wreck, and nothing was saved. The survivors after much sufferiug reached a house about 5 miles from the beach, and in a few days were taken off.

Attempts were soon after made by means of a diving-bell or tub to secure some of the lost treasure, and at various times, within the last ten years, many like efforts have been made, and considerable of the precious metal recovered; but what proportion of it has been found, cannot be ascertained. Many years ago, before we had any knowledge of the affair, the rusty 'Plumper dollars,' were in quite extensive circulation.

LETTER FROM J. M. BARRET.

The following letter from J. M. Barret to his Father, explains more fully the case to which we alluded two weeks ago. We copy from the Cincinnati Globe:—

SPARTANBURG, S. C. July 22, 1849.

MY DEAR FATHER: You have been but too correctly informed by the newspapers. I am indeed in prison! and would have informed you sooner, but how could I pain your kind heart by the sad news? Oh! with a father's tenderness you reared me and have loved me, and in your old days I have brought sorrow and affliction upon you. It pains me, my father, it pains me to my heart's core. You say in your letter to the Clerk here, that I left you with a character untarnished. My father, you will believe me, you will love me, let the world say what they will of me—I have committed no crime, been guilty of no deed that ought to bring reproach or censure upon any one. No, I, for whom you feel so much solicitude, although I am in prison and may never see you again in this world, have not stained your name with infamy by the commission of any crime. I am charged here with having circulated abolition documents. Now, my father, you will believe me, I have circulated no documents of any kind in the State of South-Carolina, nor violated any law of the State, as far as I know. Bear it in mind that I tell you so, although death may close my eyes in eternal sleep before I ever see you again. When you hear that appearances are against me, and see my name aspersed in the public prints, remember what I told you, and treasure in your heart that I am innocent—that I am the victim of the schemes, misconduct, and infatuation of others, and that I now suffer for what others have done, and for which they ought to be responsible.

My story is simply this: I came here as an agent of E Hartford & Co. of Cincinnati, to procure materials for publishing a gazette. I came here in the early part of the season, intending to go North as the weather grew warmer, and finally around to our old home in Virginia—thence to Cincinnati and to Dublin. I found documents afloat in the State which were obnoxious to the people, and which gave me some trouble, as people suspected me of having some connection with them. But knowing myself clear of their circulation, I felt no fears and proceeded with my labors. I came to this place with an anxious heart, for I had written to Sarah, and expected an answer at this place from one whom I tenderly love—my dear sister. As soon as I had taken lodgings at a hotel, the people came upon me with two letters, one from Dublin, which I was much pleased to see, but on opening it, oh, Sarah! it pained me, it was not from you. Why did you not, my dear sister, write me a simple letter as I requested. Then perhaps might I have escaped this prison. But I don't blame you in the least—nor do I blame Mr. Johnson, for I know he intended no harm, but his letter injured me. The other letter was anonymous, and contained a few Nos. of this same obnoxious document, which the writer requested me to circulate. It was enough—the people were excited, and threw me into prison instantly—where I have since remained. (This was on the 8th of June.) Since then other documents have been sent me, making the same request. The documents were all closely enveloped, addressed to persons in this State, and I was requested to drop them into Post Offices along my way. Thus I was made to circulate them without knowing what they were. But I did not circulate any of them. The first that came to me was at this place, and there is perhaps nothing in the law against me, at least the attorneys I have employed say, and my own judgment is, that there is little or no chance of convicting me. I can prove by my employers what I came here for, and if I could find the man who sent me the documents, which I may yet do, that they were sent to me without my knowledge or consent. And this ought certainly to set me clear—especially since they can have nothing against me but vague circumstances. The people are excited, however, and it will be hard for me to have a fair hearing. The penalty is one thousand dollars fine and one year's imprisonment in the county prison. I can be bailed out at one thousand dollars, and this must be in cash deposited here.

VALUE OF CORNSTALKS AS FODDER.

The question is often asked, if cornstalks are of much value as fodder. We answer, without fear of contradiction, that if well saved, and properly used, they are fully equal to the same weight of good hay.

Last year we fed three yoke of oxen on cornstalks, with the addition of no more feed than we should have used with the best English hay. Our mode of preparing them was as follows:—

The stalks were cut with the ordinary cylindrical machine in pieces of half an inch in length, and placed in a hogshead; three gallons of boiling water, containing one gill of salt, was thrown upon them, and the top of the cask covered with a blanket. The steam arising from the hot water, swelled and softened the cornstalks to their original size, and when cold, a little ground feed was thrown upon them, and thus fed to the cattle.

The oxen worked hard all winter, each yoke bringing three loads per day, of more than a ton each, from a distance of three miles, and in the spring they were as well conditioned as in the fall.

When corn is raised to be pulled while green for boiling, the stalks will contain much more saccharine matter than when suffered to ripen. The stalks should be permitted to grow after the corn has been pulled.

Cornstalks may be grown as fodder, with much greater strength than hay, and entirely capable of supplying food for animals, without the addition of grain of any kind, and for milch cows it would be equal if not superior to any other food. We refer to the method adopted by Mr. Webb, of Delaware, for the purpose of making sugar.

As soon as the ears appear, pinch them off, and repeat this treatment twice; the consequence will be, that the juice of stalks thus treated will contain as much saccharine matter, as that of the sugar cane; indeed, we know of one experiment being made, which gave the juice of eleven degrees Beaume, while the juice of the sugar-cane, as grown in Louisiana, is but nine degrees Beaume. This mode of growth, however, will only answer in such districts as, from want of market, find it unprofitable to raise corn for the ears. When this mode is adopted, the planting should be early, for the stalks will necessarily require a hot sun to cure them. If cut too late, the sugar contained in the juice will become acid before they are dry.

[The Working Farmer.

HONESTY OF SHOPPERS.

We have heard of fashionable shoppers, who manifested a thieving propensity, seemingly rooted in their nature, and incurable. But the following device, taken from a work issued in New York, entitled "Mysteries of Shopping," must win the palm for ingenuity in detecting the secret thoughts and hidden vices of customers whose character is yet unknown:—

"In order to prove and profit by the probation of the frequenters of Catharine-street, I procured a newly coined five-cent piece, and with a particle of gum affixed it to the inside of the top of the glass show-case upon the counter, in such a manner that it appeard to be lying on the outer surface; and by frequently observing the conduct of customers upon various occasions, I was enabled to determine, with a very considerable degree of certainty, whose intentions where upright and whose the opposite. It was no less strange than alarming to note the number of those who attempted, by various strategy, to appropriate it to their own use. Now a lady would carefully lay her handkerchief upon the case immediately over the coveted coin, and on removing it cautiously, with thumb and finger, nip that portion supposed to contain the prize. Another would cover the effected spot with her muff, and, while pretending to examine some article with one hand, endeavor to secure the little innocent with the other. Some would anxiously inquire for goods on the shelves behind, to divert attention from the object of their cupidity. Some scrupulously emptied their purses, when making payment, immediately over and around the unsuspecting little semidecimal, that in the gathering up again it might be harvested. The chagrin painted on the countenance of each disappointed individual, furnished an infallible guarantee of the intent, and exposed an amount of latent villainy absolutely startling to the beholder. But the scheme was too expensive to be afforded long. I observed that those who had been unsccessful with the five-pence ever after avoided the store; and of those from whom I had derived considerable trade, and whose honesty I never had reason to suspect before this plan was projected, the number was so great that I became anxious lest a total abandonment by all my customers should be the unfortunate consequence of this pleasant device."

FATHER MATHEW AND SLAVERY.

Some of the anti-slavery papers are out upon Father Mathew because he has not taken a stand against slavery as well as intemperance. The following, from Frederick Dougalas's North Star, is as sensible an article as we have seen upon the subject:—

At home, Father Mathew is understood to be a thorough anti-slavery man; and when we had the happiness of visiting Ireland, we were received by no one in a manner more gratifying to our feelings, or who manifested a deeper interest in the anti-slavery cause than he. To show his utter disregard of American prejudice, this apostle of temperance repeatedly invited us to his house, and received us at his table on equal terms with his other friends and visitors. It is not to be expected that Father Mathew will leave the field of his temperance labors to make many speeches on the subject of slavery; but we think that he would do himself and his country a marked injustice should he depart from this land without leaving on record a clear, pointed, and earnest testimony against American Slavery in all its forms.

It would be far wiser for him to adhere strictly, in America, to the principles which he delights to honor in Ireland. Bad as the Americans are, and anxious as they ever appear to disarm opposition to slavery, they would entertain a far higher respect for the good man who consistently retains his anti-slavery position, than they can possibly feel for one who, in the spirit of accommodation, sacrifices his own convictions to the wishes of his friends, or at any other cost. There is no country in the world, perhaps, where there is more of the spirit of compromis than here; and yet there can be nowhere found more despisers of servility, nor more lovers of independence, than here.

REQUISITES FOR A WOMAN.

We know several capital young ladies, says the Olive Branch, who would make excellent wives, if it were not for one thing; they do not know how to cook, mend, knit, or attend to the common household duties. The fault lies not so much with themselves as with their mothers. They have never been taught to believe that they were not capable of becoming wives, until they could perform all the necessary duties of the kitchen. True, they may never be obliged to bake and wash; but if the time should ever come when they must attend to these things, awkward and perplexing in the extreme will it be to them. Our way of thinking—and we may be singular—no young woman is fit to be married until she is capable of darning stockings, scouring pots, and washing dishes. What would have become of our recent thrifty mechanics, if it had not been for their industrious wives? What but the indolent and dressy ladies has been the cause of the failure of so many of our young merchants? Girls, look to this subject, we pray you, before it is too late. It is for you to make or ruin your future husbands. It is for you to say whether they shall be prosperous or otherwise. So, if you have thus far neglected your most important duties, begin now to be wise. Go to your nearest neighbor and learn of her, if your mothers will not teach you. Spend an hour or two every day till you have fairly mastered the trade, and we will answer for your future welfare.

CHOLERA AND BATHING.—The N. Y. Sun says it is a fact, recorded by official authority, that during the summer of 1832, when the cholera raged so terribly throughout France, and also during the present visitation, out of nearly 16,218 subscribers to the Public Baths of Paris, Bordeaux, and Marseilles, only two deaths among them were to be ascribed to cholera. This speaks volumes in favor of bathing.

FACTS ABOUT AMALGAMATION.—A writer in the Boston Medical Journal states the following facts, which he says have been so elicited from authentic statistics:—

1. That the longevity of the pure African is greater than the inhabitants of any other portion of the globe.

2. That mulattoes, i. e. those born of parents one being African and the other Caucassian or white, are decidedly the shortest lived of any class of the human race.

3. That mulattoes are more liable to die under the age of 25, than the whites or blacks between those ages—from 40 to 55, 50 to 1—and from 55 to 70, 100 to 1.

5. That the mortality of the free people of color in the United States is more than 100 per cent greater than that of the slaves.

5. That those of unmixed African extraction in the "free States," are not more liable to sickness or premature death than the whites of their own rank and condition in society, but that the striking mortality so manifest among the free people of color, is in every community and section of country invariably confined to the mulattoes.

HOW TO GET RID OF BAD SMELLS, INFECTION, &C.—A scientific gentleman states, through the Boston Journal, that for a disinfecting agent for general use, where the surfaces whence noisome exhalations arise can be reached, one pound of common copperas, dissolved in one gallon of water, forms a fluid which, when sprinkled on decomposing matter, or any changing surfaces, immediately destroys putrescent exhalations. In extreme cases two pounds of copperas in one gallon of water, may be used, and in some situations the addition of so much ground plaster as will form a thin paste, will be required. The weekly sprinkling of cellar floors, paved yards, drains, and all filthy receptacles, with this fluid, will render the atmosphere above them perfectly salubrious. In sick rooms and confined spaces, the colorless liquid should be placed in shallow vessels, freely exposed, when its power of absorption will soon change the character of the air around it.

LONG SPEECHES.—Alluding to long-winded parliamentary speeches, the London Dispatch says:—

"Oh! seldom-speaking Cromwell! whose vocation was by no means talk, but who made Europe tremble, Ireland orderly, and England great, how need we wonder that a true worker should seek to get rid of chattering parliamentary magpies, and pray the 'Lord to deliver him from Sir Harry Vanes!' Oh! silent Washington, who could conquer the mighty, and found the greatest empire in the world, but whom a D'Israeli could confound in utterance! O! taciturn Brutus, who could even make Rome more illustrious, and efface Carthage from the world's map, but could not outspeak even the rawest of reporters! Have we not 'fallen on evil days and evil tongues?'".

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The Supreme Court of New Jersey has decided that owners of cattle are bound to keep them off railroads. The decision was given in the case of Vandegrift vs. Rediker, which was an action of trespass brought against the engineer of a locomotive, for running against and killing the plaintiff's cow. The cow was at large, and had strayed upon an unenclosed part of the Camden and Amboy railroad, near Bordentown, just as the train, at its usual speed, was approaching. The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Juctice Carpenter, the result of which is, that the owner of cattle is bound to keep them on his own premises at his peril; that an engineer in charge of a locomotive is not liable for an accidental injury to a cow which, suffered to go at large, has strayed on a railroad; and that nothing but willfulness on his part, will make him liable for the loss of a cow so exposed by the fault of the owner.

NEW MEDICINE.—Mr. Ridley, recently from the west coast and Panama, has shown us a piece of the meat of a nut, called Cedron by the Africans, and used by them with invariable success as a cure for the bite of poisonous snakes. It has also been tried successfully for the bite of rabid dogs. The Cedron is a very rare nut, and exceedingly bitter to the touch of the tongue—probably containing strychnine, or a similarly powerful medical property. At Gorgona, where fifteen persons had died of Cholera, a woman severly attacked with the disease was dosed with five grains of Cedron, which cured her. Mr. R. has presented some of the nut to Dr. Mott and others, for the purpose of having it carefully analyzed, and it may result in the discovery of a certain antidote for what has heretofore been considered incurable, as well as an invaluable cholera medicine.

LAW.—Mr. Warren, in his "Book of Lawyers," says that a lady lost a large estate by a copying clerk, who added an s to the word sheriff, and made a plural thereof. Chief Justice Tindal said it was not a material error in the writ, but he would make an absolute rule, to preclude all possibility of carelessness, and then ordered the defendant to be set at large. The eminent lawyer, Butler, by accidentally omitting, in one part of a will, a word (Gloucester) which had been used a dozen times, deprived a widow of estates worth £14,000 a year.

POISONOUS NATURE OF EFFLUVIA FROM THE DEAD.—Mr. Mackinnon, M. P., at a meeting respecting burials in towns, stated the following fact:—"A lady having died, her body was placed in a coffin, upon which was nailed a plate, describing her virtues, age, and station in life. The nails fastening this plate were unfortunately so long, that they passed through the wood and lead of the coffin, which caused the effluvia of the body to escape, and the gas proved of so noxious a nature that four of the deceased's daughters, who inhaled it, while repining over the coffin, died within a fortnight afterwards."

The spirit of war has been correctly ascribed to the spirit of the evil one. Austria is about giving another proof of the justice of this remark, by the use of an explosive balloon, which can be raised at a distance and made to descend and explode in the heart of her rebellious cities, and carry death and devastation into their very midst.

ITALIAN EMIGRANTS.—The correspondent of the London Times has the following:—"In the course of our journey to Rome we met numerous troops trudging along on foot. Each man bore a knapsack, containing relics of his fallen greatness, but all seemed to bear the reverses of fortune with great good humor. I must say they were as handsome a set of young fellows as could be found, daring fortune still, however unkind she had hitherto been; and it is deplored that so much energy and vital force should be lost to the common country, as the greater number have determined to go to the United States."

CHINESE MODE OF ADMINISTERING OATHS.—The witness is made to kneel and to break a saucer on a bar in front of him. The oath is then administered:—"You shall tell the truth, the whole truth; the saucer is cracked, and if you do not tell the truth, your soul will be cracked like the saucer."

VARIETY.

A medical gentleman near London called to see a cholera patient; he was told she had been dead two hours. To save another call in order to make out a certificate, he asked to see the body. He found the appearance of death, and no perceptible pulse; but laying his hand on the region of the heart, he discovered that action had not ceased. He attempted bleeding. As the blood flowed the supposed corpse said, "What are you doing with me?" There was hope of entire recovery in this extraordinary case.

An accomplished villain has just been nabbed in Boston. He changed coats and character daily, now passing off as a gay Lieutenant, and now as a merchant from the South, &c. He was no way embarrased in the court, taking snuff with the policemen, and affecting to be amused. He took about $1,000, out of the Bostonians.

Some one once felicitated Girard on the enjoyment and happiness his great wealth afforded. "Would you," replied Girard, "undertake the management of my affairs for your victuals and clothes?" The man said No, and Girard added, that that was all he received for that great labor.

There is a person well known in New York, (says the Herald,) the color of whose hair is continually changing. At present it is a mixture of white, brown and red, and frequently red and white; his hair has been subject to these changes for many years.

Notwithstanding all the labors of Father Mathew, and the successful efforts of other philanthropists in the temperance cause there, it is stated that there were consumed in famishing Ireland, the last year, 7,000,000 gallons of ardent spirits! Nearly a gallon for every man, woman, and child, throughout the whole country.

The New England Farmer says that the Trustees of the Essex Agricultural Society are taking measures for the formation of an Agricultural Library. This Society is one of the oldest in the State of Massachusetts, and enjoys the reputation of being foremost in promoting the interests of agriculture.

Free Bathing Houses for the poor are in contemplation in Boston. One public spirited citizen, named Marshall Turkey, has procured subscriptions for the purpose amounting to $12,000.

There is a theory which has done singular mischief to the cause of recreation and of general cultivation. It is, that men cannot excel in more things than one; and that if they can, they had better be quiet about it.

The Syracuse papers says that sprinkling the streets with salt water works to a charm, purifies the air, and makes a sort of cement of the dust, so that the wind does not raise it.

"It is an inexpressible comfort," says the dying Campbell, the Poet, "to be able to look back and feel that I have not written one line against Religon or Virtue!" How many would, in his situation, give worlds to see and feel as Campbell did.

Man was never intended to be idle. Inactivity frustrates the very design of his creation; whereas an active life is the best guardian of virtue, and the greatest preservative of health.

Three thousand figs have been gathered this season from one fig tree, in the green house of Mr. Allen, of Salem, Mass. It is still yielding its delicious fruit.

Father Mathew intends to stay a year in the United States, and has written home advising his countrymen to emigrate to this country. He is about to make an extensive purchase of lands out West for homes for them.

There is a society in Glasgow that distributes prizes to those housewives who, for three months, kep the cleanest houses in dirty localities.

On the 14th ult., Mrs. Butterfield, of Hitchen, England, presented her husband with their twenty-fourth child, about a month after the twenty-third anniversary of their wedding-day.

'The greatest pleasure I know,' says Charles Lamb, 'is to do a good action by stealth, and to have it found out by accident.'

A company has been organized in Connecticut, having their office in New Haven, for the insurance of live-stock.

The Free-Will Baptists of Pennsylvania have passed strong resolutions expelling members of secret societies.

Pimples on the face, touch them with spirit of turpentine once in six hours, and they will soon take themselves away.

$50,000 has been subscribed to change the Genesee Wesleyan Seminary into a College.

49,25 women and girls are employed in binding shoes at Lynn, Mass.

A prize of 300 guineas has been offered in England for the best essay on royalty, aristocracy and democracy.

"That motion is out of order," as the chairman of a political meeting said when a rowdy raised his arm to throw an egg.

A schoolmaster, driving oxen, and wishing to express himself in a scholastic style, addressed them thus: "Haw, Buck, and also Bright!"

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849–50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Richland—Elias Burdick.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Hiram Sherman.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY

By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid, except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to
GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 12.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 272.

The Sabbath Recorder.

The following account of Hayti, and of the facilities it offers for missionary labor, is from the pen of bro. W. M. Jones, of the Baptist Free Mission Society, who is generally known to have embraced the Bible Sabbath. We commend it to the careful perusal of our readers. Does not Providence call the Seventh-day Baptists of the United States to the cultivation of this important field? And can there not be found among us some missionary family to obey the call? If we are not mistaken, our denomination is ready and willing to sustain a mission to Hayti, and we hope that some one will offer himself for the enterprise very soon—God is opening to us a "great door, and effectual." Why are not our people awake?

SEND THE GOSPEL TO HAYTI.

PORT DE PAIX, Hayti, May 15, 1849.

Yours of March 27th came to hand on the 2d inst. The duties of the mission have been so urgent upon me, that I have not had time to answer it until the present; and even now I am obliged to write in haste.

The history of Hayti is full of revolting accounts of war, bloodshed, and slavery. Columbus discovered the Island, Dec. 5th, 1492. He called it Hispaniola, and afterwards St. Domingo. The natives called it Hayti. This latter name is now almost universally adopted.

Some say there were one million, and others three millions of Indians on the Island when discovered. The avaricious Spaniards, in their thirst for gold, forced the poor Indians to work in the mines. War and oppression soon wasted them away. In ten years after the discovery of the island, only sixty thousand remained. Terrible and horrifying indeed must have been the scenes that so early drenched this queen of the Antilles with blood.

In 1507, the first Africans were imported into the island, and reduced to a most cruel servitude. The cruelties which were heaped upon this people from this date until their emancipation, in 1793, were awful beyond description. Between the years 1789 and 1794, the yoke of oppression was thrown off, and eight hundred thousand men, women, and children, became free through force of arms. Several severe attempts to reduce them again to slavery have since been made by the French, their former masters. But each attempt has proved unsuccessful. The Haytiens have suffered all kinds of abuse and scandal that is in the wicked heart of nations to invent and put into execution, beginning from the capture of their forefathers, in Africa, till the present time. No wonder that they now need the gospel. Yet it is a wonder how they have maintained their independence so long, considering the mighty armies of France, and other opposing influences which have been brought to bear against them. Truly there must be a God who directs, not as the oppressor willeth. Upon this soil African Slavery was first established, and here anti-Christ was first to stamp his image upon the victims of oppression in the new world.

Roman Catholicism is now, as it ever has been, the religion of State, and of course the prevailing religion. Perhaps no part of the world is in greater need of the preaching of the gospel than Hayti. Superstition and the man of sin have so long held universal sway here, that the people are shrouded in darkness, and to human appearance are in a far worse condition to receive the gospel as it is in Jesus, than if they had never been taught the mutilated part of christianity. The population is variously estimated, from 600,000 to 800,000. The majority is of pure African descent—the minority is of the mixed class. The two are known by the terms, "black" and "colored."

At present, there are two governments on the island—the Dominican and the Haytien. That in the old Spanish, or eastern part, is called the Dominican, taking its name from their chief city, St. Domingo. I am informed that religious toleration, in that part of the island, is quite limited. There they speak the Spanish language. The government claims and holds two thirds of the Island. There is a Wesleyan missionary, from England, at Samana and Port au Platte. He has a society there of some 150 or 175 communicants. I am informed that there are a few colored American Methodists at St. Domingo City. The number of Protestant communicants in that part of the island cannot exceed two hundred. The Haytien Republic, however, claims the whole island, and has been at war with the eastern part since the Dominicans revolted in Jan. 1844. This affair keeps the people in constant agitation and movement. Indeed the military character of the Haytiens has been one of the great hindrances to their improvment in any thing good.

Here religious toleration is enjoyed by Protestants. The Roman Catholic Priests are under the government, and are narrowly watched. They receive their appointments from government, and their fees from the people, over whom they have great influence. The Roman Catholic religion assumes here a very idolatrous form. As it ever has been, it is nought but the mother of harlots and abominations, working iniquity and deceiving the people.

The people, especially of the country, are divided into various classes of African Fetishes—institutions, the most heathenish and disgusting. The priests lend their influence to these things doubtless, because the more superstition there is among the people, the better it is for popery. Some of these African clans go so far as to steal children, and kill and eat them in order to further their enchantments. Polygamy abounds to an alarming extent. In short, all the darkness, superstition, and idolatry attendant on the propagation of the Roman Catholic faith prevails here. And yet there is quite a desire among the more intelligent, to have Protestant missionaries settled throughout the island—not that they have any idea of the benefit and excellence of spiritual religion, but they suppose that it will be for the benefit of their country to have their children educated, and they themselves are not very averse to hearing the gospel.

The first missionary labor performed in this island was commenced in 1817 and '18, by two Methodist preachers from England. They labored two years with considerable success. A persecution broke out in 1819 and '20, and they were obliged to leave the country. Most of the converts remained steadfast, two of whom are now preachers of the gospel. In this part of the island, there are five stations of this society, with a missionary at each station.

I came to this island in January, 1845. In August following, I formed a church of eight members at Port-au-Prince. In December of the same year, the Baptist Missionary Society of England sent out Eld. Francis and his family, who located themselves at Jacmel. In less than eight months afterwards this good man was called to his reward; not however, until he had seen the salvation of the Lord in the conversion of several individuals. Eld. Webley is now at that station. Eld. Judd is at Port-au-Prince. Eld. Cushman, of the congregational Society, is at St. Marc since last December.* Eld. Morton, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of the United States, came out to Port-au-Prince in the fall of 1847. Last December he was fully converted to keep the Sabbath of the Lord God. He has now gone home. Whether he will return, I cannot say. But I have full confidence that he will preach the truth on the Sabbath wherever he goes.

Port de Paix is sixty leagues from Port-au-Prince, on the north side of the island, in latitude about 19° 45′. The village, or city as it is called, contains some 2000 inhabitants. There was never any missionary settled here, and but two or three sermons were ever preached in the place until I arrived here in January last. Since coming here, we have found one person who was once a member of a Baptist Church in New York, but after coming to this country fell into the wicked practices of the people, and lived in a very unlawful manner for many years. We trust that she is wholly reclaimed from the error of her way. She gives us every evidence to believe that she is an humble Christian. Our congregations have numbered from 20 to 80 and 90, which is pretty well for an entire Catholic community. The great thing that grieves my heart is to see the people so completely deceived about their souls. Form and ceremony seem to be everything with them. Every child is considered a beast until it is sprinkled, (or baptized as they call it.) Infant sprinkling is more important with them than any thing else. Then comes the immense train of crosses, feast or holydays, beads and prayers for the dead, superstitions, etc. Oh, it is really shocking to every deeply pious Christian, to live here and behold their shame. Not a day passes but that I am reminded of the Savior's words—"Broad is the road that leads to destruction." I am troubled to make the people feel that they are sinners; they think they are good enough Christians already. Ah, my dear brother, never did I feel more the force of the truth of these Scriptures—"Except a man be born of the Spirit, he cannot see the kingdom of God." It is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Truly it is not in an arm of flesh to convert the totally depraved heart of man. Nothing short of the Spirit of God can effect this work.

West of Port de Paix are the towers of Jean Rabel and Mole St. Nicholas. The first is eight or ten leagues, the second twenty or twenty-two leagues distant. South is Gros Morne, twelve leagues. East, and the most considerable town in this neighborhood, is St. Louis du Nord, three leagues from this. There are several hundred inhabitants in the Ville. It is situated, like this place, close by the sea. The port, however, is open only to Haytien vessels. I have not been able to visit the town as yet, but expect to in a few weeks.

There is ample room here in this vicinity for another missionary. Whoever comes to this country as a missionary, must expect to meet with hundreds of vexatious things and trials—have his name and the object of his coming all cast out as evil, and have plots laid to worry him. He ought to consider how much the great and good Master has suffered the contradiction of sinners, that he might save them from the wrath to come. I never want to see a time-server become a missionary. The cause of Christ in heathen lands wants no cowards; better have none, than to send out men who will teach a mutilated Christianity to the poor ignorant people.

One important item of consideration is the free-mission cause. The cause of Christ has no need of support by the help of blood-money, or the earnings of the poor down-trodden slave. In such a country as this, we have need of out-spoken free-mission men. A missionary who will consent to be supported by the unlawful gains of other men, will also consent to other wicked things rather than deny himself, and speak out against these sins. The fact is, there is a prevailing looseness abroad among missionaries on this and many other subjects. The idea seems to be this—"Get along through the world with just as little religion or moral principle as will in your judgment carry you to heaven." Ever since I knew any thing about the subject of slavery and anti-slavery, I have, I trust, been free mission in heart and action. The free mission principle is more fully developed in the Constitution of the American Baptist Free Mission Society than I have time now to write. I should like to see it published in the Sabbath Recorder. I would like a fellow helper in this part of the Island, but I cannot heartily welcome one, unless he is in heart and action a free mission man, and supported by a society or church that has no connection with slavery, and which does not receive into its treasury the price of human blood. Such men there ought to be among the Seventh-day Baptists. Brother Bailey has borne a noble testimony in favor of Free Missions. I hope the Seventh-day Baptist denomination will do so. I understand that there are no slaveholders in your denomination—that you do not solicit nor knowingly receive into your mission treasury slaveholding funds, and I hope, also, that you do not receive funds from the liquor-seller or liquor-maker.

The mission of the Church of Christ is a mission of mercy and good will to a fallen world. Hence the principle and mode of action should be that of mercy and justice. I was often told, before I became a foreign missionary, that if I took free mission ground, I would be starved out, and be obliged to return home for want of means to subsist. And such is the feeling of thousands of Christians in the United States. They wonder how the source from whence the money comes will make any difference. But I say, "Starve, then, or cease sending the gospel to the heathen, if you cannot get along without calling for the aid of unjust gain to support missions." "God hates robbery for burnt offering." He designs that his Church should furnish the means, from within herself, to sustain her ministry and her missions. But instead of this, every art of eloquence and story-telling that can be brought to bear upon the unconverted to make them more benevolent than the Church, is resorted to; and in many instances with too much success. How many churches there are in my native land who would feel that their temporal and spiritual prospects would be nearly ruined, if the world should withdraw their support. Such a course has served to make the church more covetous, instead of more benevolent. The religion of Christ ought to be everything with us. As in primitive times, every convert received into the church ought to consider himself, property, and all, as belonging to the Lord. We need, and we must have a thousand times more practical benevolence in the Church before a nation will be born in a day. The free mission principle looks to all these things. In fact, as I understand it, it is a thorough reform principle.

The cause of Peace ought not to be lost sight of. In a country like this, where war and military operations have been the order of the day for so long a time, it is highly important that we preach the gospel of peace in all its fullness. I would like a fellow helper who is prepared to herald the trumpet of peace, with all the Christianity, dignity, and humility worthy so noble a cause. A deputy from the Peace Society in England, visited this country a few months since. He translated and published a pamphlet on Peace, which awakened a little attention to the subject. To use his own words, he thougth me "a little too much of an Old Testament man to visit this place." The true reason, however, was, his want of time. He sent me 120 copies of the pamphlet. I have distributed most of them, and in return have received several letters expressing hearty commendations and thanks. But French flattery is poor consolation. It is somewhat as the Roman Catholic Priests say of infant sprinkling by a native Haytien—"it won't stick." The people need to be told of this their sin. If the humble missionary will throw himself on the arm of the Lord, and preach the whole gospel, he may expect the blessing of the Holy Spirit accordingly. The TRUTH of God, in all its parts, is of more consequence for the furtherance of Christ's cause and his glory, than the half conversion of thousands. May the time soon come when peace shall reign triumphant throughout the earth.

But, finally, though not least, is the Sabbath question. Never have I felt so much the necessity of a thorough separation from all the institutions of Popery as since, by the grace of God, I have learned to keep the Sabbath of the Bible. I am astonished at myself, that I should have lived so long in ignorance of my duty and of the truth of the Bible. And I am astonished at the blindness and apathy of Baptists in general. And why the Seventh-day Baptists are not doing more to open the eyes of Christians, is a marvel. They have done something, it is true; but it seems to me, not half what they might have done. Here, on this little Island of the sea, we have great need of light on this subject. If Protestants would only do their duty, they would accomplish much more in bringing this people from darkness to light. The fact is just here—the Methodist brethren and the Congregationalists countenance two main pillars of Popery, i.e. infant sprinkling and Sunday keeping. The Baptists from England at Jacmel, and the Baptist station at Port-au-Prince, keep Sunday. Here at this place I have endeavored to raise the standard of the Lord in good earnest. Many have acknowledged, that according to the law of God, the practice of Christ and his apostles, we ought to observe the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord God. But, alas, until they are truly converted, they, like others, say and do not.

A plan was started three years ago to influence the Haytien government to abolish Sunday markets, and the military review on that day. Although an observer of Sunday at that time, I consider it fortunate, that I did not second that movement. Should your Society send a missionary to this country, we would unite our influence against any such movement in future. It grieves me to know that professed Christian missionaries will lend their aid, in word and in deed, to build up in part the religions of man, at the same time, they are trying to preach the gospel. But thus it has been, and thus it doubtless will be until the Lord is pleased to pour out his Spirit and purify his Church from all the doctrines of Babylon.

The annual expenses of a missionary family in this country cannot fall much short of one thousand dollars. Besides the simple expenses of the family, the mission must support house rent, chapel and school rent, etc., etc., until the Society possesses buildings of its own. Your missionary should be, if possible, a man of deep piety, experience, and talent. It is indispensibly necessary that the missionary be a man full of faith and the Holy Ghost—apt to teach—no wine-bibber, nor tobacco chewer, nor smoker. Here in this dark land, is no place for a wine-guzzling, tobacco-smoked minister. Send a thorough-going reform man, or none. If you have none, pray God to give you one; and if you ask aright he will grant your petition. Another thing—The brother should know the French language before coming here. Experience has taught me, that it is far cheaper for the Society, and for the health, too, of the candidate for missionary service, that he learn the language in New York. I consider that I have lost much time by not having the language before coming to Hayti. The hard study of brother Francis, in this hot climate, assisted much to bring him to the grave. The same may be said of sister Young, who was so early called away from earth to heaven. Six months study, with a native Frenchman, will give him quite a start in the language. But the year ought nearly to perfect him in the knowledge, i. e., health and other things being equal. The influence of a missionary is felt more immediately, and on the whole it is far better to come with the language than without it. Besides, there is always great difficulty in employing competent teachers in this country. He should employ, for the sake of a correct, distinct pronunciation, the best teacher he can find. By all means let him spend six months in studying the language in New York. Let him come well supplied with twenty thousand pages of tracts, of the best kind—a hundred Bibles, and two or three hundred Testaments—and also with as many religious books, all in French, as pecuniary strength will permit. The missionary work in this land is one of toil and expense, but the field promises well, provided it can be well cultivated. May the Lord enable you to find a suitable man, and give you means to send him forth soon. I need help, and I hope you will send it. No doubt, if you will look around you, a brother can be found who will go immediately to work preparing himself, so that by the fall of 1850 he can come forth, and be able to preach to the people on first arriving. My ardent prayer is, that you may send one well equipped for the work.

Yours in the Lord Jesus,

WM. M. JONES.

---

* Eld. Cushman has died since this article was written.

PRAYERS FOR SEAMEN.

There are thousands and thousands whose homes are on the ocean, who come on land, as landsmen go out to sea, occasionally and for short seasons. Sailors dwell on the ocean, and do business on the mighty deep, and are with us only transiently and almost as strangers. For long years this class of men had almost been forgotten and uncared for. Now, to many thousands of hearts, everything touching the sailor possesses a lively interest. In many of our ports, the Bethel flag trembles gently to the free breeze of heaven, and the Sailor's Home awaits his arrival from the elements of storms and perils. Still, the great Christian community, as a whole, do not think enough on the sons of the ocean; do not, with sufficient frequency and ardor, bear them before God in their daily devotions at the mercy seat.

Seated quietly round our hearth of safety, with the friends we love, we are prone to forget the storms at sea, the frequent foaming and dashing of the enraged element, and the peril of our brethren on the waters. Hearts there are—for they have loved ones at sea—who say, it is a bitter, cold, dark, angry, gloomy night, and whose sighs and prayers go up to God for the mariners; but there are many who do not think of and pray for him as they ought. Reader, remember at the mercy seat your brethren scattered over the vast plain of the ocean waters.

"When the black sky is scowling,
The furious storm is howling,
And lurid lightnings play;
When the strained masts are bending,
Fierce winds and sails are rending,
Pray for the sailor—pray."

REV. DR. BARNES.

He rises at four o'clock, and keeps at his books till two. He has a study in his church. The building is surrounded by a high iron fence—the gate is locked when he enters upon the toils of the day. He locks his church door also, and then across a wide vestibule he enters his room of toil. He is beyond annoyance. And those who wish to see him must call on him at particular hours. When he was first settled in Philadelphia, the watchmen threatened to arrest him. They did not believe that he was about the church at four o'clock in a winter's morning for any good purpose; the clergymen of Philadelphia, they said, were men that kept better hours.

He does not look like a student; he is tall, large framed, and full and fair in the face, like a man who says to his soul, 'take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.' He has no gestures in the pulpit, unless the occasional raising of one finger in a measured manner can be so called. He is stationary in the pulpit, almost motionless, with his head slightly inclined towards the right shoulder. Yet no man that I ever heard has the power to enchant an audience for so long a time.

SOWING AND REAPING.

Sometimes the heart grows weary with the load
Of efforts fruitless grown and withered hopes,
Of love that sought in vain to pour itself
Freely and fully forth into the hearts
Of others, God's appointed cups for love.
Sometimes the heart grows weary with the sight
Of those whom God made men with living souls,
Groveling, if not in crime, in vice—if not
In vice, in that rank emptiness and sloth
That rot souls piecemeal even ere they kill;
Sometimes the heart grows weary with the din
Of wealth and cry of want, and sullen laugh
Of holy sorrow curdling into hate,—
Ay, with that groan of universal woe
Wherewith the whole creation, as of yore,
Travaileth in pain together until now;
Sometimes the heart grows weary, very weary.

And then the Small Voice saith, "Sow on in faith!
Sow the good seed! another after thee
Shall reap. Hast thou not garnered many fruits
Of others' sowing, whom thou knowest not?
Canst tell how many struggles, sufferings, tears,
All unrecorded, unremembered all,
Have gone to build up what thou hast of good?
Canst tell how many died, that thou shouldst pray?
All unrecorded, unremembered . . . Nay,
Not unrecorded all, even though forgotten;
Not unrecorded he who died for thee . . .
The seed thou sowest, it is thine to say,
'I will or will not sow it,' as it falls
Ripe with all blessings from that fruitful cross,
That tree of life, rich with His blood?

"Up, man!
Up, worthless one! up in God's strength! go forth!
Go! treasure up for joy each smallest woe!
Each baffled hope, each callous sneer, each threat
Of evil undeserved, each idle jest
Blunting the point of truth, each cold smooth smile
Freezing the love that would be! Treasure these,
I say; these be thy precious cross; by these
Bless God if thou canst suffer for His sake!

"Faint not. 'Tis much only to sow good seed.
'Tis much to sow what another reapeth.
And many daily sow, marked well of God,
Who, having sown do faint, and he forgiveth!
Yet it is more to sow and not to faint.
'In due time we shall reap if we faint not;'
And they that sow in tears, shall reap in joy.'"

[Frazer's Magazine.

PRIESTS AND LAYMEN.

Translated for the Independent from Dr. Tholuch's "Hours of Christian Devotion."

In the Catholic Church they have often fancied that the laic condition was wholly world's ground, and only the priestly estate constituted dear children of God. Indeed, princes and kings have often, before dying, drawn on monks' hoods, as if they were an Elijah's mantle upon which one could fly straightway to heaven. Thus also Dr. Luther tells of a picture, upon which was painted a ship, called the Christian Church, wherein sat no laymen, not even kings or princes, but the pope alone with the clergy; but the laymen swam in the water about the ship, and were only drawn along by cords and ropes which were thrown to them by the holy fathers. Now where such an error really bears sway among men, what unholy confusion, what bitter distress, among men must begin!

But that the laic condition is not so bad and contemptible a state may be assumed with good reason from this; that even the Apostles, after they had already become fishers of men, still for a long time pursued their fishing handicraft, except at intervals; and that St. Paul was not ashamed to be both a preacher of the Gospel and also a sailmaker. It appears, too, as if the first teachers of the Christian Church were not at all ashamed to pursue some manual avocation, since the apostle only charges upon them that their business be honorable.

Moreover, it is highly creditable that our Lord Jesus, whom the people called in direct terms the carpenter, did not scorn in his youth to occupy himself with manual labor, as Dr. Luther relates: "A bishop had longed to know what the Lord Christ did in his youth. Well, in a dream he saw a little boy picking up wood and chips, and when dinner was served up at noon calling his father to the table and saying, 'Mother, shall I call the other man also?' Then the bishop is frightened, and wakes up upon it. I believe, also, that the dear little Jesus helped his mother to work in the house as an obedient child, and sometimes drew water; perhaps, also, at times had brought her wine, and therefore his mother in Cana, at the wedding when wine was wanting, calls upon him from former experience.

There is told us also, in the life of the old fathers, just at the time when they had begun to regard the cowl of the anchorite and the monk as a sure pass-port to the heavenly Jerusalem, a history, which admirably teaches how the Christian who in this life is obliged to ply the awl and the pegs may yet be more highly esteemed before the eye of the Lord than the man with a tonsure and with the cowl. They tell us thus: "As St. Anthony was once praying in his cell, a voice addressed him, which said—'Anthony, thou art, with thy strict ascetic life, still not to be compared with yonder cobbler at Alexandria.' When Anthony heard that, he rose up early in the morning, took his staff and traveled in haste toward the city of Alexandria. And when he had come to the man who had been pointed out to him, he (the cobbler) was startled at seeing such an excellent and holy man. Antonius said to him—'Dear man, tell me what good works thou art wont to do; for on this account did I set out and have come a wide ways out of the wilderness hither.' He answered and said—'I know of no good work that I have done; but when in the morning I come here out of my sleeping-room, before I set myself to work, I say to myself, all the people of this city, small and great, will go into the kingdom of God because they are more righteous than I am; but I, only on account of my sins, would be worthy of eternal punishment, did I not be believe that I should be saved through the mercy of God. And these words I utter from the bottom of my heart before I give myself to rest at night.' When St. Anthony heard this he answered: 'Truly, my son, thou sittest in thy house as a good and accomplished master, and attainest the kingdom of God without disquietness; but I, who have passed all my time in the desert, not without weariness and danger, have not yet gone so far as to be compared to thee, in such a life as thou hast just now told me about.'"

WHAT TROUBLED ME.

"That Christian's pious example troubled me." So said a youthful inquirer, as he was lately asked what had aroused his attention to religion. He referred to one whose personal character was from day to day displayed before him. Many and deeply interesting themes of thought were started by that statement.

1. Genuine modern piety is like the ancient. David would cry, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me by thy free spirit; so shall I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." Ancient piety bore down with great power on the consciences and hearts of men. Modern piety does the same. It uses just such language in the ears of sinners, and produces the same results. They are both links in the same golden chain of God's mercy to men.

2. Were Christian character everywhere what it ought to be, how rapidly might conversions be multiplied. The number of nominal Christians is great. They are found in every community—one or more in five out of seven of the families in our congregations. In addition, therefore, to all the other means of grace, how much moral power is here to operate on sinful minds, provided Christian character take the elevated station demanded of it. Sinners in that case would meet in all directions with orbs of light, pouring their sanctifying radiance upon them. These saints, shining in the beauty of holiness, would compel sinners constantly to see the painful and alarming contrast between themselves and the people of God—would then arouse conscience, and by the visibility of their good works, others would be led to glorify God. How desirable to throw around every traveler in the downward road a cordon of such agencies which shall so powerfully retard his dangerous progress.

3. How sublime the relation which one human being can hold to another! I hear the earnest inquiry about salvation. Ere long I see a face radiant with the joys of God's salvation, the index of a soul now on terms of happy harmony with infinite love. As I look with joy unspeakable on the effect, I look for its cause; and while I find that in the infinite compassion of God, the pious example of an humble and obscure Christain has been employed in this work of mercy. God used that disciple's moral excellence of character, to awaken the careless soul, and to lead it to set its face toward the realms of glory. And if one disciple's holy example is thus used, why may not another and another be thus used? Why may not every Christian feel that God is willing to use him in this manner?

Disciple! you may shine in the beauty of holiness, and the radiance of your example may awaken to deepest intensity the thoughts of sinful minds around you. You may set conscience on fire, and thus make the path of sin so full of thorns, that the transgressor will feel that he cannot longer go that way. There is not a more powerful reprover of a sinful life, than the steady brightness, the pure moral loveliness, of an eminently devoted Christain. Will you not be a Christian?

A CHEERFUL GIVER.

"How is it, Betty," said an elder of the church to a poor woman in Wales, who was always observed to contribute something whenever a collection was taken—"how is it, I always see you drop something in the plate? Where do you get it?"

"Oh, sir, I do not know," she replied. "The Lord knows my heart and my good-will to his cause; and somehow or other, when a collection is to be made, I am sure to have my penny before me; and when it comes, I put it in the plate."

"Well, (said he) you have been faithful in a little; take this sovereign and do what you will with it."

"A sovereign, sir, (said she,) I never had so much money in my life as a sovereign; what shall I do with it?"

"I dare say you will find means of spending it," said he, "if your heart is devoted to the Lord's cause."

Soon after this, a man came round to solicit subscriptions for some benevolent object. He went to one of the elders, who gave him half a sovereign, and another gave him five shillings, both of which were regarded as very liberal donations. Not liking to pass by any member of the church, he asked this poor woman what she would do.

"Put my name down for a sovereign."

"A sovereign, (said he,) why, where did you get a sovereign from?"

"Oh, sir, (said she,) I got it honestly—put my name down for a sovereign."

She gave him the sovereign; and in about two weeks from that time, she received a letter from Doctors' Commons, informing her that a friend had just left her one hundred pounds.

"There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat, and he that watereth, shall be watered also himself." Prov. 9: 25, 26.

A CHILD'S PRAYER ANSWERED.—Prayers are often answered at the present day. A Sunday-school scholar in Yorkshire, England, heard a minister say, that "prayerless persons would not go to heaven." It deeply impressed her mind. When she returned home she repeated it to her mother, and added, "Mother, you never pray." "I cannot pray," was the reply. "Yes, you can pray." "I tell you I cannot pray," answered the mother angrily. "Then, mother, I'll pray for you." She knelt down, and prayed, "O Lord, forgive my mother, and save her from swearing. O Lord, forgive my father, and keep him from getting drunk." The father, who was then at a tavern drinking, came home immediately, and finding his daughter in the act of praying for him and his wife, his mind was deeply impressed. The conduct of the little girl was the means of the hopeful conversion of her parents.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, September 6, 1849.

MISSION TO HAYTI.

On our first page will be found a communication, which, though long, we hope none of readers will neglect to peruse. It treats of the historical, political, and social condition of the Haitians, and urges the claims of that people to be remembered in the missionary efforts of those who sympathize with the African race. We believe that our own denomination ought to undertake a mission to them. God, in his providence, seems to invite us, above all others, to the work. Bro. Jones, though not in ecclesiastical connection with us, is a decided advocate of the Bible Sabbath, as his communication shows; and if we can send one or more missionary families to his aid, he will not only bid them God-speed, but assist them and coöperate with them to the full extent of his power. He has been long enough in the field to have become familiar with the language, and with the best methods of operating among that people. That our denomination is ready and willing to engage in a mission of this kind, whenever a missionary family can be found to go, we have not the least doubt. The fact of Mr. Jones' conversion to our views respecting the Sabbath, and his desire to have a missionary of our order sent out to Hayti, have been known to most of our people for some time; and as far as we can learn, they have been anxious that something should be done in the matter as speedily as possible. If we are not mistaken, the Central and Western Association, at their last anniversaries, passed resolutions recommending the enterprise. On the whole we consider the feelings, of onr people to be so well wrought up, that nothing is wanting to call forth their contributions for the work, but the assurance that some one is ready to go. It was under a presumption of this kind, that the Missionary Association, at its Anniversary on the 3d inst., adopted a resolution directing the Executive Board to take immediate steps towards the occupancy of the Haytien field.

We shall not talk with any great enthusiasm concerning the flattering prospects that are before us in Hayti. We do not know that they are any more flattering than in hundreds of other countries that are crying loudly for the Gospel. Had we been left to our own wisdom in the matter, we should probably have selected almost any other field. But it is enough for us to know that the cloud moves in that direction. There can be no mistake in following where God leads the way; and that his providence points us to that field we cannot well doubt. Let us follow the leadings of his providence, and we shall most assuredly have good success. Who knows but God is in this manner opening the way for our contemplated mission in Eastern Africa? We would have sent brethren Carpenter and Wardner to Africa; but God had work for them to do in China, and shut up their access to the African field. We are now beginning to see that China was the proper place for them. But who can tell but what, among the sons of Africa in the republic of Hayti, may be found those whom the Head of the Church has designed to be the agents of evangelizing Ethiopia, and other portions of that continent now overshadowed by darkness and death? For our own part, we fondly cherish this hope. We shall look forward to the fruits of Seventh Day Baptist missions in Hayti, trusting that thence our Missionary Society will be able to do something towards evangelizing Africa's too much neglected land. This may be a slow way of getting at our contemplated African mission, it is true, but if it is God's way, we may be sure it that the best. It may be more speedy, however, than some would at first imagine. God may have reserved some noble Haytian, of gifted powers, and great natural energy, who will need but a very short training for the work. Who can tell but what this reserved one will be brought to light forthwith, when Seventh-Day Baptists have once committed themselves to the mission proposed? Our brethren in China were scarcely ready to hold public worship in the language of that country, when, behold, Bro. Wardner's teacher is made to confess the excellency of the "new doctrine," and to avow himself a disciple; while, in connection with the strong exercises of his heart, is the conviction that the open avowal of discipleship will constrain him to "preach in the chapel." Is it unreasonable to look for similar results in Hayti? Is it unreasonable to look for such results in any places, where we shall fully lay out our strength in God's work? While we write, the impression fastens upon our mind strongly, that God only waits for Seventh-day Baptists to commit themselves, soul and body, to the work of serving Him, that He may display his wonders in the earth. O brethren, it is "high time that we awake out of sleep." Though it is "late in the morning," let us be up, for God calls us.

*

The American Seamen's Friend Society has received from one of the mission churches in the Sandwich Islands under the pastoral care of the Rev. T. Coan, Hilo, Hawaii, one hundred dollars to aid in the work of furnishing seamen with the Gospel!

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association held its seventh anniversary at Hopkinton, R. I., on first-day, Sept. 2, 1849, A large audience was in attendance, including a good number of delegates from the different sections of the denomination.

Agreeable to appointment, Eld. Lucius Crandall preached the opening discourse. His text was Ecclesiastes 11: 6—"In the morning sow thy seed, and .n the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good." After showing the applicability of the text to the missionary work, he enforced with much earnestness the duty of Christians to use their earliest opportunity, and all subsequent opportunities, to make known the gospel of Christ. The last clause of the text furnished him with a good occasion to consider the common objection to missionary labor, that we do not know what to expect as the result of our labors. Of this he availed himself to set forth the doctrine, that the uncertainty here alluded to is a reason for enlarging, rather than contracting our field of effort, so that in some part of the field, at least, there may be seed sown on good ground, which shall bring forth the fruit we so much desire.

After the discourse, the officers of the Association took their seats, the 762d hymn was sung, and Eld. Wm. B. Maxson addressed the throne of grace. The Constitution was then read, Committees were appointed to nominate Officers and to audit the Treasurer's Account, and a vote was passed inviting visiting brethren to participate in the deliberations of the occasion.

The Treasurer presented his report in detail, showing that he had received during the year, including the balance of last year's account, $2035 32; paid out, $1580 14; leaving a balance in the Treasury of $455 18.

The Annual Report of the Executive Board was read by the Corresponding Secretary. It is a long and exceedingly interesting document. But we have neither time nor room here to give an abstract of it. Suffice it to say, that in connection with each of our missions there are many encouraging circumstances. The mission at the West has resulted in the organization of a church with good prospects of permanence and increase. The mission in China is receiving very manifest tokens of divine favor. A chapel has been opened, in which the gospel is proclaimed to the Chinese in their own tongue—the number usually in attendance is very respectable, and our missionaries believe that among those whom they have endeavored to instruct, are two at least whose hearts have been touched by the Spirit of God.

At the conclusion of the Report, Wm. B. Maxson moved that it be printed under the direction of the Board. He regarded it as containing a large amount of valuable and encouraging information, the perusal of which could not fail of doing much to sustain and increase the missionary spirit among our people. Bro. Maxson referred to several circumstances connected with the establishment and progress of the mission, which were to him clear indications of the Divine approbation, and led him to expect the continuance of the Divine blessing. The circumstances which have transpired, and the facts which have been brought to light, prove beyond a doubt the wisdom of locating our brethren in China, and the duty of maintaining them there.

James H. Cochran followed with some remarks. He said that he thanked God for the privilige of living to see this day. His heart had been thrilled with joy by the intelligence contained in the Report, and he believed that the same effect had been produced upon all. He hoped it would be printed and read from the pulpit of every church in the denominotion. When he first began to think of keeping the Sabbath, he was connected with those who were earnestly engaged in the missionary work; and the idea of leaving them and uniting with a people who were doing little or nothing in that work troubled him exceedingly. But now he could see that his fears of losing his influence in the missionary work by joining the Seventh-day Baptists, were groundless and wicked. He believed, however, that there were many others standing in the same position which he once occupied. The perusal of this Report would do much to enlighten them, and thus have an influence to establish our views of the Sabbath. He was anxious to have it printed also that he might read it to those who are so faithless about the missionary work that they refuse to contribute for it, even if they do not set themselves in opposition to it. The facts contained in the report will put to rest their objections.

S. S. Griswold spoke of the fears which he once had, that in embracing the Sabbath he should be cut off from opportunities of laboring for the conversion of the heathen. Now he saw, however, that God had owned and blessed our efforts in that course, on which account he felt a joy he had never expected to feel. He believed that our missionary efforts were doing more than all other things to secure a favorable and candid consideration of the claims of the sabbath.

Nathan V. Hull spoke of the anxiety which he felt for a general revival of religion throughout our churches. This Report, he believed, would do much to create the spirit of revivals; and he therefore felt encouraged in view of its being circulated extensively among our people.

Resolved, That this Association considers it important that our missionary operations be enlarged, and that the spirit of missions should be cultivated in our churches, until witnesses to the everlasting equity and perpetuity of God's law, and to the gospel of Jesus as the only power competent to save souls, shall be sent to all lands.

This resolution was presented by Nathan V. Hull, who advocated it with considerable earnestness. Our efforts in China he thought, ought to be increased; especially ought we to provide our missionaries there with means to print portions of Scripture, and such Tracts as they may deem useful. Arrangements ought also to be made, for a reinforcement of that mission at no distant day. Other fields, likewise, are open, and invite cultivation. Mr. Hull, in this connection, referred to the fact that there is even now, among our brethren considerable skepticism in relation to the success of missionary efforts. In his opinion, a vigorous prosecution of the missionary work will, with the blessing of God, do more than any thing else to eradicate this unbelief.

James Summerbell spoke of the common impression among the people, that our missionary efforts have reference simply to the support of Brethren Carpenter and Wardner in China. There are other inviting fields, however,—Let these also be kept before their minds, and the hold of the missionary enterprise upon their hearts will be proportionally increased.

Resolved, That the leadings of Divine Providence require the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination to undertake a missionary enterprise in Hayti, and that the Executive Board be directed to take immediate steps towards the occupancy of that field.

This resolution was presented by Geo. B. Utter, who made some remarks in relation to the condition of Hayti, and then invited Rev. J. W. Morton, late a missionary to Hayti, to give to the meeting his views of Hayti as a field of missionary labor. Mr. Morton expressed his settled conviction that Hayti is a good field, and that the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination ought to have a station there. One consideration to which he alluded as indicating the propriety and duty of this course, was, that as a body we sympathize with the African race—a remark which can be made of only a few denominations. The Haytiens, said Mr. Morton, are not now slaves, nor are there many now living who ever were slaves; but if you want to see the effects of slavery, go to Hayti. Superstition in its worst form is found there. From Africa they brought superstitions that were bad enough; but while they have retained those superstitions, they have adopted also the superstitions of Romanism. Their condition is such as demands Christian effort, and your circumstances are peculiarly adapted to bestow that effort. Another consideration, which seemed to Mr. Morton to indicate our duty, was the fact that there is in that field one who sympathizes with us in regard to the Sabbath. Bro. Jones is laboring there, and would undoubtedly welcome a missionary from us. Our Saviour sent forth his disciples two and two, and experience has proved the wisdom of that arrangement. Now send a missionary to Hayti, and he will have the sympathy and coöperation of the brother already there. One will assist the other by counsel, as truly as if both belonged to the same Society. The ease of getting to Hayti was also alluded to. For less than a hundred dollars a missionary family can be taken to the station; and when once there, he can communicate frequently with home, and so keep the Board well informed of his movements and prospects. In view of these considerations, and others which he presented, Mr. Morton urged the passage of the resolution.

James H. Cochran and Wm. B. Maxson also advocated the resolution, and it was passed by a strong rising vote.

The delegate appointed at the last meeting of the Association, to attend the Anniversary of the Baptist Free Mission Society, made a full report of his visit. The facts have already been laid before the readers of the Recorder, rendering it unnecessary here to state them. Eld. Wm. B. Maxson was appointed to attend the next Anniversary of that Society.

A proposition was submitted by Eld. Lucius Crandall, to make such a change in the Constitution as will admit of the use of the term Society, instead of Association, as the name of this body. It seems that when the Constitution was adopted, there was a Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society in existence, on which account the term Association was chosen—a term which is very often confounded with other than missionary operations. But now that Society has ceased to exist, and the objection then urged to the use of the term Society is removed. Hence the proposition. After some explanations and remarks, the change was agreed to, so that this body will hereafter be known as the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Society.

After an exceedingly interesting session, the Society adjourned to meet with the first Church in Alfred, Allegany Co., N. Y., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1850.

Officers for the Ensuing Year.

President—DAVID DUNN, of New Market, N. J.

Vice Presidents,

WM. B. MAXSON, ISAAC D. TITSWORTH,
ELI S. BAILEY, T. B. STILLMAN,
NATHAN V. HULL, J. W. LANGWORTHY,
LEMAN ANDRUS, GEO. H. PERRY,
JAMES BAILEY, JAMES H. COCHRAN,
LESTER T. ROGERS.

Cor. Sec.—T. B. BROWN, of New York.
Rec. Sec.—GEO. B. UTTER, of New York.
Treasurer—A. D. TITSWORTH, of Metouchin, N. J.

Directors,

W. B. GILLETT, JOHN D. TITSWORTH,
LUCIUS CRANDALL, EDWIN G. CHAMPLIN,
GEO. GREENMAN.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE TRACT SOCIETY.

The American Sabbath Tract Society held its annual meeting in the meeting house of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., on the 3d inst. The President N. V. Hull, of Alfred, N. Y., in the chair.

The Treasurer's Report showed that the receipts of the Society during the year have been small; only $224 87, which, including a balance on hand last year of $155 87, make the total $380 73. The expenditures have been $308 33, leaving a balance now in the treasury of $72 40.

The Report of the Board of Directors showed that notwithstanding the limited receipts of the year, more had been accomplished in the way of tract distribution by agents, colporteurs, &c., than for some time before. It appeared, however, that urgent necessity existed for more abundant contributions and enlarged operations. Upon the motion to adopt the Report, very interesting and animated addresses were made by brethren, W. B. Maxson, G. B. Utter, L. Crandall, S. S. Griswold, J. H. Cochran, N. V. Hull, A. B. Burdick, and J. W. Morton.

A resolution, instructing the Board to employ, as soon as practicable, an Agent, to present the claims of the Society to the denomination and the public generally for the ensuing year, was submitted by Bro. W. C. Kenyon of Alfred, and advocated by him in an earnest and forcible manner. Brethren Cochran, Maxson, and others, participated in the discussion, and the resolution was finally adopted.

The Society being desirous of operating, the coming year, in a more vigorous and effective manner than heretofore, passed the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Society the sum of at least one thousand dollars will be needed the ensuing year to carry forward its operations

The following resolution, submitted by Bro. Crandall, was also adopted.

Resolved, That this Society instruct the Corresponding Secretary to furnish the pastors of our Churches with the names of all annual subscribers to its funds, and the amount of their several subscriptions, with a request that he will collect and transmit the same to the Treasurer.

These resolutions were all accompanied with animating addresses, of which we regret that we cannot give an abstract; but unfortunately we took no notes. They all evinced a determination to work more vigorously to promote the Society's interests and the cause of Sabbath reform generally, than ever. It seemed to be the settled conviction of all present that "the signs of the times" indicate very clearly our duty "to do with our might what our hands find to do" in this great work, and that the prospects of success were never more encouraging than at present.

All the old officers of the Society were re-elected, and after a very harmonious and refreshing session, the Society adjourned to meet with the first Seventh-day Baptist church in Alfred, N. Y. on the sixth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1850.

*

A New Church on a New Plan.—The Third Presbyterian Congregation of Trenton, N. J., says the Burlington Gazette, proposes erecting a new and spacious church edifice. The Trustees, as a corporate body, to issue 100 shares of stock at $100 each. The subscribers to this stock to be furnished with certificates, redeemable in pews. Those who hold several shares can dispose of them to purchasers of pews, and thus receive back their principal without loss. Those who hold a single share are entitled to a pew of its value. The Church is by this means relieved of debt, and the responsibility left with the individual stockholders. It is also proposed to retain several pews for the exclusive use of the poorer members—not according to the present inviduous custom, in the rear of the Church, but scattered indiscriminately over the edifice.

◆

Population of Hungary.—Dr. Kraitsir is delivering a series of lectures in Boston, on the war in Hungary, of which the Boston Traveler is publishing well prepared extracts. From a report in that journal, of a recent lecture, we learn that the Maygars number 4,800,000; there are 4,200,000 Sclavonians; of Croatians, 2,200,000; Germans, about 1,200,000; Bulgarians, a kind of Sclavonians, 12,000; Jews, 244,000; French, 6,000; Greeks, 6,000; and Armenians, 3 to 4,000; making a grand total of 12,800,000. Of this number 6,000,000 are Catholics, 2,600,000 belonging to the Greek Church, who obey the Patriarch at Constantinople. The Maygars are the representatives of the nation. What is technically called Calvinistic, is their religion, and it may be called the Maygar religion.

Descendants of Rev. Thomas Hooker.—It is stated in the life of this eminent New-England divine, that among his posterity there are forty-one ministers of the Gospel, and forty more who married his female descendants; nine professors, authors and poets; forty who have occupied important public offices; fourteen members of the bar, not included in the preceding, and seventeen doctors of medicine.

Revival in Caroline County, Va.—The Religious Herald, Va., contains a letter from A. Broaddus, which reports a revival in Salem, Caroline county, and vicinity, the result of which will be the addition to the church of sixty or more persons. Already forty-nine have been baptized. The letter says:—"Among the number who have united with the church are two old men, upwards of seventy-seven years of age, and a lady who has been for several years a member of the Presbyterian church. This has been, not a mere excitement, but a genuine revival of religion."

Sunday in a Catholic Country.—At Rio all the shops and stores are open on Sunday, and all sorts of work done as on week days. A Sunday letter, dated June 18th, says: "This has been the celebration of some saint, and it was accompanied by fire-works, firing of guns and cannon, ringing of all the bells, and bonfires, exactly as we celebrate the 4th of July at home. There are exhibitions at the theatres, bull-fights, cock-fights, and horse-racing as on the other days of the week."

Presbyterian General Assembly.—The Philadelphia North American, from a copy of the Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, has collected the following statistics showing the progress of that church during the past ten years:—

	1839.	1849	Increase
Synods	17	23	6
Presbyteries	96	122	28
Candidates for the ministry	173	364	180
Lidentiates	192	252	57
Ministers	1243	1860	619
Churches	1833	2512	689
Members added on examination	6377	8976	2599
Members added on certificate	4198	8976	5598
Adults baptized	1614	2412	763
Children	7712	9895	1189
Whole number of communicants reported.	128,043	200,832	72,718
Amount contributed for religious purposes.	$123,436	$369,371	$245,935

The average annual increase of the Church during the past ten years has been—Ministers, 61; Churches, 68; Communicants, 7,271, and in pecuniary contributions, $24,593.

The Proper Distinction for a Minister.—One of the editors of the Inependent, who is rusticating in the vicinity of Portsmouth, N. H., makes the following commensense suggestion on this subject:—

"I observe that the ministers here wear the gown in the pulpit. This is not an innovation, but a return to an old custom. Some good people have a superstitious horror of the gown, as a badge of Episcopacy if not of Popery; but the gown belongs to the university, not to the church; to the scholar, not to the priest; and if such persons would examine the prints of Luther, and Calvin, and Knox, and of the old Puritan divines, they would discover their mistake. To some figures the gown is quite becoming; and in the summer season, when worn in lieu of a coat, it must be very comfortable. It is entirely a matter of taste; but my objections to it are that it hampers a speaker who is naturally animated and graceful, and that it forms a badge of distinction between ministers and other classes. The minister should appear as a simple citizen, a plain Christian man, and not as one of "an order;" and should rely upon his character, talents, piety, and works for that distinction which is proper and desirable, and not upon the color of his coat or neckcloth, a silk gown, or a three cornered hat."

Prize Essays in England.—Five prizes are offered by the London Tract Society for treatises on the Condition of the Working Classes, and the best means of promoting their temporal and spiritual welfare.

£100	for the best work, not over 144 pp., 12mo.
50	for the second best, "
25	for the best tract, not over 48 pp., 12mo.
20	for the second best, "
15	for the third best, "

"The principles of these works must be in harmony with the Scriptures, and free from all sectarian bias. The subjects introduced, whether religious, moral, social, or economical, must be viewed in the light of Divine revelation. The copyright of all the prize pieces to belong to the Society.

The adjudicators to be the Committee and Officers of the Religious Tract Society.

The manuscripts to be addressed to Mr. William Jones, Religious Tract Society, 56 Paternoster-row, London, on or before the 1st of January, 1850. They must be distinguished by a motto and initials, with a sealed letter, containing the name and address of the writer."

Scott's Commentary.—The proprietors of the English copyright of this great work have held the work at six ginueas. They now offer to print an edition at three ginueas, in cloth boards. It is in six quarto volumes, upwards of 5000 pages, with 15 maps, and 69 engraved illustrations. It has been estimated that in England and America not less than £500,000 have been expended by the public in the purchase of this work. In 1823 Mr. Scott's biographer said:

"Besides the English editions, up to this time amounting to 12,000 copies, I have received the particulars of eight editions printed in the United States, at Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Hartford, from the year 1808 to 1819, amounting to 25,250 copies. The retail price of the English copies would amount to the sum of £67,600; that of the American copies to £132,000—making together £199,000. Probably no theological work can be named which produced by its sale during its author's life-time an equal sum."

Free Bread.—Among the legacies which the corporation of Trinity Episcopal Church, New York, has long had in charge, is one made many years ago by John Leahe. He leaves £1,000 with the following instructions:—

"I give and bequeath unto the Rector and inhabitants of the city of New York, in communion of the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the State of New York, and their successors, one thousand pounds lawful money of said State, to be by them put at lawful interest, and the annual income thereof to be laid out in sixpenny wheaten loaves of bread, and distributed on every Sabbath day, in some part of said church, after divine service in the morning, to such poor as to them shall appear most dervibSu."

THE OVER-RULING HAND OF PROVIDENCE.

In his address to a company of miners emigrating to California, Rev. E. N. Kirk, of Boston, thus strikingly illustrates the Divine superintendence in reference to the disclosure of the Gold on the Pacific coast:—

"A British merchant discovered it more than a century ago, and was carrying, for a specimen, a box of gold dust to England by way of China. This box was lost in some affray with Chinamen. Had he carried it to England, the condition of the world might have been prematurely changed. Had Great Britain found a gold mine of such value on this continent, we may readily believe the whole current of political events would have been totally changed by it. But God, who works by small instruments as well as by great, did not suffer that box to reach England, and induce her to plant a strong colony on the great western outlet of North America. He reserved it for this age and this people."

A Curiosity.—An English paper states that there has been exhibiting at the Egyptian Hall, London, a full-length minaiture of a female discovered by Mr. Eades in a block of marble which he was preparing for an obelisk. Mr. Eades thus describes it:—

"This unprecedented phenomenon of nature is a most mysterious and truly astonishing full-length miniature of a lady, three inches in height, in the costume of the aristocracy of the present time; possessing accurate and pleasing features, graceful figure, beautiful ringlets; upon the head is a cottage bonnet, to which is attached a superb veil; under the arm she carries a fashionable muff, which has the appearance of one of the most recherche of the Hudson Bay Company. The incomparable miniature has been examined by several antiquariies, scientific gentlemen, first rate artists, and numerous distingnished ladies and gentlemen, who have unanimously pronounced it to be the finest specimen ever beheld, and may be challenged against the world; so perfectly uniform in every particular, combining grace and elegance, that it appears a production of Mr. Martin's or some other celebrated artist."

The Calabers.—The following particulars in relation to the race of negroes on the Coast of Africa, known as the Calabers, are communicated, says the Boston Journal, by a missionary who spent five years on the Calaber River:—

"The mission house up the Calaber River is 100 miles north of the Island of Fernando Po. This river is deep, and navigable for any sized vessel all the year, and is three-fourths of a mile wide, and eight fathoms to this station, and good water far above, and is not a branch of the Niger; but there is a channel some distance above, through which the surplus waters in an overflow find their way into the Niger, but most of the year the channel is dry. The iron house of the Chief or King at the station was from England. Many houses of Chiefs are as well furnished as gentlemen's houses in America. The slave trade cannot be abolished by the present war system. Colonization and religious instruction is the true method. The common people on the coast are slaves. The grave of Lander is on Fernando Po, but is unmarked by a stone!"

At a meeting of the Italian residents in London, the following resolution was passed: "That this meeting, highly condemning as tyrannical, infamous, anti-evangelical, and impious, the conduct of Pope Pius IX., invites all the Italian patriots to follow the true religion of Jesus Christ, as followed by their ancestors, throwing aside their Papal church, which is conspiring against the liberties of the people."

Fifty-three priests have been arrested at Rome, by the established court of the Vicar General, for having been present at the decease of the republicans killed in defence of Rome, and for having administered to them the last consolations of religion.

A Home Exemption Bill has been passed by the Legislature of Maine, and signed by the Governor. It exempts real estate to the value of $500, and if a debtor is not the owner of real estate to that value, then $500 of personal property to be by him selected, in addition to the specific exemptions already provided for. The change is not to affect existing debts.

The Baptists in Indiana are moving in earnest towards the permanent establishment of "Franklin College." Incited by the example of Lewisburg, they are putting forth vigorous efforts to secure an endowment of $100,000.

Georgia has now more than 600 miles of railroad, and three railroads are in process of construction which will cost about $400,000, and make 1000 miles of railroad.

The time for the final closing of the affairs of the Commercial Bank at Portsmouth, N. H., expired on the 1st day of September, after which time the bills of said bank will not be redeemed.

The Journal du Havre says that the French Government intends to present to the Assembly a project to establish a line of transatlantic packets under new regulations, and different from those which were admitted under the last reign.

It is stated that Rhode Island has within her limited territory 163 cotton mills, consuming 560,000 bales of cotton, and manufacturing 70,000,000 yards of cloth annually.

The editor of the Middletown (Ct.) Sentinel has been presented with a hen's egg "measuring fully nine inches by six and three-quarters, and weighing five ounces!"

The papers say that Sheridan Knowles, the great English dramatist, has turned preacher.

Gen. Taylor has been invited to visit Springfield, Mass., and writes back word that his engagements will not permit.

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamship Washington has arrived since our last, bringing advices from Rome to the 10th, London 20th, Paris 19th, and Vienna the 14th ult. There have been several important military movements and battles between the Hungarians and the Austro-Russians. The news from all parts of the European Continent is rather interesting.

The French President was still on his tour to the various cities of France. His reception at Rouen was favorable, his friends say enthusiastic; but at Havre, and other places, the reception seems to have been cold. It is thought by many that this tour of Louis Napoleon is intended as a feeler put out with a view to his establishment in his present position for life, with the empire in the background; or, if the occasion appears favorable, the taking of an immediate possession of an imperial throne. It is admitted, however, that as yet there has been but small encouragement afforded for this in any quarter. The state of siege under which Paris and the departments of the Seine has been hitherto placed having ceased, the democratic journals, which were suspended, have commenced to re-appear. Several of the southern departments have been lately devastated by fires, which are known to be the work of incendiaries. In the departments of the Isere and the Drome, the devastation has been terrible. The crops were completely destroyed, and a great amount of furniture and farm stock lost. At Laumur, on the 7th, fifteen farm-houses, and their appendages, were burned. Similar fires are reported in the Tarbe.

The imposing spectacle on which, at the present moment, the attention of Europe and the whole civilized world is riveted—the struggle of the Hungarian nation against the united forces of the vast empires of Russia and Austria, is becoming of more interest every day. The large Russian army under Paskiewitsch, has advanced as far as Debreczin; whilst the Hungarians, not wishing to engage the main body of the Russian troops, have retreated from that position. In the same manner the Austrian commander-in-chief, General Haynau, has penetrated into the interior of Hungary, and having crossed the river Theiss, now occupies the important position of Szegedin, from which he is able to give effective assistance to the army of the Ban of Croatia, which is operating at the South. At the same time, also, the Russian troops under General Luders, have succeeded, together with another division of the Russian army, in clearing Transylvania; and, according to the latest official accounts, the Hungarian General, Bem, has retired into Moldavia. Thus far, the operations of the imperial armies seem to have been attended with success. But the retreat of the Hungarians has evidently been made only according to the tactics they have observed throughout the whole campaign, that is, for the purpose of leading the enemy into the interior of the country, where the vast Russian and Austrian armies will be without sufficient supplies and provisions, exposed to a deadly climate, and cut off from retreat by fresh forces of the Magyars, which are every where organizing in the rear of the imperial troops. According to all accounts, the country population in Hungary is rising en masse. If the armies of the allied powers do not succeed soon in forcing the Hungarians to engagements, and in defeating Generals Gorgey and Dembinski, their position must become desperate. In consequence of a sortie made by the Magyars from the fortress of Comorn, that lies between Vienna and Pesth, in which a division of the Austrian army has been completely defeated, matters have taken a very unfavorable turn for the Austrians in the western part of Hungary. Nearly the whole country between Pesth and the Austrian capital is now in possession of the Hungarians. The fortress of Raab, near Comorn, is in their hands. The communication with the armies under Haynau and Pskiewitsch is, thereby, completely cut off. No knowledge of the fate of the latter armies will now reach Vienna. By accounts from that city we learn that a general panic prevails there, in consequence of the report of the advance of the Hungarians against the capital. The forces of the Magyars, stationed in the fortress of Comorn, were much more considerable than it was believed or else the capital would not have been left without sufficient protection. All disposable forces of the Austrian troops, amounting to about 27,000, have now been concentrated in Presburg, near Vienna. A large body of the Hungarian troops is stated to be stationed between Wiselburg and Hochstrass, in the vicinity of Presburg. According to the latest advices from the latter place, active preparations were made to defend the city, and fortifications were being thrown up. But, whilst something decisive is about to take place in western Hungary, there is every reason to believe that the operations of the Russian and Austrian armies against the Hungarians under Gorgey and Dembinski, are at the present moment in full progress. General Haynau has imposed a tremendous fine upon the Jewish communities at Buda and Pesth; forcing them to furnish the imperialist army with an immense quantity of clothing, provisions, and also a large number of well-caparisoned horses. It is estimated that there is over 50,000 Jews in the Hungarian army, comprising a large number of superior officers.

The Romans have been thrown into a state of strong excitement by a proclamation of the three Cardinal Commissioners appointed as a provisional executive by the Pope, until he himself returns to the Eternal City. By an edict of these ecclesiastics, all the paper money issued by the Roman Republic, and which of course, has passed into the hands of all sorts of citizens, is reduced 35 per cent. in value. On account of this piece of politico-ecclesiastical wisdom, the French forces were obliged to occupy the squares and streets as much as if the city were in a state of insurrection. No ministry has yet been appointed. It is reported that the Austrian land forces have been compelled to retreat from the blockading of Venice.

The differences between Prussia and the southern States are daily assuming a more serious character. The Prussian troops in the west of Germany are still remaining there, under the command of the Prince of Prussia, though the insurrection is completely quelled. The Prussian forces in and around Frankfort are being considerably increased, whilst the Bavarian troops stationed in that city have also received reinforcement. The whole Bavarian army is being placed on a war footing; and according to the papers, which are regarded as the organs of the Bavarian Government, the latter is stated to intend asserting its claims to different parts of the Grand Duchy of Baden, now occupied by Prussia.

Nothing of importance from England or Ireland.

ADVICE FROM THE GOLD REGIONS.

Some of the letters from the Gold Region, which are found in recent papers contain advice worth heeding. From letters in a recent number of the N. Y. Daily Tribune, we copy the following :—

"I wish you to advise all persons that have a good business at home, to think well on it before they leave all their comforts to struggle and dig for gold in California, for, believe me gentlemen, gold cannot be obtained without the hardest of labor and privations. Good hearty men, and all sorts of mechanics that are used to hard work, can make money here at present. How it will be, after ten or twelve thousand get here, I cannot say; but owing to the absence of all LAW and ORDER, I am afraid there will be a bad state of things. Judge Lynch's system of trials and punishments seems to predominate here as well as at the mines, and all you have to do is to look out for yourself."

"You did wisely when you decided not to come out here. There is a large class here and bound hither, to which, by your own confession, you belong, who expect to pick up gold as they would pebbles on the beach, one and all of whom are doomed to disappointment. To acquire gold, even in this golden region, hard work is necessary, and it is only the hard working men, those who are accustomed to exposure and who know how to use the pick and the crowbar —men of muscle and robust constitution—who can be certain of improving their condition by coming to the mines."

"There is little law or order here, and what you have to do is to look out for yourself. There are hundreds of Chilians, Sonorians, Kanackers, Malays, and, in fact, all nations on the globe here, and thousands more a coming. On the 22d inst. we had quite a fracas in the streets, between a party called the Hounds and the Chilians. One of the Hounds was shot by a Chilian, and died in 48 hours. They next day they went to the Square, called a meeting, and adjourned to the Chilian's tent; took it down, sold him out, and gave all the money to defray the expenses of the funeral of the deceased. The Chilian escaped, and has gone to parts unknown."

Americans Imprisoned in Mexico.

The Cincinnati Daily Commercial contains a letter addressed from Puebla, June 1, by W. B. McElhany, a keeper of the Cincinnati and Harrison turnpike, from which it would appear that young McElhany and ten other Americans are held in close confinement there on a charge of robbing. His version of the affair runs thus :

"On or about the 5th of June, 1848, I, with about twenty more young men, set out for Vera Cruz on horseback. We were very badly armed. When we arrived at a small town about twelve miles from this city, we were persuaded to leave the main road, and take a nearer cut to Jalapa. We proceeded on this new road about forty miles, when we were attacked by a party of lancers, and after killing eight of our party they made us prisoners. After securing us, we were robbed of everything but our shirts and pantaloons, and then taken to a small town called St. Andres, where they held a consultation whether they should shoot us or not, and concluded to shoot us the next afternoon, but they did not; some Colonel interceded for us. From that town they marched us to another, and kept us until Gen. Worth, with the remainder of the American army, had left for Jalapa, and then marched us to this city. When we were coming here we could see the last of the Americans going on another road, about two miles distant from us, but we could give them no sign. After we had been here fifteen days they took us out and tried us for highway robbery. Such a trial and Court was never seen before. The whole Court consisted of the Judge and interpreter—no jury or witness. After trying us they sent us back to prison, where we remained for seven months more, when we were called out again and tried after the same manner. No witnesses have over appeared. What ground they have for charging us with this crime we cannot see. Yesterday we were told that they were going to send our cause to another town, and have it settled by another Court."

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION OF A STEAM BOILER. —One of the most heart-rending occurrences that has ever been our lot to record, says the Cincinnati Commercial of Aug. 23d, occurred in Covington yesterday morning on Lexington turnpike. It was occasioned by the collapsing of the flues in a boiler attached to the steam saw-mill of Ambrose Rose & Co. The boiler was wrenched from its fastenings carried across a common some 240 feet, and then passed through the house of Mr. Aikenbroke a German, passing through the dining-room, making a clear sweep of all the household furniture, and leaving that family destitute of almost everything, as the most valuable articles were stored in that room. Two women who were standing in the door leading to the front shop came within a hair's breadth of losing their lives; they were struck with some of the timbers which fell from above. The boiler then entered the wagon shop of John Attenschmidt, clearing it of benches, wagons, wheels, tools, &c. A man by the name of Valentine, employed in this shop, was carried in advance of the boiler some 60 feet across a stone yard, and then stove through the second story of a frame building, where he was found, all torn and mangled to pieces. The boiler entered the stone yard of F. Harman, and struck a huge stone and glided upward and passed through the house of Mrs. Roland, smashing everything, prostrating the building in a great degree to the ground, but not injuring her person. It then passed to the house of Mr. Kehler, demolishing it in like manner. The check it received by a large stone, retarded its progress, causing it to land in the second story of Mr. Kehler's house; Mr. K. was lying in a bed directly beneath the boiler, not two feet below. The bed was all broken to pieces. Mr. K. was buried beneath a quantity of dirt, but not badly injured. Herman J. Debling, engaged in sawing stone, had his skull fractured, and a piece of the bone covering the membranes was forced into his baains. The boiler was carried the distance of 400 feet. Its weight is 6 tons. It was 80 feet long and 40 feet in diameter. The loss is $5,000.

ONE OF THE PRINTERS.—There is a good practical printer by the name of James Evans, who lives at Batavia, Ohio, who educated himself at a distinguished Literary Institution in New-Hampshire, is a practical farmer, has taught schools of various grades in New England, traveled through most of the States of the Union, taught a "High School" in Ohio, a "Seminary" in Kentucky, an "Academy" in Illinois, and one in Missouri; been Superintendent of Common Schools and School Examiner, President of a College of Teachers, and of a literary Association, who once offered a prize of $50 for the best method of teaching the branches usually taught in a High School, and $25 for those taught in Common School; who has acted in the capacity of Editor of three different newspapers, and more or less in the capacity of Constable, Sheriff, County Treasurer, Recorder, Auctioneer, and Merchant, wholesale Peddler, and Postmaster at three different places; who is a practical Surveyor, Engineer, Map-maker, also a regular member of the Bar, and Notary Public, &c., &c.; and who works at the printing business more or less every day. He is about 30 years of age, and in easy circumstances. His father died very poor, when he was young, and his mother supported the family several years by hard labor. He has made himself what he is. [Cincinnati Com.

EXPEDITION AGAINST CUBA.—The editor of the Providence Transcript is informed that emissaries from abroad are in that city, attempting to enlist men for the invasion of Cuba; and, in order to induce citizens to enlist, they offer very liberal pay in money, with a bonus on landing at Cuba, where it is said many of the people are in favor of the movement. They represent that Gen. ——, of Cuba, now in this country, is at the head of the movement in the United States; and that fifteen thousand individuals in the United States have already agreed to join. It is farther said, that the Cabinet of President Taylor, or a part of them, socretly favor the movement. As a farther inducement to recruits, it is said that the commanding officer of the United States vessels, sent to watch the movement, is favorable to, and will not interrupt it. One muster of officers for INSTANT embarkation was to take place in New York THIS DAY, (Saturday, Sept. 1,) and persons left New England yesterday to be present.

SINGULAR STATISTICS.—A very curious statement was published in Paris by M. Eairet, a medical professor, relative to the number of suicides committed in France for 30 years. From the records of the police, that the total number of suicides attempted to be committed were 6,782, and three-fourths of the individuals were unmarried. We subjoin the relative numbers of male and female suicides :—Crossed in love, 97 males, 157 females; jealousy, 39 males, 53 females; mortified pride, 27 males, 27 females; calumny and loss of reputation, 97 males, 28 females; remorse, 37 males, 12 females; disappointed ambition, 110 males, 12 females; reverse of fortune, 283 males, 39 females; gaming, 141 males, 14 females; other species of misconduct, 208 males, 79 females; domestic chagrins, 524 males, 250 females; misery, 511 males, 594 females; fanaticism, 1 male, 13 females.

ONE WAY TO GET RID OF INDIANS.—The St. Louis Union says that the State Congress of Chihuahua has passed an Indian Appropriation bill, to defray the expenses of an Indian war, to be waged by foreign chivalry under contract with the State Government. Major Chevallie, of renowned fame in Texas, with 25 well armed and equipped Americans, was the first to enter the field. The terms of contract were $200 each for the scalps of warriors, $150 each for those of women and children, and $200 for prisoners, and all the captured animals to be retained by the Major and his command. The Major secured 9 scalps, 4 prisoners, and 55 animals in his first campaign.

CONNECTICUT MANUFACTURES.—Connecticut, though but the twenty-eighth in size of the States of the Union, holds probably about the sixth place in rank as to the amount of manufacturing carried on within its limits. In that State late returns show the following results : There are 137 cotton mills, consuming yearly 13,319,170 pounds of cotton, and manufacturing 33,431,985 yards of cloth, 1,872,863 pounds of yarn, 70,000 dozen spools of thread, 608,547 pounds of batting, 30,000 dozen sheets of pelisse wadding, 47,817 yards of cotton flannel. The amount of capital invested is $3,312,450. There are 2,312 males, and 3,050 females employed in this business.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.—The Rochester Democrat says : We were shown yesterday the model of a machine invented by an old citizen of this place, which he is about sending to the Patent Office, constructed for sawing out the beveled and curvilinear timbers used in boat-building. A trial of one of them has tested satisfactorily the capacity and usefulness of this new invention. Since June last, the machine has done excellent service. It is the intention of the inventor to have one of his machines at the State Fair.

MILWAUKEE.—The Sentinel and Gazette tells us that 15 years ago the City of Milwaukee contained one white settler, and no more; now it contains 18,000: in the year ending July 1, 1849 it exported 1,148,807 bushels of Wheat and 201,942 barrels of Flour: its manufactures are valued at $1,714,200, beside 6 Flouring mills, consuming 7,000 bushels Wheat daily. Its citizens own 39 vessels, 5,542 tuns, and of stock in steamers 3,000 tuns: 16 sail are engaged in the Lumber trade. The arrivals at the port dnring 1848, of steamers, brigs, barks and schooners were 1,376.

A NEW SCOURGE.—The Washington Republic publishes a letter from Hungary, in which a terrible scourge is said to have seized the Roman soldiers, known as the "lice pest." The individual is attacked by vermin under the skin, which increase until the whole body becomes one mass of corruption. Hitherto no remedy has been discovered, and the person attacked is considered as doomed; and the letters say, "hundreds have, at their own solicitations, been thrown into the river, to terminate their sufferings."

ICE-WATER AT SEA.—An experiment has been recently tried at sea to render the insipid waters taken from the casks cool and refreshing, which proved entirely successful. A wine bottle was procured, which being filled from the cask, and corked tightly, was thrown into thirty or forty fathoms of water by means of a lead. Upon being taken up in five or seven minutes interval, the temperature of its contents was found to be almost as cold as ice-water.

REMEDY AGAINST THE CLOTH MOTH.—The vapor of oil or spirits of turpentine acts as a terrible poison to moth grubs. A small piece of paper or linen just moistened with it, and put into the wardrobe or drawers, for a single day, two or three times a year, is a sufficient preservative against moths. If a small quantity of turpentine be dissolved in spirits of wine, whereby the odor will be almost wholly removed, it will be sufficient.

SUMMARY.

Fourteen hundred tailors are now in London totally unemployed, and hundreds daily applying for relief to the general fund; the funds are however, exhausted. Nine hundred shoemakers out of work, have their names on the books, and seventeen hundred are working for half wages. The curriers and leather dressers are in the same situation. There were never known so many working jewelers out of employ, and meeting are now holding to petition Parliament for protection against the competition of foreign labor.

Mr. L. T Brown, of the United States Legation at Bolivia, has written to the Managers of the American Institute, offering to procure alpaca, vicuna or lama sheep for American Agriculturists. Their cost in Bolivia is from three to five dollars each, but on account of the difficulty of transportation, they would be worth $75 each delivered in New York. Mr. Brown thinks it would be an object to introduce these animals into this country, as their wool is superior to that of the common sheep, and the Northern States seem adapted to their habits.

The Hadley Falls Company, which has a larger capital than any other Cotton Manufacturing Company in the United States, is now building the largest dam in America, being 1,017 feet long, and 30 feet high. The water-power is estimated capable of driving 1,200,000 spindles, with the preparatory and finishing machinery, being more than twice the power in Lowell.

A rogue, calling himself Washington, has been passing himself off as general mail-agent, and by means of a forged letter in the name of S. R. Hobbie, Assistant Postmaster General, has been traveling free over the rail-roads and stage routes of the West, borrowing money of postmasters, landlords, and State agents, and otherwise imposing on the public. He was detected at Pittsburg.

The grain trade through the great canal of China is of vast magnitude. In 1845, the number of lighters sent by the Government to meet the grain fleet on this canal was 2,500, and those chartered by the people 1246, showing a total of 3,746 lighters, at a cost of 21,000,000 taels. In 1846, the number of lighters was 4,700, at a cost of 508,300,000 taels. The number of the grain fleet is not given.

In New York, one day last week, as one of the large four-horse cars of the Harlem Railroad was passing up Centre-st., a little girl, in attempting to cross the track, was knocked down by the first team, and the cars passed over her. Singular to relate, upon being picked up, she was found to have received little or no injury, she having laid between the rails, the whole platform of the car passing directly over her

A lady in Washington the other day, washed a whole week's washing, hung the clothes out to dry, cooked three meals, made a pair of pants for her youngest boy, darned her husbands stockings, had the cholera, cured herself, and then dyed four dresses, between the hours of 6 A. M., and 8 P. M. This is what we call a smart woman. Barnum should exhibit her in a glass case as a model wife.

The London Times says that one of the crying sins of the people of Great Britain is the National habit of indebtedness. Everybody is in debt, and half the people, if their affairs were inquired into, would be found insolvent. The State sets the example. It owes nearly £800,000,000, and because the debt is of such fabulous proportions, it gives up all efforts to repay.

A little girl, only 11 years of age, attempted to poison a whole family in Pittsburgh recently, by putting into the tea a quantity of alcohol, in which corrosive sublimate had been dissolved to kill rats. The taste of the alcohol fortunately caused the detection of the poison, and the juvenile criminal confessed that she had done it. Her desire was to poison the family in order to get home to her family in Ohio.

The Portsmouth, N. H., Journal says that six ships, of large size and unsurpassed beauty, are now on the stocks at three yards on the Piscataqua river. Their aggregate tonnage is 6250, or an average of 1040 tons each, all of which have been built this season and will be launched before December.

The Carmen of this city have recently renewed their licenses at the Mayor's office. Among them were andrew Romaine of cart No. 11, who has held a cartman's license for 55 years; Isaac Reed, cart No. 114, who has held a license for 43 years, and Peter Smultz, cart No. 1,115, who has held a license for 35 years.

It is estimated that three thousand tourists have visited the White Mountains in New Hampshire the present season; and we believe this to be an under estimate. The rush has continued without abatement from the commencement of the season till the present time; and from appearances, will so continue through September.

The Eastern (Va.) Star says that on Saturday night week three slaves belonging to H. L. Edmonson, Esq., made their escape, and last Saturday night one of James L. Martin's, Esq., one of Joseph R. Price's, Esq., and one belonging to Mr. George Hale, also absconded, and nothing have been heard of them since.

Land Warrants are selling at $125 and $128 rather slowly. The supply is not large, but the demand is moderate. This is the price for Warrants which are guarantied to be good by the sellers. There are many Warrants afloat of doubtful legality of form, but which are probably good, which are selling at considerably lower rates.

In a late English publication, it is said that an engine which is sufficient to draw a given load 15 miles an hour, can only draw half the weight 30 miles an hour. An engine which will draw 250 tons 10 miles an hour, can draw only 28 tons 30 miles an hour. This shows the great saving of slow speed, and the necessity of high fares to pay for rapid driving.

So anxious were the passengers on board the schooner G. H. Montague to reach the gold region, that, on their passage to California, during the prevalence of calms, they frequently got out the boats, and towed the vessel toward her port of destination.

The Boston Traveler says that Hull, the absconding Expressman, was caught in consequence of having written a letter to a woman in that city who could not read. She got some one to read the letter to her, and thus the whereabouts of Hull was discovered.

Several new banks are about to go into operation in this State, among them the Commercial Bank of Whitehall: Watertown Banking and Loan Company, Watertown; Dutchess Co. Bank; Amenia and Pawling Bank, Pawling, Dutchess Co.

The Cholera seems to be subsiding not only in this city but in other sections of the country. The City Inspector reports the number of deaths by Cholera last week as 171 against 233 of the week before; showing a decrease of 62.

The Falcon which sailed for San Francisco last week, carried out 22,000 letters; on these only about $800 postage were paid, the balance of nearly $4,000, remains to be collected at San Francisco. Beside the letters, there were some dozen bags of newspapers.

In firing a salute at Erie in honor of the Vice President on board the United States Steamer Michigan, one man was killed, by the name of Gilbert, by the premature explosion of the gun, and three others were blown over-board. One man by the name of Robbins lost his hands by the same.

Rev. Dr. John Austin Yates, late Professor of Modern Languages in Union College, died Aug. 26th, of the prevailing epidemic. He was universally respected and esteemed by a large circle of friends throughout the State.

The St. Joseph County Advertiser cautions citizens from bidding off lands in that County at the October tax sales, because the law of the State regulating the advertising of the lands has not been complied with by the Auditor General.

Bertholdi, the celebrated geologist, died at Alsace on the 26th of July, at the advanced age of 87 years. He was educated under Blumenbach, was an admirer of Franklin in politics and of Herder and Jacobi in philosophy.

At Hadley Falls, Mass., more than 100 deaths by Cholera have occurred during the last six weeks. More than half of the laborers and their families have fled, leaving less than 1,000 behind.

The inhabitants of Milwaukee, have prepared free bath-houses on the lake shore, for the accommodation of the emigrants arriving at that city.

There is a negress on the estate of John C. Calhoun, aged 112 years. She was brought from Africa and has been in his family for a century. She has 63 descendants, all living on the same plantation.

The Boston Transcript says that the relatives of a young man named Sweetser, who went from Cambridge to California, have received a letter from him stating that he secured $16,000 worth of the "dust" in six weeks after his arrival.

Ninety thousand land warrants have been issued to soldiers who served in the Mexican war, giving away to them as a bounty 13,800,000 acres. Estimating the value of this land at $1 25 an acre, we have an agregate of $17,230,000.

The corn crop in many portions of the counties of Frederick, Clarke, Jefferson and Berkley, is reported to have suffered very much from the drought.

MARRIED,

On the 28th ult., by Rev. S. S. Hayward, Mr. N. L. COON, of Milton, Rock Co., Wisconsin, to Miss E. O. MADDOCK, of Peterboro.

DIED,

At the residence of her son, Thomas W. Potter, in Westerly, R. I., on the 15th ult., PHEBE POTTER, widow of Joseph Potter, aged 86 years and 11 months. She had been a member of the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton from early life, and walked with God. She was an example of piety, and a counselor of the youth, and a true friend to the cause of Christ, her love to the Church ardent, and her prayers were incessant for the prosperity of the Church, and for the salvation of souls.

In Westerly, R. I., on the 29th of August, of dysentery, SARAH CATHARINE BARBER, aged 19 years. She was a member of the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, and in the trying hour gave evidence of the power of grace on the heart. She was calm and collected, and when asked if we should pray for her recovery, said, "No, I do not want to live, I want to see Jesus, I want to see His face."

Union Academy.

THE second or Fall Term of the Union Academy will commence on the 13th of August, 1849, under he charge of—

E. P. LARKIN, Principal,
Rev. G. M. LANGWORTHY, Lecturer on Moral Science.
Wm. S. GREEN, Assistant.
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress,
Miss AMANDA M. CRANDALL, Teacher of Piano.

During the Fall Term of each year, a TEACHERS' CLASS will be organized, for the purpose of more thoroughly preparing Common School teachers for their responsible, but too long neglected avocation. A Course of Lectures will be delivered before the Class upon the varions modes of teaching and governing Common Schools; and during the Term, the Class will be critically examined and instructed in those branches which they are expected to teach. Every effort will be made to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to teach; and no individual can receive a recommendation from the Faculty of this Institution, who is not thoroughly qualified to fulfill all the specifications of his recommendation.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the School :—

First—Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this School.

Second—Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his religious denomination.

Third—The exercises of the Institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth—No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the Institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This Institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county-seat, and twelve miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

Terms:

Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per Term. Piano music $10 00 extra. Incidental expenses 25 cents per Term. Settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M., and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. PASSENGER TRAINS UP—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. PASSENGER TRAINS DOWN—Leave White House at 5¼ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M., Somerville 4¼ A. M., Plainfield 5¼ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. RETURNING—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

NEW LINE FOR SCHOOLEY'S MOUNTAIN.

Splendid stages will leave for the Mountain on the arrival of the 9 o'clock train from New York at White House. This route has less staging than any other.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, ALBANY, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, Chap. 6, Title 3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. [illegible]

Miscellaneous.

THE BLIND BEGGAR.

BY C. G. EASTMAN.

He sits by the great high road all day,
The beggar blind and old;
The locks on his brow are thin and gray,
And his lips are blue and cold:
The life of the beggar is almost spent,
His cheek is pale and his form is bent,
And he answereth low, and with meek content.
The sneers of the rude and bold.

All day by the road hath the beggar sat,
Weary and faint and dry;
In silence, patiently holding his hat
And turning his sightless eye,
As with cruel jest and greeting grim,
At his hollow cheek and eye-ball dim,
The traveler tosses a cent at him,
And passeth hastily by.

To himself the blind old man doth hum
A song of his boyhood's day,
And his lean, white fingers idly drum
On his thread-bare knee where they lay;
And oft, when the gay bob-o-link is heard,
The song of the youth-hearted yellow bird,
The jar of life and the traveler's word,
And the noise of children's play,

He starts and grasps with a hurried hand,
The top of his smooth-worn cane,
And striketh it sturdily into the sand—
Then layeth it down again;
While his black little spaniel, beautiful Spring,
That he keeps at his button hole with a string,
Jumps up, and his bell goes ling-a-ling! ling!
As he yelps at the idle train.

He sits by the great high road all day,
The beggar blind and old,
The locks on his brow are thin and gray,
And his lips are blue and cold;
Yet he murmureth never, day or night,
But seeing the world by his inner sight,
He patiently waits with a heart all light,
Till the sum of his life shall be told.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN BRAZIL.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, writing under date of Bahia, June 5, 1849, gives the following account of the manner of carrying on the Slave Trade in Brazil:—

The first thing done is to send a vessel with a cargo of goods suited to the trade, apparently entirely unconnected with anything else—and really so, as far as bringing Slaves away in her is concerned. This is done to prevent the loss of vessel and cargo if boarded by a man-of-war, and made a prize of if anything can be found on board to identify the vessel as a slaver. The capital being thus placed where it is wanted, the vessel returns in ballast, or with what little cargo can be procured. The Slave-dealers in Africa, with goods thus placed in their hands, buy up the black diamonds, as they term them, and keep them imprisoned until they get a chance to ship them in the swift-sailing small schooners and brigs which leave here in ballast for that purpose. On arriving here they land them on an island opposite to this place, about four or five miles distant, on the other side of the Bay of All Saints, on which this city is situated.

The price paid for bringing slaves varies from $60 to $70 for every one taken on board, and $5 to $10 additional for every one safely landed. We heard of two arrivals of slavers last week with slaves—one little felucca of less than 50 tons, brought 430, and landed them: and a small brig, (not half full they say) brought 450, and landed them also. We hear that the Baltimorean-built pilot boat Henry Clay is now gone on her eleventh voyage to the Coast of Africa for slaves in the four years she has been owned here, and that she has made in that time over $300,000 for her owners. While such profits are realized, doubtless men will be found base enough to run the hazard of being taken, as no punishment follows—the loss of the vessel and cargo being the only penalty.

It is said that some 10 or 12 vessels are engaged in the business from this place alone, and probably four times as many more from different ports of this very extensive Empire, though at present the market is overstocked with slaves, and the price less than usual, and consequently the trade is not as active as common.

The goods sent out with which the slaves are bought are all of English manufacture, and consist principally of guns, pistols, swords, powder and ball, rum, &c., fit instruments to perpetuate such a trade. Formerly by Treaty with Great Britain, France and the United States, Brazilian vessels engaged in the trade were lawful prizes, but that Treaty expired some two years since; and now, if the English take them, it is not in consequence of any right except the right of strength and humanity. The Government of Brazil do not exactly legalize the trade, though they take no measures to prevent it.

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.

On entering the beautiful Bay of Rio two or three boats passed us, rowed by negroes, with cloths only from the knees to the hips. This prepared us to see slavery in its perfection in Rio, and we were not disappointed I assure you. The streets were crowded with half-dressed blacks, twenty of them, perhaps, doing the work of two smart white men. Most of them are natives of Africa. Some were pointed out to me as not being three months in Brazil. They belong to 20 different tribes, and in many cases are very hostile to each other, which is one great obstacle to their ever combining against their masters. There is a law requiring the slaves to be clothed as much as I have described. The negroes of some tribes sell for a much higher price than those of others. Some that were pointed out to me of a celebrated tribe were the finest looking men and women I ever saw. By law no slave can wear shoes or other covering for his feet, and in this way he is known from the free negro. The moment a negro in Brazil becomes free, he is entitled to ALL the privileges of the whites, and is, in fact, received as an equal by them. Almost all the common soldiers of Brazil are free negroes: ALL we saw in Rio were such. The whites intermarry with the mulattoes, and the mulattoes with the blacks, so that there is less and less pure white blood being left in Brazil every year. The laws encourage emancipation. All blacks born in Brazil are free at, I was told, 25 years of age. There are some conditions attached, which often enable the master to evade the law. The free blacks being so very numerous, and being on a political equality with the whites, and the owners of many slaves themselves, is the great reason why such a vast number of slaves are held in subjection with such ease by a weak Government. The slaves, too, are nine-tenths of them foreigners. The fact that the slaves are foreigners, torn from their own land and from their own free homes to drag out a life in the most revolting bondage, is what renders Brazilian Slavery, after all, the most detestable on earth. The free blacks are in a far superior condition to that class with us. In fact there is no apparent difference between them and the whites.

"GIVE ME YOUR BABY."

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

We saw a poor woman sitting on the steps in front of a hotel, on Fifth street, the other morning, holding a pale yet beautiful infant in her arms; in one hand she held a saucer containing a few pennies. She was apparently about thirty, and neatly clad, although the dress was of the cheapest material. One could see that her position in life had been better, and perhaps a happy one for years.

Our attention was arrested by a crowd of well-dressed ladies, who were standing around, and endeavoring to beg the baby.

"What a sweet child!" said one.

"Poor little dear!" said another; "how I should love it, if it was my own!"

The mother drew the child closer to her bosom, but said not a word.

Another lady, in whose face one could see at a glance a fountain of charity and love, seemed more intent on the child than any other.

"Give me your baby," said she, "and I will take good care of it."

The poor woman looked up for the first time, with a face so melancholy, and the tears trembled in her eyes. "No, Madam, I thank you for your kind feelings, but I cannot part with the only thing I have left to love on earth!"

This was enough. The lady dropped a half eagle upon the saucer, and turned away in tears. The others opened their purses, and placed their offerings in a charitable sociability with the gold piece. We added our mite, and walked away a happier and better man.

RICH BEGGAR WOMAN.

The Cincinnati papers give us some singular facts connected with an old beggar woman named Elizabeth Morelock, whose death recently occurred in that city. She died in the night, and in the evening a lighted candle was placed upon a stand beside the bed, her idiot daughter, a frightful looking hunch-back, being the only attendant—though, for part of the time, the physician was present. The old woman opened her eyes, and perceiving the burning candle, ordered it to be blown out, saying that she could not afford to pay for it. When first taken sick, she ordered the chest which was, after her death, found to contain near four thousand dollars in gold, to be placed beside her bed, and she kept it within reach of her arms during the whole of her sickness; and when the death struggle came on, and she was told that she must die, she flung herself upon the chest, and clawed at it, in her wild avaricious phrensy, until she tore the very nails from her fingers, and thus, embracing the ill-gotten treasure, her spirit took its flight. An old stove in the room was found, after her death, to contain a considerable amount of silver and copper coin, carefully stowed away. The money and effects have been placed in the hands of an executor appointed by the court. In 1840, when small change was scarce, this woman made a handsome speculation by selling five hundred dollars' worth at one time to a single individual. This money was accumulated by beggary by herself and her idiotic daughter. The latter was generally flogged upon her return home at night, when she did not make a good day's work of it, and was always whipped before she was sent out in the morning. The cries of the poor creature while under the lash of her avaricious mother, have frequently excited the indignation of the neighborhood. The poor idiot herself was afterwards under an attack of cholera, and is probably numbered with the dead.

COPPER TYPES.

An exhibition of the machine for making types out of copper, has recently been made in London with success. The inventor is a Mr. Pettit. Instead of the old and complicated processes by which types are usually cast, a strip of copper wire, upon a revolving wheel, passes through a series of wheels, levers, pulleys and cranks, of the simplest description in reality; the type is struck or punched at the same moment that its size is mathematically determined; and after passing two other simple machines, is ready for use. By means of a small steam engine, applied to the type-making machine, sixty per minute can be struck, or thirty-six thousand per diem. The clearness and beauty of the impression of the types thus produced delight all connoisseurs. In the new process, instead of fusing the metals, and pouring into moulds to give the necessary form, the inventor of the apyrotype machine effects this by a mechanical operation at ordinary temperatures, chiefly by means of powerful pressure and the use of steel dies and matrices. The type thus produced possesses the utmost sharpness of outline and hardness, in consequence of the superiority of the metal employed, and the pressure to which it has been subjected. As soon as the proper arrangements can be effected, the use of copper types will be commenced in the New York Sun establishment. The immense circulation of this paper requires a renewal of types every six weeks, at an annual cost of $10,000.

AN ARTIFICIAL LEECH.—We learn from and article in the Paris Journal des Debats, quoted in the Courrier des Etats Unis, that an important discovery, which is likely to be of the greatest service to humanity, occupies at this moment the attention of the French scientific world. It is a mechanical leech (sangsue mechanique) which M. Alexander, civil engineer, already celebrated for his useful discoveries, has submitted to all the scientific bodies; which, after satisfactory trials, have caused this sangsue to be adopted in all the hospitals, after having proved not only the immense economy of its use, but, what is better, the decided advantage which it has over the natural leech, often so rare, always repugnant to the patient, and sometimes dangerous. The President of the French Republic has given orders for the supply of the apparatus in every commune where it may be found serviceable by indigent patients.

AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

From the Albany Cultivator for August.

KEEPING HENS.—Mr. J. R. Mason, of Orwell, Vt., usually winters two hundred hens. His practice is, to buy pullets in the month of November. He buys those which were hatched early, as such are the best to lay in the winter. They cost about twelve and a half cents each. They are fed in a great degree on mutton. Mr. M. buys sheep in the fall at low prices—about what their pelts and tallow are worth. The carcases are boiled, the tallow saved, and the flesh and bones, after being allowed to freeze, are kept till spring,—a suitable portion being fed to the hens daily. They allow, in addition to the meat, a little corn, oats, or buckwheat. They lay well through the winter—comfortable quarters being provided for them—and continue to produce eggs in abundance till June. It is found most profitable to sell the whole stock at this period, as they are generally fat, and will bring from twenty to twenty-five cents apiece. If kept through the summer, they lay but little in the warm months, the eggs will keep but a short time, the fowls grow poor in moulting, and if kept another year will not lay as well as young ones. Mr. M. keeps hens only, and is inclined to think he obtains as many eggs, and that thep keep better. As to varieties, he has tried several, and thinks the top-knots will generally lay rather more eggs the first season: but their carcases are of less value than most other kinds.

MOWING PASTURES.—We have before spoken of the necessity of keeping the grass of pastures from running up to seed and dying on the ground. As grass grows with more rapidity in the early part of the season than at a later period, it is difficult to keep it properly fed down, without putting on more stock than can be kept on the land after the flush of feed is over; and yet, if the grass goes to seed and lies on the ground, the after feed will be less in quantity and of poorer quality. The difficulty may be overcome by mowing the grass at the right time—before it has run to seed, at all events. This may be done on many pastures to good advantage, the hay obtained being of good quality for any kind of stock; and the pastures are left clean, start equally, and afford a good growth of fresh after feed. We have lately met with several farmers who have followed this practice for many years, and they agree with us in regard to its utility.

USEFULNESS OF SWALLOWS.—While visiting a friend in the country, a few weeks since, we noticed, under the eaves of a barn, near the dwelling, about fifty swallows' nests. The bird was the Hirundo fulva, or Cliff-swallow, of ornithologists. In most of the nests there were young, and the old birds were very assiduous in providing them with food. We observed them at different times in the day, and not a minute elapsed in which one or more birds did not return to the nests with something for the young. Their food consisted of winged insects taken in the air; and the numbers which were thus destroyed by this colony of swallows, must have amounted to thousands, each day. We were informed that no flies, or very few, were to be seen around the house or barn—the family and the domestic animals of the farm being thus freed from a disa greeable annoyance.

A PROFITABLE ORCHARD.—The American Agriculturist says, "A gentleman within our knowledge has a small orchard on the Hudson river, of less than seven acres, which produces from $500 to $750 worth of apples annually. This is not one year of plenty, and another or two of famine, but is a regular, steady, average yield. All this is secured by the simplest process, viz., good management."

ANOTHER ORCHARD MADE PROFITABLE.—An old orchard of four acres had not been plowed for nearly 30 years, and was regarded by the neighbors as worthless. It did not yield more than eight barrels a year. It was well plowed, and thoroughly manured for three successive years, and cultivated with crops. It then produced two hundred and eighty barrels of Apples.

WEEDS IN GRAVEL WALKS.—An English gardener has for more than twenty years past, kept down the weeds in gravel walks, without any apparent bad effect, by sprinkling over them annually dry salt, in dry weather, and then sweeping it thinly and regularly with a broom.

LARGE CORN CROP.—The Ohio Cultivator states that John Loughry, of Adams Co., raised 1500 bushels of shelled corn on eleven acres, or 136⅓ bushels per acre for the whole field.

THE HORSE'S EYE.—Examine the eye first, when the horse stands with his head to the manger. Look carefully at the pupil of the eye, in the horse; it is of an oblong form; carry the size of the pupil in your mind, then turn the horse about, bring him to a bright light, and if the pupil of the eye contracts, and appears much smaller than it was in the darker light, then you may be sure the horse has a strong, good eye; but provided the pupil remains nearly the same size as it appeared in the darker light, the horse has a weak eye, therefore have nothing to do with him. [Old Almanac.

A RUSSIAN RAILROAD.—The post of Chief Engineer of the Imperial Russian Railroad, vacant by the death of Major Whistler, has been tendered to Major T. S. Broome, Chief Engineer of the Erie and New York Road. This is a very important post, and the offer is a high compliment to American skill. This road has been vigorously prosecuted during the past six years under Major Whistler, and if he had been permitted to live, would probably have been completed within the coming two years. The distance is 420 miles, and the road is constructed and its appointments made under the expectation of its being traversed within twelve hours. A double 5 feet track is to be laid on an embankment 400 feet wide and over 6 feet above the level of the country, the whole distance. The whole estimated cost of the work and its equipments is forty millions. An American house—Messrs. Harrison, Winans & Eastwick, of Baltimore—has the contract for the equipment of this road, and they have already supplied it with 162 locomotive engines, averaging 25 tons weight, 72 passenger cars, 2,580 freight cars, two imperial saloon carriages, capable each of carrying the Imperial Court of Russia. The equipments have been built in Russia, in shops prepared by the contractors, and supplied by them with Russian labor. The whole contract with Messrs. Harrison, Winans & Eastwick, has amounted to between four and five millions of dollars. They engage to instruct a suitable number of Russian mechanics to take charge of engines when completed. [Tribune.

FATHER MATHEW AT THE MASSACHUSETTS BLIND ASYLUM.—By invitation of Dr. Howe, Superintendent of the Perkins Asylum for the Blind, Father Mathew recently visited the Institution in company with several friends, and was highly delighted. There are between 80 and 90 blind persons at this excellent institution. Among the number are two blind boys, twins, about 9 years old, with flaxen hair. They are from the State of Maine, and arrived at the Asylum only a few days since. They were hardly tame or easy, so long had they run wild at home. Father Mathew was particularly interested in Laura Bridgman, the deaf, dumb and blind girl, having never witnessed such a case before. On being informed that she was shaking hands with Father Mathew, Laura expressed great pleasure, by her animation. He presented her with a temperance medal, and she wrote on paper, in reply, "I thank you most sincerely, for the medal; we are all very glad to see Father Mathew." He thanked her and remarked, "I shall keep the writing and put it in a frame, and take it home with me to Ireland." Eighteen of the scholars expressing a wish to take the pledge, it was administered to them with great interest, and each received a medal and certificate, with which they were much delighted. [Boston Traveler.

PHENOMENA OF STORMS.—It is interesting to find the attention of mariners turned to the peculiar phenomena of tropical storms. Captain Handley, of the Sultana, has recently most successfully tested the truth of the law which regards these tornadoes as cyclones, or revolving masses of air traveling along certain curved lines. The edge of the cyclone was thirty degrees at least from Bombay, Calcutta and Aden, and its effects were felt at the distance of two thousand miles. The course of the ship Sultana was south-west, when, overtaken by the storm, Captain Handley says, in his log, he "furled the topsails and foresails, and rounded the ship to, with her head to the eastward, as I have every reason to believe I am on the north-east edge of a hurricane." The storm passed onward to the south-west; and thus by laying to, and steering to the eastward, Captain Handley no doubt saved his ship and the three hundred Coolies on board. This triumph of scientific observation cannot be too widely known. [Prot. Churchman.

A CURIOUS CASE OF SURGERY.—Some time ago a little child of Mr. Lathrop, of Boston, was playing with a pair of bivalve-shells, round in form, and each fully as large as the eighth of a dollar, when one of them disappeared, and nothing could be found of it. After several weeks there was an appearance of something growing in the child's mouth, in the roof of it. The child was carried to Dr. Clarke, the City Physician, who pronounced it a case of the enlargement of some bone, the anatomical name of which is too hard for us, but we will call it one of the rafters of the mouth. Subsequently Dr. Warren was consulted, who confirmed Dr. Clark's opinion, and proposed to operate to reduce the size of the enlarged bone. On cutting around the protuberance, the before-mentioned shell fell out. It seems to have adhered, the concave side up, to the roof of the mouth, until it had become completely embedded under the skin. [Chronotype.

EMIGRANTS WORTH HAVING.—A large company of Hollanders, under the direction of their pastor, Rev. Dr. Kline, a celebrated divine, arrived in the ship Lelia, at this port, last week,—a healthy, enterprising and industrious body of emigrants. They number 200 persons, and are all in comfortable circumstances, bringing with them in the aggregate between 400 and 500,000 guilders in gold. About 160 of them have already started on their way to Allegan, Ottawa County, Michigan, where they intend to settle. The remaining forty will remain at Warwarsing, Ulster County, in this State, until Spring, when they will rejoin their brethren.

THE NEW OHIO STATE HOUSE.—The Capitol of Ohio, now in progress of building, will be one of the largest and noblest piles in the Union. It is of dressed stone, 304 by 184 feet; and covers a superfice of 55,936 square feet, the Capitol at Washington is not much larger, as it covers a superfice of about 61,700 square feet. The Capitol of Ohio is not built merely as a State House—that is, simply for holding the sessions of the General Assembly—but it will include all the public offices on the second floor, in addition to the Chambers for the Senate and House of Representatives, and numerous committee-rooms.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—A surgeon of Gottingen has discovered a complete antidote to arsenic. It is peroxyde, or the red oxyde of iron, twelve parts of which neutralize one of oxide of arsenic. Experiments with this antidote have been tried upon rabbits and other animals with complete success. One advantage of it is, that no injury can be done by too large a dose. In cases where large quantities of arsenic have been taken, it has been found useful first to encourage vomiting.

WHO WOULD NOT BE A U. S. SENATOR?—One day last week, says the Jonesville (Wis.) Gazette, a bag weighing not less than eighty pounds, addressed to Hon. Henry Dodge, passed through the Post-office of this place. How many letters were subjected to a high postage to pay the expenses of the transportation of that bag? One would suppose the $8 a day for a good portion of the year, and from $1,500 to $1,800 a year mileage, would be a sufficient compensation for the services of our "Hon. Senators" to warrant their votes for the abolition of a privilege which taxes poor men for its continuance. The opportunity will be given, ere long, to try them.

A returned volunteer was asked if he had been hospitably treated while in Mexico. "Oh, yes," he said, "I was in the hospital almost all the time I was there."

NEWLY INVENTED MAN-CATCHER.—Mr. J. Milton Beneam, of Wilmot, Racine county, Wisconsin, has invented an apparatus to be attached to the front of railroad bridges for the purpose of preventing careless conductors from losing their lives, as has sometimes happened, when standing or walking on the car, forgetful of the bridge. The apparatus consists of graduated springs projecting like arms or bars from the bridge, which, if a person be standing on the car, will grasp him in a moment and lay him flat upon the car to pass under the bridge.

MONSTER SEWER.—Mr. Phillips, an English architect, has submitted to the London Commissioners, a plan for a great drain 100 feet below the surface; the main pipe to be 8 feet high, and to extend from London into the marshes of Essex and Kent, ultimately to the sea. It will be so deep as to be below the bed of the Thames, and completely drain the lowest localities of London. This will give to the citizens their beloved Thames in all its native purity, unsullied by the filth of two millions of inhabitants.

CURE FOR HEAVES IN HORSES.—A farmer informs us, says the Michigan Farmer, that he has recently cured two of his horses, which had the heaves badly, by the use of the following remedy:—To three quarts of sweet milk, add a tea-spoonful of sulphuric acid, and mix with the horse's feed. Give at first three times a week, and afterwards once or twice as there may seem occasion for a week longer. Our informant says there was little appearance of heaves after the first week.

DECREASING MORTALITY.—The Medical Times states that the annual mortality of England, in 1700, was about 1 in 25. About the middle of the last century it increased to 1 in 20. In 1801, it was 1 in 35; in 1811, 1 in 28: and it is now 1 in 45; so that, in about 80 years, the chances of existence are exactly doubled in London. In Rome, the annual deaths are now as 1 in 25; at Amsterdam, as 1 in 24; at Vienna, as 1 in 22. The inhabitant of London, therefore, has twice as good a chance of living as the burgher of Vienna.

VARIETY.

When lady Wallace was in company with a large party, and the conversation turned upon the time at which the canon law at Paphas forbids a female to tell her age, she applied to David Hume, who had sat without speaking for some time, with a—"Pray, Mr. Justice Silence, when I am asked what is my age, what answer shall I give?" "Say, madam," replied he, "what I believe will be the truth, that you are not yet come to years of discretion."

The English papers say that 45,769 acres of land in that country are occupied in the cultivation of hops, and one million of acres in that of barley. 40,000,000 bushels of barley, besides some oats, rye, carrots, potatoes, and even wheat, have been used up every year in making strong drink. This alone would have given three four-pound loaves per week to every family of the kingdom, if it had been preserved for bread.

It has been eloquently and truly said, that if Christianity were compelled to flee from the mansions of the great, the academies of philosophers, the halls of legislators, or the throngs of busy men, we should find her last retreat with women at the fire-side; her last audience would be the children gathering around the knees of a mother; her last sacrifice, the secret prayer, only at the throne of God.

Brigadier General Brady, of Detroit, is now the oldest surviving officer in the American army. He is now Colonel of the 2d Infantry. A few days since the General was taken violently sick. The attending physician thought him to be dying, and communicated to him his fears. "Beat the drum—my knapsack is slung, and Hugh Brady is ready to march," was the soldier-like response.

The Rev. Mr. Cooper, Bethel Chaplain at Sandusky, left the city during the prevalence of the cholera, for one of the adjoining towns, to be married. It having been reported that he left through fear of the cholera, it is now stated, upon authority, that he left to fulfill a long-standing engagement to be married, and died the very morning appointed for the marriage.

Dr. Bosworth, of Vermillion, Missouri, was drowned a few miles from Burlington, on the Illinois side of the river, a week or two ago. Papers found with him state that since he left he buried his wife and four children, from cholera; and depression of spirits, it is supposed, caused him to drown himself.

We have this year fruited, and had presented as fruited in this State, says an Ohio paper, one hundred varieties of Pears—over one hundred and fifty varieties of Apples—more than thirty of Cherries—over forty of Peaches, and some twenty-five or thirty of Plums.

A little child being at a sermon, and observing the minister very vehement in his words and bodily gesture, cried out—"Mother, why don't the people let the man out of the box?"

The London Examiner says that Kossuth, the great Hungarian, "is consumptive, and therefore redoubles his activity," in order to effect more for his country before death claims him as its victim.

During one of the recent engagments between the Austrians and Hungarians, near Comorn, a battle-painter, named Lalleman, was killed by a cannon shot, while he was taking a sketch of the fight.

A hanger-on was complaining that some one was ruining his character. "So much the better," Bemus told him, "for it was always a bad one, and the sooner it is destroyed the better it will be for you."

In Georgia, efforts are making to endow scholarships in the Mercer University. These scholarships are of different orders; some permanent and transferable, others terminating with the individual. The sum required for a permanent scholarship is $400.

The most useful lesson in the school of life is that which teaches us to be content.

The steamship Canada, in her last trip out, was only 7 3-4 days from Halifax to Liverpool.

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at daath. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
RICHARD H. BULL, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Cressingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich,
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.

Terms:

$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.

☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.

☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.

☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post-paid, to
GEORGE B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

TERMS—$2 00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 13.

NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1849.

WHOLE NO. 273.

The Sabbath Recorder.

FOREIGN MISSION.

The following very interesting letter from sister Carpenter, will be read with eagerness by every lover of missions. It was received a short time since per overland mail. Other communications are on hand, which shall be published as fast as we can find room for them.

SHANGHAI, May 9, 1849.

DEAR BRETHREN,—In consequence of a kind of economical arrangement among ourselves, of time, labor, &c., it falls to my lot to write you such little items as have come under my own observation, or in which it has been my happiness to share, in common with those whose other duties make it a relief to them, as well as a pleasure to myself, thus to divide our correspondence with you. I know you will rejoice in our united testimony to the ever-increasing attachment which we feel for our work, and for the poor perishing heathen around us. A door of usefulness is fully open before us, and we earnestly beg your prayers, that we may each be able to enter in, and occupy our appointed lot.

In addition to the daily routine of studies, and the weekly recurrence of chapel exercises, there is very much to be done. Our neighbors are to be visited at their own homes, and received and made welcome at ours. Our own families have demands upon us each individually, and we are all, I trust, relying upon God for a blessing upon our feeble efforts.

The late semi-annual festivities, and the consequent gatherings of the people, have furnished some excellent opportunities for making known the truth, and it is with God to accept the offerings, which have been made in weakness, but in reliance upon his sure promise, that his word shall not return unto him void.

On one of the festival days, we took a trip to the Pagoda, accompanied by both the teachers, and some of their friends. A pleasant sail of two or three hours brought us to the foot of "Lung-hwo-tah," which we attempted to ascend; but the narrow, winding staircase, was soon so crowded with people, rushing up to catch a glimpse of the foreigners, that we were glad to beat a retreat as speedily as possible, for the press below. We then made our way to the idol temple near, thronged as usual by the curious multitude, with their quota of beggars, to whom we gave alms, sufficient to win from the spectators the plaudit, "Well done!" and after glancing at the smaller temples, went out to the open lawn near by. Here Mr. C. spoke at some length to the people, who listened with much attention, and apparent interest, to the word spoken. Seeing it impossible to free ourselves from the crowd, we concluded to come directly home, and accordingly made the best of our way to the boat, where we learned that the tide would be against us for the next two hours, and the boatmen wished to wait. The brethren then decided to pass the interval in speaking; and, standing on an eminence near the river side, they each, in turn, addressed the listening throngs. Our teachers then led the way to a little village near, where, entering a temple, and being invited to sit, they both again proclaimed the doctrines of the cross, to perhaps a hundred or more. Many then accompanied us to the boat, whom we left on the shore, thankful in our own souls, that although we had lost the anticipated pleasure of a quiet excursion, it had been more than made up in the privilege of telling to hundreds the truth as it is in Jesus. That day's excursion we shall not soon forget. The constant chiming of the pensive little bells, suspended from every corner of the ascending series of roofs, ever moaning to the slightest breeze; their mammoth counterpart, in the temple below, struck at solemn intervals by the huge stone hammer of a very vulcan among the natives; the varied accompaniments of gongs and voices without—these will live in our memories; but longer still, the kindly responses to the echo of the Living Oracle, roused by the scenes of heathenism which every where met the eye. Those colossal gods, surrounded by their myriads of winged cherubs, perched upon carved boughs, or (as was probably designed, and to an eye sufficiently ethereal might appear,) nestling among the clouds, and fluttering to escape from the wooden vapor which held them fast, constitute a group not easily blotted out. But the darker picture of those who go down to the pit, whose graves are round about them, who all of them lie down with the uncircumcised in heart, each bearing his own iniquities, will long outlive the stupid objects of their still more stupid idolatry.

The minute description of the Pagoda, which Mr. Wardner formerly gave you, will save you the infliction of particulars at this time. He wishes me, however, in this connection, to correct a mistake which he finds in his description of the splendid bridge near it, in which the printer makes him give two rods, instead of ten, its actual measurement. The natives also gave him a wrong name, (Haw-bo-koo,) for the Pagoda itself, which, instead, is Lung-hwo-tah.

The wind and tide driving us ashore, we left the boat about half way home, preferring a long walk to a still longer sail. Soon after landing, we passed a house at which they had given me some flowers a few evenings previous, in our walk; and no sooner did they see us approach than they ran out, with their fresh-gathered offerings, begging me to go in and rest. Of course I accepted their kind invitation, and Mr. C. and Mr. W. found a little opportunity for conversation with the men outside. As usual, there were soon a number of visitors, and among the rest a Ne-koo, or priestess, who kept constantly beating her gong for cash. This being given her, the lengthened visage quickly contracted, and she joined heartily in the general sociability, as if well satisfied that her own importance should be for the time being lost in that of the Nah-ko-koo nyang-nyang, (foreign woman.) Tea being brought, I begged them to carry some to the seen-sangs without, which suggestion delighted them much, as I told them they were weary, and they ran to invite them in, which I hoped and expected they would do, as I have long since learned that the nearest way to the ears of the heathen is through the medium of their sensibilities.

I mention this as a specimen of our way of making friends and acquaintances in our remote walks. However this may appear to any who know heathenism only by the hearing of the ear, to me it seems, under the circumstances, not only proper, but a duty, thus to encourage those who otherwise might never hear of the gospel or its blessed Author. The inhabitants of these remote hamlets cannot be expected to come to the place of worship, and the females, particularly, could not, if they would. Their little feet are utterly inadequate to such a task, and their extreme timidity would make them shrink from so public a place, even if they lived near. But by going to their homes, by winning them out, they may hear the glad tidings of salvation, even though they never enter a temple dedicated to the one true God. Indeed, their sympathetic natures seem more open to receive the truths thus imparted, than do the sterner hearts of their husbands, brothers, and sons. Often we meet with one, more communicative or more deeply interested than the others, who will repeat, with much vivacity, the words of the speaker, and explain them to the household in a manner that proves even a heathen woman to be sometimes apt to teach.

A few days since, in passing a temple for Ne-koo, or priestesses, a priest politely invited us in, and with more complaisance than one ever exhibited to us before, took us over the grounds, and showed us the preparations then in progress for the building of a new temple adjoining the old one, intimating in a very significant manner his readiness to receive whatever our bounty pleased to bestow for so laudable an object. The numerous gods, from the giant Budh down to the tiniest little image of his majestic self, were stowed away in the corners of the building, quietly awaiting a bright reversion in their future lot. Mr. C., pointing to them, began to inquire of the self-complacent priest, in the presence of his adherents, where was the profit in idol worship, and beginning with the first commandment, told them, in the most direct and pointed manner, the folly of trusting to gods of their own hands' making. They listened with much politeness, but with ill-concealed annoyance, to his remarks, without once attempting to discuss or dispute a point, only anxious, as it seemed, to evade the subject, and were evidently relieved by our first movement to withdraw. How much we wished for tracts to give them; but our proclaiming Shang-ti as the true God would have been hardly appropriate, as the inscription over their altar was to Shang-ti himself, "Wang-tea-neo, Wang-shang-ti," who, with his large family of little Shang-tis, were looking down upon us from every shelf. It was no unknown God, whom thus ignorantly they worshiped, but as, the priest said in answer to my inquiries, it was "Veh," (Budh,) or "Tean-ti," terms synonymous with Shang-ti, (Heavenly Ruler.)

But we have still another subject of interest to mention to you, and one that comes still nearer our own hearts, and for which we beg your most earnest prayers. The family of our late teacher seem to have been made, providentially accessible to us, and our desire is, that we may be made a blessing to them. The Chinese custom of grouping together the different branches of a family, makes this a very large one. The wife and little son, the mother and mother-in-law, uncles, aunts, sisters, and cousins, and an aged grand-mother, in all thirty-four, constitute one household, arranged of course in separate departments, but all accessible by one common entrance from the main street. It would do you good to drop in with us for a friendly call, which we often make them. Our knock is responded to by the accustomed question, "What man?" and no sooner do we announce ourselves, than the doors fly open, and the general cry is raised, "Cah-seen-sang and Cah-nyang-nyang," and then comes a general gathering from all parts of the house. Kind inquiries are exchanged, and the conversation turns almost instinctively upon the new doctrine. A sister of the teacher reads nearly as well as did her lamented brother, and generally brings forward at once some of the books we have given her, talks of their contents, asks questions, raises objections, answers inquiries, and compares creeds, with a zeal which would do honor to a seen-sang himself. Meanwhile a score of eager listeners are gathered around the table at which we stand or sit, whose earnest faces, and inquiring glances, contrast sadly in our minds with the symbols of heathenism which are every where apparent. The doctrine of the resurrection is often the theme, and they seem anxious to lay hold upon something that shall enable them to say, "I know that my brother shall rise again." They often ask what he used to say and to believe on such and such a point, and whether his knowledge of the doctrine was sufficient to insure his salvation, and whether we believe that he will be raised up at the last day. These are precious moments to us, and never have I felt more the need of an arm of faith, to lay hold on the promises, than when I have sat and listened to the conversations thus carried on, and felt that prayer might yet prevail, to bring down a blessing upon these dear immortals. I often think that Ne-May, the literary sister, is doing real missionary work in the family, by reading to them from our books, explaining to them, and acting as our organ of debate on all occasions. The mother-in-law is also a reader, but is much less talkative than Ne-May, although she is free to converse, and to refer to what she reads. She showed me her household gods, and I asked her if she did not know the true God forbade idolatry. She immediately repeated the first and a part or all of the second commandment, and then turned the conversation to other subjects. The youngest sister, twelve years old, asked me if I would come again to see them on a specified day. I told her it would be the Sabbath, and that I supposed she had heard Ne-May read the fourth commandment. She immediately repeated it, and went on to explain its proper meaning to several persons present, whom I had not previously known. Such little events, often occurring, cannot fail to keep alive in our hearts a most intense anxiety as to the final issue. That issue is in the hands of God; He alone can turn the hearts of the heathen to himself. They still cling to their idolatrous customs, but plead only the force of custom for so doing, some of them being free to declare, they have no stronger hold upon their hearts.

During a recent visit from several members of the family, they expressed much astonishment to Mrs. W. and myself, that we could leave our country and come to a land of strangers. "And have you a father and mother living, and brothers and sisters, and do you love them?" "Yes, very much indeed." "And do you not wish to return to them?" "No, we wish to live and die in China, and to be buried here." "But no Chinese woman who loved her friends would do so, and how could you?" "Because we wished to tell them of Jesus, and his doctrine, as we feared there were some Chinese women, who would never hear of the true God and the Savior, unless we came and told them, and that they would live and die unforgiven, and after death receive everlasting distress." "And is your God in China?" "He is every where, although we see him not." "Does he come down in the Flower-flag country, (America,) is he visible there?" "He is near us there, as here, and we know that he sees us, although invisible to us." "How do you worship him?" "We kneel down, close our eyes, and pray to him." "Do you see him, then?" "We try to realize ourselves in his presence, and in our hearts we commune with him." "Where do you go to worship him." "Some times here, in this room, we all kneel together, and worship, and if we wish to worship alone, we go to our closet, and pray." "And does your God give you money to buy rice and clothes with, and to pay for a house to live in?" "We depend upon him for all things, but he does not give in person. He puts it into the hearts of our friends in America to do it for your sakes. They labor that they may be able to send the gospel to you." "And why should they love us, whom they have never seen, so much?" "Because they believe that the soul, compared with all other things, is very precious, and it is to save souls that they are willing to make these sacrifices."

I wish I could give you the whole of the conversation in which these remarks occurred, as well as the wondering looks, and expressions of astonishment, which accompanied them, the eager lifting up of hands, and the earnest appeals to Mrs. Wardner and myself, (our husbands were both absent,) and their repetition of our remarks to each other, intermixed with their own comments. But this is only a sample of what we often meet in conversation. The idea of an invisible, a spiritual God, bewilders them, and when I see how difficult it is to give them any correct idea of the first principles of the doctrines of Christ, I think I realize in some measure the utter inefficiency of all human wisdom, and long for faith to look alone to Him who can give sight to the blind, and an understanding heart to those who are led captive by Satan at his will. Let me repeat our constant plea—Pray for us and for China. L. M. CARPENTER.

A FATHER READING THE BIBLE.

'Twas early day, and sunlight streamed
  Soft through a quiet room,
That hushed, but not forsaken seemed,
  Still, but with naught of gloom;
For there, serene in happy age,
  Whose hope is from above,
A father communed with the page
  Of Heaven's recorded love.

Pure fell the beam, and meekly bright,
  On his gray, holy hair,
And touched the page with tenderest light,
  As if its shrine were there!
But oh! that patriarch's aspect shone
  With something lovelier far,
A radiance all the spirit's own,
  Caught not from sun or star.

Some word of life e'en then had met
  His calm, benignant eye,
Some ancient promise, breathing yet
  Of Immorality;
Some martyr's prayer, wherein the glow
  Of quenchless faith survives:
For every feature said—"I know
  That my Redeemer lives!"

And silent stood his children by,
  Hushing their very breath,
Before the solemn sanctity
  Of thoughts o'ersweeping death;
Silent—yet did not each young breast
  With love and reverence melt?
Oh! blest be those fair girls, and blest
  That home where God is felt!

THE CHINESE—THEIR DRESS AND APPEARANCE.

The following interesting article is from a new work entitled "The Canton Chinese, or an American's Sojourn in the Celestial Empire:"—

The summer dress of the common orders is simple in the extreme; the eternal jacket is looped almost invariably over the right breast with little gilded balls, and the pantaloons being made very large at the middle as well as below, they dexterously wreath a portion around the waist, confining it by folds instead of following the barbarian custom of wearing suspenders.

These dresses are of blue cotton or a stuff resembling coarse crash.

Those who are thus attired seldom wear stockings or shoes, but in rainy weather they invest themselves with high-heeled slippers, that clatter on the pavement like the sabots of the French peasantry.

Their enormous summer hats of strips of bamboo, are six feet or more in circumference, forming a striking feature in the laborers' costume.

The females of the same rank wear them also, and at a short distance in the fields it is difficult to distinguish them from the men. But the dress of the laborer, however common or ugly it may be, resembles little that of the higher classes of citizens or civil officers. The great heat of six months of the year compels all persons to adopt as light a garment as possible, and this is no doubt one of the many causes of the general good health of the Chinese, their dresses admitting of a perfect development of their limbs.

A blue or brown silk gown, long and flowing, leaving the neck bare; short breeches tied at the knees; stockings and shoes, make up the ordinary costume. But think not, reader, that by stockings are meant those knit and close-fitting articles of German or English importation, with which we associate the name of hose; oh no, those of a Chinese gentleman are of woven cotton, gartered with blue ribbon, and set loosely in a series of graceful wrinkles. These are introduced not into highly polished boots, but thrust into clumsy shoes of cloth, or satin, or varieagated velvet, with enormous white soles.

The fan is indispensable, for in summer the caps of the respectable portions of the community are doffed, and their bare heads would be unsheltered from the sun, were it not for the use of this graceful article, which is held in the right hand over the head. Often it is elegantly embroidered, painted with figures and landscape, or inscribed with a maxim from Confucius. In the warm months the grass cloth for which the Chinese are justly celebrated, is also used extensively for dresses, and the light cool material appears to great advantage on the person of a gentleman.

One of the most elegant of the Chinese that I ever saw was a tea merchant, and from the style of his dress, its fineness of texture, and the polished demeanor of the man, it was evident to the most heedless observer that the exquisite existed in China as well as elsewhere.

Over an under garment of figured silk, flowed this graceful grass-cloth toga, looped with gilded balls; and at the right breast was suspended a silk purse embroidered with pearls; a brilliant fan case hung at the left side, and as a counterpart, a watch and worked pouch appeared upon the right. A grass-cloth handkerchief, the finest of China's loom, was held in the left hand, which was in itself beautified by nails of several inches growth; the other waved a gorgeous fan. The stockings were snowy white, and the shoes were black satin.

His face was remarkably handsome, and more expressive than the general countenances of his race; the pointed jet moustaches were the admiration of all the foreign clerks of Canton; and his fine long tail, descending nearly to his feet, an especial object of envy to his countrymen.

The dresses which we have given a description of are well adapted for a burning climate, and are worn till quite late in the autumn.

But towards November, when in the square the broad ensign of America waves in the blast of the north-west monsoon, there is a universal and simultaneous change in the costumes.

The chief officer of the province puts on a winter dress, assumes the skull cap with its scarlet button, and all the inferior millions follow his example. The appearance of the low orders is little changed, but in the upper the difference is very perceptible.

The loose gown is now drawn at the waist, by a sash with fringed ends hanging down behind; and over this is worn a large cape of figured silk or cloth, but usually of furs.

A mantle, made from the skin of a lamb taken from its mother before birth, is very highly prized. Now it is that the fan-case, watch and purse, are seen to the best advantage, and the blue cap and scarlet button give that finish to the winter garments, which those of the summer require for beauty; as none but government officers wear hats during the hot season, except those laborers who are exposed to the sun.

The summer habits of the mandarins are beautiful. Frequently they wear a long gown of blue gauze drawn at the waist, black satin boots, and the decorated appendages before mentioned, which make altogether a very striking show; their hats are then of white braid, conical in shape, surmounted with a ball indicative of rank, and adorned with a falling plume of shining scarlet hair.

During the winter their state robes are stiff with gorgeous embroidery. Those of the highest mandarins are splendid in the extreme, being worked in brilliant hues on superb silks of the finest texture. Their shoes are ornamented also, one of the principal figures being the imperial dragon.

On the back and breast of some dresses is the figure of a bird inclosed in a square, and the neck-lace of one hundred and eight large court beads of bright agate, quartz, or rare perfumed wood, always accompanies a state costume. The mandarin's winter cap is utterly different from that of the summer. It is usually of dark blue velvet, fitting close to the head, with a broad edge turning up all around, and instead of the hair plume, it is furnished with one of scarlet silk.

The ball, always worn except in case of mourning, is red, blue, white crystal or gold, according to rank, and these varieties, with some other insignia, distinguish the nine grades of mandarins.

The peacock's feather is an honor granted for signal merit, and it is worthy of note that such marks of favor are seldom or never bestowed unless well deserved. The privilege of wearing a state dress may indeed be purchased for an immense sum, but this confers no rank or honor. The aristocracy of talent and not of wealth bears sway in China.

Judging from a few specimens of splendor to be seen in a city so remote from the court as Canton, there must be a vast deal of wealth and magnificence at the capital, and the accounts of old travelers as well as of later embassies, speak of state and pomp worthy of so immense an empire.

Never was there a country in which tailors have been as completely subdued as in China. Not one of the class ventures to originate a fashion; for the costumes of the nation are regulated at court by a board of officers from whose decree no one dares to dissent.

The common order of females dress much like the men, but the visitor who walks from the foreign factories towards the western part of Canton, passing through retired streets only occupied by the houses of wealthy Chinese, will often see ladies walking beautifully attired in rich silks, and with children or servants in company.

Their dress conceals the person entirely; the long gown or toga fits close around the neck, and has loose sleeves enveloping the hands.

Their heads are uncovered, and their style of coffure is singular and usually thought becoming.

The front hair of unmarried females is combed straight back, with the exception of the small portion hanging over the forehead.

The other portion of the hair is combed and braided into the tail like the men's, but no part of the female's head is shaved.

When married, or shortly before, the whole hair is combed up, and a false piece set on the back of the head, fastened by clasps and pins of gold, or other less precious material, according to the wealth of the fair one. A beautiful ornament is sometimes worn by rich women, representing a bird with extended wings, which, formed of gold or silver filagree, studded with pearls and supported by light wires trembling with the slightest motion, seems to hover over the head of the lady.

What need of the long wide pantaloons of the Chinese ladies. To conceal their feet? They have none for service, and hobble along more awkwardly than a child first learning to walk. Soon as the female child is born, its feet are enclosed with shoes and bound firmly round and round, so that no growth can ensue. Nature, endeavoring to have its way, can only produce exquisite torture as each attempt proves useless.

How these females ever learn to stand or move is strange, yet, as we before observed, they may sometimes be in the streets supporting their trembling limbs with a staff.

Models in clay of the contracted feet, painted flesh color, and set into shoes of the same size as those actually worn, are sold in Canton as curiosities.

The large toe fits into the point of the shoe, and the others, instead of being in their natural position, are jammed and driven into the side of the foot, appearing one directly behind the other. It is as though the foot was cut off just below the ankle joint and the stump sharpened to a point.

This custom is exclusively Chinese, and is not followed even by the Mauchou Tartars, who, being the last Asiatic conquerors of China, have adopted many of its customs, and whose emperor now wields his despotic sceptre over one half of the human race.

The sexes in China live mostly apart. The women are uneducated generally. Some of the courtezans of the cities are well taught and skilled in luxurious and fascinating accomplishments, among others they sing and play upon musical instruments. Brothers and sisters after a certain age bid good bye to each other, and though they meet, of course, in the bosom of the family, they have little social intercourse. The Chinese husband goes out into the world and attends to his business, and amuses himself as he pleases, but the wife must stay at home and be contented to eat separately, and attend to her children; or, if her husband be rich, dress in fine style and make her female neighbors cry their eyes out with envy.

Polygamy is sanctioned, yet a man loses caste in some degree for every additional wife he takes, and should he venture on half a dozen his friends would cut him.

An old compradore was telling me once about his domestic felicity; he said, I hab got one wife, one old ting, good for noting.

Then why don't you marry another? I asked. Oh, said he, no two no good.

A great point in Chinese happiness is the number of children the fortunate man may boast of. The principle they go upon is, in the words of Shakespeare, "The world must be peopled."

A man with half a dozen sons is wealthy, but with the same number of daughters, his poverty is a general subject of pity. In speaking of his offspring, one will sometimes say, that he has three children, and if you ask if any are daughters, he will answer yes, four, meaning seven in all, though he does not consider the girls worth mentioning.

Should his wife prove childless, he eagerly seizes the opportunity of putting her aside and marrying again.

The manners of the Chinese, those of the middling and upper classes, are very pleasing to a stranger. The low laborers are brutish enough, but among the better bred a gentility of manner is strikingly apparent.

When you meet a Chinese gentleman, he folds his hands and shakes them at you, saying, chin chin, words of the Canton-Chinese Anglo jargon, signifying welcome, or thank you, or farewell, according to the occasion.

If your visit is one of ceremony, he is careful to keep his cap on while you uncover, and seats you of course on his left hand.

He is so courtier like, that he will not touch the chair a moment before you, and if he perceives that he is doing so he instantly rises a little. Then, perhaps, he treats you to sweetmeats and tea. The tea is always delicious. It is not contaminated by cream and sugar; he would not condescend to such a barbarian custom. There are no saucers for the cups to stand upon, but you will see that they are on top of the cup, to keep in the aroma of the clear amber colored beverage.

A FUNERAL IN HAYTI.

Some of our readers may have seen an account of the death of the Rev. Mr. Cashmap, a missionary of the Foreign Evangelical Society in Hayti. Mrs. Judd, of the same mission, thus alludes to it:—

Immediately on learning (by express) of his death, Mr. Judd set off on horseback, accompanied by a guide, in order, if possible, to reach St. Marc before the interment of the body. But in this he failed, as the law does not allow a corpse to remain unburied over twenty-four hours after death, and he was therefore buried before Mr. J. left home. And who, say you, was there to perform the last rites over his senseless clay? His own wife! Yes, his young, (not yet twenty years of age,) delicate, and tenderly-nurtured wife, to whom he had been married only about ten months, (who had said but a few months before, that "she never had a disappointment in her life,") was left as it were alone, a stranger in a strange land, to be his physician and nurse, in his last sickness, and then to perform the last sad rites over his lifeless remains. This she did by reading a chapter in the Bible, singing alo and accompanying her voice with the lodeon, and then praying, all in French; then walked to the grave, leaning arm of Capt. Williams, (of the Elizabeth "Alice Aviland,") where she again prayed in English, when the s handed her; and, according to the of the country, she threw in the fir that was to "bury her dead out of si

There is something in this last act, to me is peculiarly touching. The nearest bereaved relative is to throw in the first spadeful of earth, and then others of the relatives in succession; and then the friends and neighbors throw in a handful. As Mrs. C. was the only relative, after her the captains of the vessels and their men threw in "earth to earth" upon the coffin of the "white stranger;" and soon all was finished.

Mrs. C. was perfectly calm and collected through the whole of this trying scene. I think I never realized the beauty and force of that passage of Scripture—"As thy days, so shall thy strength be," as I have in seeing how this bereaved one has been sustained, especially under her own feeble health; and then to have this crushing affliction fall upon her so suddenly.

JOHN NEWTON.

Two or three years before the death of this eminent servant of Christ, when his sight was become so dim that he was no longer able to read, an aged friend and brother in the ministry called on him to breakfast. Family prayer succeeding, the portion of Scripture for the day was read to him. It was taken out of Bogatsky's Golden Treasury: "By the grace of God I am what I am." It was the pious man's custom, on these occasions, to make a short family exposition of the passage read. After the reading of this text he paused for some moments, and then uttered the following affecting soliloquy:—

"I am not what I ought to be! Ah, how imperfect and deficient! I am not what I wish to be! I abhor what is evil, and I would cleave to what is good. I am not what I hope to be! Soon, soon shall I put off mortality; and with mortality, all sin and imperfection. Yet, though I am not what I ought to be, nor what I wish to be, nor what I hope to be, I can truly say I am not what I once was—a slave to sin and Satan; and I can heartily join with the apostle, and acknowledge, By the grace of God I am what I am! Let us pray."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, Setember, 13, 1849.

MISSION TO HAYTI—AGAIN.

We penned a few remarks on this subject last week, very hastily; we wish to say a few things more. Indeed, we wish to keep the subject before our people, until they shall send at least one missionary family to the aid of Bro. Jones; and we would that we were able to send a dozen. We can not contemplate the Haytiens, struggling for liberty, from the time they first drove their French masters from the island—for true liberty they have never yet obtained—without feeling our hearts warmed with sympathy for them. Notwithstanding the energy which achieved their independence, and the noble traits of character which have appeared in some of them, they are still a degraded people. Nor is it possible that they should rise to respectability among the nations of the earth, without the civilizing, humanizing, and refining influences of Christianity. As for Popery, the religious influence under which they are now held, it will never elevate them. Whatever is done for them, must be done by Protestantism, refined from all the elements of human corruption. Seventh-day Baptists are the only Protestants who do not more or less, symbolize with "the man of sin." All others tenaciously uphold that chief pillar of Popery, the observance of the first day of the week, thus making void the fourth commandment, as effectually as Papists, by their image worship, make void the second. Papists know that the world has no other authority for this observance than that of "holy Mother Church," and feel disposed to laugh at the credulity of those Protestants who think to destroy Popery by battling against her, while they sedulously nurse the elements of it among themselves. Of course they are not much alarmed—or need not be—at the progress of Protestant missions in general, as long as Protestant missionaries will carry with them into Roman Catholic countries the Sunday observance, they must expect to find it an up-hill business in renovating the state of society. They will be baffled on every hand. A few converts may be made; here and there one may be brought to subscribe to the doctrine of justification by faith alone; but, in spite of this, Popery will still exert its blighting influence over society at large. Upon whom, then, does Providence call to labor for Hayti's redemption? There is but one answer. Seventh-day Baptists are summoned to the work. And we honestly believe that when Seventh-day Baptists shall betake themselves to the work, with a true martyr spirit, the day of Hayti's redemption will not be long delayed.

We have just been looking over the minutes of the last session of the Central Association; and we gather that among the churches of that body, at least, there is a zeal to undertake a mission to Hayti, which is impatient of delay. One of the resolutions unanimously adopted, "after an animated and deeply interesting discussion," sets forth "that circumstances with relation to Hayti render it very probable that we shall soon be called to establish a mission in that Island; and therefore, that it is our duty, so far as our pecuniary ability may enable us, to be prepared for it." The Business Committee also brought in a report on the same subject, as follows: "Relative to a mission [illegible] Hayti, your Committee are of opinion, [illegible] a person qualified for a mission to [illegible]ople can be obtained, funds to sustain [illegible]me will not be wanting." This is a [illegible] beginning. The people of the Central [illegible]ociation are no doubt in earnest. But [illegible]at is the voice of the Western? We are not able now to lay our hands upon the minutes of that body; but, if we are not mistaken, similar action was taken there. At all events, we have it from good authority, that the churches within the bounds of the Western Association are ripe and ready to pour out their offerings, so soon as the Missionary Society is prepared to undertake the work. As for the Eastern, though no particular action was taken on the subject at the last meeting, we know the state of feeling in all the churches composing it well enough to say, that there is a readiness, yea, an eagerness to coöperate in the undertaking. We can not doubt that we shall hear the call responded to from Wisconsin and the South-West.

The next question is, Who will go? The Executive Board of the Missionary Society will not delay one moment to give the appointment, whenever a family shall be found of suitable qualifications. We repeat the question, WHO WILL GO?

THE COUNTRY CHURCH AT WEST POINT.

We do not know when we have read so touching and interesting a legend as is contained in the following relation of the circumstances, which induced the painter of the Embarkation of the Pilgrims, to found the beautiful structure referred to in the extract below:—

"Within a stone's throw from the portico of the hotel, upon a knoll half hidden with trees, stands one of the most beautiful structures, of its kind, in this country—a stone church, of English rural architecture, built by the painter, Robert Weir. The story of its construction is a touching poem. When Mr. Weir received ten thousand dollars from Government, for his picture on the panel of the Capitol, he invested it, untouched, for the benefit of his three children. On the death of these children—all three—soon after, the money reverted to him, but he had a feeling which forbade him to use it. Struck with the favorableness of this knoll under the mountains, as a site for a place of worship, much needed by the village near by, he applied for it to Mr. Cozzens, on whose property it stood, who at once made a free gift of it for the purpose. The painter's taste and heart were set to work, and, with the money left him by his children, he erected this simple and beautiful structure as a memorial of hallowed utility. Its bell for evening service sounded a few minutes ago—the tone selected, apparently, with the taste which governed all, and making sweet music among the mountains that look down upon it. Mr. Weir named it 'The Church of the Holy Innocents.'"

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The 43d session of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference was held with the first church in Hopkinton, R. I., on the 5th, 6th, and 7th days of September, 1849. The delegation in attendance from various sections of the denomination was quite large, embracing nearly all those who attended the anniversaries of the Missionary and Tract Societies, and some who arrived after the anniversaries were closed. The number of persons residing in the vicinity who attended the meeting throughout, was larger than we have ever before seen collected on a similar occasion.

The opening discourse was preached by Nathan V. Hull. At the conclusion of it, the Moderater of the last Conference took the chair, and a committee was appointed to nominate officers for the present session; after which the Conference adjourned for one hour.

On assembling in the afternoon, the Nominating Committee made their report, and the following officers were chosen:—GEO. B. UTTER, Moderator; WM. C. KENYON, Recording Secretary; CHARLES POTTER, Jr., Assistant Recording Secretary.

Communications from Associations, churches, and individuals, were then called for and read. Among them was a letter from the North-Western Association, asking to be received as a member of the Conference. There was also a letter from the Church in Petersburgh, N. Y., requesting the examination of Bro. James Summerbell, with a view to his ordination to the gospel ministry; also a letter from a member of the church at Woodbridgetown, Pa., soliciting aid to support the institutions of religion at that place. A letter was also read from the German Seventh-day Baptists at Ephrata, Pa., expressing their desire to coöperate with us in Christian efforts, and requesting the Conference to receive Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock as their delegate. Dr. Fahnestock being present, addressed the Conference, expressing his own feelings and those of his German brethren towards the English Seventh-day Baptists. In compliance with a vote, the hand of fellowship was extended to him. An interesting letter was then read from the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Mill Yard, London, dated Aug. 8, 1849, and giving the particulars of their present condition and prospects. The reading of these letters occupied a great part of the afternoon, and rendered that session one of deep interest. At their conclusion the Standing Committees were appointed, the letters containing requests were properly referred, and the Conference adjourned to Fifthday morning.

On the re-assembling of Conference, Fifthday morning, the Committee on Petitions made their report, advising the reference of the request from the Petersburg Church to the Presbytery, and the request from Woodbridgetown to the Missionary Association. The Committee on the State of Religion also reported, and their report, which was adopted with some modifications, will be found below.

The Business Committee made a report, embodying in a series of resolutions the subjects which they regarded as having a claim upon the consideration of the Conference. Their report was taken up by items, and the discussion of it occupied the principal part of Fifthday, and a portion of Sixthday. It is impossible for us here to give anything like an adequate sketch of the discussions. Suffice it to say, that nearly all of the delegates took part therein, and that their remarks were such as evidently to interest the large audience in attendance. The resolutions on the manner of keeping the Sabbath, on Secret Societies, and on Ministerial Education, in particular, elicited somewhat lengthy and very earnest remarks. For the benefit of those who wish to see at a glance the resolutions passed by the Conference, we will place the more important together. All but two or three were presented by the Business Committee.

Near evening on Sixthday, the Conference adjourned to meet at Plainfield, N. J., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1852, at which time James H. Cochran is appointed to preach the Introductory Discourse—James Bailey alternate.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion respectfully report—That the letters from the churches, with the statistics of the Associations and their several reports, do not present as favorable appearances in respect to our increase of numbers as could be desired. Yet, when we take a more enlarged view of the operations of the denomination, we feel that the prospect is truly cheering.

Missions,—In this important department of religious effort, we are happy to say that there is an encouraging degree of interest manifested, in the increase of contributions, and in the extension of our field of missionary operations.

The Sabbath—Although we have great occasion to regret the prevalence of Sabbath desecration, even among our own churches, still we see favorable indications of a spirit of reform in the denomination on this subject, which leads us to hope that God is preparing us to labor more efficiently in the dissemination of the truth in respect to his holy day.

Finally, with a feeling of humiliation before God for our want of conformity to his divine will, we would lift up our hearts in devout thanksgiving to the Father of mercies for his benign favor which has been so graciously shown to us in the past, and beseech him still to attend all our labors with his blessing, that, as a poeple, we may be pure and holy, and do much for the promotion of righteousness and truth in the earth.

Resolutions adopted by the Conference.

1. Resolved, That this Conference recommends the members of this denomination to conform to the Scriptural mode of designating the days of the week numerically.

2. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Conference, that the Sabbath begins with the setting of the sun on Sixthday, and closes with the setting of the sun on the Seventh-day; and we earnestly and affectionately recommend to the members of the denomination uniformity of practice on this subject.

3. Resolved, That this Conference would urge upon all Sabbath-keepers the importance of a strict observance of the Sabbath, by abstaining from all unnecessary domestic labors and social visiting, and by devoting the hours of the Sabbath to the consideration of moral and religious subjects; and especially that they keep aloof from all connections or copartnerships which are likely to interfere with the faithful discharge of the duties of the Sabbath, or to weaken the influence of their testimony in its favor.

4. Resolved, That the sin of slavery is a high-handed outrage against the Majesty of Heaven and the Rights of Man, and that we have no fellowship with those who hold their fellow-men as slaves, or with those who aid or abet them.

5. Resolved, That this Conference is conscientiously of the opinion, that Secret Societies are necessarily—in their organization fundamentally, and in their influence practically—adverse to Christianity; and therefore most earnestly and solemnly entreats the churches and members of this denomination, by all the motives which Christianity inspires, to dissuade their brethren from all connection with such Societies.

6. Resolved, That this Conference is gratified to recognize the Society recently organized among us, under the name of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, as its accredited and general organ of publication, and would recommend said Society to the confidence and patronage of the churches and members of this denomination.

7. Whereas, in the opinion of this Conference, the practice of attending circus exhibitions, and other exhibitions of a similar nature, is in its effects wholly and unqualifiedly opposed to the spirituality and moral purity of our holy religion, and is also a sinful waste of time and money, therefore—

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend to the churches in our communion to pass resolutions advising their members to withhold their presence from such exhibitions, and in all suitable ways to discourage them in the community.

8. Whereas the main object of church organization is the concentration of effort for the advancement of religion, therefore—

Resolved, That it is the duty of church members to connect themselves with the churches in the vicinity where they reside, or where they attend meeting; and this Conference would earnestly recommed the churches to advise their members to such a course.

9. Resolved, That in the opinion of this body it is exceedingly desirable that we, as a denomination, should have a College and Theological Seminary, where our youth, and especially those young men expecting to devote themselves to the gospel ministry, may be properly educated.

10. Resolved, That the different Associations of this denomination be each requested to appoint a Committee of five, at their next anniversaries, to act in concert in making inquiries relative to the most feasible location for a College and Theological Seminary, and report the result of their inquiries to the next session of this Conference—the Conference reserving to itself the right of then advising concerning the final location.

11. Resolved, That this Conference appoint an Educational Committee, whose business it shall be to labor to secure funds for educational purposes, hold annual sessions, and take such other measures for the establishment of a College and Theological Seminary as they may deem proper, with the exception of locating the institution.

12. Resolved, That in the opinion of this Conference our young men proposing to enter the gospel minisiry ought, whenever it is at all practicable, to go through with a regular collegiate course of instruction, or its equivalent, previous to ordination.

13. Resolved, That our churches ought to encourage our indigent young men pursuing their studies in view of the ministry, by aiding them with funds to pursue their studies.

Corresponding Letter.

The Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, convened at Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 5th, 6th, and 7th, 1849, to the churches and brethren of like faith, sendeth Christian salutation:

DEAR BRETHREN,—It gives us pleasure to address you again in the capacity of a General Conference. Our present session has been characterized by a good degree of harmony and brotherly love. Although communications were received from only a small part of the churches, yet we have obtained from delegates a tolerably full account of the condition of the churches generally, as will be seen by reference to our statistics, and the report on the State of Religion. It has been our privilege, at this meeting, to welcome among us Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock, a delegate from the German Sabbath-keepers of Pennsylvania. We have also been informed, through a letter of Eld. Wm. Henry Black, elder and pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist church at Mill Yard, London, of the state of the Sabbath-keeping churches in England.

For a full acconnt of our proceedings, we refer you to the minutes herewith printed. You will learn from them the opinion of the Conference upon various subjects of general interest, such as the mode of naming the days of the week, the time of commencing the Sabbath, the manner of keeping the Sabbath, the evil of slavery, the tendency of Secret Societies, the claims of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society, the evil of encouraging circus exhibitions, the duty of church members, the desirableness of a College and Theological Seminary, and the mode of obtaining it.

The next session of the General Conference is appointed to be held at Plainfield, N. J., on the fifth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1852. It is sincerely hoped, that all of the churches, either in their individual capacity, or through the Associations with which they are connected, will report to that meeting their condition, with the changes that may have taken place since the previous session, and any other matters that they may deem of general interest.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all, and encourage you diligently to "keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus."

WHAT ONE GOOD MAN SAYS ABOUT TOBACCO.

One of the best and most venerable Congregational pastors in England, says a correspondent of the Independent, is the Rev. William Jay of Bath. He has been long and favorably known in this country, not only by the reputation of his excellence as a Christian, and his eloquence as a preacher, but by the published works in which his mind has expressed itself to the delight and edification of thousands. His "Memoirs of Cornelius Winter," is perhaps the most fascinating and instructive volume of religious biography that can be found in the English language. In the "Memoirs of Cornelius Winter," when first published, My. Jay introduced the following sentence:—

"Mr. Winter was peculiarly attentive to the behavior and manners of his young men. It was an object with him to teach them how to appear in the parlor as well as in the pulpit. He did not think it unnecessary to guard them against superfluous wants and unseemly customs—against the sottish and offensive habit of smoking—against giving trouble where they happened to lodge—against the use of spirituous liquors—and against fondness for delicacies!"

In his new edition, Mr. Jay has appended a note, which is of so much wider application in this country than even in Britain, that we copy it as a high recommendation of Mr. Jay's entire volume.

Smoking.

Here the author has been not a little censured by some of his brethern. One very renowned smoker said his language nearly approached to blasphemy—expressing withal his wonder that Milton, in speaking of the productions of Eden, had never mentioned the noblest of them all, the tobacco-plant! There have been some to whom perhaps few things would be deemed so paradisaical as that stupid luxury.

The author, however, does not renounce or soften his expressions. His opinion has been confirmed and strengthened by the observation of many years; and he cannot but lament that no physical or civil consideration, and no motive derived from usefulness or decorum, can induce many preachers, to avoid or break off this exceptional habit.

He called it a "sottish practice." Is it not so in its appearance? fume? smell? and immoral associations in the mind of the observer? Does it not hint almost inevitably the pot-house, and the low and sailorly fellowship there? Let a person enter a room in the morning where there has been smoking over night, will the devout savor remind him of a sanctuary, or lead him to think of an assembly of divines?

He called it an "offensive practice." Is it not so to many of his own profession, and to many of his own sex? But how trying is it to women, almost without exception! though from the kindness and obligingness of their nature and manners, they frequently submit to a usage which annoys their persons, and defiles and injures the apartment and furniture whose neatness they so much value.

We say nothing of the silliness of the practice, especially in a "bishop," but to see a man of education, and filling an office that would dignify an angel, passing so much of his time with a tube in his mouth, and emitting therefrom the smoke of a burning herb, as if his head was on fire, were it not for its commonness, must always excite an inquiry or a laugh. Nor do we speak of its vulgarity. But is not every silly coxcomb, and every pert fop, now seen with a pipe in his mouth, or a cigar? Can every preacher afford such a dear indulgence consistently with the claims of household comfort, and education of his children, and some charity to the poor and needy?

Should its injuriousness be forgotten? TOBACCO IS A VERY POWERFUL NARCOTIC POISON. If the saliva, the secretion of which it produces, being impregnated with its essential oil, be swallowed, the deleterious influence is carried directly into the stomach; or if, as most frequently happens, it is discharged, then the blandest fluid is lost. But is not an ensnaring habit, with regard to the waste of time, the danger of drinking, and fondness for company, not always of the most refined and improving sort?

Were I upon a committee of examination, I would never consent to the admission of a young man into one of our academical institutions, but upon the condition that he did not and would not smoke.

I would exact the same condition from every student, if I filled the responsible and honorable office of tutor.

If I were a man of affluence, I would not on any application afford any pecuniary assistance to a preacher who, while he complained of the smallness and inadequateness of his means, reduced it by indulging that needless and wasteful expense.

The author was one day attending a missionary meeting. Before the close of it, a minister arose and said that he had to present a donation. "These two guineas," said he, "are from a servant who was allowed by her mistress so much for tea; but during the two last years she has denied herself the use of that beverage to aid your collection." But suppose a person had immediately said, "Go thou, and do likewise. Spare for the same all-important cause the eight or ten pounds which you spend in wanton, in needless and noxious gratification"—SMOKIFG—"and at our next anniversary how many will praise and bless you!" A minister should be an example. But behold! "There are first that shall be last, and there are last shall be first."

FARTHER ENCROACHMENTS OF SLAVERY.

When placing together, a few weeks ago, several incidents illustrative of the tendency of slavery to encroach upon the rights of northern freemen, we had no idea that the most flagrant illustration was yet to be given. But such is the case. The Charleston Mercury, of August 29th, contains the official proceedings of two meetings of the citizens of St. Peter's Parish, South Carolina, held at Lawtonville—the first on the 8th of February, 1848, and the second on the 10th of August, 1849. The object of the first meeting is stated to have been "to take into consideration the fact that Rev. Wm. H. Brisbane, M. D., is in this section of country, and to devise some plan by which to rid ourselves of the presence of so unprincipled a personage." At this meeting, which was presided over by Hon. J. D. Johnson, a committee of five, including Hon. H. Smart, was appointed to draft resolutions, among which was one declaring that forbearance on account of Dr. Brisbane's "numerous and highly respectable connections," must have a limit. The farther proceedings are thus recorded by the Mercury:—

"About four years since he visited this section of country, and after his return North gave a garbled and false statement of his sojourn here, endeavoring to make capital for himself by recounting the great personal risks he encountered in appearing among us; when unfortunately for ourselves he was permitted to remain and depart unmolested, after having settled his personal and private business, having made no public demonstration of himself or his abolition principles. But during his present sojourn he has had the audacity to show himself in one of our pulpits, there alluding to his estrangement from his native place not being the result of choice, but of necessity, a necessity brought about by the force of conscience, there insulting us with the prayer that universal liberty might soon prevail.

In consideration of these facts, and regarding him as we do to be an enemy to his country, a traitor to the South, and particularly dangerous to this section, where he has the sympathy of the slaves, having liberated a part of his own here, we think he should not be permitted to rest among us.

Therefore be it resolved, That a Committee of three wait on Rev. Wm. H. Brisbane, M D., instanter, and warn him to leave the State in forty-eight hours, or abide the consequences from a hitherto patient but now indignant community.

Resolved, That if the Committee find Mr. Brisbane unwilling to depart, that they wait upon the Chairman and Secretary, who are charged with disseminating the information so as to call the people together at an early day."

Of course Dr. Brisbane, hearing of the above proceedings, fled from his native State, to save his life. One of his relatives, Dr. T. D. Mathews, ventured at the time to say a few words in behalf of Mr. Brisbane, and subsequently wrote to him, giving some account of the meeting. Hence a second meeting was called on the 10th ult., which Dr. Mathews attended, and at which he was accused of having prepared an account of the former meeting, and sent it for publication to the North. The Doctor defended himself, by asserting that more had been printed at the North than he had written—that he was of Revolutionary blood, and was never an abolitionist, but scorned and detested them. Through this means he escaped lynching without flight. The facts in this case give one an idea of the character of slavery, and of that liberty which northern freemen enjoy in the slaveholding States.

THE PEACE CONGRESS.

The Peace Congress commenced its session in Paris on the 22d of August—M. Victor Hugo in the chair. The attendance was very large, and included delegates from the most influential and enlightened nations of the earth. Among the delegates from the United States were Hon. C. Durkie, member of the United States Congress, Wisconsin; Rev. A. Mahan, President of the Oberlin Institute, Ohio; Rev. Dr. Allen, Massachusetts; Prof. A. Walker, Vice-President of the American Peace Society; Rev. J. F. Clarke; Mr. H. Clapp, Jr., editor of the Lynn Pioneer; Mr. Albert Brown; Rev. J. W. Pennington, New York; Rev. A. Crummell; Mr. W. Brown, Kentucky; Mr. Hurlburt, South-Carolina; Rev. Philip Berry, Maryland; Rev. W. Frothingham, Massachusetts; Elihu Burritt, and Hamilton Hill.

At an early stage of proceedings, a programme of resolutions prepared by the Standing Committee was submitted, the discussion of which occupied the Congress up to the latest dates. We give the programme below, and shall endeavor to give some account of the discussion when it comes to hand:—

1. As peace alone can insure the moral and material interests of nations, it is the duty of all Governments to submit to arbitration all differences that arise between them, and to respect the decisions of arbitrators whom they may choose.

2. It is of the highest importance to call the attention of Governments to the necessity of entering, by a general and simultaneous measure, upon a system of disarmament for the purpose of reducing the national expenditure, and of removing at the same time a permanent cause of disquietude and irritation from among the nations.

3. The Congress recommends all the friends of peace to prepare public opinion in their respective countries for a formation of a Congress of Nations, whose sole object it should be to frame a code of international laws, on just principles, and to constitute a Supreme Court, to which should be submitted all questions relating to the reciprocal rights and duties of nations.

4. The Congress condemns all loans and taxes intended for the prosecution of wars of ambition and conquest.

5. The Congress recommends its members to endeavor to eradicate from the minds of all, in their respective countries, both by means of a better education of youth, and by other practical methods, those political prejudices and hereditary hatreds which have so often been the cause of disastrous wars.

6. The Congress addresses the same invitation to all ministers of religion, whose sacred mission is to encourage feelings of good will among men; as to the various organs of the press, which exercise so powerful an influence over the progress of civilization.

7. The Congress earnestly hopes for the improvement of the means of internal communication; for the extension of postal reform; for the universal adoption of the same standard of weights, measures and coinage; and for the multiplication of Peace Societies, which shall keep up a correspondence with each other.

8. The Congress decides that the Committee be instructed to draw up an Address to all nations, embodying the resolutions of the Congress; and that this Address shall be presented to the various Governments, and that special means be taken to bring it under the attention of the President of the French Republic.

LARGE BEQUESTS.—Alfred Bishop, recently deceased, in New Haven, Conn., disposed by will of an estate valued at one million of dollars. He gave liberally to his near relations, as well as to others who had been unfortunate in business. These donations ranged from $15,000 down to a few hundreds. $8,000 to the American Bible Society; $5,000 to the Female Benevolent Society of Bridgeport, and an annuity of $100 to be paid by his widow during her life to the Rev. Dr. Hewitt. The residue of his estate he gave to his wife and children, to be divided according to the statutes of Connecticut.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT WAYLAND.—We learn from the Providence Journal, that at the annual meeting of the Corporation of Brown University, DR. WAYLAND announced his resignation of the Presidency of that Institution, to take effect as soon as his successor could be selected. A Committee was appointed to confer with him, and to endeavor to persuade him to retain the office which he has filled for more than twenty years with so much honor and credit to that University. The result of the interview is not yet known.

THE SECRET EXPEDITION.—This Expedition, against which the President recently issued his Proclamation, has been pretty effectually frustrated. About one thousand persons connected with it, assembled on Round Island, mid-way between Mobile and New Orleans, where they were blockaded by Government vessels. Two propellers and one steamer, lying at New York, have been taken possession of by Government, on suspicion of being connected with the expedition. It is said that except for some difficulty and delay about getting funds, the expedition would have been off before Government was ready to act in the case.

THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW for August—a capital number—appears on our table with its usual promptness. The following is a list of its articles:—Morrill's Philosophy of Religion; Dean Swift and his Biographers; Vincent Gioberti; German Socialism; The ten years' Conflict, being a History of the Disruption of the Church of Scotland; The Slave-Trade Policy; Noteworthy Novels; The River Jordan and the Dead Sea; The Slavonians and Eastern Europe; The Railway System of Great Britain; The Fall of the Sikh Empire. Published by Leonard Scott & Co., 79 Fulton Street, New York.

THE CHOLERA has become so scarce in New York, that the Board of Health consider it no longer an Epidemic, and deem a daily report upon the subject unnecessary. The report of the City Inspector shows that there were only 94 deaths from that disease last week, and these were mostly of persons residing in filthy neighborhoods. The whole number of deaths by Cholera, in New York, up to the present time, is about five thousand. In some of the New England States, the Cholera is now quite prevalent. At Boston, there were 51 deaths by Cholera last week. At Bangor, Me., also, the disease prevails.

THE PRESIDENT of the United States has been compelled to return to Washington, on account of pressing business, and feeble health, thus disappointing the expectations of those who anticipated seeing him at the State Fair in Syracuse.

HON. HENRY CLAY spent last Firstday at Utica, and is to attend the Agricultural Fair at Syracuse this week.

The priests of the Greek church, in order to encourage the recruits raised for the Russian army, assure them that if they are killed in Hungary, they will rise the third day at Moscow.

General Intelligence.

FIVE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The Steamship Niagara arrived at New York on Seventhday last, bringing news from Paris to Aug. 23d, London 24th, and Liverpool 25th.

The intelligence from the seat of war in Hungary is of the most disastrous kind. The Hungarians have been defeated at all points, and the cause which they so courageously upheld against fearful odds has fallen past redemption. The precise details of the circumstances which led to this unfortunate and unexpected result are not certainly known. But of the main facts, that the Hungarians have been forced to lay down their arms and submit unconditionally to the Russian forces, there is no reason whatever to doubt. Several severe battles were fought near the close of operations, in which the number of killed and wounded was unusually large.

From Rome we have intelligence that the three cardinals who form the Pontifical commission of Government have decided that they will not recognize any notarial act or any contract passed under the Provisional and Republican Governments. They have also declared all engagements contracted within that period invalid. All proceedings on such engagements are stopped, and the tribunals are forbidden to enforce them. Even a will made in the absence of the Pope is considered as non evenu. The judgments given by the tribunals under the Republic are also considered null.

The Pope has conferred on Gen. Oudinot the title of Duke of Pinerazio, and granted him a pension of 6,000 crowns for his valuable services in the cause of the Holy See.

Greece is filled with political fugitives, especially from Italy. The Minister of the Interior has ordered that hospitality and all possible assistance be extended to them. The inhabitants of Calamatta and Patras have also done everything to meliorate the lot of these unfortunates.

In England it is in contemplation to appoint an early day of fasting, prayer and humiliation, that Providence, in his infinite mercy, may be pleased to stay the devastating malady with which the country is so afflictingly visited. No day has yet been fixed upon.

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN THE PORTUGUESE COLONIES.

We are gratified to learn, says the N. Y. Observer, that there is now a fair prospect, that a law will soon be passed in Portugal, for the abolition of Slavery in all the colonies of that country. A bill for that purpose was read in the Chamber of Peers at Lisbon on the 25th of May last, and the Committee on Colonial Affairs, to whom it was then referred, made their report on the 25th of June, approving the bill, and recommending its adoption by the Chamber. The bill provides,

1. That the children of slaves born after the date of the law shall be free from the moment of their birth.

II. That all slaves who enter any territory or ship of Portugal, after the date of the law, from whatever motive, shall be considered free from the moment that they enter such territory or ship.

This clause is thus qualified: In those countries where Slavery is sanctioned by law, if slaves go on board a Portuguese ship, while in any port of such country, that they are of course amenable to the laws of that country while the ship is in port; but if they be carried out of the port, they shall be free from the moment the vessel is clear of the port. The persons who decoy them or take them away, however, are to be responsible for their value. Slaves accompanying the embassies which African potentates send to the Governors of Portuguese colonies, may be held as slaves while the embassy is in the country, but will be set free if they remain after the embassy has left the Portuguese territory.

III. The transportation of slaves from one Portuguese port to another, or from a Portuguese port to a foreign country, is strictly prohibited.

IV. All Slaves now belonging to the State are declared to be immediately free, on publication of the law; and all who may hereafter become its property are, at the moment they become so, declared free.

V. Every person throughout the Portuguese empire, is to be considered a freeman unless he can be legally proved to be a slave.

VI. In each Portuguese ultra-marine colony, there shall be kept books for the registry of the slaves: and it shall be the duty of every slaveholder, to see that the names of his slaves are entered, with the descriptions necessary for their identification. No person who is not registered can be held as a slave.

VII. If a slaveholder shall cause to be registered as a slave the name of a person legally entitled to liberty, he shall forfeit all his slaves, who are to be immediately declared free; and he himself is to suffer the penalty usually imposed on the kidnapper.

Slaveholders are also required to report every half year any alterations which may have occurred in relation to their registered slaves; and if they omit to make this report for three successive half-years, their slaves are all to be forfeited and declared free.

VIII. The slave, or any of his friends, may demand his emancipation at any time by paying his master the price fixed by arbitrators, chosen one-half by the master and one-half by the civil authorities.

IX. Curators of slaves shall be appointed in each of the ultra-marine colonies, whose duty it shall be to superintend the execution of the law, and to do all in their power to protect the slave and promote emancipation.

From this outline of the provisions of the proposed law, it will be seen that the friends of emancipation in Portugal are disposed to do their work thoroughly. If the bill passes, Slavery will cease at no distant day in every part of the Portuguese empire. The number of slaves in that empire since the separation of Brazil, is computed at from 50,000 to 60,000, nearly 30,000 of whom are in the settlements along the eastern coast of Africa; about 6,000 in the Cape de Verde Islands; and the remainder, chiefly in the settlements and on the islands along the western coast of Africa.

Arrest of an American Citizen in Ireland.

Mr. Charles Whitney, of the United States, has been traveling through Great Britain, delivering lectures on American Oratory in Dublin, Belfast, and other places. In Dublin his lectures produced much enthusiasm, and on introducing the speech of Patrick Henry much excitement prevailed among his hearers. When he came to the words, "We must fight! I repeat it, Sir, we must fight! An appeal to the arms and to the God of Hosts is all that is left for us!" the noted Juror of Duffy's trial, Mr. Burke, stood up and exclaimed, "I am of that man's opinion," which had the effect of raising the entire assembly en masse, whose cheering shook the walls of the Rotunda. In consequence of this, Mr. Whitney was arrested as he was leaving Belfast, for the Giant's Causeway, We find his story told as follows in the Boston Pilot:—

"I was accompanied by Mrs. Whitney, and just as we were entering a stage-coach, "a well dressed traveler rode up and said to me, 'Sir, I want to speak a word in private to you.' I answered, 'Certainly, sir,' We passed into an an upper room of the Inn, where he drew out of his coat-pocket a warrant and said, 'You must return with me to Dublin." I rejoined, 'Why, Sir, I do not owe any one anything in Dublin.' He said it was something worse than that—'it was sedition!' 'Sedition,' I answered. 'Yes,' he said, 'and you must go to Dublin.' Not to make this case of singular outrage and oppression too long, I will inform you that I was compelled to go to Dublin Castle, (Mrs. Whitney at the time was trembling, fainting, and anon in tears, and this, too, when she is enciente.) All my private letters and papers were minutely examined. The Secretary consulted with Lord Clarendon in another room, and in about an hour returned. I then had my choice, either to be remanded to Newgate Prison (a vile, loathsome gaol, where two Americans were confined last summer,) or, give bonds to leave Ireland at once! I gave the required bonds, and am now here in Manchester."

An Inundation.—We perceieve by the following from the Martinsville (La.) Villager, of the 21st August, that the Bayou Rouge, Bayou Clair, and Bayou Bœuf, in Louisiana, are overflowed:—

We record the melancholy fact that the alluvial lands of our parish are inundated, Bayou des Glaises excepted. Red River for three weeks has been steadily rising, with a rapidity hitherto unknown, until the accumulated waters have burst every barrier opposed to them, and now foam in sea-like firandeur over the ripening fields of cotton, cane and corn. The amount of property destroyed is incalculable. The great fire at St. Louis did scarcely a tithe of the injury produced by this overflow. Not only the crops have been entirely submerged, from the western limits of Arkansas to the mouth of the river, but houses, fences, horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, &c., have been destroyed to an extent beyond computation. Bayou Rouge is under water, from its head to near the limits of our parish. A traveler lately passing along its channel found the planters on its banks wading waist deep in the water; pigs were huddled on floats, horses and cattle on plantations, turkeys and chickens on scaffolds, and corn, cotton and cane submerged. Bayou Choupique is said to be overflowed. Huffpower is under, and so are Bayous Clair and Bœuf. We know not when our troubles will cease, the Red River is still rising at the rate of half an inch in 24 hours. The great rains during the Summer have ruined the crops of corn and cotton on the prairie, and the floods have done the same to those on the Bayous; consequently, our chances for bread are none of the best.

A Bull Fight.—One day last week, a large and vicious bull broke out of a slaughter house in Houston-street, New York, closely followed by many pursuers, and took his course down town, knocking down and running over every person he could, though fortunately goring none. In Grand-street he attacked four boys, and after running over them proceeded furiously upon his way, notwithstanding he was several times struck with sticks and stones, the blows seeming to aggravate him more. About seventeen persons were injured by the bull in his mad career, and finally he made his way down toward the Park, and through the cross streets to Chambers. As he neared the North River, the Ringold Association were preparing to march, having just disembarked from the steamboat Columbus, from their excursion to Keyport. Among them the animal dashed, making a considerable scatter, though one of the soldiers stabbed him with a bayonet, but with no effect. He then knocked a man down who was standing upon the side-walk, and trod upon his head, injuring him dangerously. The unfortunate individual was picked up covered with blood, and conveyed away to receive medical attendance. In the meantime the bull was secured, with a rope, and the young man who had followed the animal from the commencement of the flight, and had several times attacked him with great intrepidity, procured a cleaver, and killed him with one or two blows.

Desperate Bravery.—Three trappers, Vale, Cass, and Young, says the Jackson Co. (Iowa) Democrat, while looking for beaver in the vicinity of Marcon River, discovered a large trail, rightly supposing that they were in the vicinity of a strong band of Indians. They selected a suitable spot, and built of logs and poles a small hut, to which they gave the name of a fort. Before it was finished the Indians made their appearance. They showed that they were determined to have their scalps. Vale and his companions prepared for a desperate resistance. At the first fire of the Indians, Young was shot through the head. Vale and Cass returned the fire, and three Indians fell, at which they raised the war-whoop. The unequal contest lasted several hours, Cass loading the guns while Vale with unerring aim, thinned their ranks. Cass imprudently exposed his face and received a ball in the eye. Vale was now left alone to contend against the Indians. He made the best of it, loaded and fired in such rapid succession, that the Indians were on the point of retiring, when he fell mortally wounded. The Indians lament his death; they buried him without scalping him, and honor him with the name of Eagle Brave. 28 Indians were killed in the action. Vale's relatives reside in Milwaukie.

Young Travelers.—Two boys, aged 9 and 11 years, by the name of Anderson, passed through Baltimore on Monday, on their way from New York to Wheeling, Va., having traveled thus far alone and without money. They stated that their father was employed on a steamboat running from Wheeling on the Ohio River; that their mother resided in New York, and that a few days since, while they were at school, their mother died of cholera. They came home to find her a corpse, and she was buried at the city's expense. The landlord of the house in which they lived immediately seized upon everything their mother possessed, even to their clothing, for rent due him, and they were turned out among strangers penniless. With a resolution and fortitude beyond their years, they determined to go to their father at Wheeling, and accordingly started off. Their appearance and straight-forward story enlisted friends, who procured them a passage to Philadelphia on the Camden and Amboy Railroad. At Philadelphia they again obtained means to come to Baltimore, but unfortunately got into the wrong cars at Philadelphia and were carried to Lancaster. From thence they walked to York and nearly all the way to this city, having rode a short distance. Here they again met with those who, impressed with the truth of their melancholy story, set to work to procure them a passage to Wheeling, and they were also provided with clothing, having started with nothing but what they had on their backs, and parted with a portion of that on the road. On Monday evening they left for their destination, their passage through having been secured, and a small sum of money being also placed in their possession to subsist on until they should find their parent. [Balt. Clip., 5th inst.

Railroad Accident.—On Sixthday last a fearful collision occurred on the Auburn and Rochester Railroad. When about a mile east of Cartersville the passenger train was met by the freight train running at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour. There was a high bank and a piece of wood on the inner side of the curve, which prevented either engineer from discovering the other train until they were close together. The Engineer on the freight train reversed his engine and leaped to the ground. The Engineer on the other train, not so quickly discovering his danger, had not time to reverse his engine, but jumped quickly off, and the two locomotives came together with terrible force—almost entirely destroying them. A number of the cars were badly broken—and John Sholtus was killed. He was standing on the foot platform of the forward passenger car. Both of his legs were broken below the knees, his right arm was broken near the shoulder, and his chest was badly crushed. He was dead before he could be extricated. He was Superintendent of the depot at Rochester, and left a wife and two children. Many of the passengers were slightly injured, having their faces bruised and cut somewhat, but none were dangerously hurt. The engineer on board the freight train had his forehead cut severely, and Michael Buchan was considerably hurt by jumping off the car.

Slaves freeing Themselves.—There is a great commotion among the slave-owners of Maryland, in consequence of the large number of slaves who have seen proper to take "French leave" of their masters, and emigrate into the free States. Every paper published in the counties comes teeming full of advertisements offering rewards for runaways, and editorial notices of the absconding of whole gangs and families of slaves, who are seldom ever caught, and only heard of when safe far north of Mason and Dixon's line. So great has been the loss to planters on the Eastern shore counties of the State, that the owners of slaves are proposing to construct a line of telegraph through the center of the counties, for the purpose of giving early information to police agents of the flight of their property, and thus aiding in their detection. Several instances have occurred lately of gangs of slaves having run away in one night, and successfully got off, whose value would be from $5,000 to $8,000.

A Narrow Escape.—The superiority of felt over paper, to be applied to the bottoms of ships beneath copper, is well illustrated by the following singular fact. The ship Dorothea, sent on a voyage of discovery to the Arctic regions, was crushed between two fields of ice; the shock was so tremendous, that several of the beams which support the deck were broken, and all on board expected she would founder; but, to their surprise, no leak was discovered; and hence it was thought that the beams were the only parts damaged. She arrived in England without leaking; but when taken into the dock and stripped, for the purpose of examining into her state, it was discoverd that ninety-six of her timbers under the water were broken, the plank of the bottom deranged, and that the felt had saved the ship.

Heavy Damages and Important Verdict.—Rev. Alexander Campbell, [President of Bethamy (Va.) College, has recovered $10.000 of Rev. James Robinson of Scotland. Mr. Campbell, on a tour through Scotland, in 1847, was arrested and imprisoned in Edinburgh, through the agency of the Rev. James Robinson, for having, while discoursing on the subject of slavery, uttered sentiments obnoxious to that gentleman. Some of his friends instituted a suit against Mr. R. This suit has recently terminated, and the result is a decree of the Lords of Council and Session in favor of Mr. Campbell for two thousand pounds sterling. [Phil. Ledger.

Signs of Civilization.—Mr. Scofield, of New London, Ct., in his letter from California, writes that he was absent from camp four days, and though he intended to go where no one had ever been before, yet all along he found marks of civilization, such as pieces of playing-cards and brandy bottles

Poisoned—A Warning.—Mr. Henry H. Whitcomb, his wife, two children, brother and sister, says the Jefferson (N. Y.) Democrat, were all poisoned the other day by eating plum sauce, in which a german silver spoon had been used for stirring while cooking. They ate of the sauce about five o'clock, and about ten the same evening the nursing child commenced vomiting and cramping, having imbibed the poison from its mother, and soon after the rest of the family were taken in the same way. They were all very sick for several hours, and it was doubtful what would be the termination, but they have all recovered and are now nearly or quite well.

Emigrants Coming.—We are informed by the Paris Temps that the Polish refugees in France, galled by the restraints and supervision to which they are subjected, have formed the project of emigrating in a body to the United States, and establishing a colony to be called Polish Fraternity. 232 families have entered into the plan, and appointed a committee of arrangements. It is stated that most of the German political refugees in Switzerland, who are still more numerous, entertain a similar project.

A Religious Storm in the Bermuda Isles.—The Bermudian of the 15th ult. states that thirty years ago a bill was passed for paying the Church-of-England clergy by the people of Bermuda. It will soon expire. A new bill included $500 a year to the Methodists, and at this the high Church party have kicked, and thrown out the bill in a pet. Colonial government trusts far more to paid persons than to the people, and did so in Virginia 80 years ago.

Benevolence.—The late Joseph Titus, of Titusville, near Trenton, bequeathed $500 to each of the two Boards of Presbyterian Missions, $500 to the Board of Education, $1,000 and a house for a parochial school at Titusville, and $1,000 to the church—for which he originally gave the lot, and one-tenth of its cost, besides paying an eighth of its annual expenses up to his death.

SUMMARY.

An Irishman wishing to go from Manchester to Concord, N. H., made a mistake and got into the Boston train of cars instead of the Concord. Thinking that something was wrong, he inquired of a fellow-passenger, who informed him that he was going in an opposite direction from the place of his intended destination. Upon hearing this, although the train was going at full speed, the Irishman stepped to the platform, sprang from the car, landed head foremost upon a ledge of rocks, and was instantly killed.

In one building in New York, 7 Little Water street, there have been found 200 colored people as regular occupants. In the locality known as Cow Bay, there are 400 persons in five houses. At the corner of Orange and Cross streets, there are 95 colored and white females in a rear basement; and in the rear of 10 and 12 Mulberry street, there are 809 persons crowded upon two lots, six persons living in almost every room. The chances of these residents for cleanliness, health, or decency, are obvious.

A resolve has passed the Legislature of Maine, directing the clerk of the Judicial Court in each County in that State to purchase, bind and preserve, for the use, and at the expense of the County, a copy of the newspapers published therein, not exceeding three in number, commencing with the year 1849, and giving preference to those most abounding in historical and other information valuable to the public.

Recent accounts from Yucatan tell of some hard fighting there. A battle has been fought between the Yucatecos and the Indians, in which the former were badly whipped, and lost 860 men. The battle lasted a whole day (the 16th,) and was ended by the whites retreating into Bacalar, and taking refuge in the citadel.

In Philadelphia, the other day, two merchants from Galveston, Texas, named Stewart Newell and Alexander Crawford, became involved in a business dispute, at the Merchants' Exchange, which resulted in a fight. They were arrested and held to bail to keep the peace.

The Directors of the Camden and Amboy Railroad Co. have appointed a committee to make the necessary arrangements for facilitating and cheapening the freighting business over the company's works. So the noise and opposition of the Anti-Monopolists, it would seem, have not been without some effect.

Lieut. Bayfield, an Edglish officer, has been for 30 years engaged in surveying the St. Lawrence River, from the gulf to the head of Lake Superior, and is still at the same work. He says there are 22,000 islands in the river and the eastern waters of Lake Huron.

Herman Livingston, one of the proprietors of the Manor of Livingston, in Columbia County, has plead the "statutes of limitation" against a suit commenced by the Attorney General in behalf of the People of this State, in order to eject them as squatters on the State lands.

Counterfeit $10 bills on the St. Albans Bank, Vt., are in active circulation, well calculated to deceive; $2 counterfeits on the Essex County Bank, Keesville, badly executed, are also afloat.

Deputy Sheriff William Hegeman was assaulted by some eight or ten men in disguise, on the 28th, at Sandlake, and his papers forcibly taken from him while in the act of making a public sale of the personal property of John Snoeck for rent on an execution in favor of W. P. Van Rensselaer.

The steamboat Haide, on her passage from St. Louis to Council Bluffs, burst her connection pipe a few days since, when 30 miles above Reston, killing the Captain George Wishbank, and scalding, supposed mortally, George Martin, the pilot, and Robt. Lindsey, the clerk, two ladies by the name of Powell of Brownsville, and Mrs. Tompkins of this city, were also several scalded.

The steamboat Mayflower, on her way from Pittsburgh to Cincinnatti, burst her larboard boiler at Longstown, by which 11 persons were scalded, though none supposed dangerously.

Dr. Sayre, who was appointed by the New York Board of Health to investigate the causes of cholera in the Twelfth Ward of that city, reports that in the district bounded by Nineteenth and Fortieth streets, the Sixth Avenue and the North River, about twenty thousand hogs are kept. The cholera has been remarkably fatal in this Ward.

A party of Philadelphia rowdies recently visited Trenton, N. J. As they were passing through the place one of them, called Walker, fired a pistol at an industrious, inoffensive colored man, named James. The whole party were taken before a magistrate. After a hearing of the facts, Walker was ordered to give security in $1000, for want of which he was committed.

The citizens of St. Louis have, by committee, issued an address to the United States, inviting them to send delegates to a National Convention to be held in that city on the 3d Monday of October next, for the purpose of taking measures to establish a railroad communication with the Pacific.

The frame-work of a magnificent hotel to be erected in San Francisco is now under construction in New Orleans, which will be sent forward as soon as completed. It is to have 100 feet front by 75 feet depth, and the fittings up are to beof the most superb style.

A statement has been going the rounds that eight thousand of the citizens of St. Louis had died by cholera. The Daily Organ of that city denies the statement, and says that little more than half that number perished by that fell disease.

Mr. Calvin Fairbanks, who was sentenced to fifteen years confinement in the Penitentiary at Frankfort, Ky. about five years since, for aiding a slave to escape from that State, has been pardoned by Gov. Crittenden, and is now on his way to Little Genesee, N. Y., where his mother and friends reside. His conduct while in prison had won the regard of all who saw him.

The colored men of Connecticut propose to have a Convention on the 12th inst. to consider their "political condition," &c. The call is a well written and spirited appeal. They wish, if possible, to obtain the right of suffrage, and regard their exemption from taxation as a privilege of little importance.

A fellow advertised a musical performance at Springfield, Mass., took six dollars at the door, and started to call the performers at the hotel, since which he has not been heard of, and the patrons of the concert had to whistle both for their fun and their money.

An article in the Builder, published at London, says, "fire-proof ceilings of wire-work have been successfully applied with stucco and plaster, at the Chester Lunatic Asylum."

Late advices from the Plains represent the cholera as raging fearfully among the Indians at the North-west. It is thought that the disease will prove a greater scourge than the small pox in 1839.

Adam White, a youth of 14, was accidentally shot at St. Louis, as they were snapping in sport a pistol they supposed not to be loaded.

Mr. Burk, at Chester, Pa., had his foot crushed last Saturday by the falling of a large wall in a quay. He died before amputation.

Operations have been commenced on the Belvidere Railroad, N. J. It is expected it will be ready for use next summer.

The fare on the New York and Philadelphia Railroad has been reduced from four to three dollars.

The Mackerel fisheries of Cape Cod are not productive this year.

It is said there are 60,000 persons in South-Carolina who cannot read.

LETTERS.

Job Tyler, Maxson Green, S. S. Griswold, L. A. Picket, Elias Frink, E. Maxson, J. Jennesa, Jonathan F. Randolph, Daniel Coon, E. Babcock, G. Evans, B. G. Stillman, H. P. Burdick, N. Saunders, C. A. Stillman, I. D. Titsworth, A. C. Potter (right.)

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Thos. P. Lanphear,	$2 00	Rowse Stillman,	$2 00
Nathan Babcock,	2 00	Albert Smith,	2 00
E. D. Randolph,	2 00	Thomas Lewis,	2 00
T. M. Clarke,	2 00	Jesse Teft,	2 00
Edmund Darrow,	2 00	R. A. Thomas,	2 00
Lester T. Rogers,	2 00	D. M. Burdick,	2 00
John Webster,	2 00	Amos Crandall,	1 00
C. C. Lewis,	2 00	A. Davis, Jr.,	2 00
J. D. Langworthy,	1 60	Azor Estee,	2 00
J. W. Brown,	2 00	Barton Hall,	2 00
Eph. Stillman,	2 00	Caleb Green,	1 00
Eliz. Langworthy,	2 00	J. C. Burdick,	2 00
C. W. Crary,	2 00	Benj. Edwards,	2 00
S. A. Champlin,	2 00	Asa Lanphear,	2 00
Eph. Gavit,	2 00	Martin Wilcox,	2 00
Daniel Lewis,	2 00	Ch. Langworthy,	2 00
G. A. Babcock,	2 00	Peleg S. Clark,	2 00
Nancy Clark,	2 00	Betsey Saunders,	2 00
Geo. Irish,	2 00	Elias Frink,	2 00
T. W. Potter,	2 00	Judith Clark,	2 00
Jos. Potter,	2 00	D. Brundridge,	2 00
Thos. Lewis,	2 00	Dewitt C. Coon,	2 00
Paul Babcock,	2 00	John Maxson,	2 00
Eliz. Stillman,	2 00	Nathan Burch,	2 00
A. M. Babcock,	2 00	Benj. Burdick,	2 00
Peleg Saunders,	2 00	Betsey Crumb,	2 00
Emily H. Babcock,	2 00	John S. Coon,	2 00
Thomas Avery,	2 00	S. B. Crandall,	2 00
Richard Ford,	2 00	Andrew Babcock,	2 00
Wm. S. Dunham,	1 00	Ethan Stillman,	1 00
Joseph Swinney,	2 00	Hial Williams,	2 00
Geo. R. Wheeler,	2 00	Wm. Whitford,	2 00
Asa Barritt,	2 00	C. T. Rogers,	2 00
L. M. Cottrell,	2 00	Albert Babcock,	2 00
B. W. Millard,	2 00	Collins Miller,	2 00
Josiah Sherman,	2 00	Nancy Burdick,	50
S. R. Smith,	2 00	Betsey Crumb,	2 00
Geo. Maxson,	2 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

Wm. S. Burdick,	$5 00	Noyes Stillman,	$5 00
Thos. A. Kenyon,	5 00	Geo. B. Clarke,	5 00
Nelson Clark,	5 00	Ethan C. Rogers,	5 00
Martin Wilcox,	5 00	Albert Clark,	5 00
Ethan Clark,	5 00	Hial Williams,	5 00
Clark Saunders,	5 00	Collins Miller,	5 00
A. B. Spaulding,	5 00	Augustus Saunders,	5 00
David Whitford,	5 00

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

Nathan Williams,	$4 00	Jerod Clark,	$1 60
Jonathan C. Burdick,	50	R. T. Stillman,	1 00
David Whitford,	2 00	Nancy Burdick,	2 00
Wm. H. Stillman,	3 00	Leonard Babcock,	2 00
J. R. G. Weeden,	7 00

New York Markets—Seconday, Sept. 10.

Ashes, $6 44 a 6 50 for pearls, and $6 [illegible] 7 00 for pots. Flour is dull and low, prices having fallen [illegible] 6 cents in two days, common State and Western 5 35; prime Genesee $5 44 a 5 62. Genesee Wheat $1 21. Corn from 60 to 63c. Rye 59c. Oats, from 35 to 41c. Butter is in good demand at 8 a 10c for Ohio, 12 a 16c for State. Cheese 4 a 6½c.

MARRIED.

In Westerly, R. I., Sept. 3d, Mr. Franklin H. Crumb to Miss Ann Gardner.

DIED.

In Berlin, Rensselaer Co., N. Y., on the 27th ult., Mrs. Abigail Denison, wife of David Denison, and daughter of the late Jairus Maxson, in the 31st year of her age. Mrs. Denison made a public profession of religion some few years since, and connected herself with the Baptist Church in Berlin, where she remained a member until we trust she was removed to join the church triumphant above. Her disease, which was consumption, was borne with patience; and although she leaves a family of small children, yet she gave them up to Him who regards them as of more value than many sparrows.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., August 23d, of dysentery, Charles Henry, son of Ira and Jane Stillman, aged 2 years and 5 months. On the 27th of August, of dysentery, Mary Elva, daughter of Ira and Jane Stillman, aged 11 months and 12 days. On the 28th of August, of dysentery, Mrs. Jane Stillman, wife of Ira Stillman, aged 22 years, 11 months, and 12 days. Mrs. Stillman, though called to mourn the loss of her two only children on her own death-bed, sustained the bereavement, and bore the pain of her own distressing illness with true Christian fortitude, leaving her mourning husband and friends the assurance that she awaits their coming in the realms of bliss.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., Sept. 1, Charles Herbert, only child of Charles A. and Esther V. Stillman, aged 1 year, 5 months, and 15 days.

A flower too fair to bloom on earth,
Where storms and passions have their birth,
Removed to brighter worlds on high,
Blooms with fragrance that ne'er shall die.

Union Academy.

THE second or Fall Term of the Union Academy will commence on the 13th of August, 1849, under the charge of—

E. P. LARKIN, Principal,
Rev. G. M. LANGWORTHY, Lecturer on Moral Science.
Wm. S. GREEN, Assistant.
Miss S. E. CRANDALL, Preceptress,
Miss AMANDA M. CRANDALL, Teacher of Piano.

During the Fall Term of each year, a TEACHERS' CLASS will be organized, for the purpose of more thoroughly preparing Common School teachers for their responsible, but too long neglected avocation. A Course of Lectures will be delivered before the Class upon the various modes of teaching and governing Common Schools; and during the Term, the Class will be critically examined and instructed in those branches which they are expected to teach. Every effort will be made to ascertain the qualifications of those proposing to teach; and no individual can receive a recommendation from the Faculty of this Institution, who is not thoroughly qualified to fulfill all the specifications of his recommendation.

The Trustees of this Academy consider themselves bound to see the following principles observed, and strictly carried out, in the conduct of the School:—

First—Nothing sectarian shall be taught or countenanced in this School.

Second—Equal advantages shall be afforded to every student, whatever may be his religious denomination.

Third—The exercises of the Institution shall be suspended on the first and seventh days of each week.

Fourth—No efforts shall be wanting to make the advantages of the Institution equal to those of the most approved Academies in the Eastern and Middle States.

This Institution is pleasantly located at Shiloh, Cumberland County, New Jersey, three and a half miles West of Bridgeton, the county-seat, and twelve miles South-east of Salem; amidst an industrious, enterprising, and moral community, and removed from the vices ever attendant on large villages and cities.

Terms.

Tuition from $3 50 to $5 00 per Term. Piano music $10 00 extra. Incidental expenses 25 cents per Term. Settled invariably in advance, either by payment or satisfactory arrangement. No admittance for less than half a term.

Board can be had in families at from $1 00 to $1 50 per week. Rooms can be obtained at a moderate expense by those desiring them.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. Passenger Trains Up—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. Passenger Trains Down—Leave White House at 5½ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M., Somerville 4½ A. M., Plainfield 5½ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. Returning—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Mauch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, ALBANY, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G. Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establishing Free Schools throughout the State," passed March 26, 1849.] Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I, Chap. 6, Title3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140. Aug. 2.

Miscellaneous.

A SHORT FIRE-SIDE STORY ABOUT HONESTY.

One evening a poor man and his son, a little boy, sat by the way-side, near the gate of an old town in Germany. The father took a loaf of bread which he had bought in the town, and broke it, and gave half of it to his boy. "Not so, father," said the boy; "I shall not eat until after you. You have been working hard all day, for small wages, to support me; and you must be very hungry, I shall wait to you are done." "You speak kindly, my son," replied the pleased father; "your love to me does me more good than my food; and those eyes of yours remind me of your dear mother who has left us, and who told you to love me as she used to do; and, indeed, my boy, you have been a great strength and comfort to me; but now that I have eaten the first morsel to please you, it is your turn to eat." "Thank you, father; but break this piece in two, and take you a little more; for you see the loaf is not large, and you require much more than I do." "I shall divide the loaf for you, my boy; but eat it I shall not; I have abundance; and let us thank God for His great goodness in giving us food, and in giving us what is better still, cheerful and contented hearts. He who gave us the living bread from heaven, to nourish our immortal souls, how shall He not give us all other food which is necessary to support our mortal bodies!" The father and son thanked God, and then began to cut the loaf in pieces, to begin together their frugal meal. But as they cut one portion of the loaf, there fell out several large pieces of gold, of great value. The little boy gave a shout of joy, and was springing forward to grasp the unexpected treasure, when he was pulled back by his father. "My son, my son!" he cried, "do not touch that money; it is not ours?" "But whose is it, father, if it is not ours?" "I know not, as yet, to whom it belongs; but probably it was put there by the baker through some mistake. We must inquire." "But, father," interrupted the boy, "you are poor and needy, and you have bought the loaf, and then the baker may tell a lie, and"—"I will not listen to you, my boy; I bought the loaf; but I did not buy the gold in it. If the baker sold it to me in ignorance, I shall not be so dishonest as to take advantage of him; remember Him who told us to do to others as we would have others do to us. The baker may possibly cheat us; but that is no reason why we should try and cheat him. I am poor, indeed; but that is no sin. If we share the poverty of Jesus, God's own Son, oh! let us share also, his goodness and his trust in God. We may never be rich, but we may always be honest. We may die of starvation, but God's will be done, should we die in doing it! Yes, my boy, trust God, and walk in his ways, and you shall never be put to shame. Now, run to the baker, and bring him here; and I shall watch the gold until he comes." So the boy ran for the baker. "Brother workman," said the old man, "you have made some mistake, and almost lost your money; and he showed the baker the gold, and told him how it had been found. "Is it thine?" asked the father; "if it is, take it away." "My father, baker, is very poor, and"—"Silence, my child; put me not to shame by thy complaints. I am glad we have saved this man from losing his money." The baker had been gazing alternately upon the honest father and his eager boy, and upon the gold which lay glittering upon the green turf. "Thou art, indeed, an honest fellow," said the baker, "and my neighbor, David, the flax dresser, spoke but the truth when he said, thou wert the honestest man in our town. Now, I shall tell thee about the gold:—A stranger came to my shop three days ago, and gave me that loaf, and told me to sell cheaply, or give it away to the honestest poor man whom I knew in the city. I told David to send thee to me, as a customer, this morning; and as thou wouldst not take the loaf for nothing, I sold it to thee, as thou knowest, for the last pence in thy purse; and the loaf, with all its treasure—and certain, it is not small!—is thine; and God grant thee a blessing with it!" The poor father bent his head to the ground, while the tears fell from his eyes. His boy ran and put his hands about his neck, and said, "I shall always, like you, my father, trust God, and do what is right; for I am sure it will never put us to shame."

[Edinburgh Christian Magazine.

LAWS OF HEALTH.

Children should be taught to use the left hand as well and as much as the right.

Infants should be sponged with cold water every day. Infants should be carried into the air every day of the season. Infants should be nursed at regular intervals, once in about three hours. From the time they are weaned, until they have passed the first dentition, children should be fed on bread and milk.

Coarse bread is better for children than fine.

Children should sleep in separate beds, and should not wear night caps.

Children under seven years of age should not be confined over six or seven hours in the house—and that time should be broken by frequent recesses.

From the time of the first to that of the second dentition, children should be denied animal food.

Children and young people must be made to hold their heads up and shoulders back, while standing, sitting or walking. The best beds for children are of hair, or in winter hair and cotton.

At proper times and in proper places, children should be indulged in the free use of their limbs and lungs. A play room is a useful appendage to a house.

After the second dentition is passed, young people may eat all kinds of wholesome food. Young children should drink only water. One pint of liquid to a person a day is sufficient for health; and that should neither be hot nor very cold, and should be taken at some interval after eating.

From one to one pound and a half of solid food is sufficient for a person in the ordinary vocation of business. Persons in sedentary employments should drop one third of their food, and they will escape dyspepsia.

Young persons should walk at least two hours a day in the open air.

Young ladies should be prevented from bandaging the chest. The author has known three cases of insanity, terminating in death, which began in this practice.

Every person, great and small, should wash all over in cold water every morning.

Reading aloud is conducive to health.

The more clothing we wear, other things being equal, the less food we need.

Sleeping rooms should be furnished with a fire place, or some other mode of ventilation beside the windows.

The proper temperature of sleeping rooms is from fifty-five to sixty degrees Fahrenheit.

The temperature of a room warmed by an open fire place, is sufficiently high for health and comfort at seventy degrees of Fahrenheit, but a room warmed by an air-tight stove needs to be at seventy-five degrees. Air tight stoves are not good for health, unless the room is plentifully supplied with cracks and crevices.

Young people and others cannot read and study much by lamp light with impunity.

The best remedy for eyes weakened by night use, is a fine stream of cold water frequently applied to them.

When eyes fail by age, the aid of spectacles should be called in, instead of being deferred as long as possible. [Dr. Warren.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN LANDLORD.

There is in New York a Society whose object it is to secure to every man a residence, under the conditions stated in the following article from the New York Organ. This Society has already been in existence for about one year, and it is in a very prosperous condition:—

The object is to enable subscribers to purchase their own residences, or rather freehold or leasehold property, to buy land for building purposes, to assist them to complete unfinished houses, or to erect others, with little or no outlay of their own capital, and to afford those members who do not wish to purchase property, a secure and profitable investment for their savings, which is done upon a principle of mutual assistance. The Society consists of shareholders, who subscribe $2 50 per month for each share, until, with principal and profits, they amount to $600 per share, which will be when the shareholder has paid in $280, or from that to $300. The practical working is as follows:—The association is to continue in existence until every unadvanced share becomes of the value of $600; to bring the share to this value, each shareholder pays in $2 50 per month for each share he may hold, and this payment, with the profits made by the association, will cause the shares to be worth $600 in ten years, perhaps in less; but, say ten years, and every shareholder who does not previously borrow money on his share, would then be entitled to receive $600.

The subscriptions, as they accumulate, say once in one, two, or three months, are advanced in large or small sums to those shareholders who may be desirous of purchasing freehold or leasehold property, upon condition of their submitting to a suitable discount from the ultimate value of their shares, $600, and paying a redemption fee of $1 per month on each share so advanced; and the property so purchased, or some other of sufficient value, is to be mortgaged to the Society as security for the payment of the subscriptions, &c., until the termination of the Society; which, from calculation and experience of similar societies, is found to be in about ten years.

These societies, we are informed, are very numerous in England, and prove very advantageous to the laboring classes. They are generally identified with the temperance movement, and it is proposed in the Society above alluded to, that no one shall be eligible for office unless he be a pledged teetotaller. Mr. Jessurum, who has been connected with a similar association in England, has kindly furnished us with the following interesting anecdote:—

"A journeyman shoemaker in London was for many years in the habit of treating himself and wife to a gill of gin, the cost of which is fourpence sterling, every morning, and an extra half gill on Sunday. They attended a temperance meeting, and were induced to sign the pledge. The next morning, on going to the cupboard, the good wife saw the favorite black bottle, and handing it to her husband inquired what she should do with it. His first impulse was to throw it out of the window, but on second consideration he determined to keep it for a better purpose. It had been his bane, and he resolved it should be his antidote. He resided in a house for which he paid, with the assistance of sub-tenants, a sum equal to $120 per annum. His landlord was willing to sell it for $1,050, but the shoemaker had not the means to purchase. He therefore joined the Temperance Building Society, which was then just organized, and by putting a silver fourpenny piece every morning, and sixpence every Sunday, in his black bottle, instead of its value in gin, he was enabled to pay his monthly dues of $2 50. He then applied to the Society for an advance; the directors being satisfied with the property, agreed to advance three shares, equal to $1050. The purchase was completed, and the property mortgaged to the Society to secure the payment of $2 50 per month per share for ten years. He therefore had to pay to the Society his subscription on three shares, $7 50 per month; redemption fee of $1 per share, $3. Total monthly payment, $10 50; or, in the year, $126. So, instead of paying $120 per annum to the landlord for rent, he pays the Society $126, a difference of $6 more, and the house in ten years becomes his own, showing that he purchased for $600 what cost $1050."

In his capacity as Assistant Treasurer of that Society, Mr. Jessurum says, the man used to bring him his black bottle every month, containing the amount of subscriptions, and any attempt to break it for the more speedy withdrawal of the deposites, would be earnestly opposed.

Bricks and Mortar versus Brandy and Water.

"Look on this picture,	And on this."
By means of a Benefit Building Association, a poor man may, for the payment of about 58 cents per week, or $2 50 per month, save his house-rent, and in about ten years become the owner of a house of his own—and by pursuing the easy course above specified be entitled to class himself among the free and independent owners of property in the UNITED STATES.	At a porter-house a poor man may, for the payment of 58 cts. per week, or $2 50 per month, obtain daily about two glasses of liquor,—by constant use of which he may fairly be expected to go through the usual course of degradation,—and instead of becoming the owner of a house, he may in ten years be the occupant of a cell in the STATE PRISON.

WASHINGTON CITY—TAXATION.

Unlike all the other towns in the country, Washington is exempt from taxation for State and county purposes.

Not only so, but a great part of the municipal expenses, which in other cities are paid by the inhabitants thereof, are in Washington defrayed by the General Government. Congress built the jail and the penitentiary. Congress pays the expenses of the courts, and the prisons. The judges are paid by Congress. The jurors are paid by Congress. The expenses of the coroner and of the marshall (who does here what is done by the sheriff in other places) are paid by Congress. The greater part of the cost of the engine houses and fire apparatus has been defrayed by Congress. Congress pays the city gaurd, which acts as a watch by night and a police by day. And Congress makes an annual appropriation for the relief of the sick, the poor, and the lunatic.

Congress puts the city government to no expense. The cost of grading and repairing the streets and making footpaths in front of the public grounds is paid out of the United States Treasury. Congress pays the expense of watching and lighting those grounds, and keeps the public promenades in good condition. And yet Congress aids the city in other ways. The City Hall itself is built on United States ground, and though but part of it is occupied by federal offices, Congress has lately appropriated thirty thousand dollars to put the whole in order. The market-houses, which yield an annual revenue, are built on ground granted by Congress. The bridge over the Potomac, and the two bridges over the Eastern Branch, have been purchased and made free of toll by Congress. These bridges are kept in repair by Congress; and Congress pays men night and day to tend the draw in the Long Bridge over the Potomac.

Congress supplied the means of completing the Washington City Canal. Congress relieved the Corporation of the greatest part, if not of the whole, of the debt it had incurred by its subscription to the stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal.

We are far from saying that Congress has done more than it ought to have done for Washington; but we believe but few of the inhabitants know how large a portion of municipal burdens is borne by the General Government. To wake them up on this snbject, we will give a list of appropriations made for local objects at the last session:—

For completing the City Hall,	$30,000
For cleaning out the Canal,	20,000
For completing centre strip of Pennsylvania avenue,	1,200
For sewer under Fifteenth street,	2,500
For survey of the Potomac river,	1,500
For insane poor,	6,400
For sick poor,	2,000
Por the penitentiary,	8,550
For inspectors of the penitentiary,	600
For salaries of the judges,	10,700
For the Auxiliary Guard,	6,775
	$89,525

This sum does not include the expenses of the Courts, amounting to, perhaps, $25,000 more. Neither does it include the cost of lighting Pennsylvania avenue, which, in the year ending June 30, 1848, amounted to $775; nor the compensation of the doorkeepers on the Potomac Bridge, which amounted in the same year to $4,290. These, added to the above, will make a total of $119,500, without counting what is expended on the public promenades and the streets adjoining the public grounds, and what Congress pays annually for interest on and reimbursement of so much of the city debt as it has assumed. All these are expenses which in other places would have to be borne by the inhabitants thereof. Here they are borne by Congress.

Compare these with the expenditures of the Corporation for the last year, as laid before the public in the late able report of the Mayor.

The Corporation paid, during the year ending June 30, 1849, the sum of 58,608 06, for interest on and reimbursement of the city debt. In addition thereto, its expenditures were as follows:—

For streets,	$19,589 68
For wells and pumps,	4,826 46
For salaries, including Ward commissioners,	14,685 63
For poor, sick, and lunatic	6,451 46
Other expenditures, (general fund)	9,782 11
For schools, about	8,133 00
	$63,468 34

Thus the expenditures of the Councils for the benefit of the city were but little more than half as much as the appropriations made this year by Congress for the same object. Under these circumstances, it might excite surprise that taxation in Washington should be so high as to be a subject of complaint. But as the author of "Lacon" says: "The follies of our youth are drafts on our riper years, payable thirty years after date, with interest;" and cities are, in this respect, like men. Many years ago a debt of about $200,000 was incurred in attempting to build a City Hall by means of lotteries, and more debt in making a canal alongside of a navigable river. In this way and in other ways a total of debt was incurred which would have made the city utterly bankrupt if Congress had not stepped forward to its relief. And though Congress has assumed a great part of this debt, nearly one half of the city revenue has to be devoted to paying the interest on and reimbursing the remainder.

Nat. Intelligencer.

A LOATHSOME PICTURE.

Mr Spear, of the Presbyterian Mission in Canton, thus writes:—

There is a large district of this city, west of the foreign factories, built entirely on high piles, or on boats, beneath which the tide ebbs and flows, known by the name of Shamin. It is exclusively occupied by females of infamous character, and their owners and attendants, for many of the poor creatures are slaves purchased in infancy from their parents or the foundling hospital. Last night it was necessary for me to pass through this place. Our boat glided over the dark waters which are often stained by the blood of infanticide; and we saw on each side tenements built in the most costly style, numberless thin green columns, carved in as many fashions, amidst which were lighted chandeliers and lamps of cut or scarlet-colored glass, masses of gilding, stained glass windows, painted mottos from popular books, baskets, and festoons of flowers. We saw tables covered with wine, and luxuries, or with cards, dominos, or dice; about which were crowds of females with rouged cheeks and stained eyebrows, and men generally in the garb of the better classes of society; all carousing, gambling, quarreling, or fanning themselves, and listening to ballad-singers, or the shrill noise of various kinds of pipes and lutes. A scene of fearful but splendid iniquity. We seem to float over another Dead Sea, amidst the streets of Sodom raised to its surface, and the crowd of those who vexed righteous Lot reanimated. How does the anger of God smoke against this place. He will "destroy them all." It is here, amidst these poor heathen and godless people, that we can perceive fully what is "the will of the gentiles, wherein they walk in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revelings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries; wherein they think it strange that we run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of us: who shall give account to Him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead."

GEORGE PEARSON.

This is the name of a young man belonging to Portland, Maine, who was one of the crew of the Charles Bartlett, and perished when that unfortunate vessel was run down at sea by the steamer Europa. The Zion's Advocate gives the following sketch of the lost youth:—

"His afflicted parents are worthy members of the Free-street church in this city, the Sabbath-school of which he attended for many years, and of the choir of which he was a member at the time of his going to sea. He was an amiable and upright young man, strongly attached to friends and home, and highly esteemed by all who knew him. But notwithstanding all this, a strange infatuation drove him forth to encounter the perils of the deep, and find a grave in its fathomless bosom. In vain did his parents kindly remonstrate, and his employers, Messrs. Smith & Robinson of this city, seek to retain him in their store by assurances of their confidence and a liberal offer of increased compensation. Nothing would satisfy him but making at least one voyage, with the intimation that he might then return and devote himself contentedly to the vocation for which he had been designed. But "man knoweth not his time: as the fishes are taken in an evil net, and as the birds are caught in the snare, so are the sons of men snared in an evil time when it falleth suddenly upon them."

"The sudden death of this youth, under circumstances so painful, should remind others, especially young sailors, of the importance of seeking the Lord, and preparing themselves by a life of faith for the same fearful contingencies. It should operate also to make parents, pastors, and Sabbath-school teachers faithful in their efforts for the conversion of those who may be unexpectedly removed from under their influence, and without a moment's warning be called into eternity. To all it adresses the exhortation, 'What thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.'

Just Like the World.—The following instance of the instability of human affairs is extracted from the French papers. It ought to make men forbearing while doing duty in this nether world.

A Prefect of one of the French departments mentioned to a friend some days since, that about twelve months ago he received the following dispatch:—

Monsieur Le Prefect,—Arrest by all possible means the citizen Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, should he present himself in your department.

(Signed) Ledru Rollin.'

A year later the same Prefect received another dispatch in the following terms:—

'Arrest by all possible means the citizen Ledru Rollin, if he present himself in your department.

(Signed) Dufaure,
Minister of Louis Napoleon.'

Mohammedan Youth.—The children of Moslems are early taught to reverence their parents. After a certain age, the child salutes the father upon entering the room by kissing the hand, and he remains standing until he has permission to sit or depart.

They are taught from infancy to cherish a tender affection for the mother, and this feature of their character they retain through life. The father commences instructing his son, as soon as he is of sufficient age, in the religion of the Prophet, teaching him the Kalimah or profession of faith and prayers. He instructs him how to take his food, in what manner he is to dress, and how he is to demean himself in the presence of others. He is taught never to speak ill of any one, nor to say much, never to turn his back upon another, nor to eat much, nor never to spit in any assembly.

Burning Water instead of Lamp Oil.—The New York Sun has a letter from Worcester, Mass., in which the writer claims to have invented and put in use an apparatus which separates the oxygen and hydrogen of which water is composed, and produces gases for lights. This it does at no other expense than that of the use of the machinery, as no material but water is used. The water is decomposed by a current of electricity, evolved by the apparatus. The labor of five minutes once in two hours during the day, in winding up the machine, is all that is required to produce 250 cubic feet of gas. The expense of the machine is $300, and it can be carried by a man under his arm. Such is the description of it. Time will determine whether it is even so.

Reclaiming Clay Land.—An English agricultural writer says that the tillage system practiced by scientific men in England is doubtless an immense improvement on the system in vogue some years ago—"but of all the discoveries of the present day, the conversion of stiff stubborn clays into a friable mould, through the means of thorough draining, double trenching, or subsoiling, is by far the greatest. And if we consider fully the great importance of it, the enormous benefit it has conferred on landed proprietors, the great change it has effected on the face of the country, and the complete revolution it has made in the whole farming practice, we cannot be too thankful to Mr. Smith, of Deanston, the author of it."

Nankin Cloth.—Most, if not all, the Nankin now sold in our markets, is of American fabric. It is manufactured from Nankin cotton, grown in Georgia, and is spun and woven at the Lonsdale Mills, in Rhode Island. The culture of Nankin cotton was introduced to this country by the late John Forsyth, formerly minister of Spain, afterwards Secretary of State, under the administration of General Jackson and Martin Van Buren. It is now grown in large quantities by many of the planters of Georgia, and commands a ready sale at high prices. Mr. Forsyth procured the seed from the American Consvl at Canton, and at the outset the project of growing it in this country was deemed wild and chimerical. It is of a darker hue than the China article, and not as handsome.

Destroying the Canada Thistle.—The editor of the Boston Cultivator gives the following method of destroying this pest. He says:—

"We once had two acres of meadow fully stocked with the Canada thistle, which we destroyed root and branch, by a single dressing of salt, cutting them, with a knife, a little below the surface of the ground, and filling the hole with, say, a large spoonful of salt, taking care that the operation was performed before they came into flower, and while their juices were in full flow—a tedious process, bet very effectual—the grass, we presume, deriving as much benefit from the application as would pay the expenses attending it."

Gas for Streets from a New Substance.—Two French chemists, in Paris, Messrs. Livenais and Berhardt, have ascertained that the decomposition of grape skins after the last pressing and the lees of wine, disengenders a carbonited hydrogen gas of a superior quality. A pound of dried grape-skins, placed in a white-hot retort, furnished in less than seven minutes, 350 quarts of excellent carbonited gas. The gas burns with a brilliant white flame, is without odor, and emits little smoke, and rosin. An experiment with the dried dregs of wine was equally satisfactory.

VARIETY.

Sir Richard Arkwright was the inventor of machinery, by which our cotton manufactures have been increased to an almost incredible extent. His first employment was that of a barber, and he had to encounter inummerable obstacles, owing to his poverty and want of mechanical skill to reduce his inventions to practice. Still he persevered till he succeeded, and not only realized a large property for himself, but has been the means of rendering the most important services to his country and to the world.

Hayden the noted musician, was the son of a poor wheelwright, who, having a taste for music, played the harp amongst his children on Sunday evenings, his mother accompanying with her voice. When but eight years old he became a Christian, and at ten composed several pieces. To us, he is best known by a noble oratorio, called the "Creation," which he is said to have composed after a season of solemn prayer for Divine assistance.

Mr. Hector Giljam proposes to introduce madder into the States of Virginia and North Carolina, the maratime counties of which he conceives to be admirably adapted for its production. The root of the madder plant, as is well known, is extensively used as a dye-stuff, and is an important article of commerce for which the United States are entirely dependent on foreign countries.

Moses R. Moriarty, of West Hoboken, an enterprising farmer of N. J., has entered his field of potatoes for the first premium of the American Institute. The potatoes, are from seedlings of Mercers, of the second year's growth; are of superior quality, oval in shape, white with a dash of red at the ends; estimates the crop at more than 600 bushels to the acre.

Messrs. Starks & Pruyn of Albany are now building five iron bridges for the New York and Erie Railroad. They combine the essential characteristics of lightness and strength in a remarkable degree. They range from twenty-five to forty feet, and are six feet in width of span. The smallest weighs about 2000 pounds, and the largest only 3000 pounds, and will sustain a weight of from 60 to 100 tons.

Rooms in which, from any cause, there arises an unpleasant ordor, may be freed of the obnoxious effluvia, by placing a few kernels of coffee on a hot shovel, and allowing the aroma, or smoke, to be freely disseminated. It will dispel, effectually, the most powerful odor arising from putrid animal or vegetable matter. It has been much used, and with excellent success, in localities infected by cholera, the past season.

Whites of eggs and lime, (unslacked,) well beaten together, constitute a valuable and durable cement for earthen ware. A soft, ductile putty, made of common white lead and linseed oil, is also valuable for the same purpose. For China ware, powdered glass and whites of eggs make a tenacious and durable cement. Iron rust and clay, ground in common oil, make a cement that hardens under water.

During a recent thunder storm, the lightning was conducted by the wires into the telegraph office at Glasgow, Ky., and melted and destroyed all the instruments in the office, together with the battery. The electricity also melted the wire leading to the ground in its passage to the earth. The same stroke killed a negro man and a horse, a few yards from the office.

In the ranks of the Hungarian army, fighting for their liberty, is a Jewish Officer of high merit, M. Daneberg, who has served under the Americans in the Mexican war, but no sooner did he hear of the struggle against oppression in his native country (Hungary) than he proceeded from New York to Bremen and thence to the scene of war.

A writer in Europe, in some remarks on the importance of tree planting, adduces the following fact: "A gentleman on the birth of every daughter, planted 1000 trees, which, at the age of twenty-one years were sold for one pound each, and formed her marriage portion; the thinnings during the time paying all expenses, and affording a rent for his land."

DeRuyter Institute.

The Academic Year of this Institution for 1849-50, will commence the last Wednesday in August, and continue forty-three consecutive weeks, ending the last Wednesday of June, including a recess of ten days for Christmas and New Year holidays. The Year will be divided into three Terms:

The First, commencing August 29, of 14 weeks.
The Second, " December 5, of 15 "
The Third, " March 20, of 14 "

Encouraged by the success of the School under its present Instructors, the friends of the Institute have made liberal additions to its library, cabinet, and apparatus, thus furnishing ample facilities for illustrating branches taught in the various departments.

The Literary Department is as heretofore under the supervision of Rev. JAMES R. IRISH, A. M., President, assisted by other able instructors. In this Department, especial attention is given to the lower English Branches. Students are also fitted in the Classics to enter the advanced classes in College.

The Department of Natural Science is conducted by Professor GURDON EVANS. In this, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geology, Natural History, and Chemistry, are taught in a manner of unsurpassed interest. With it is connected the Department of Agricultural Science.

The Farmer's Course is thoroughly scientific; embracing the study of the best authors, with daily recitations. During the Winter Term two hours each day will be spent in the Analytical Laboratory, where students will be instructed in the constitution of soils and ashes of plants, with a minute examination of their constituent elements, and the various modes of testing for their presence.

A course of lectures is given during the Term on Practical Farming, explaining the relation of Geology to Agriculture, the Soil, the Plant, and the Animal, and their various relations, the Rotation of Crops, Feeding Animals, Manures, Draining Lands, &c., &c. For further information see Catalogue.

Besides Globes, Maps, &c., for the illustration of Astronomy, a Newtonian Telescope of high magnifying power has recently been added to the apparatus.

During the Summer Term, Botany and Geology receive special attention, illustrated by excursions to localities where these sciences may be studied as seen in nature. A Geological and Mineralogical Cabinet is accessible to the students.

The Mathematical Department is under the instruction of OLIVER B. IRISH, Tutor. It embraces thorough instruction in Arithmetic, and the higher pure and practical Mathematics, with field exercises in Engineering and Surveying.

Elocution, embracing Reading, Declamation, General Oratory, and Writing, receives the special attention of a competent teacher.

The Teacher's Department will, as formerly, be in operation during the Fall Term, and last half of the Winter Term. Particular attention to this is solicited from all who intend to teach district schools.

The Female Department is under the care of Miss SUSANNA M. COON, a graduate of Troy Female Seminary, a lady every way competent for this responsible station.

No efforts will be spared to render the young ladies of this Seminary truly accomplished, as well in the social relations of life, as in the substantial branches of learning and the higher refinements of education. Ample facilities are furnished for pursuing French, Italian, German, Drawing, Painting, Music on the Piano, and Vocal Music.

Information.

Good board in private families from $1 25 to $1 50. Parents from abroad should furnish their children with very little pocket money, as many temptations may thus be avoided. Those who wish may deposit money with either of the teachers, to be disbursed according to order, without extra charge.

Tuition, to be settled in advance, per term, from $3 00 to $5 00. Extras—For Drawing, $1 00; Monochromatic Painting, $3 00; Oil Painting, $5 00; Chemical Experiments, $1 00; Writing, including Stationery, 50c.; Tuition on Piano, $8 00; Use of Instrument, $2 00; in Agricultural Chemistry, including Chemicals, Apparatus, fires, &c., (breakage extra,) $12 00.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango for this place at 4 o'clock P. M.

For further information address the President, J. R. Irish, or Professor Gurdon Evans, DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y.

Life and Health Insurance.

THE EAGLE LIFE AND HEALTH INSURANCE COMPANY, Office 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Cash Capital, all paid in, $100,000, besides a surplus of $30,000.

The charter makes the Directors personally responsible if the capital is impaired by returning any portion of it in dividends. The insured incur no responsibility beyond the payment of the premium; nor any liability to have the sum insured reduced, or to make farther contributions in case of mortality beyond the estimate. Losses are payable sixty days after proof of death, or immediately, on allowing the discount. No risk is taken on any life for a greater amount than five thousand dollars, and no insurances are made on fire or marine risks. Persons insured with this Company may participate in the profits, in which case sixty per cent. is carried to the credit of the insured, and added to the policy, and becomes payable, in addition to the sum insured, at death. Without participation, a very material reduction in the rates. The insured may dispose of their policies to the Company on fair and equitable terms, or loans will be made upon them according to their value. Tables are framed for insurances in different forms, so as to meet the circumstances of all persons, whether a policy is desired to provide for their families, or as security for moneys borrowed. The rates for insurance in any form are as low as those of any responsible Company in this country or in England, and as low undoubtedly as is consistent with safety to the insured and the stability of the Company. In point of security, liberality in terms and conditions, lowness of rates, and equity of principles upon which the business is conducted, this institution will compare favorably with any in existence. To the confidence inspired by the providence which has governed its management hitherto, and to the public advantage found in the practice of Life Insurance, the Directors look for a continuance of that patronage which has so far been liberally extended.

GEORGE W. SAVAGE, President.
Richard H. Bull, Secretary and Actuary.

Any information will be given to persons residing abroad, who may wish to effect an insurance on their lives, by addressing (post-paid) E. G. Champlin, 206 Fulton-street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

E. G. CHAMPLIN,
General Agent.

Local Agents for the Recorder.

NEW YORK.
Adams—Charles Potter.
Alfred—Maxson Green,
" Charles D. Langworthy,
" Hiram P. Burdick.
Berlin—John Whitford.
Brookfield—Andrew Babcock.
Clarence—Samuel Hunt.
DeRuyter—B. G. Stillman.
Durhamville—John Parmalee.
Edmeston—Ephraim Maxson.
Friendship—R. W. Utter.
Genesee—W. P. Langworthy.
Hounsfield—Wm. Green.
Independence—J. P. Livermore.
Leonardsville—W. B. Maxson.
Lincklaen—Daniel C. Burdick.
Lockport—Leman Andrus.
Newport—Abel Stillman.
Petersburg—Geo. Crandall,
" James Summerbell.
Portville—Albert B. Crandall.
Persia—Elbridge Eddy.
Pitcairn—Geo. P. Burdick.
Preston—David P. Curtis.
Richburgh—John B. Cottrell.
Rodman—Nathan Gilbert.
Scio—Rowse Babcock.
Scott—Luke P. Babcock.
Unadilla Forks—Wm. Utter.
Verona—Christopher Chester.
Watson—Wm. Quibell.
CONNECTICUT.
Mystic Bridge—Geo. Greenman.
New London—P. L. Berry.
Waterford—Wm. Maxson.

RHODE ISLAND.
Pawcatuck—H. W. Stillman.
1st Hopkinton—Daniel Coon.
2d Hopkinton—S. S. Griswold.
3d Hopkinton—C. M. Lewis.
Lippitt—Thomas R. Green.
Providence—Charles Saunders.
Jamestown—Thos. M. Clark.
NEW JERSEY.
New Market—W. B. Gillett.
Plainfield—Lucius Crandall.
Shiloh—Isaac D. Titsworth.
Marlborough—David Clawson.
PENNSYLVANIA.
Crossingville—Benj. Stelle.
Coudersport—W. H. Hydorn.
VIRGINIA.
Lost Creek—Eli Vanhorn.
N. Salem—Jona. F. Randolph.
N. Milton—Jeptha F. Randolph.
OHIO.
Bloomfield—Charles Clark.
Northampton—S. F. Babcock.
Pratt—Eli Forsythe.
MICHIGAN.
Tallmadge—Bethuel Church.
WISCONSIN.
Albion—P. C. Burdick.
Milton—Joseph Goodrich.
" Stillman Coon.
Walworth—Wm. M. Clarke.
Whitewater—C. A. Osgood.
Dartford—Datus E. Lewis.
ILLINOIS.
Farmington—Samuel Davison.

The Sabbath Recorder,
PUBLISHED WEEKLY
By the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society,
AT NO. 9 SPRUCE-ST., NEW YORK.
Terms:
$2 00 per year, payable in advance. $2 50 per year will be charged when payment is delayed till the close of the year.
☞ Payments received will be acknowledged in the paper so as to indicate the times to which they reach.
☞ No paper discontinued until arrearages are paid except at the discretion of the publisher.
☞ Communications, orders, and remittances, should be directed, post paid, to
George B. Utter, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EDITED BY GEO. B. UTTER AND THOMAS B. BROWN. "THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD." TERMS—$2.00 PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

VOL. VI.—NO. 14. NEW YORK, FIFTH-DAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1849. WHOLE NO. 274.

The Sabbath Recorder.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION.

The following communication from Bro. Wardner, dated Shanghai, May 10, 1849, and received at the same time with sister Carpenter's letter, which we published last week, will be read with the deepest interest. It is addressed to the Board; and, as will be seen, refers to communications of a previous date, forwarded by ship, which have not yet come to hand. They will probably be received within a month.

Dear Brethren,—We improve this opportunity, supposing you might wish to hear from us again before our next anniversary. Our last letters to you bore the date of March 15, in which we informed you of the opening of our chapel, and the prospects then before us.

DELIVERING A SOUL FROM PURGATORY.

On the evening of December 28th, agreeably to a previous invitation, we all went to witness a Taouist performance for delivering a soul from purgatory, held at the house of Bro. Carpenter's former teacher, though not got up by him. When we arrived, burning incense and candles were placed on a table in the open court, surrounded by a band of musicians singing and playing on instruments of various kinds, which, they said, was for the purpose of calling down the gods, and of securing their attention. During this time a man was at work in an adjoining room, drawing out a representation of purgatory on the floor, by pouring down rice, and adjusting it according to his fancy. In the door-way of this prison-house stood a descendant of its king, whose image was pasted on the wall over it, having six arms indicative of his power. Several lamps and vases of burning incense, were next stationed in different parts, and in the centre stood a paper image, with a scroll in its hand, said to contain the history of the affair, with some touching appeals to the gods in reference to the sufferer.

When all was ready, the music ceased, and six priests presented themselves, arrayed in scarlet robes, richly ornamented, and commenced singing and marching around it [the image,] halting at each corner, to allow the head priest, in company with a little child, said to be a descendant of this king, to prostrate themselves before the image. After a few circuits, he knelt on a cushion in front of it, and read, in a very mournful tone, his instructions in regard to the very important mission in which he was about to embark, bowing his head to the ground in the deepest apparent humility; after which this image was burnt in the open court, and thus sent off on his embassy. This part was performed with such an air of solemnity, as could hardly fail to awaken feelings of sympathy and awe in the minds of those who believed in such things. For my own part, I found it difficult to suppress my emotions, when I reflected that the enemy of souls had such power to charm men into error, and that millions on millions of these our brethren would never be able to break this spell, till decoyed into that awful prison from which they thus in vain sought deliverance.

After this image was burnt, and about the time they supposed he was makieg intercession, strips of paper, cut into various ornamuntal shapes, were burnt over the door, the head priest with his staff made certain motions in the rising smoke to assist in opening the door for his escape; after which the representation was removed. Then, supposing him to have obtained his liberty, the priests laid aside their robes, and again came forward with servers loaded with flowers and small rolls of cotton-wool, which they threw into the ring as they marched around and sang, as tokens of their pleasure in view of his fortunate escape. After this, six flower-stems were brought in, having three branches, each bearing large flowers, with burning candles for their pistils. And after a few circuits, each one took a stem, and performed a figure similar to one of the most difficult performed in our American ball-rooms; with which the performance ended.

TERROR OF AN ECLIPSE.

An eclipse of the sun occurred on the 23d of February, which produced considerable excitement. Cannons were fired and gongs were rung, and all the officers of the city (as I was informed,) according to the Emperor's edict, came out into the open streets to worship it, thinking thereby to appease the wrath of the gods, and escape the portending judgment. My teacher says that the custom originated several centuries ago, when an eclipse occurred which they regarded as a token of divine indignation against the wickedness of the emperor then reigning.

Such is the darkness of heathenism. But we have the cheering promise that God will be exalted among the heathen, and that his word shall not return to him void. Upon these and kindred promises our hopes are based. Never before was I so sensible of the utter insufficiency of human power to change the hearts of men. Our Saviour has not died in vain, neither has he sent forth his disciples to minister in vain. Therefore we look to Him, hoping that He may guide the arrows to the joints of the harness, and thus bring prostrate at his feet many a haughty rebel. Even our short experience has not been without beholding some dawnings of a better day. Occasionally a gleam of light darts through the overhanging gloom, awakening the belief that that the Sun of righteousness is approaching to dispel the horrid darkness that rests upon this people.

ENCOURAGING TOKENS.

Our excercises in the chapel are continued twice each week, as we commenced, our congregations averaging perhaps thirty-five or forty. In this branch of our labor, we have, as yet, discovered nothing of special encouragement, except that a few attend regularly, and there seems to be a marked improvement in their behavior during the time of worship. The prospects, however, are full as flattering as could reasonably be expected; since they have nothing but our stammering communications to interest them. But we have encouragement from other sources of rather an exhilierating character. My cook, Che-qua, (a man about thirty years of age, and rather above the ordinary rank,) has been with us nearly one year. From his first coming I have been in the habit of reading the scriptures and conversing with him daily. His interest in hearing and investigating the subject has seemed to be regularly increasing, and, to all appearance, the truth has been gradually working a change in his character. For several months he has professedly renounced idolatry, with the exception of an ancestral worship, which he seemed to regard as necessary to the fulfillment of the fifth commandment. After some explanation he seemed to understand the difference between making his ancestors objects of worship and of dutiful respect, and said he should practice it no more. His ideas seemed to be tolerably correct in regard to the fundamental truths of Christianity, and on being questioned, he said he was in the habit of praying in secret daily. Last Sabbath morning I called him into a retired room, and read with him a short exposition of our Saviour's mission to earth, his sufferings, death, and resurrection, and his intercession for us, and his second coming to judge the world. After a little conversation I asked him if he truly desired to be Christ's disciple, and, for his sake, were willing to come out and face the scorn and opposition of his countrymen; to which he replied in the affirmative. I then proposed to him to join me in prayer; to which he expressed himself willing, only that he did not know what form would be most proper to use. I told him that the true God took cognizance of the heart; and all that was necessary was to ask for that which he most sincerely desired. We then knelt, when he offered up the following simple prayer:—"Heavenly true God! I have been a sinner; but now I rely upon Jesus, and desire thee to forgive my sins, and at last save my soul in heaven's temple. This is my heart's desire." Bro. Carpenter's cook took the same stand, of which he will probably inform you.

The next morning, Che-qua being absent when my teacher came, I resolved to put the question also to him, as he had before given good evidence that he was a true believer, so far as we could judge from words and expressions of feeling which we had many times witnessed. He had also told me that since the death of Bro. Carpenter's teacher he had prayed daily. I pointed out for him to read a portion of the 9th chapter of Luke, containing the words: "He that is ashamed of me and of my words, of him will the son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels." After some conversation I asked him if he were willing to announce himself as a disciple of Christ before the world. He replied rather in the defensive, as though it might have the appearance of pride, should he take pains to declare it. Besides, he doubted whether he could be as successful in influencing people to believe the doctrine, as it would have the effect to awaken their prejudice, and also expose him to trials which, he feared, he had not strength at present to endure. He compared his faith to a tender shoot just springing out of the earth, which needed time to grow and become strongly rooted before it encountered such storms. But the sequel exposed the thing that seemed to weigh most heavily upon his mind, viz. that were he to come out, he should have to preach in the chapel, "and that," said he, "I cannot do." I endeavored, as well as I could, to represent to him the great love of the Saviour, and the want of gratitude we exhibit when we are unwilling to acknowledge ourselves to be his friends. By our sinful practices we had formerly declared ourselves before the world to be the friends and servants of Satan; and why should we now be ashamed to own Christ? And as to the strength of his faith, if he relied upon himself he would certainly fall. But God was all-powerful, and would sustain him if he confided in Him; and all the results that might follow from obeying His word were in the hands of God, who had marked out our path for us, in which if we did not walk we could not be His true disciples. The injunction was to come out and let our light shine before the world; and if he ever expected to reach heaven, he must be willing to do whatever God requires. If not, it was proof that he loved self-gratification more than he loved his Maker. If it were his duty to preach, he ought to be willing to do it; if not, no one wished him to do it. There were other spheres in which Christians could be useful. After a little pause, he asked if I doubted the sincerity of his belief, I replied, that I doubted not that he believed to a certain extent; but that all true believers were expected to give some substantial proof of what they professed. Christ had set us an example, and if we were His followers we should imitate Him. After enumerating a few practical duties, I made to him the proposition before mentioned, to which he assented, and addressed the throne of grace, in substance, as follows: "My Father in heaven, I acknowledge in thy presence that I have sinned, and violated thy law; but I desire that Thou wilt grant thy Holy Spirit, to help me know myself, and forsake my sins, trusting in Christ for pardon; and finally wilt Thou save my soul in heaven. Such is my heart's desire."

That evening Che-qua came to my room, as usual, but accompanied with his heathen brother, who had come to spend the night with him; and, without being requested, succeeded me in prayer, thus voluntarily announcing himself, in the presence of his brother, as a disciple of Jesus. He now joins me in family worship every evening, and the teacher takes turns in our morning devotions.

You can better imagine the nature of our feelings at beholding such a sight, than I can describe them. What I have already seen, is an abundant reward for all the pangs of parting with friends and native country, or the dangers experienced upon the mighty deep. The privilege of hearing poor heathen pray! It seems as though it were too much to enjoy. I can hardly feel that it is a reality. If there is as much more joy in heaven, in proportion to the strength of mind, than may be felt on earth, when a sinner repents, who would esteem the sacrifice of this world, and all its treasures, as too dear a price to pay, even for one hour. But no, it is an eternity of ever growing delight. 'O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out.' We shall wait with anxious solicitude to see what the future will reveal in regard to these men. The devil may win them back again, and make them sevenfold more the children of hell than before. Yet we will hope for a different result, relying upon the power and mercy of God, who, we know, will overrule all things for His own glory.

We are occasionally visited by individuals who come to inquire about the doctrine, and read our books. The other evening a poor cripple called on me, having previously sent word that he wished to come. He said he had heard the gospel preached twice, and was satisfied of its superiority over the religion of his countrymen. He was convinced that the worshiping of idols and ancestors was foolish and vain, and he had renounced the practice. He said he knew he could not live long, and that he realized the importance of being prepared for death. We spent, perhaps, an hour in conversation, when Bro. C. led in prayer; after which he retired, promising to repeat his visit. The next evening he came again, accompanied by his brother, and seemed to manifest an unusual degree of interest, compared with what we generally see. We can but indulge some hope, that the Spirit of the Lord may be operating on his heart; although we have great reason to fear that selfishness, in some form or other, may be at the root of many of these pretensions, and therefore cannot rely upon them with much confidence, except when attended with circumstances which give substantial evidence of their sincerity. But whether their motives are pure or not, the Lord is able to give power to truth, and make it efficient in transforming the heart. We occasionally make short excursions among the neighboring villages, and proclaim the gospel to those who are inclined to hear. But in this promiscuous preaching we labor at a great disadvantage in consequence of the darkness of their minds, which requires repeated and continued efforts to give them any very correct notions of the doctrine, so as to be of much benefit to them. But this would be a difficult matter, without having such things at our command as would enable us to conduct regular services. Moreover, by reason of our stammering tongues, they need to become acquainted with our voices and modes of expression, before they can readily comprehend our meaning on a subject so entirely new and strange to them. Had we two or three stations a little removed from each other, we might occupy them every week, to as good advantage, perhaps, as the one we already have, and thus be cultivating certain definite fields. By these means, we could perform three times the amount of preaching we otherwise could, at least until we had so mastered the language as to need but little previous preparation to express our ideas with clearness. But this would require some means, and therefore we can only submit the question for your consideration in reference to some future period.

MRS. WARDNER'S SCHOOL.

Mrs. Wardner's school, concerning which I made mention in my last, also forms a very pleasant little audience, to whom we can from time to time relate the story of the cross, and portray the love of Jesus. And we have the satisfaction of knowing, by their inquiries, that they are not without thought in regard to what they have learned. The effort, thus far, has been attended with more encouragment than we had anticipated. Instead of being merely a Sabbath-school, it has nearly resolved itself into a day-school. Some two dozen have committed a hymn, with quite a variety of questions and answers on scripture subjects. Seventeen have committed the Decalogue, nearly all of whom are now committing portions of Matthew's gospel. It is rather laborious preparing rewards for them, as fast as their apportioned tasks are performed, as we have but a small variety of Chinese books to give, and for these we have been dependent upon our missionary brethren. Besides, among those received there are but few which we can conscientiously put into the hands of the Chinese without first bestowing some labor upon them in erasing and supplying, where terms and sentiments are introduced that are calculated to mislead. And most of them are too full to be worth the trouble of correcting, so that she has to supply the deficiency by drawings of pictures and maps. The amount of labor required to supply even this little class, for two or three weeks, with these books, would prepare an original one, had we the means to get it printed.

NECESSITY OF TRACTS.

Our meetings would probably be better attended, had we a few tracts (like others) to distribute among our hearers. Besides, publications of the stamp above referred to, are circulated broad-cast, and within our immediate neighborhood, thus turning the whole current of public opinion in their favor. And we are obliged to look on and see it, without being able to do anything (comparatively speaking) to counteract their influence. It is sometimes with difficulty that we can avoid feeling that we are made use of as a cat's paw, to circulate doctrines diametrically opposed to our avowed sentiments. Not long since, a tract was strongly recommended to me, with a kind offer of a quantity to distribute. It was said to contain nothing of a sectarian character, nothing that could be objected to by any Protestant. The tracts were sent; but preferring to trust my own eyes rather than another man's, I read it through, and in a summing up of certain duties essential to the Christian character, I found towards the close, a phrase thrown in enjoining the obligation to keep the "le-pai" (Sunday.) What the prompting motive was in this matter, I am unable to say. But the most favorable construction I can put upon it is, that he had forgotton that he wrote such a sentence. From the above you can form some idea of the awkwardness of our position. But we are dependent upon our brethren at home, and can only appeal to them to say how long this state of things shall continue. Our hearts and hands are ready to use, to the best of our ability, whatever they may see fit to provide.

Yours truly, N. WARDNER.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

FOUR SHORT ARGUMENTS.

A deal of argument has been expended on the question—Is slavery a sin? Whoever will read carefully the following contrasted passages from the revealed Law of God and the statute-books of slave States, must find it hard to deny that American Slavery is opposed to the Bible, and therefore is sinful per se. Few people are better than their laws.

I.

Bible Law—"Search the Scriptures."

Slave Law—"Any man who shall teach a slave to read or write, shall be fined not less than $250, nor more than $500."—Laws of Alabama, Aiken's Digest, p. 397.

II.

Bible Law—"They twain shall be one flesh." "Honor thy father and thy mother."

Slave Law—"The master may separate violently the husband from the wife, and the child from the parent, and 'dispose of their persons by sale' to any purchaser he may select."—See Civil Code of Louisiana, Art. 35.

III.

Bible Law—"Be kindly affectionate one to another." "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Slave Law—"It is lawful to fire upon a fugitive slave who refuses to surrender."—Code of Louisiana, p. 109.

"The owner of any plantation on which a slave comes without written leave from his master, may inflict ten lashes for such offense."—Code of Mississippi, p. 173.

"Any free person of color (except seamen) who shall come into the State, shall be fined $100, and on failure of payment shall be sold as a slave."—Laws of Georgia,—Act of Dec. 29th, 1818.

"For beating a slave with a horsewhip, cowskin or small whip, or putting irons on and imprisoning a slave, there shall be no penalty."—See Brevard's Digest of Laws of South Carolina, p. 241.

IV.

Bible Law—"God created man in his own image." To Christian men it is said—"Ye are the temples of the Holy Ghost."

Slave Law—"Slaves shall be deemed, taken, reputed and adjudged in the law to be chattels personal in the hands of their owners to all intents and purposes whatsoever."—Laws of South Carolina, vol. II. p. 229.

We will not multiply illustrations. These will suffice to establish the case. Robert Halt's rule is a good one, that in matters of casuistry the first answer of conscience is the best—but we fancy that some sophistry will be needful to evade the natural conclusion to which these four short arguments will give rise. BRAINARD.

God never accepts the will for the deed when he puts it in a man's power to do as well as will.

MY THREE TREASURES.

BY MRS. E. C. JUDSON.

I have a steed—a bounding steed,
With a form as lithe as a bending reed,
And limb's like the petrel's wing;
With his airy form, and step of grace,
His eye of love and his beaming face—
O, he is a beautiful thing!

I have a lamb—a household pet;
Like the blue of June when the sun has set
Is his soft and dreamy eye;
He frolics and gambols the live-long day,
Then turns, and, lisping, asks the way
To the Shepherd's fold on high.

I have a bird—life's dawning light,
All quivering, beautiful and bright,
Upon her radiant wing;
Sweet as the chime of silver bells,
Or voices of spring in their woodland dells,
Do her broken carols ring.

Rare, rare the gems in my love-crown set;
But sin has a poison to canker and fret,
And its stain even now they wear.
With a trembling heart and a bended knee,
I bear them, Son of God, to thee,
O, heed a mother's prayer!

DR. BALDWIN'S CONVERSION.

It is always interesting to trace the work of the Spirit in the regeneration of the human soul. The following sketch of the conversion of that eminent man of God, Dr. Baldwin, for so many years a beloved and successful minister in Boston, is taken from his diary:—

"In the month of September, God in his holy providence sent two Baptist preachers into the town. They preached several lectures, and spent one Lord's day in the neighborhood. One evening there was to be a conference at a private house. I attended. The meeting was opened by prayer; after which two persons came forward and told what God had done for their souls. One of them, a sensible and well informed man, gave a striking account of his conversion to God. Almost the whole assembly was in tears. I felt very tenderly, but in a great measure refrained from weeping. Soon, however, after this moving, a scene commenced. A very pious man came, and, falling down on his knees before me, addressed me as follows: 'Neighbor Baldwin, can you forgive me, can you forgive me, that I have lived so little like a Christian, and that I have set no better example before you?' I trembled like Felix, and replied, 'I have nothing against you more than I have against my own soul.' In spite of every effort, I trembled and wept, and changed my seat to avoid ob ervation. My extreme agitation, however, soon discovered itself. Several persons spoke to me; many rejoiced; and many were affected, seeing that my mind was impressed. When asked to state my feelings, I could only say with Agur, 'I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man.' I thought I earnestly desired conversion; how to attain it, how to obtain an interest in Christ, I did not know. I at first apprehended I should in some way have a discovery of Christ on the cross, and that this would give me comfort. Again I thought I was now so distressed, that God would soon give me relief. I cried, but alas! all seemed in vain.

"I cannot say, as many have, that I strove to shake off my convictions; on the contrary, my great anxiety was to increase them; for this was the way in which I was looking for deliverence. My distress continuing day and night, I began to hope that God had begun the work and that he would carry it on. At times I experienced great tenderness, and often both in public and private wept bitterly. My distress did not arise so much from the fear of punishment, as from a sense of having abused divine goodness and mercy! All my hopes from any thing in myself seemed to vanish. Often would I say, 'What shall I do to be saved? How can I come to Christ? O that some man would guide me!' Thus I went mourning from day to day as without the light of the sun.

"After spending an anxious and almost sleepless night, I arose just after the dawning of the day, and resolved once more to pray. I said with Jonah, 'I will look again towards his holy temple.' I knelt down, and in a few broken sentences, tried to send my cries to the mercy seat. I felt convinced that I had done nothing to merit the divine favor, nor could I do any thing, though I were eternally to perish. This thought I confessed to the Lord; and as my last refuge, endeavored to cast myself upon the mercy of God. During this day I felt less anxiety than I had done for many days before. Sometimes I hoped I had given myself to God, and sometimes I feared that my convictions were wearing off, and that I should return again unto folly.

"Just in the twilight of the same day, I had occasion to walk to a neighbor's house, about a quarter of a mile distant. As I walked a new train of thought occupied my mind. How happy, thought I, are the angels! They are happy because they are holy, and have never sinned. How unhappy I am on account of sin! I felt myself a dreadful sinner, and could see no way by which I could be made holy. At the same time I was convinced, that unless I was made holy, I could never be made happy. Immediately, as I walked, this passage of Scripture came powerfully into my mind, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' A gleam of hope seemed to come from these words But I thought they were only words which I had read, and were now suggested to my imagination. They seemed to be repeated the second time, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' The effect was overwhelming. In an instant the great plan of mercy, through the atonement of Christ, was astonishingly opened to my view. He appeared to be just such a Saviour as I needed. I saw that by his atonement he had (so far as an atonement could do it) 'taken away the sins of the world.' What, said I to myself, is it only to believe in Jesus Christ in order to be saved? It appeared almost too free and too glorious. It seemed impossible that it should be true. My mind now became calm, but not transported. A short time afterwards being asked at a conference meeting to relate my religious feelings, I complied; and though honestly, yet with much fear and trembling, I proceeded to state what I had experienced. Christians rejoiced, and anxious sinners wept. I was called upon in the course of the evening to pray. I attempted, and was blessed with some degree of freedom."

TEMPERANCE ANECDOTE—CHRISTMAS EVANS.

Christmas, towards the end of his days, became a total-abstainer. A brother minister, who condemned not himself in the thing which he allowed, could not be brought over to the total system. Christmas polished an arrow, and put it in his quiver ready for use. He was appointed to preach; and, as usual, there were gatherings from far and near; Mr. W——, of A——, the minister, was there too; but, as if anticipating an attack, he said he should not be present whilst Evans preached. And yet, such was the fascination, that he could not stay away; and by and by he crept up into the gallery, where the preacher's eye, (for he had but one) which had long been searching for him, soon discovered him. All went on as usual, until the time came when the arrow might be drawn, which was done slily and unperceived. "I had a strange dream the other night (said Christmas.) I dreamed I was in Pandemonium, the council-chamber of Hades—how I got there I know not, but there I was. I had not been there long before there came a thundering rap at the gates. 'Beelzebub, Beelzebub! you must come to earth directly.' 'Why, what's the matter?' 'O, they are sending out missionaries to teach the heathen.' 'Are they? then I'll be coming.' Beelzebub came and hastened to the place of embarkation, where he saw the missionaries and their wives, and a few boxes of Bibles and tracts, but turning round he saw piled up rows of casks, labeled Gin, Rum, Brandy. 'That will do,' said he; 'no fear yet. These casks will do more harm than the boxes can do good;' and so saying, he stretched his wings for hell again. But after a time came another loud call—'They are forming Bible Societies!' 'Are they? Then I must go.' He went, and found two ladies going from house to house, distributing the Word of God. 'This wont do,' thought he; 'but I will see.' The ladies visited an aged female, who received a copy with much reverence, and many thanks; 'what a comfort it will be to me,' said she. He loitered about, and when the ladies were gone, the old woman came to her door and peeped this way and that, and then went in and came out again with her bonnet on, carrying two things under her apron out of sight—one was her new Bible, which she paw[illegible] and the other was a small jug, in wh[illegible] brought home the gin she had boug[illegible]ith the money. 'That will do,' said he, 'no fear yet;' and back he flew to his own place. Again came a hasty summons—'They are forming a Temperance Society.' 'A Temperance Society; what's that? I'll come and see.' He came and saw, and again flew back, muttering. 'This won't do much harm to me or my subjcts—they are forbidding the use of ardent spirits; but they have left my poor people all the ale and porter, and the rich all the wines. No fear yet!' Again came a louder rap than ever—'Beelzebub, you must come now, or we are all ruined, for they are forming a Tee-total Society.' 'What in the name of all my imps is that?' 'To drink nothing at all as a beverage but water!' 'Indeed! that is bad news. I must look after this.' And he did, but he went back again to satisfy the anxious inquiries of his legions, who were all qui vive about the matter. 'O,' said he, 'dont be alarmed; it's an awkward affair, but it won't spread much yet, for all the parsons are against it, and Mr. W——, of A——, (sending up an eagle glance of his eye at him) is at the head of them!' Whiz went the arrow, and down came the bird! Mr. W—— cried out—'But I wont be at the head of them any longer:" and walking calmly down out of the gallery, entered the table pew, and signed the pledge.

LET NOT THE SUN GO DOWN UPON YOUR WRATH.

The Jews sometimes displa[illegible] lofty principle which shows that the Divine light exists among them, although frequently concealed by the old incrustations of Rabbinical institutions. In my own family an interesting and characteristic incident occurred. My worthy grandfather was a man of great sensibility, and warm-hearted, but easly excited to wrath. He had a brother whom he dearly loved. One day they fell into a dispute, and each returned to his home in anger. This happened on a Friday. As the evening drew near, my good grandmother, who was another Martha, full of activity, began to make preparations for the Sabbath-day. "Come, dear Joseph," she exclaimed, "the night is approaching; come and light the Sabbath lamp!" But he, full of sadness and anguish, continued walking up and down the room. His good wife spoke again in anxiety: "See, the stars are already shining in the firmament of the Lord, and our Sabbath lamp is not yet lighted." Then my grandfather took his hat and cane, and, evidently much troubled, hastened out of the house. But in a few moments he returned with tears of joy in his eyes. "Now, dear Rebecca," he exclaimed, "now I am ready." He repeated his prayer, and with gladness lighted the Sabbath lamp. Then he related the dispute which had occurred in the morning, adding: "I could not pray and light my lamp before becoming reconciled to my brother Isaac." "But how did you manage to do it so soon?" "Oh!" he replied, "Isaac had been as much troubled as I was; he could not begin the Sabbath either without becoming reconciled with me. So we met in the street; he was coming to me, and I was going to him, and we fell into each others arms and wept."—Dr. C[illegible]

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, Setember, 20, 1849.

PAYING MINISTERS.

To the Editors of the Sabbath Recorder:—

We took notice of an article in the Recorder of July 25th, 1849, entitled "A Word to Ministers." Who was the author of it we did not know, as he did not put his name to it. But whatever his name may be, he was undoubtedly a minister, and we do not know but he is a very good one too; for we know that the best may miss it some times. His object seems to be, to set the ministers all hands at work in real earnest, and to learn the churches to offer good stout salaries to the ministers, for he says it is discouraging when the people do not come right up to the mark at once, and promise him a salary that will be amply sufficient. Now, let no one suppose that he meant a salary amply sufficient to support himself, together with an extravagant and idle family; it might be too cruel to charge him with meaning all that. But we did not know but some might think he meant so, seeing there have been so many cases of the kind, where ministers have had large salaries. But we have never yet found, in all the New Testament, any injunction on the Church to offer a minister a salary for his ministerial services. It is true that Paul said, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel." Perhaps it would be well for us to take notice how and what the Lord did ordain respecting it. Now I can tell you exactly how and what he did ordain. The Lord ordained that ministers who were sent of Him to travel and preach the gospel, should take with them no bread nor money, and into whatsoever house they should enter, there abide, eating and drinking such things as they give, for the laborer is worthy of his meat. This, then, is the way the Lord has ordained that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel. But not one word all this while about promising him a salary. We do not know but somebody will begin to think that our author is one of that class that he speaks of, who are afraid that the Lord will not be able to fulfill his promise, unless he can get the church to be voucher for him. At any rate it appears that he will not be satisfied until the church have given their word that he shall have a sufficient salary. Now, it is our opinion, that any man who is a real minister of Jesus Christ, and is sent of Him to preach the gospel, the Lord will open the hearts of the people to supply his temporal wants, even if they had never promised him a single cent. Nay, we have known instances where a minister from a distant land stopped at a certain place, and preached to the people a number of weeks, and the Lord opened the hearts of the people so wide that they contributed to him well nigh two hundred dollars in so short a time, although they had not promised him any thing at all. Is it not, then, safer to trust the Lord than it is to trust the church, with all their promises. We have heard of instances where the church has promised the minister a salary, but never paid it. The Lord does not serve his minister so, and when the people serve him so does it not rather argue that he was not a minister of Christ, but a mere hireling. There is no doubt th[illegible]me of the poor ministers of Christ [illegible]een shamefully neglected by the peop[illegible]ere they have labored. But if the minister is rich, as many ministers are, we do not believe it is the duty of a poor man to give any thing to such a minister, for he that giveth to the rich shall surely come to want.

We must confess that we have some conscientious scruples about promising a minister a sufficient salary, even if you are disposed to impute it to our covetousness. For we know not how much he would call sufficient, by and by, when he has got the people pretty cleverly pliant, and as he grows more and more covetous of carnal things. We have understood, that in some places the ministers have got the people so completely under, that they think their salaries not sufficient until they have got nearly all the property of the whole country into their own hands. Such, we understand, is the case now in Mexico. We do not suppose that any of our Seventh-day Baptist ministers have ever yet had a salary sufficient to make them rich. But we are aware that great things grow from small beginnings. And so little while as we have lived, we can well remember the time when scarcely any thing could be more disgusting to a Baptist church, than that of hiring a minister to preach, or giving him a salary, either a seventh-day or a first-day Baptist church. Yes, the ministers themselves would spurn such a thing. And if things have grown to what they now are in so short a time, what may we not ex[illegible]t would be the case in one or two centuries more? It is believed that no one thing has more powerfully conduced to the intolerable oppression of the poor, than that of paying ministers salaries. Perhaps it may be thought that there is no danger of such an effect in this country, while the people remain so intolerably covetous as they are now. But be assured that there is always danger of some great evil, whenever we adopt any important religious practice for which we have no scripture warrant. We know of no account, either sacred or profane, that Christian ministers ever had any stipulated salaries, until appointed by the Emperor Constantine, in the fourth century; and it is probable that he apprehended no danger at that time, although the effect was soon witnessed, when hundreds were rushing into the ministry for the sake of the salary, while they had no more religion than so many grievous wolves, not sparing the flock, until the Church was filled with the worst of corruptions, even to the changing of times and laws. And the Church is glutted with the same kind of corruptions until this day. Even Protestant churches have not got clear of them. And we have little or no doubt, that if there was a general understanding and expectation, that all the ministers would have a salary sufficient to supply their temporal wants during life, and nothing more, that we should soon have ministers enough; especially if we could get up a real Collegiate Theological Institute, and then furnish young men desirous of entering the ministry with funds sufficient to acquire a ministerial education. We should soon have ministers plenty in such a case as that, no doubt, whether fit for it or not.

Our author says it is the duty of the minister to give himself wholly to the ministry, and quotes 1 Tim. 4: 15 to prove it, which reads thus, "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; take heed unto thyself and unto the doctrine." What things, then, was Timothy to meditate upon, and give himself wholly to them? Why, certainly, it was the things contained in the doctrine; and one of the things contained in Paul's doctrine was, that ministers should labor with their hands to support the weak. It is hardly to be expected, that Paul meant to leave out anything that was contained in the doctrine. But our author says, "It is as certainly a divine ordinance, that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel, as it was under the law that they that ministered in holy things should live of the things of the temple." All this we readily admit, but we say there is another thing to be admitted, which is this: It is as certainly a divine ordinance, that a minister should labor with his hands to support the weak, as it is that they that preach the gospel should live of the gospel, if Paul's word is as good in the one case as it is in the other. How, then, are we to reconcile this seeming difficulty? I suppose there is no better way to reconcile it than to take Paul as an example; and we apprehend that Paul was quite as good a model for a minister as Nehemiah was for a Mayor. When Paul traveled to preach the gospel, he lived of the gospel, as God had ordained, as we have before mentioned. But when he located, he betook himself to secular business, that he might not be chargeable to the church, that it might support the weak, especially such as are widows indeed. We do not know where ministers can find a better pattern to follow than this. Paul has said, "Ye have us for an example." Now, although our author professes to hold in everlasting honor some ministers for having betaken themselves to secular business, agreeable to Paul's doctrine and example, yet he seems to manifest a great concern for fear the greatest part of them that do so, do it from wrong motives. How he knows which does it from good motives, and which from bad, is more than we can tell; and how he found out which to hold in everlasting honor is out of our sight. Indeed, we half suspect that the great zeal he has manifested in this article originated in a worldly, covetous spirit. It is the duty of the pastor to labor with his hands. Acts 20: 35, 1 Thess., 2: 9. How he can receive this as a doctrine of Scripture, and yet doubt that it is his duty to labor with his hands, is more than we can comprehend. We advise such people or ministers to take heed how they wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction.

It would seem that the main if not the sole object of this article was to push forward a state of things when the people shall be frightened into the belief that they are bound to support their located minister, without any secular labor on his part; and that they are awfully wicked if they do not come up to the mark at once, and promise him a salary that will be amply sufficient; and also awe or frighten the ministers into the belief that it is wicked for them to connect with their ministerial labor any secular employment. But how to reconcile all this with the propriety of holding some few in everlasting honor for doing the very same thing, is more than we can comprehend. And how he can reconcile it with Paul's injunction and example, we know not.

Our author complains much of the ministers, for that he thinks the greatest part of them are so fearful that the Lord will not fulfill his promise to sustain them, that they go into some secular employment to acquire something to fall back upon, in case the Lord should happen to fail them. But for his own part he seems to think it would be much better, or at least much easier for him, if he can get a good stout salary out of the people, to fall back upon in case of such failure, than it would to go to work for it. After all, we advise and admonish the people to look well to the wants and necessities of their located minister, especially if he is poor, and see that he does not suffer for want of carnal things, for it is the duty of the people to communicate to him (as well as to other poor saints) of their carnal things. But never, never, tempt any man to become a minister for the sake of a salary, lest he should do more hurt than good. But now, in conclusion, we recommend to every located minister that would wish to be held in everlasting honor, to betake himself to some secular business, in connection with his ministerial labor, for the purpose of helping some weak church, or some weak family, or some weak individual, it makes no odds which; if it is only done to support the weak, the injunction is answered. And there is no doubt that all the earnings of such a minister, if rightly taken care of, will either directly or indirectly, go to support the weak, whatever may be his motive.

With all due deferance to our venerable author, we submit the foregoing.

Wm. Stillman.

Reply.

The author of the censured article is a minister. The unworthy motive imputed to him is, however, utterly disclaimed. The real motive which he had in writing the article was to induce ministers to commit themselves to their appropriate work, without cherishing any undue anxiety about salaries. It was to stimulate them to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and leave the matter of their support to Him who had promised to provide for them. This motive was apparent on the very face of the article; and what but the most morbid sensitiveness in regard to the duty of supporting the ministry—what but the most sickly perversion of sentiment upon a subject so clearly taught in the Bible, could have prevented Bro. Stillman from seeing it? Yet he overlooks it entirely, and seizes with avidity upon the merely incidental allusions of the article to the duty of churches to sustain their ministers, to furnish himself and his coadjutors (for he seems to be a representative of a party, as he uses the plural we) with evidence that the author is "a mere hireling," whose great aim is to secure for himself and his brethren in the ministry "good stout salaries." Let any candid person read our article with care, and if, by a fair construction of language, he can draw such a conclusion from it as Bro. S. has, we will take back what we have written, and apostolically betake ourselves to "tent-making," as quickly as possible. But as we then said, so say we again, that if the leadings of divine Providence conduct a minister to the charge of any particular church, let him set about laboring for the spiritual welfare of that church. Let him instruct the ignorant, admonish the erring, comfort the afflicted; let him visit them in their houses, talk to them, and pray with them; let him, by all his public ministrations, and by all his daily intercourse with them, seek to promote their salvation, striving mightily to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus;—let him do all this, without stopping to consider whether his promised salary will bear him out in it or not. The church may not have had in their hearts to pledge him an adequate support. They may have promised him, for a year, only what would be sufficient for a few weeks. But no matter; God set him over them to do them good, and expects him to attend to his work, and not turn aside from it for the sake of gain. The church has not promised him a support, but God has. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing?" Luke 22: 35. And God will fulfill his promise; for he cannot lie. But how will He fulfill it? Whatever may be the expectation of Bro. S. in regard to the way in which it will be fulfilled, we expect it will be in some such way as this: When the church has enjoyed the ministry of a pastor like the one supposed for a sufficient length of time, the members will begin to feel their hearts stirred with anxiety to take good care of a man who cares so faithfully for them. They will begin to see how reasonable it is, "that he who sows to them spiritual things should also be partaker of their carnal things." They will see that the salary they promised him is not sufficient for his wants; they will feel ashamed of it, and set about enlarging it, until they see him comfortably provided for. This is the way, we think, God will fulfill his promise. We do not expect him to send the ravens to our Elijahs, with bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening. God will stir up his own people to do this work. If they do not attend to it, who will? Ministers must be provided for in some form or other; and we cannot conceive of a church, growing in grace, and continually sanctified by the influence of a faithful ministry, yet still too covetous to sustain that ministry. Such a thing would be a perfect contradiction.

Ah! but ministers must work.

"It is the duty of the pastor to labor with his hands. Acts 20: 35. 1 Thess. 20: 35. How he can receive this as a doctrine of scripture, and yet doubt that it is his duty to labor with his hands, is more than we can comprehend. We advise such people or ministers to take heed how they wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction. It would seem that the main if not the sole object of this article was to push forward a state of things when the people shall be frightened into the belief that they are bound to support their located minister without any secular labor on his part, and that they are awfully wicked if they do not come up to the mark at once, and promise him a salary that will be amply sufficient; and also to awe or frighten the ministers into the belief, that it is wicked for them to connect with their ministerial labor any secular employment. But how to reconcile all this with the propriety of holding some in everlasting honor for doing the very same thing, is more than we can comprehend. And how he can reconcile it with Paul's injunction and example, we know not."

So, then, a minister must labor for the church, and take care of himself too! He must feed the flock; he must look up the straying; he must visit the sick and the afflicted; he must attend funerals, he must seek out the anxious, and converse with them and instruct them; and yet he must provide for all the wants of himself and household, by laboring in "some secular business!" A beautiful equality of condition between minister and people this would produce, truly! The people may labor in secular business from day-light till dawn, week in and week out, providing handsomely for themselves, and laying up for time to come; if any are sick or in affliction, let the minister attend to them, they have no time for it; if sinners are anxious, let the minister look after them, it is not their business; if any have backsliden, let the pastor look them up, it is his appropriate work. But the minister must labor in secular business, subject to continued interruptions, and when the week is ended it is found that while the people have wrought six full days and received their wages, he, on account of his hindrances, has wrought but three. Or, perhaps he must sit up till late hours, plough by moon light, or swing his hammer till midnight, to support himself and his babes, while the people are refreshing and recruiting themselves by sleep. Add to this, that while the Sabbath is a day of rest to them, it is one of toil to him. Is this the equality which the gospel produces? God forbid. Common justice dictates otherwise, and we are sure, therefore, that Bro. Stillman's scheme is not the gospel. The passages of Scripture which he quotes are not at all to his purpose. They prove that where a church is weak, and not able to sustain its pastor, it is right, nay, even his duty, to labor with his hands to help the cause forward. This we did not deny, but, on the contrary, admitted it and insisted upon it. But that it is a ministers duty to do so under ordinary circumstances, is not admitted; and we challenge Bro. S. to produce a single passage which, fairly construed, teaches such a sentiment. "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." "Even so;" that is, in the same manner as those who ministered about holy things lived of the things of the temple, and as those who waited at the altar were partakers with the altar, 1 Cor. 9: 13, 14. And what was the manner in which the priests of the temple and the altar were supported? If Bro. S. will take his Bible, he will find that the service of the sanctuary was their exclusive business. There was no mingling of ministerial duties with secular business. Their ministry was the source of their living. Well, EVEN SO hath the Lord ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel; that is, the preaching of the gospel shall be the source of their maintenance, not the gospel and secular business together.

But our correspondent puts in a kind of salvo to the general doctrine of his communication, by saying:—

"After all, we advise and admonish the people to look well to the wants and necessities of their located minister, especially if he is poor, and see that he does not suffer for want of carnal things; for it is the duty of the people to communicate to him, as well as to other poor saints, of their carnal things."

Here, then, we have it. If the minister is poor—if he is on the borders of starvation, or if he has to go in rags and tatters—why then carry him something, "so that he does not suffer!" In this case the people "communicate" to him, not on the ground of the work which he performs as a teacher of the word—the ground on which the Scripture predicates the duty—but because he stands on a level with "other poor saints!" And is it a deacon that writes in this strain? Verily, those who consider their minister as nothing but a "church pauper" will thank our correspondent for his communication. But, brother S., do you not see, that the state of things which your doctrine tends to bring about, is the very state which is calculated to make the minister poor, and keep him so? If the minister, by attending to all the duties of his office, has his time so taken up that he cannot, at most, labor in secular business more than three days out of the seven, while the people around him all labor six, it is impossible that he should be otherwise than poor. And if he pursues this course through life, he must of necessity leave behind him a poor family to be provided for. We cannot abide such doctrine. It savors too much of Romanism, a system which makes a great boast of charity through its hospitals, and nunneries, and asylums, but by its grinding extortions creates the very necessities which it pretends to relieve. We trust that Bro. S. will reconsider the doctrine which he has thus placed before the public. It is unworthy one possessed of so good a heart, and sustaining so eminent a position as he does.

But the trouble in the mind of our correspondent seems to be, that our ministers receive a stipulated salary—a certain specified sum. If we understand him, he objects to this altogether. He would have a minister settle with a church, without any stipulation as to the amount he shall receive. That is, a minister must settle, and labor for the good of the church, and if at the end of a month or year the people choose to give him anything, well; if not, he has no claim upon them. But suppose, after he has labored, they give him nothing; how then? According to our correspondent, however, there is no room for such a supposition; for he says, "It is our opinion, that any man that is a real minister of Jesus Christ, and is sent of him to preach the gospel, the Lord will open the hearts of the people to supply his temporal wants, even if they had never promised him a single cent." Very well, this is our opinion too; and if Bro. S. had examined our article with half the care to find out its real import, that he appears to have done to find something which it did not import, he would have seen that it was our opinion. We believe that God will open the hearts of the people to supply his temporal wants, and it was on this ground that we urged ministers to commit themselves more thoroughly to the work, without concerning themselves over anxiously as to what they were to receive. But what has this to do with the propriety or impropriety, the expediency or inexpediency, of stipulating the amount of a minister's salary beforehand? Would our correspondent say that a minister must be put upon his good behavior?—that he must be placed upon trial from year to year, and if in the judgment of the people he do well, he may be remunerated with what is necessary for his wants? For on what other ground can there be any objection to having a salary stipulated beforehand? If it can be calculated with any reasonable certainty what amount will be required for his support, why not come under a stipulated engagement to raise it? The mere fact that the New Testament does not enjoin it to be so done, in so many words, is, to our mind, a very weak objection. The New Testament, foreseeing that there would be an almost infinite variety of circumstances to affect the relation of ministers and churches, has left this matter to be determined in every case according to expediency. We can well conceive that there may be cases where it would be best to leave the precise amount of the pastor's salary unstipulated. On the other hand, there are cases where it would be folly to do so. To place a minister upon his good behavior in this respect, is what a church has no right to do. God has a right to do so, and does place his ministers upon just such ground. He says, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." "Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." "Seek first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." God promises, then, to provide for his ministers on condition of their faithfulness in executing the trust reposed in them. But a church, composed of men as fallible as the minister himself, just as likely to neglect their duty as he is to neglect his, and generally quite as guilty as he is, has no right thus to assume the province of dealing with him. But, after all, is there nothing in the New Testament which gives light upon this question about the stipulation of salaries? The text which we have already referred to, "Even so hath the Lord ordained, that they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel," may furnish a hint upon it perhaps. How was it with the ministers of the temple and the altar? Was there no stipulation as to the amount they were to receive? Was it not declared by express statute, that they should have a regular quota—a definite per centage—of the property of the people? To be sure, they did not receive an annual salary, but they had what amounted to the same thing—it was a stipulated sum. And if "even so" it is ordained, that preachers of the gospel shall live of the gospel, it cannot be so very wicked a thing to fix their salaries at so much per annum.

We could say much more on this subject; but the length to which we have already extended our remarks admonishes us to forbear. We take leave of our correspondent by remarking, that when we penned the article which has called forth his strictures, we were much afraid that those who repudiate the practice of paying ministers for their services would construe it as favoring their doctrine. We trembled, lest it might have some tendency to strengthen them in their unscriptural and unjust position. But our fears are happily allayed. Those ministers who consider that the "laborer is worthy of his hire," have not put in the first word of complaint; they appear not to have felt that we did them any injustice. While, on the other hand, the very ones who, we feared, would claim us as the advocates of their views, are the first to attack us.

BAPTISM OF MR. NOEL.

We have already announced the baptism of the honorable and reverend B. W. Noel, a recent seceder from the Church of England. It took place at the chapel of the venerable Mr. Evans, on the 9th ult., in the presence of between two and three thousand deeply-interested spectators. Before his baptism Mr. Noel gave an address, marked by simplicity and earnestness, from which two brief extracts are made, as indicating the course of argument and illustration:—

"I have weighed every considerable argument that has ever been adduced in the maintenance of infant baptism, as an addition to, and which evidently becomes a substitute for, the baptism of believers in Christain churches; and I have come distinctly to these two conclusions, which appear to me, at least, to be certain. I will not speak of the convictions of others, but I speak of the conviction of my own mind after very much examination. It appears to me to be distinctly proved, first, that baptism, as ordained by Christ, is an immersion in the water; and, secondly, that immersion is meant to be a profession of faith in Christ. If these conclusions are correct (and I believe they will completely prevail with the Christain world eventually), then it follows that a person, who like myself has only been sprinkled in infancy, is unbaptized; because such a person has neither been immersed, nor has he made a baptismal profession of faith, and these two things constitute Christian baptism. So that, if these conclusions are correct, then I and others who have been only sprinkled in infancy, are in neither sense baptized."

Mr. Noel then addressed himself to the question whether, after having many times professed faith in Christ at the Lord's Supper, he should now revert to the initiatory rite:—

"If a man—for instance, one of the Society of Friends—has been a consistent Christian for years—has followed the Lord diligently and zealously—has done good by his pen and by his preaching, and is welcomed by all persons who rejoice in seeing the work of the Spirit as a thorough Christian—if that person should come to recognize that the sacraments are still obligatory, and that he should come to the table of the Lord, there is no church that would receive him unbaptized. Neither the Roman Catholic, nor the Anglican, nor the Presbyterian, nor the Independent churches, would receive him unbaptized. And, therefore, the fact of his having made a profession of faith in other ways has not appeared to any of the churches of Christ as a reason why an unbaptized person should not, at any point of his heavenward course, be baptized, when he comes to recognize his error. Our blessed Saviour has set us an example in this matter. At the age of thirty, when He was known by all who knew Him to be devoted to God—when His whole life was a profession of devotedness, not in the least requiring baptism as an expression either of repentance or of faith—when John was baptizing converts because the kingdom of heaven was at hand, summoning men to believe in Christ as the Saviour about to appear—then it was that Jesus, not certainly needing to be baptized unto faith in Himself, and needing no repentance, was yet at that age baptized after long years of piety. This He did, because He would honor the ordinance of God, not needing it Himself, but with a view to the welfare of others and the honor of God. He was therefore baptized."

It was Wesley who said, "I am always in haste, but never in a hurry."

CHRISTIANS SPARED BY THE CHOLERA.

From statistics which have been collected upon the subject, it appears that the cholera has not made very great inroads upon the churches during the past summer. At a recent meeting of Presbyterian and Congregational clergymen residing in New York and Brooklyn, it was stated that in twelve city churches, numbering about five thousand members, only twelve deaths by cholera had occurred, and these were mostly in churches located in districts of the greatest mortality. Two churches were named, comprising 700 members, in which there had not been a single death by cholera. It is said that churches of all denominations, and in all parts of the country, may make similar reports of the comparative exemption of their members from the ravages of the pestilence. The question will naturally arise, Why is it so? No doubt the habits of cleanliness, prudence, sobriety, and cheerfulness, which religion requires and fosters, have much to do with the result. But may it not also be said, that this security results from God's protection of his people? "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee."

Revivals.—We find in our exchanges notices of several recent and entensive revivals. The Baptist Register reports a revival at Fayetteville, N. Y., in which about one hundred persons, of all ages and conditions, profess to have passed from death unto life. Sixty-three had been baptized into the fellowship of the Baptist Church. At several places in North Carolina revivals are reported. In Wake Forest College, ten or twelve students have recently made a profession of religion; and five churches within a few miles of the College are also enjoying a work of grace. In Hillsboro, N. C., sixty-five persons have recently been baptized. At Milton, in the same State, fifty have recently made a profession of religion. At St. Louis, Mo., since March last, two hundred and twenty-two persons have been added to two colored Baptist churches.

Revivals of Religion.—Under a recent date, Rev. J. H. Fox writes to the Religious Herald, "It was my privilege a few days since to baptize into the fellowship of Mt. Edd church seventy converts in thirty-five minutes. Two days afterwards I baptized eleven; and on the next Frstday expect to baptize fifteen or twenty more. This ingathering is the result of a protracted meeting." Rev. A. Broaddus communicates to the same paper the result of a series of meetings in Mt. Calvary church, Va. A large company are said to be indulging hope, and forty-nine had already been baptized. Two of the converts are upwards of 77 years of age.

Resignation of Dr. Malcomb.—Our Baptist exchanges have had a good deal to say of late about Dr. Howard Malcomb's resignation of the presidency of Georgetown College, Kentucky. There are various versions of it. The following account, given by the "Watchman of the Prairies," is probably as near the truth as any:—

"His resignation was a very sudden movement, and occurred on this wise:—A Convention being about to be held in Kentucky for the formation of a new Constitution, Dr. Malcomb voted for Mr. Stevenson, who was known to be friendly to emancipation, as a delegate to that Convention. During the next day Dr. Malcomb was waited on by a couple of the Trustees of the College, who advised him to resign, assigning as the reason the vote which he had given. He replied that he should not resign for that reason until he was so ordered by a vote of the Trustees. A meeting of the Trustees, containing a quorum, was held, and a vote demanding his resignation, for the reason given, was passed, which being borne to him, he resigned."

Liberian Hippopotamus.—Dr. Morton, of Philadelphia, has published in the Journal of Natural Sciences a scientific description of what he considers a new species of hippopotamus, found in the river St. Paul's, Liberia, where they attain to the size of 400 to 600 pounds; to which he has given the name of Liberiensis. He thinks that, if caught when half grown, it would not be difficult to bring living specimens to this country, or to the zoological collections in Europe.

"They are extremely tenacious of life, and almost invulnerable, excepting when shot or otherwise wounded in the heart. When injured they become irritable and dangerous, but are said by the natives never to attack them when in their canoes. The negroes are very fond of the flesh, which seems to be intermediate in flavor between beef and veal."

The State Agricultural Fair, held at Syracuse last week, is pronounced by good judges superior to any of its predecessors. The live stock, new inventions, farm implements and produce exhibited, are said to have been unprecedented for quantity and variety. The address was delivered by Prof. Johnson, of Scotland, and will probably soon be printed. Henry Clay was among the visitors.

A Revolution in Cuba was reported last week. But the rumor appears to have originated in the fact that the Government of that Island is taking very active measures to protect itself in case of an invasion from this country.

The Cholera took off 86 victims from New York last week. In Boston it found 40. In many of the cities and large towns of New England the epidemic prevails, but it seems to be decreasing.

General Intelligence.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamer Europa, with one week's later intelligence from all parts of Europe, arrived at Boston on the 12th inst.

In England nothing of importance in a political point of view is transpiring. The cholela seems to be on the increase. In the week previous to the steamer's departure, there were 1,276 deaths from cholera in London.

The French are evidently much troubled about the course things are taking at Rome. The Pope manifest no disposition to return to the city, but is likely to take up his residence at Boulogne. His Commissioners are said to be more in sympathy with Austria than with France. A large business is talked of in the way of executing political offenders; and it is said that the French cabinet has sent orders to Gen. Oudinot not to allow any political execution to take place while the French army is at Rome. The French soldiers are in good repute among the common people, but looked upon with suspicion by the papal authorities.

European papers have a great deal to say about the surrender of the Hungarians. That event is evidently an occasion of much rejoicing among the advocates of monarchy and absolutism. A grand celebration was held in Warsaw on the 19th ult., in honor of the victory, so called.

The Milan Gazette, of the 24th, announces the important fact of the capitulation of Venice, which took place on the 22d ult. The siege, though, during its continuance, formidable to the Venetians, was also to the besiegers. The Austrian officers make out that their loss from cholera and fever amounts to 20,000.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says, that in consequence of the devastating hostilities between the Servians and other Sclavonians and the Magyars in the Bacs country and the neighboring districts, many of the towns marked on the map, such as Theresiopel, Zombor, and Baja, the first of which had 30,000 inhabitants of Sclavonic origin, with thirty-five churches, the second 19,000, and the third 12,000 inhabitants, literally no longer exist. When the Imperialists marched to Szegedin, they found that these three towns had been completely destroyed by the Magyars.

M. Victor Grandin, a well-known member of the Legislative Assembly of France, and formerly a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and who, besides, is one of the most extensive manufacturers of France, has died in Paris of Cholera. M. Cercelet, one of the former Secretaries of the Chamber of Deputies, and Gen. de Gueheneur, brother-in-law of Marshal Lannes, the Duke of Montebello, have also died of the same complaint.

An Englishman, about 30 years of age, threw himself from the top of the column of the Place Vendôme, on Tuesday evening, at 6 o'clock. He was killed on the spot. There were no papers found on him that could lead to a knowledge of his name. This is the second suicide of the same kind since the revolution of February, and the 36th since the erection of the column.

Mr. Roberts, the President of the Republic of Liberia, has sent an agent to France to purchase a steamer and a war schooner for the navy of his State.

It is stated in the Paris National, that the report of the marriage of the President of the Republic and the daughter of the King of Sweden is well founded. M. de Parigua, a personal friend of Louis, is about to repair to Stockholm to settle the necessary preliminaries.

In the under circles of diplomacy the idea is said to have revived of a new Holy Alliance for the maintenance of European peace, of which France is to be a prominent member.

LATER FROM THE GOLD REGION.

The steamship Empire City, from Chagres arrived at New York on the 13th inst. bringing the mails of the steamer California, which left San Francisco on the 2d ult.

The Empire City brought some $600,000 in specie, and a large list of passengers, most of whom are persons returning from the mines, disgusted with the life of extreme hardship and toil which must be endured there.

The California lost on her passage from San Francisco to Panama, nine passengers, mostly cabin, by fever. Among them was Mr. Jira Payne, late of Brooklyn.

The usual fever of the season was just beginning to prevail on the placers, when the California left, and old residents of California estimated that at least 5,000 deaths would occur during the summer among the unacclimated.

At San Francisco prices of every article of produce and manufacture had fallen off, although from second hands at retail large profits were still realized. Salaries were also much reduced, and clerks could be hired about as cheap as in New York, excepting the better class of book-keepers. The large number of young men who have returned from the mines, unable to endure the toil necessary to procure gold, had produced this glut of clerks. Manual labor, however, was still high, $6 per day, carpenters got $10 to $12.

Gambling is carried on to an enormous extent in San Francisco. A few days before the California left, one hundred thousand dollars in dust and Spanish ounces changed hands at a Monte bank on the turn of a single card. A notorious New-York pugilist and gambler, who keeps a bank there, was broken the night before the California sailed, having lost ten thousand dollars at Euchre, at $500 a game.

There was a riot at San Francisco, on the 16th of July, between the Chilians and Americans. The parties connected with it have since been tried. Two were sentenced to ten years imprisonment at hard labor. Another was sentenced to go to the United States, and never return to California under penalty of death.

The Alta California of the 2d ult. has late news from the American River gold washings from Juba and from Feather Rivers. New discoveries every day occur, and since the floods have abated miners have had good luck. A good feeling prevails among them—but vagrants of other nations are to be expelled. The Chilians and New-Mexicans were returning from the placer. The heat is intense. Provisions are plentiful.

The editor of the Alta California says that the daily average per man, from the best authenticated accounts, can be safely set at about one ounce. There are many who do far better than this, while there are others who scarcely procure this sum.

A gentleman who has visited the various placers, says that those who work faithfully with machines, seldom fail of making from one to three ounces per day, while many are making more, and a far greater number less.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says that any body can make from five dollars to an ounce per day, but he must work faithfully and intelligently, or he is as likely to make nothing as a buyer of lottery tickets is to purchase a blank.

Large companies of miners are engaged in turning the course of streams in which gold may be found. On the North Fork of the American River the stream is being turned at four points. Also on the Middle Fork, and at Mormon Island. The probability is, that the company will reap large rewards for their outlays, but the chances may be against them—in which case they will lose their whole summer's arduous labor.

From a letter to the editor of the N. Y. Tribune, dated Tuwallams Diggings, July 30, we copy the following :—

The labor of gold-digging and washing is exhausting in the extreme. Thousands who come out here brimfull of hope and courage are bringing their exuberant stock to a poor market—for, after divesting their white hands of their white kid gloves, and working a la mode for one week, your amateur dealers in gold dust find themselves bankrupt of mental "pluck" and physical strength, and leave in disgust, some for home, but many to hunt down the ignis fatuus.

The heat is intense. Not a wrinkle is to be seen upon the heaven's front from February to December, while old Sol smiles his severest. My neck, arms, hands, ankles and feet are blistered. Reversing the wise maxim of old Galen, or some young Galen, which enjoins upon those who love health to "keep the feet warm and the head cool," we are obliged to stand knee-deep in the water and exercise the arms and back, while the head and chest are subjected to a furious cross-firing of red-hot rays from above. I am working upon the sharp slate rocks, which are burning hot at mid-day, without shoes, sometimes raining perspiration, and, after an hour or two of canal digging labor with the pick and shovel, jumping into the water singing hot for the purpose of "panning out," with a thermometer rising from one hundred upward. This operation is generally performed middle deep.

Gentlemen, do not advise a dog to come to California. Why have Col. Fremont, Farnham and others so studiously misrepresented this barren, mountainous country? The entire Northern portion of Upper California is inferior to New England in every respect, while the Southern half of the same territory is baked and burned by a scathing, scorching sun for nine months of the year, without rain or dews, and deluged during the other three. The timber is sparse and almost valueless. It is so dry, that a tree of one-and-a-half or two feet diameter will become thoroughly seasoned in forty-eight hours after cutting.

COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

A terrible explosion in a coal mine, took place on the 13th ult. at Aberdare, Glamorganshire, Wales, by which 52 human beings were instantly flung into eternity, and almost every cottage in the place filled with mourning. In the morning the fireman who examined the pit before the colliers went down, had reported that there was some fire-damp, but not enough to prevent work, and 112 men and children went down. A change in the state of the atmosphere took place during the day, and at 4 P. M., a cloud of smoke issuing from the pit told the tale. It seems the colliers would take off the caps of their Davy lamps, because they could earn a trifle more by the clearer light. The correspondent of the Times says :—

"The effect of this calamitous occurrence upon the neighborhood is awful in the extreme. There was at first a frightful suspense; and mothers and wives awaited with torturing agony the bringing of the poor fellows who had been sacrificed to the surface. As soon as the first batch of bodies, blackened and scorched almost beyond recognition, was brought up, the rush forward of the poor women and friends was a bitter spectacle for even a stranger to witness. It was almost a scramble—almost a struggle—as the wretched creatures tore one another aside to lay hold on each black corpse, to see if their worst fears were realized. And when here and there a corpse was recognized, the screams of anguish were frightful to hear. Scarcely a cottage in the neighborhood that had not been forsaken by its inmates, all drawn out by fear and sickly hope. And scarce a cottage at night but contained one or more of the bodies of those who had that morning gone to their hazardous labor in the bowels of the earth with their accustomed health and cheerfulness."

◆

A Mr. Michael T. McClellan writes to his friends at his old residence, Independence, Miss., that he and his family expect to leave the mines in the spring with a clear capital of $50,000. Some others, who went there poor, he says, have left, to his knowledge, with $120,000 in gold-dust, worth $16 an ounce. These are lucky ones. The letter with this intelligence is dated June 2, 1849.

NAUVOO TEMPLE.—The walls of this edifice have been purchased by Mons. Cabet, for the use of his association of French Communists. Cabet paid $3000 and the citizens $1000 for the Temple and arsenal, together with about eleven acres of ground—the title being vested solely in Mons. Cabet. He has commenced rebuilding the Temple, and employs the labor of three hundred men upon the work. Much of the interest which has hitherto attached to this edifice will now be dissipated, for it will no longer wear the proud name of "Temple," but in future it will be known as the "Monster Boarding House." The basement story is to be laid off into kitchens, the first floor will be converted into a dining room, capable of accommodating a thousand persons, and the remainder of the building will be fitted up for school rooms, offices, and sleeping apartments for 500 people.

◆

BUYING THEMSELVES.—It is not an uncommon thing in Washington for slaves to purchase their freedom, or, as they express it, "buy themselves." Some of them obtain employment in different Departments, and, being liberally paid, lay up enough capital to purchase tools—i. e. their hands—and commence business in the world on their own hook. Their owners generally make no objection to this, and are often glad of it. A free negro in one of the Departments, where he acts as messenger, lately paid $200 toward the purchase of his brother, belonging to an estate which would be closed up by the 1st of October. The price asked was $500. He had planked the $200—a gentleman of respectability was ready to lend $200 more, and it only required $100 before the 1st of October to complete the bargain. A paper was circulated, and during the first day $40 to $50 were collected in small sums. How glad must be that heart when its pulsations first beat to Freedom!

◆

MONEY FROM A GRAVE.—Mr. Conklin, a merchant of Peoria, Ill., died of cholera, on his way from home to St. Louis, and was buried at the latter place. Previous to his decease he made his will, and gave a package of money to the officers of the boat. The money was not counted, but Mr. Conklin said that he had $3,000, with him. He had also telegraphed that he should bring that sum. But on opening the package after his funeral, it was found to contain only one thousand dollars, nor could any more money be discovered in his valise. Finally, his body was dug up, when the $2,000 proved to be sewed up in his shirt, which had not been removed on his interment, owing to the stiffness of his body and limbs.

◆

CONVENTION OF HEIRS.—A convention is to be held at Nashville, Tenn., on the 15th inst. for the purpose of examining into the claims of the descendants of Wm. Augustine Jennings, late of Virginia, as heirs to the estate of Wm. Jennings, who died intestate in Suffolk, England, in 1779, leaving an immense property, now estimated at some $40,000,000—consisting of divers bank and other stocks, mortgages and landed property, still unsettled, and lying in the hands of the British Government, suject to the claim and control of the heirs. Most of the claimants reside in Tennessee, Mississippi, Virginia and Indiana.

◆

POPERY AND THE ITALIANS.—A meeting was recently held in London to impeach the conduct of Pius IX. as spiritual Pontiff, and to demonstrate the incompatibility of Popery with liberal government. The meeting, characterized by the energy and enthusiasm peculiar to the Italian character, was exceedingly interesting. The speakers were several times interrupted by Jesuits, whose objections were so triumphantly answered that they greatly contributed to the effect of the meeting.

◆

AFFECTING ADMONITION.—Dr. Daniel Dow, for more than fifty-three years the pastor of the Congregational church in Thompson, Ct., attended the funeral on the 19th of July of a woman who died from the effects of a severe burn. In his discourse he remarked upon sudden death, and exclaimed, "Who can tell but the shaft is already on its way, that is to remove some one of us into eternity before the the next setting sun?" He went home, and about tea time was taken with severe pain, and died in a few moments. His age was 77.

◆

SIXTY MINISTERS HUNG.—The Commercial Advertiser's London correspondent, in reviewing the recent cruel acts of Gen. Haynau, says that the hanging of the Bishop of Erlau was followed by the similar execution of sixty Hungarian ministers of the Gospel, who were charged with praying for the success of their country's cause.

◆

UNITARIAN COLPORTAGE.—The American Unitarian Association, at Boston, has in its employ "a considerable number of persons as colporteurs in disposing of Dr. Channing's Works and Life, at the lowest price for which they can be published." The Inquirer intimates that a much larger number, of suitable age, could find employment.

◆

MISSIONARY ARRIVED.—Rev. Wm. Thompson, Missionary of the American Board at Beirut, Syria, arrived in this city on the 20th ult., in the ship Danube, 39 days from London. He visits his native country after an absence of 17 years.

A FRUITFUL CHURCH.—The Presbyterian church in Princeton, N. J., since its formation, has sent forth eighty-five ministers of the gospel from its membership, not including those who have held a temporary connection with the church, while members of the Seminary.

THE SCOTTISH CHURCHES.—The Presbyterian Church in Scotland is divided into five different denominations. The Established Church has 1000 congregations; the Free Church has 700; the United Presbyterians 500; the Reformed Presbyterians, or Cameronians, 50; the United Original Seceders from the Presbyterians, 50.

A meeting was recently held in Boston, to form a Society to provide diversions for the multitudes of children in that city who have little moral training; which diversions, such as bathing, and those amusements pursued in the playground and gymnasium, it is hoped will diminish crime among the juveniles.

SUMMARY.

As Mr. Oliver Wheeler, of Auburn, with his wife and sister, was riding out a few days since, his horse became restive and unmanageable, and in consequence of sheering suddenly to one side, precipitated the whole party down the bank of the Owasco, a distance of nearly one hundred feet. The bank is so precipitous at the point at which they went over, that one could not walk down; and though the horse in the descent rolled over Mrs. W., striking her in the face with one of his shoes, none of the party were seriously injured.

The splendid allegorical paintings by the late Mr. Cole, representing "The Course of Life," which were drawn by a subscriber at Binghampton at the distribution of the pictures of the Art Union last winter, have been purchased by Mr. Abbott of this City, Principal of the Spingler Institute, and placed in the Lecture Room of that Institution. The price paid by Mr. Abbott was $4,000.

The law in Connecticut against selling spirituous liquors, imposes a fine of $10 for the first offense, $20 for the second, and so double for every offense of which a man is convicted. A man has forty-five cases pending against him, the last of which, if he should be found guilty, subjects him to a penalty of $114,490,982,543,360.

Over a hundred gentlemen of New Orleans and other parts of Louisiana, have been requested by Gov. Johnson to attend the Memphis Convention in October, "to confer with their brethren of other States, on the expediency of constructing a railroad to connect the Valley of the Mississippi with the Pacific Ocean, at the most suitable point."

The first steamboat that entered the Mississippi was the Enterprise. This was in 1815. It was only about seventy tons burthen. She took 23 days to go from New-Orleans to Cincinnati. The price of passage was $130; passage now averages five days. The Enterprise had a single wheel placed in the stern.

At a recent meeting of the Trustees of a Wesleyan University at New Orleans, the Faculty proposed to bestow upon the Rev. George Gary, an eminent Methodist divine, the degree of Doctor of Divinity, whereupon Mr. Gary, who happened to be present, rose and declined the honor.

Col. Benton was arrested on the 9th ult., in St. Joseph, Mo., at the instance of Judge Birch, for slander, in publicly charging Judge B. with improper conduct to his family. Col. Benton filed an answer, and petitioned for a change of venue to Clinton county, the residence of Judge Birch.

It is said that the cholera has carried off more than 15,000 slaves in the southern cities and plantations, and the result has been, that slaves have increased in value, and a greater demand is made for them in the Maryland and Virginia markets.

A western editor, in reply to a cotemporary who called him "green," says, "A green article may be ripened, but a half fried doughnut is eternally 'spiled.'"

The Hallowell (Maine) Gazette says: "We have not had the death of an adult to record in our paper, by disease, for three months. Hallowell contains 6,000 inhabitants."

The Pennsylvania Courts have decided that marriage is a civil contract; and they have also decided, that no contract made on Sunday is valid.

There has been a case of spontaneous hydrophobia in Philadelphia, the sufferer being Mr. Wm. Willets, who has never been bitten by any rabid animal.

In Stewart's dry goods palace in Broadway, N. Y., there are a hundred and sixty clerks employed, and about $50,000 per annum paid for clerk hire.

It has been calculated that from 700 to 800 persons are killed every year by the explosions of collieries, and the same number injured and maimed.

A new shirt, called the Sans Pli, has made its appearance in London. It is made without gathers, and is said to be very easy and comfortable.

The proprietor of a factory in Pennsylvania has been fined $50 for employing a boy under 13 years of age.

Mr. D. Burroughs, of Buffalo, while playing at ten pins, at Avon Springs, broke his thigh. It was done by the muscular action of throwing the ball.

The grand jury of Saratoga have indicted John Tallmadge for murder. He placed obstructions on the track of the Rensselaer and Saratoga Railroad, by which the engineer, Dodge, was killed, last spring.

M. Deschamps (d'Avillion) lately sent a paper to the Academy of Sciences, at Paris, wherein he maintains that copper exists normally in the human blood. The process for obtaining it is analogous to that used in obtaining this metal from vegetable substances.

Calvin Fish, of Sandwich, has recovered $7,000 damages against the town of Fall River, for injuries received by him in consequence of a defect or want of repair in one of the streets of that place.

Maria Monk, or the woman too notorious by that name, died recently at the Pauper Hospital, Blackwell's Island, of delirium tremens. What a sad, wretched history her's would be, if it could be truly written!

President Shannon, of Bacon College, Ky., a distinguished divine of pro-slavery persuasion, declares the Declaration of Independence to be an "infidel" production, and some of its sentiments "anti-scriptural and absurd."

A wagon road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec is about to be prosecuted forthwith, and is expected to serve a valuable end. It will effect a saving of distance between the Atlantic sea-board and California, as compared with the Chagres route, of about 1,700 miles.

Dr. Brigham, superintendant and resident physician of the New York State Lunatic Asylum, died at Utica, on the 8th inst., from an attack of chronic diarrhea.

A company of professors and teachers from Switzerland, who recently arrived in this country, have purchased ground and commenced erecting a college at St Louis.

The editors of the American and Gazette are indebted to a member of the Board of Health for cholera statistics. From the commencement of the epidemic to the 19th ult. there were in Philadelphia, says the Board, 2,131 cases and 744 deaths. The bills of mortality, howeevr, show that the actual number of victims to cholera was 962. There were 578 deaths in July. The disease also broke out in the Alms-House and carried off 229 of its inmates.

If it is a joke, it is a melancholy one, that a number of boxes, with dead bodies in them —the remains of gallant men—American soldiers who fell in Mexico—have been stored at New Orleans, for a long time past, and with nobody to claim them. One of them, marked "L. M. Pryer," contains it seems the body of Dr. McPhaill, of Tennessee, and was brought to New Orleans two years ago!

Some of the English railway companies now issue insurance tickets to their passengers. A first-class passenger may, on buying his ticket, by paying three-pence extra, have his life insured for the journey to the extent of £1000, payable, if he is killed, to his legal representatives—and compensation for personal injury, if life is not lost. A second class passenger may insure to £500 for two-pence, and a third class, £200 for one penny.

It is well known, that two rays of light may be added in such a manner as to produce darkness—but it may less generally be known, that two sounds may bear such a relation to each other that they shall produce silence. Professor Draper, in his excellent work on chemistry, gives a very simple illustration of this experiment.

At first setting out upon a vicious course, men are a little nice and delicate, like young travelers, who at first are offended at every speck of dirt that lights upon them; but after they have been accustomed to it, and have traveled a good while in foul ways, it ceaseth to be troublesome to be dashed and bespattered.

In company with our gifted country-woman Miss Cushman, recently arrived from England, came Eliza Cook, one of the noblest of living poets, and Miss Hayes, a distinguished Magazine writer of England. Miss Bremer, the celebrated Swedish novelist, is also en route for the United States.

The steamer Niagara, which arrived on the 7th inst., brought intelligence of six steamers. She reports the arrival of the Europa at Liverpool, and saw on her passage to this city, the packet steamers Cambria, America, Hibernia, Canada, and Sarah Sands.

The admirers of the late Rev. Dr. Chalmers are contributing to the erection of a memorial to him at Anstruther, in Fife, the place of his birth. The memorial is to consist of a handsome Free Church, with a lofty tower.

A Temperance Convention will be held at Ballston Spa, N. Y., on the 28th inst. Father Matthew and John B. Gough have both engaged to be present.

Cassius M. Clay has nearly recovered from his wounds, inflicted in his emancipation rencontre.

New York Markets—Secondday, Sept. 17.

Ashes—Pots $7 00, Pearls 6 50.

Flour and Meal—Flour 4 75 a 4 87 for common State and old mixed Michigan; 5 00 a 5 12 for strait State and new Michigan; 5 25 a 5 37 for pure Genesee. Rye Flour 3 00 a 3 06. Corn Meal 3 13 a 3 25.

Grain—Prime Genesee Wheat 1 20. Corn 60 a 61c. for Western mixed, 62c. for flat yellow and southern white, 63c. for Northern and Jersey yellow.

Provision—Pork 8 62 for Prime and 10 25 for Mess. Beef 10 00 for Prime, and 12 50 a 13 00 for Mess. Butter, 8 a 11c. for Ohio, 10 a 15c. for State. Cheese is plenty at 4 a 4½c.

MARRIED.

In Brookfield, N. Y., on the 1st inst, by Eld. S. B. Crandall, Mr. JOSEPH H. BURDICK to Miss R. LOESA BROWN, all of Brookfield.

In Edmeston, on the 5th inst, by the same, Mr. WM. L. ELSWORTH, of Brookfield, to Miss LUSINA M. DYE, of the former place.

In Columbus, on the 7th inst., by the same, JOHN D. ELMER, Esq., of Winchester, Litchfield Co., Conn., to Miss LYDIA ANN CARRIER, of the former place.

In Hayfield, Pa., May 15th, by Eld. A. A. F. Randolph, Mr. THOMAS H. DUNN to Miss DIANTHA CURTISS.

On the 15th of July, by the same, Mr. JOHN BURNS to Miss JANE LUTES.

DIED.

At Fall River, Mass., on the 10th of June last, Miss SARAH E. CRANDALL, daughter of the late Henry and Sarah Crandall, aged 20 years. Though early bereft of her parents, her gentle manners and generous heart secured for her a home in her uncle's family, where she was as warmly loved, as tenderly watched, and is now as sincerely lamented, as though an own child. Nature had endowed her with qualities which endeared her to all who knew her. But in these lovely native traits she did not trust for acceptance with God. She discovered her need of the blood and righteousness of Christ, and two years previous to her departure, and even before that insiduous disease which terminated her life began to develop itself, she found, it is hoped, peace in believing. The setting of her sun was serene and peaceful, as its morning was bright and cloudless. And the fragrance of her memory lingers in the recollections of survivors, like the glow of the summer evening's sky.

> "Sweet is the scene when Christians die,
> When holy souls retire to rest;
> How mildly beams the closing eye!
> How gently heaves th' expiring breast?"

At his residence in Amity, Allegany Co., N. Y., on the 29th of July, after some twelve hours' illness, WILLIAM DAVIS, aged 71 years, son of Eld. David Davis, deceased. Brother Davis professed religion in Rensselaer County, when young, and became a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Berlin. Removing from thence to Allegany County, when a church was formed in Scio, he cast his lot in with them there, where he remained a worthy member until death. He has left an aged wife, and a numerous circle of friends, to mourn their loss.

In North Stonington, Conn., on the 11th inst., Mr. CHAMPLIN AUSTIN, aged 73 years. Bro. Austin was a worthy member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton R. I., was a pattern of Christian profession, and died in the full hope of a blessed immortality.

In Westerly, R. I., August 17th, of a disease of the lungs, Mrs. MARY ANN BLIVEN, wife of Joseph W. Bliven. She was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church, and triumphed over death through the faith of the gospel. She has left a husband, four children, and a large circle of other relatives and friends, to mourn their loss.

In Newport, R. I., April 11th, 1849, LYDIA BURDICK, widow of the late Dea. Clark Burdick of that town, aged 86 years. She had for many years been a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Newport, and died in full hope of salvation through Christ.

In Newport, R. I., April 26th, 1849, ANN GREENMAN, widow of the late John Greenman, in the 87th year of her age. Though she died in Newport, yet she had for many years been connected with the 1st Hopkinton Church. Her piety was of a brilliant character, and by her protracted and consistent life she gave real evidence of love to Christ. She died in confident expectation of soon being with the Lord.

In Rockville, R. I., August 21st, 1849, an infant son of Nicholas V. and Nancy Crandall, aged three months and sixteen days.

LETTERS.

S. B Crandall, C. M. Lewis, J. Ayres, M. Hawley, Charles Potter, Richard Day, A. Coils, A. C. Spicer, Rowse Babcock, W. Ingalls, Thomas A. Maxson.

RECEIPTS.

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Fund of said Society:—

L. T. Rogers, Waterford, Ct.	$5 00
David Rogers, "	5 00
Oliver Maxson, "	5 00
Wm. Maxson, "	5 00

The Treasurer of the Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society acknowledges the receipt of the following sums from subscribers to the Sabbath Recorder:—

Benj. Stelle, Crossingville, Pa.	$2 00 to vol.	6	No. 52
James Stelle, "	2 00 "	6	" 52
M. Greenlee, Cussewago, Pa.	1 50 "	6	" 39
W. Ingalls, Ashford, Ct.	2 00 "	7	" 10
R. Dunham, 2d, Plainfield, N. J.	2 00 "	6	" 52
M & E. C. Hawley, Broadalbin,	2 00 "	6	" 52
Horace Green, Adams,	1 00 "	6	" 26
S. L. Babcock, "	2 00 "	6	" 52
Barton Whitford, "	2 00 "	7	" 6
Rowse Babcock, Scio,	2 00 "	6	" 52
Silas G. Bliven, "	2 00 "	6	" 52

BENEDICT W. ROGERS, Treasurer.

☞ Money for the Sabbath Recorder should be sent to Geo. B. Utter, General Agent of the Society. Money subscribed towards the Publishing Fund may be sent either to Geo. B. Utter, or directly to the Treasurer.

Geo. B. Utter acknowledges the receipt of the following sums on old accounts of the Sabbath Recorder, or accounts previous to the close of vol. 5:—

James Dunham, Trivolia, Ill.	$9 00 to vol.	5	No 52
S.P.Crandall, Jr., LittleGenesee,	2 00 "	5	" 52
H C. Crandall, "	2 00 "	5	" 52
M. Greenlee, Cussewago, Pa	50 "	5	" 52
Gould Trowbridge, Rodman,	3 00 "	5	" 52
Wm. J. Somes, "	1 00 "	5	" 52

Executive Committee—Eastern Association.

An adjourned session of the Executive Committee of the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association will be held at the house of S. S. Griswold, on the third day of the week before the last Sabbath in September, 25th day of the month, at 2 o'clock P. M.

S. S. GRISWOLD, Sec.

Boston, via Newport and Fall River.

FOR BOSTON, VIA NEWPORT AND FALL RIVER, by the splendid and superior steamers BAY STATE and EMPIRE STATE, of great strength and speed, particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound, running in connection with the Fall River and Old Colony Railroad, a distance of 53 miles, to Boston only. Leave Pier No. 3 North River, near the Battery. The steamer EMPIRE STATE, Capt. Comstock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, at 5 P. M. The BAY STATE, Capt. Brown, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, at 5 P. M. This line is the only one that runs direct for Newport. For freight or passage apply on board, and either to TISDALE BORDEN, 70 Wall-st. or at the office of the Line, at the corner of Washington-st. and Battery-place.

Mail Line between Boston and New York.

REGULAR MAIL LINE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK via Stonington and Providence. Inland route, without ferry, change of cars or baggage! The new steamer C. VANDERBILT, Capt. Joel Stone, and COMMODORE, Capt. William H. Frazee, in connection with the Stonington and Providence and Boston and Providence Railroads, leaving New York daily, Sundays excepted, from Pier No. 2 North River, at 6 o'clock P. M, and Stonington at 8 o'clock P. M. or upon the arrival of the mail train from Boston. These steamers were built expressly for the route, and are in every respect particularly adapted to the navigation of Long Island Sound. The accommodations for passengers are commodious and comfortable—the officers capable and experienced. The route being the shortest and most direct between Boston and New York, passengers are enabled to arrive in ample time for the morning lines of steamboats and railroads running to various points from those cities. The C. VANDERBILT will leave New York Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Leave Stonington Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. The COMMODORE will leave New York Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Leave Stonington, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. For passage, berths, state-rooms or freight, application may be made to the agents on the wharf, and at the office, 10 Battery-place.

New-York, Elizabethtown, Somerville, Easton.

CENTRAL RAILROAD OF NEW-JERSEY—SUMMER ARRANGEMENTS—COMMENCING APRIL 2, 1949.

THE extension of the Railroad from Somerville to White House (10 miles) is opened for travel, reducing the staging between Easton and the terminus of the Road to 25 miles. PASSENGER TRAINS UP—Leave New York by Pier No. 1 North River, at 9 o'clock A. M. and 5 P. M.; leave New York by New Jersey Railroad, foot of Cortland-st., at 9 A. M. and 5 P. M. PASSENGER TRAINS DOWN—Leave White House at 5¼ o'clock A. M. and 1 40m. P. M.; North Branch at 5 40m. A. M. and 1 50m. P. M.; Somerville at 5 55m. A. M. and 2 5m. P. M.; Bound Brook at 6 5m. A. M. and 2¼ P. M.; Plainfield at 6 25m. A. M. and 2 40m. P. M.; Westfield at 6¾ A. M. and 3 P. M.; Elizabethtown at 7¼ A. M. and 3¾ P. M.. The freight train (with a passenger car attached) will leave White House at 3¾ A. M, Somerville 4¼ A. M., Plainfield 5¾ A. M., Elizabethtown, by steamboat, at 7½ A. M. RETURNING—Will leave New York, by steamboat, Pier No. 1 North River, at 1 P. M. Passengers for Easton, Wilkesbarre, Allentown, Manch Chunk, Pa., and for Flemington, Clinton, Jacksonville, &c., N. J., will take the 9 o'clock A. M. train from New York.

STATE OF NEW-YORK, SECRETARY'S OFFICE, ALBANY, July 14, 1849.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York—Sir: Notice is hereby given that at the General Election to be held in this State on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, the following officers are to be elected, to wit:

A Judge of the Court of Appeals, in the place of Freeborn G Jewett;

A Secretary of State, in the place of Christopher Morgan;

A Controller, in the place of Washington Hunt;

A State Treasurer, in the place of Alvah Hunt;

An Attorney General, in the place of Ambrose L. Jordan;

A State Engineer and Surveyor, in the place of Chas. B. Stuart;

A Canal Commissioner, in the place of Nelson J. Beach; and

An Inspector of State Prisons, in the place of Isaac N. Comstock;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

Also, a Justice of the Supreme Court for the First Judicial District, in the place of Samuel Jones, whose term of service will expire on the last day of December next;

Also, a Senator for the Third Senate District, in the place of William Hall;

Also, a Senator for the Fourth Senate District, in the place of John L. Lawrence;

Also, a Senator for the Fifth Senate District, in the place of Samuel Frost; and

Also, a Senator of the Sixth Senate District, in the place of William Samuel Johnson;

All whose terms of service expire on the last day of December next.

The following officers are also to be elected for said City and County:

A Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in the place of Michael Ulshoeffer;

A Judge of the Superior Court, in the place of Aaron Vanderpool;

Sixteen Members of Assembly;

A Sheriff, in the place of John J. V. Westervelt;

A City and County Clerk, in the place of James Conner; and

A Coroner, in the place of William A. Walters;

All whose terms of service will expire on the last day of December next.

[The Electors throughout the State are also to vote for or against the adoption of an act entitled "An act Establis[illegible] Schools throughout the State," passed March [illegible]]

Yours respectfully,

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN, Sec'y of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE, NEW YORK, July 21, 1849.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the County will publish the above once in each week until the Election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. See Revised Statutes, Vol. I Chap. 6, Title3, Article 3, Part I., Page 140.—Aug. 9.

Miscellaneous.

THE MOTHER'S FAITH.

BY ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Cried a pale one, Give me joy,
I have borne a cherub boy.

Borne a boy! The world is full,
Crammed its game of push and pull;
You have given that cherub life,
For a gauntlet race of strife.
If his heart be large and tender,
Sadly will his means be slender,
Everlasting duns will push him,
Poverty will cramp and crush him.
If his heart be small and stony,
It will canker with his money;
Rust will gnaw it through and through,
Care will vex it black and blue;
And the wretch. O hapless mother,
In his wealth will starve and smother!

Cried the mother, God is living,
Blest the boon is of his giving;
I will trust him that the boy,
Living, shall be full of joy.
Truth and justice—self-denial—
Shall prepare him for the trial
Into which he must be hurled,
Of a scuffling, brutal world.
Watch will I his opening soul,
Kindling with the living coal—
Love to God and love to man—
Working out his Maker's plan.
Who shall say this boy of mine
Shall not as an angel shine;
Winning to the heavenly state,
Hearts now filled with strife and hate;
Calling down that better day,
When the good shall bear the sway,
And the brutal slink away?

Ceased she, and her deep blue eye
Flashed the glories of the sky.
From her faith not to be driven,
With love to angels given,
Kissed she then that gift of Heaven.

A REVOLUTIONARY STORY.

While the British were in possession of Staten Island, they were in the practice of making predatory excursions into New Jersey, and annoying and robbing the innocent inhabitants who were known to be in favor of the revolution. As an offset against these depredations, some of the high-spirited and daring Jerseymen often took the liberty of showing them a Yankee trick. Among these was Capt. Nathaniel Fitz Randolph. He was offered a commission in the American army, but refused it; choosing rather to act as a minute man. He enlisted in his company some fifteen or twenty trusty and bold men. He was known and dreaded by the British; for they often saw the skill of his movements, and felt the power of his arm. He had friends on Staten Island, who kept him informed in regard to their position and operations. A regiment of the British was stationed near the west end of the Island, the officers occupying apartments in the houses of the inhabitants. One day he was informed that the Colonel of the regiment was lodging at such a house. Capt. Randolph conceived the bold project of making a prisoner of him. He told his plan to some of the hardy spirits who were his confidents, and they agreed at once to assist him. Captain Randolph had an aunt, who lived near the water, at the west end of the Island, one half of whose house was occupied by the British. After dark, he and his men took their boat and rowed silently over to the Island. He then put on an old overcoat, and tied it up round him, put on an old hat, and thus accoutred like a servant, he crept up to the wood-pile of his aunt, and having picked up an armful of wood, he went in, without molestation, to his aunt's kitchen, and deposited it by the fire. She was so busy reading or knitting, that she thought it was her servant. Without rising from his squatting position, he said,

"Aunt, tell me the countersign!"

She looked at him with terror and surprise, and said,

"Nathaniel, is that you?"

"Yes," said he, "it is I; tell me the countersign."

"They will kill me if I do," she replied.

"They will kill me if you do not," was his answer.

She ventured to tell him what the countersign was. He immediately went out, was hailed by the sentinel, gave the countersign, and hastened down to his boat. They then had some distance to row before reaching the house where the Colonel lodged. Captain Randolph threw off his old coat and hat, and dressed in the uniform of an officer. He told his men that if he gave a certain signal, they might conclude that he had been found out and taken prisoner, and they might shove off the boat, and row away for their lives. But if they heard no signal, they were to be in readiness to start at once when he arrived. On reaching the shore near where the Colonel was, he took a man with him, and walked up towards the house.

"Who comes there?" sang out the sentinel at their approach.

"A friend," was the prompt answer of Captain Randolph.

"Advance and give the countersign," said the red-coat. This was correctly done, and the two came to the front door, and gave a loud knock. A colored servant soon appeared.

"Is the Colonel in?" they inquired.

"Yes, he is up stairs asleep; I will call him."

"No, we will accompany you to his room." As good as their word, they kept with him, and thus they entered the room together. There he lay upon his back, with his regimentals all on, snoring away at a sound rate. Captain Randolph put his hand on him, and said, "Colonel, wake up; don't make any noise, or you're a dead man: I won't hurt you if you are quiet; I have come to make you a prisoner, and you will soon be exchanged for one of your own rank, who is now a prisoner in New York."

The Colonel rubbing his eyes, said, "You are Captain Randolph, I think."

"Yes," was the reply; and presenting a pistol to his breast, said, "You are my prisoner, and if you make any resistance, that moment you are dead."

The Colonel saw that he was in a bad predicament, and at once consented to accompany Captain Randolph to New Jersey. Having gagged the servant, and tied him fast to the bedstead, they set out for the boat, Captain Randolph on one side, and his man on the other side of the Colonel. They went on, arm in arm, passed the guard, reached the boat, and before daybreak were safe home with their prisoner. In the course of a day or two, Captain Randolph visited New York with a flag of truce, and exchanged his prisoner for a revolutionary Colonel. —Youth's Cabinet. E. D. K.

THE CRUST OF THE EARTH.

The following extract is taken from Dr. Silliman's Journal, showing his opinion, that at a certain depth below the earth's surface, the whole is a heated mass of matter, in such complete effusion, that it is even tossed by subterranean winds, which find vent in the craters of Vesuvius, Mount Blanc, Orozimbo, &c. This is a grand speculation, sublime in the effect it produces on the mind, whatever may be the support afforded to it by truth.

"As this crust gradually cooled off, it contracted upon the melted mass within, and by means of this contraction it either collapsed, forming the beds of lakes, or protruded outward and upward, forming elevated plains and mountains. Hence the Granite rock is both the lowest and the highest in its position, of all the geological formations.

Again, the masses of Granite rocks thrown up in the form of mountains in a heated state, must cool when exposed to the external atmosphere, and in cooling must also contract. Cracks or seams were thus opened transversely across the spurs or chains of the mountains, extending quite down to the fluid mass beneath. Then, by a subsequent pressure of that mass, an infusion of melted minerals was injected into those openings, forming the Traps, Basaltic, and Porphyritic rocks. This melted material came from a deeper source than the original Granite, being of a somewhat different composition, and thus were formed the dyckes, or veins, which pervade the Granite rocks. Sometimes these trap rocks themselves have again been broken, by internal agitation, and the openings filled by materials, of a still lower source, bring along with them the precious or the baser metal, which, from their specific gravity, would sink lowest in the melted mass beneath.

Besides the thousands of extinct volcanoes on the surface of the earth, there are at this day more than three hundred that are now active, and have, from time to time in the history of man, emitted forth masses of fluid matter, sometimes in quantities sufficiently large to form immense rivers of melted lava, extending in some instances a hundred miles in length, and twelve miles in breadth, melting down hills and filling up valleys in their course, and building out the coast for several miles into the sea, setting the ocean boiling, so that thousands of fishes have risen to the surface and been thrown upon the shore by the waves of the heated and angry ocean, actually cooked and ready for the palate of the epicure.

The breaking through of the floor of the ocean, and its elevation hundreds of feet above its surface, producing islands in a day, at various points—the elevation of more than 1500 miles of the coast of South America by the throb of an earthquake—the gradual depression of one coast of Norway, and the corresponding elevation of the others to the height of some 200 feet, carrying with it the remains of animals of species now inhabiting the ocean, and many other similar phenomena, are sufficient to convince us that the earth is still fluid at the centre, and that the perpetual mountains, and the everlasting hills, instead of being based upon a solid underpinning, rest upon a yielding foundation.

The same fact is shown likewise by the phenomena connected with the boring of artesian wells, and the sinking of mines, the temperature constantly increasing about one degree for every 45 feet of descent.

At this rate water would be at the boiling heat at little more than one mile from the surface of the earth, and at the same ratio of increase, every known substance would be in a fluid condition at less than fifty miles below the surface. Now, should we allow the crust over the fluid mass of the earth to be 200 miles in thickness, and then contrast the globe with an egg, it will be found that the shell of the egg is full five times thicker in proportion to the diameter than the crust of our planet."

ALWAYS A LITTLE TOO LATE.

Some people are never in season. One would think they must have some conscientious scruples about being early in going anywhere or doing anything. John Sheldon belongs to this class. We were playmates in childhood. He used to be a very good boy, in other respects, for ought we know. But he was forever to late. Something or other always kept him from being in his place at Sunday-school, until after the school had commenced. Many a time he came in during prayer. Then he was famous for being late at school on week-days. By and by I found out why he was so tardy, I got my mother's consent to stay one night at Mr. Sheldon's, and I saw how he managed. He was the last one up in the morning, to begin with. It was a long while after he was called before he could muster resolution enough to jump out of bed. Then, of course, he had to dress himself hastily, in order to be down in season for breakfast.

Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon were good people, and after breakfast they had worship. But they had to wait some time on John, for he was not ready. After prayers it was nearly time to go to school, but John had neglected to get his lesson. So he had to study a quarter of an hour, when he ought to be on his way to school. We both ran all the way to the school-house; and when we got there, we went in tired and out of breath.

When John grew up, he was always late at church; and if anybody made an engagement with John Sheldon, at a particular hour, they never expected he would come until the time passed. Something seemed to go wrong with his machinery all the time. He is like a poor watch I had once. It would go too slow in spite of all I could do. I moved the regulator, but it did no good. It did not affect the main-spring any. So it was with John Sheldon; and so I am afraid it always will be. He loses time, and you can't regulate him. Indeed, I don't believe such men have got any hair-springs at all; but whether they have got any or not, nobody can regulate them, so as to make them go any faster.

Young reader, take care you do not form such a habit as John Sheldon has. Be in season. Better too early than to late.

Newspapers.—From a dry register of dates and facts, the newspaper has grown into one of the leading schoolmasters of the day. Its articles amuse us with their wit, and instruct us with their wisdom. They exhibit the brilliancy of the classical scholar, and the close reasoning of the logician. It is an encyclopædia in itself. It reviews all books and treats of all sciences. It is familiar with geography, and at home in all history. It is the Œdipus to read the riddles which every political Sphinx may set before it. It dives into cabinet secrets, and anticipates the purposes of Statesmen. It has the hundred eyes of the ever-wakeful Argus, the hundred and fifty heads of Briareus. The ancients counted up seven wonders of the world. If they had possessed a newspaper press like that of England, they would have possessed an eighth. [Aspinall.

A POET IN A PIG-STY.

Whittier gave early indications of poetical power. Several of his juvenile poems, having found their way into the newspapers and magazines of the day, attracted the attention of some literary gentlemen, who appreciated the merits of the productions, and resolved to make their author a visit, to offer their assistance in introducing the "Quaker Poet" to literary notoriety. Accordingly they took a conveyance that soon set them down in the picturesque town of Weare (N. H.) the residence of the young poet. With some difficulty they found the dwelling of Whittier, and were ushered into the best room of the house by the mother, to whom they made known their desire to see her son. All this time young Whittier was working away, at the certainly rather unpoetical business of cleaning out the pig-sty. He plied his shovel with right good will, totally unconscious of the honor that awaited him. Judge of his astonishment when Lizzy, his sister, came running from the house, and informed him "that it was full of very great people who were waiting to see him." "What shall I do?" cried the young poet, in agony. "Run, Lizzy, and get my boots while I wash me in the brook." The boots were brought, but the bare feet of Whittier refused to enter. At length, after a deal of tugging, one was drawn on, but, O horrors! the other would not go on, neither would the first come off! "A pretty-looking spectacle I shall make for their inspection," murmured Whittier, as with one boot in his hand and the other on his foot, he entered the house. But in a short time the flattering words of his visitors made him quite forget the awkwardness of his attire. [Adrian Fam. Vis.

A RIGHTEOUS DECISION.

The Pittsburg Preacher says that Judge Hepburn, of that District, was lately called to decide a case of some importance to the sacredness of parental and family relations. It appears that about six years since, a little girl nine or ten years old, had been put under the care of the Sisters of Charity in that city, to remain with them until called for by her mother. About the beginning of this month, the mother, who now lives in Ohio, came to the city to take her child home. On application for her, she was told that unless she partook of the communion of the Catholic Church, she could not have her. Finding she could not otherwise regain her child, she sued for a writ of habeas corpus. The following was her deposition in court:

Eliza Knox, formerly Eliza Palmer, deposes that she is the mother of Florida Palmer, who was born in Boston in 1834. That its father, James H. Palmer, then her husband, died at Pittsburg, in 1841. In 1842, deponent left the child with her (deponent's) mother, then residing at Pittsburg, with money for its support. That after a year's absence, deponent returned and found her child had been left with the Sisters of Charity, with the understanding that it was to remain under their care until called for by deponent. That this deponent since intermarried with James D. Knox. That with the knowledge and consent of said husband, and in possession of ample means for its support, deponent came to this city to reclaim her child, and on Saturday last, called at the dwelling of the Catholic Priest, and at the Institution of the Sisters of Charity, and expressed her desire to have her child restored to her. This was refused by the Priest and a Sister Agnes, who appeared to have charge of the child, and I was told I could not get her, unless I would go to the church and partake of its communion. When I first called, my child was at the hospital, in feeble health, and cried to go with me. I called again, but was refused permission to see her, and learned that she had been removed from the hospital to the Institution. When I went there, I was told by the Sisters of Charity that I could not see the child, without a permit from the Bishop; but they said, if my child died, they would let me know.

On hearing the deposition, the Judge ordered the child to be brought into Court. At first the priests and nuns thought to evade this order of the Judge, as they had the claims of the poor mother. The sheriff was sent back with the pretence that the child was too feeble to be brought into court. But the Judge, hearing of her removal from one place to another to avoid the detection of her mother, thought it would be no greater tax upon her strength to have her brought to the court room, and so ordered peremptorily. This time the Sheriff was successful; the young lady was brought into court, and was told by the Judge that she was free to make her own choice of guardian. She at once chose her mother, and in company with her left the room, amid loud expressions of congratulation from the spectators of the scene.

Affecting Incident.—The following touching incident is related in the Cincinnati Chronicle:—

